Tables Alphabétiques du Kitāb-al-Aghānī. Rédigées par I. Guidi. (Leiden: Brill.) The index to the Kitāb-al-Aghānī, of which the first fasciculus is now before us, is one of the most useful books to students of Arabic that have ever been published. We owe it to Prof. Guidi, who has been aided in its compilation by MM. Brünnow, S. Fraenkel, van Gelder, Guirgass, Héroult, Kleyn, Fr. Seybold, and van Vloten, and it appears with the assistance of a subvention from the Deutsche Morgenländische Gesellschaft. The index is divided into four parts: namely, (1) an index of poets' names; (2) an index of rhymes and metres; (3) an historical index, bringing together under each name all the facts recorded against the bearer throughout this vast work; and (4) a geographical index. The printed portion leaves us in the middle of the third part at the letter zdy. It is impossible to overestimate the value of such a guide through the twenty-one volumes (in the Bulāk edition with Dr. Brünnow's Supplement) of the monumental work of Abu-l-Faraj at Isfahānī. The Institut de France has recently announced, as the subject of the Prix Bordin (3000 fr.) for January 1897:

"Étudier dans ses traits généraux le recueil de traditions arabes intitulé le Kitāb-al-Aghānī; signaler, au moyen des citations, l'importance de ce livre pour l'histoire politique, littéraire, et sociale des Arabes."

With the help of the index now before us, it is to be hoped that many competitors for the prize will come forward, and that the result may be a work as extensive in its scope and weighty in its matter as the pioneer of all research into ancient Arabia and its civilisation, the great "Essai sur l'histoire des Arabes avant l'Islamisme" of Caussin de Perceval. No one who possesses a copy of the Bulāk text can afford to neglect this essential aid to its study.

Faḥ al-Qarīb. Par Ibn Qāsim al-Ghazālī. (Leiden: Brill.) The next book on our list is a commentary, by Ibn Kāsim al-Ghazālī, who died in A.H. 918, on the Mukhtasar or Précis, by Abū Shujā' of Isfahān, who died at the beginning of the sixth century of the Hijrah, of the whole field of Muhammadan law according to the Shāfi'ite rite. This work, which the editor informs us is the manual most used by students of law in the schools of that area of Islam which at the present day holds by the doctrine of the Imām ash-Shāfi'—namely, Egypt and the Malay peninsula and islands—has been given in text and translation by M. van den Berg, who is the professor of Muhammadan law in the Indian school at Delft, at the instance of the Netherlands Government for the benefit of its administrators in the East. Prof. van den Berg is already well known as the editor and translator of the equally famous treatise by an-Nawawī, called the Minhaj-at-Talibin, the other great authority on Shāfi'ite law; and the present manual, a stout volume of 742 pages, is no less thoroughly treated than the former. In British India there are very few, if any, adherents of the Shāfi'ite rite; but those who interest themselves in the development of the law of Islam will find in this book a remarkably clear and concise summary of that order of practice which for centuries held the first place in the centre of the Muslim world—the schools at Mecca—and can compare its precepts with those of Abū Hanīfah, which now dominate the other schools both at Mecca (in virtue of the hegemony of the Turkish Empire) and in British India.

Liber Mafāḥ al-'Olum, auctore Abu 'Abdallah al-Kātib al-Khawārezmī. Edidit, indices adjeit, G. van Vloten. (Leiden: Brill.) This is a work of great interest. The author was a Kātib, or secretary employed in the administration, in the time of the Sāmānī king of Khurāsān and Transoxiana Nūh II., who reigned between A.H. 365 and 387 (976-997 A.D.); and the purpose of his book is to give an explanation of the technical terms of science and art not to be found in the ordinary dictionaries of his time. The work is divided into two makālahs: the first treating of religion and the allied sciences, including the Arabic language, the administration of a Muslim state, and historical tradition, in which the technical terms are almost entirely Arabic or arabicised Persian words; and the second of secular science, chiefly derived from Greece through Aramaic translations, including philosophy, logic, medicine, mathematics, geometry, astronomy, music, mechanics, and alchemy. The book thus covers a surprising range, and includes the explanation of many thousand words, a large proportion of them of Greek or Syriac origin, the correct settlement and identification of which must have offered the greatest difficulties to the editor. The whole gives a most interesting picture of the state of knowledge as it existed in Northern Persia and the countries about the Oxus in the tenth century of our era. The author appears to have known something of Greek and Syriac, besides his native Persian; he also notes a few Sanskrit derivations. His explanations, though concise, are generally accurate and to the point. He was a man of system and method, and modest withal—a worthy forerunner of the great al-Birūnī, whom he preceded by about fifty years. Too great praise cannot be given to the manner in which Prof. van Vloten has edited the text from MSS. which have often made an extraordinary jumble of the outlandish words their copyists had to transcribe. Very complete indices are appended.

Sībawaihi's Buch über die Grammatik. Uebersetzt und erklärt von Dr. G. Jahn. (Berlin: Reuther und Reichard.) Dr. Jahn's translation of Sībawaihi's Kitāb, which has already made good progress into the second volume, is an attempt to explain the earliest and most difficult book of Arabic grammar according to the commentary of as-Sirāfi. We possess, in the Paris edition of 1881-89 by M. Hartwig Dénenbourg, the text of this great work, unhappily still destitute of the indices required to make it available for reference. The author of the Kitāb died before the end of the second century of the Hijrah (the date is variously given as 161, 180, 188, and 194), and the commentator as-Sirāfi in 368. Dr. Jahn's translation is based on as-Sirāfi's text, which occasionally differs from the Paris edition, and is divided into two parts, the notes, containing extracts from as-Sirāfi and other commentators, being separately pagged from the translation of the text. The sixth fasciculus of the work has appended to it a reply by the translator to the only criticism of the translation which has yet appeared—that by Prof. Praetorius in the Götting. Gel. Anzeigen of 1894—in which Dr. Jahn explains fully the scope of his undertaking, and sets forth in detail the difficulties which must inevitably be encountered in dealing with a book which first laid the foundations of grammatical study in Arabic. The language of a pioneer necessarily lacks fixity and precision, and the definite terminology of Arabic grammar, as elaborated by successive generations of scholars, had not yet come into existence. No one more competent than the editor of Ibn Ya'ish's commentary on az-Zamakhshari's Mufaṣṣal could have undertaken the difficult task which Dr. Jahn has set before him. And his work, which, as he tells us, is intended only for specialists, who will compare the translation with the original, and the notes of as-Sirāfi with the corresponding passages of Ibn Ya'ish, must for years to come remain indispensable to all who would approach the most interesting and absorbing study of Arabic grammar.

C. J. LYALL.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE RESTORED PRONUNCIATION OF GREEK.

Liverpool: Feb. 29, 1896.

I stand pledged by my former letters to indicate to Profs. Conway and Arnold, and to the readers of the ACADEMY, those elements of classical Greek pronunciation which seem to me to be still uncertain. My task, therefore, from this point will be less to express opinions of my own, than to point out cases where good authorities are disagreed, or where evidence is inconclusive. But I have no wish to rest in a pure agnosticism; and where a high authority seems to be wrong I shall not hesitate to say so. My great hope is that a frank statement of the difficulties of the case may lead others to co-operate in their solution.

There are two small differences in principle between the Professors' aim and my own, which the reader will kindly allow for. The Professors would restore the pronunciation of Pericles: I think that that of Demosthenes and Aristotle, in the following century, is equally good. They are disposed to scoff at the "tutorial" point of view: but I hold that in all cases of final uncertainty we ought to give a decided preference to those sounds which will be most easily taught by modern schoolmasters and learned by modern pupils. Without the schoolmasters, Latin pronunciation could never have been reformed, and it is safe to say that Greek never will be.

The first case which I shall bring forward is one in which there is a very marked disagreement between Profs. Conway and Arnold, and the authority whom in all other cases they follow—Prof. Blass, of Kiel. The Welsh professors direct the mediae  $\beta$ ,  $\gamma$ ,  $\delta$  to be pronounced like French (i.e., "dorsal")  $b$ , hard  $g$ , and  $d$ . But Blass says (§ 29), "The name media denotes a half-aspirated sound, and not by any means a soft or sonant one [einen weichen oder tönenden], by which name we now define  $b$ ,  $d$ ,  $g$ , in contrast to  $p$ ,  $t$ ,  $k$ ." Elsewhere (§ 27), Blass makes it perfectly clear that his notion of the values of  $\beta$ ,  $\gamma$ ,  $\delta$  is as follows:

$$\begin{aligned}\beta &= p + \frac{1}{2} h \\ \gamma &= k + \frac{1}{2} h \\ \delta &= t + \frac{1}{2} h\end{aligned}$$ and I am not aware that he has yet abandoned this position. Until then it seems too much to say that there is even "practical" agreement among the authorities. The difference between French  $b$  and a half-aspirated  $p$  is as wide as it well can be without getting altogether outside of the labial class. So also with the other two cases.

I will venture an opinion here. It is that Prof. Blass has allowed himself to be too much swayed by the Latin nomenclature, tenuis, aspirata, media = thin, aspirated, and intermediate. With these names before us, the equations have a tempting look of probability. But the Greek names were  $\psi\alpha\lambda\acute{\eta}$ ,  $\delta\alpha\sigma\iota\alpha$ ,  $\mu\iota\sigma\eta$  = thin, thick, and intermediate; and these do not lend themselves at all to the same inference. There ought also, if this hypothesis were true, to be an invincible confusion between  $\beta$ ,  $\gamma$ ,  $\delta$  and  $\tau$ ,  $\kappa$ ,  $\tau$  in all Greek writing, especially in inscriptions, and still more in transliterations; but this does not occur. Prof. Blass, however, has always before him the fact that in South and Middle German dialects  $b$ ,  $g$ ,  $d$  always stand for a kind of  $p$ ,  $k$ ,  $t$ , which only differs from the real  $p$ ,  $k$ ,  $t$  in being less strongly exploded; and his opinion is too important to be overridden by mere decree.

$$\begin{aligned}\tau &= p \\ \phi &= p + h \\ \beta &= p + \frac{1}{2} h\end{aligned}$$

I must also emphasise the opinion that every theoretical discussion about pronunciation is imperfect until it has become international. Every nation has an inborn prepossession in favour of its own sounds, regarding them as normal and natural, and all others as exceptional or even perverted. No amount of personal study quite suffices to eradicate these prepossessions. An example may be given referring to  $b$ ,  $g$ ,  $d$ . The justly celebrated Edouard Sievers, of Halle, writing a Phonetik for Indogermanists, in his third edition (p. 116), deliberately defines  $b$ ,  $g$ ,  $d$  so as to include the above-named German sounds, and to exclude them from their proper  $p$ ,  $k$ ,  $t$  category—a classification which could hardly have been made out of Germany (cf. Vietor, Phonetik, 3rd edit., p. 226). If this can happen with Sievers, it follows a fortiori that there is no one whatever from whom the national and local equation does not need to be eliminated. This can only be done by international discussion.

I will next endeavour to state the case respecting  $\phi$ ,  $\chi$ ,  $\theta$ .

R. J. LLOYD.

PERSIAN LAPIDARIES.

Teheran: Jan. 20, 1896.

In reference to my note on "Persian Lapidaries" in the ACADEMY of December 14, Prof. de Goeje writes to me from Leyden to say that the title of Nasir ed-din's treatise should be Tashavvuk nāmāh, and not Tansūk nāmāh, as I read it, and that the Leyden Library possesses a copy of it.

According to Persian Dictionaries, tansūk, or tansūkh, is the Arabicised tansukh, a Persian word meaning anything rare, precious, unique; and the latter, according to Persian etymologists, is composed of the two Persian words tan "body," and sūk "good, precious." Tansūk-nāmāh, therefore, is a book of precious things, exactly as Nasir ed-din explains it in his preface, when he says: "I have entitled this book Tansūk-nāmāh, because all the tansūk [rare and precious things] which are presented to kings will, please God, be described in it."

All the copies which I have seen have tansūk nāmāh. The Habib us-siyar by Khondamir (A.H. 930) in the short biographical notice on Nasir ed-din (vol. iii. 1; p. 37, second line from top, Teheran edition, A.H. 1271) also has tansūk nāmāh; but in the preface to Hamdullah Kasvini's Nuzhat ul Kulūb (A.H. 740) the book is mentioned as the tansūk nāmāh, where tansūk is, I take it, a Turkish rendering of tansūkh. In Vassaf's History the word also occurs as tansūk, with the same meaning. If the Leyden copy has "tashavvuk nāmāh," I can only suppose that the mistake was made by the copyist. An ignorant or careless scribe might easily write tashavvuk for tansūk, the more so as the former word, meaning "manifesting a strong desire" (for the acquisition of knowledge), occurs in the first part of the preface, where it is applied to Hulākū Khān, for whom the treatise was written; and the two words, carelessly written, look very much alike.

A. HOUTUM-SCHINDLER.

DR. GINSBURG'S EDITION OF THE HEBREW BIBLE.

London: Feb. 25, 1896.

Leaving it for another occasion to deal more minutely with Dr. Ginsburg's new edition of the Hebrew Bible, in which are embodied the results of his long Massoretic studies, I limit myself now to pointing out a serious mistake which has crept into it.

Prov. ii. 10 reads in this edition:

וְדַעַת לִנְפֶשְׁךָ יִדְעַת
וְדַעַת לִנְפֶשְׁךָ יִדְעַת

The first reading is neither an emendation nor a correction; such are relegated to the footnotes. It is simply a mistake.

M. GASTER.

AN ASSYRIAN TITLE IN NAHUM.

London: Feb. 26, 1896.

Has it already been observed by others that the title of the Assyrian queen appears in Nahum ii. 8, if we read  $\text{חַעֲלִיָּה}$  instead of  $\text{חַעֲלִיָּה$ ? Cf. Delitzsch, Assyrisches Handwörterbuch, p. 157: "chellu fem chellitu, gross, hoch, erhaben, als Subst. Herr bez. Herrin. Von Göttern und Königen gebraucht," &c.

PAUL RUBEN.

SCIENCE NOTES.

THE following is the list of sectional presidents for this year's meeting of the British Association, to be held at Liverpool in September, under the presidency of Sir Joseph Lister, who also happens to be the new president of the Royal Society. Section A: mathematics and physics, Prof. J. J. Thomson; section B: chemistry, Dr. Ludwig Mond; section C: geology, Mr. John Edward Marr; section D: zoology, Prof. E. B. Poulton; section E: geography, Major Leonard Darwin; section F: economics, Leonard Courtney; section G: mechanical science, Sir Charles Douglas Fox; section H: anthropology, Mr. Arthur Evans; section I: physiology and pathology, Dr. Walter Holbrook Gaskeil; section K: botany, Dr. D. H. Scott. The evening discourses will be given by Prof. Flinders Petrie, and (probably) by Sir Andrew Noble; the lecture to working men by Prof. Fleming.

AT the anniversary meeting of the Geological Society, held on February 2, Dr. Henry Hicks was selected president for the current year, in succession to Dr. Edward Woodward. The subject of the retiring president's address was "The Life-History of the Crustacea in Palaeozoic and Neozoic Times."

AT a recent meeting of the Linnean Society, a portrait of Dr. William Carruthers, a late president, painted by Mr. J. Hay, was formally presented to the society, on behalf of the subscribers, by Sir W. H. Flower.

DR. M. ARMAND RUFFER has resigned the directorship of the British Institute of Preventive Medicine, in order to accept the chair of bacteriology at Cairo.

COLONEL R. G. WOODTHORPE, a well-known surveying officer on the north-eastern frontier of India, is to read two papers next week on the Shans—on Monday, before the Royal Geographical Society, when he will deal particularly with the country; and on Tuesday, before the Anthropological Institute, when he will also include an account of the hill-tribes generally on the Mekong, illustrated with the optical lantern.

AT a special afternoon meeting, to be held in the map room of the Geographical Society on Friday next, Dr. H. R. Mill, the librarian, will submit a plan for the geographical description of the British Islands on the basis of the Ordnance Survey.

PROF. HANSEN, of Copenhagen, has recently published a brochure in which he protests against a modern tendency to Germanise Danish science:

"Dr. Hansen," says the March number of Natural Science, "while owning the services to science rendered by Germany through her numerous men of genius, considers that Denmark has a scientific character and spirit of her own distinct from that of Germany. The larger country delights in hypothesis and theory, the smaller in thorough-going accuracy of investigation. He rightly considers that it would be a loss to the world to have that national characteristic overborne by the predominating influence of Denmark's powerful neighbour. He views with alarm the introduction of German books of education, German modes of thought, and ambition of the rising generation to study in Germany, to write in German, to win acceptance and commendation in German periodicals. To counteract all this, he is extremely desirous that in the scientific journals of his own country, as an alternative to the vernacular or Latin, the accepted language should be neither German nor French, but only and exclusively English. He urges that English ought to be thoroughly taught in Danish schools; that though not in words, yet in construction, it is far nearer to Danish than is German, and that both in England and the English tongue Danish science would find a genial welcome that could not be fraught with any mischievous consequences."

PHILOLOGY NOTES.

AT the meeting of the Royal Asiatic Society, to be held on Tuesday next at 22, Albemarle-street, Mr. A. Rogers will read a paper on "A Persian History of Christ and St. Peter, by Jerome Xavier, S.J."

REPORTS OF SOCIETIES.

ENGLISH GÖTTINGEN SOCIETY.—(Wednesday, Feb 12.)

DR. L. THOMAS in the chair.—A paper was read by Mr. R. G. Alford on "Hermann Sudermann." The lecturer observed that the epithet "realist" in its bad sense had been freely applied to Sudermann in Germany, but there was one fact that was undoubted, the fact of his popularity. He thought it was time for English readers of German to get a better acquaintance with this remarkable author. Sudermann was born in the year 1857 at Matzicken, in East Prussia. He was apprenticed (like Ibsen, it may be observed) to a chemist, but he managed later to get away and resume his studies at Königsberg and Berlin. From the year 1879 he has been engaged in literary pursuits; but his first success was with his play called "Die Ehre," produced in Berlin on November 27, 1889, which caused a great sensation. From the years 1889 to 1894 Sudermann was busy as a dramatist and novel writer in Berlin. The failure of his play "Die Schmetterlingschacht" in the latter year was the cause of his departure, and he has not since returned. His last play, "Glück im Winkel," was produced in Vienna, and has not yet reached Berlin. Sudermann as a dramatist was the leader of the realistic school in Berlin. This school set itself to observe certain canons of dramatic composition, with a view to a truer observation of life: such as the abolition of all rhetoric and high-flown phrases not heard in conversation, avoidance of romantic contrasts and strained happy endings. Sudermann, there was no doubt, imagined himself a thorough-going realist; but like all authors he found he could only describe the real in terms of the ideal, and it was important to see what Sudermann's ideal standpoints were. The lecturer thought they were as follows: First, he saw a remorseless fate in human things—"the past must be paid for"; secondly, there was a certain enthusiasm for the old ideals of liberty, equality, and fraternity; and lastly, an ideal of work and duty. "Die Ehre" and "Heimat" he characterized as the best of the plays, the latter a wonderful performance however looked at. "Sodom's Ende," the picture of a genius running to seed in a narrow, fast society, contained too many objectionable features. The Censor in Berlin at first refused to allow it to be produced, but afterwards withdrew his prohibition. Of the novels, the lecturer considered Ketsurwig easily first: it displayed the writer's singular force and intensity at their highest pitch. The scene of all the novels was East Prussia, where the author was born and bred.

CAMBRIDGE PHILOLOGICAL.—(Thursday, February 13.)

PROF. SKER in the chair.—Dr. Fennell stated a theory of the representation of Indo-Germanic i-sounds in early Sanskrit in the form of two propositions and a corollary. The first proposition is that, the weak grade of Indo-European ei is represented in the earliest Sanskrit by the r vowel or ir, ir or ur, ur (at the time of the change of such ei, ai to such ur, ur respectively, these vowels written u, ü were not Indo-Germanic u-sounds but rounded i-sounds, and therefore palatal vowels). The second proposition is, that Indo-Germanic i-sounds of syllables which contained a palatal consonant were represented by Sanskrit r unless (A) a dental consonant immediately followed (in which case we find the phenomena classified under Fortunatov's Law), or (B) the instance fell under the first proposition. The corollary is that—As the alleged sonant -i (i) followed by a consonant other than l is regularly changed to r, while l is only changed to r when affected by palatal consonants, there was not that intimate relation between l and the weak grade of i which had been assumed, but that this weak grade contained a vowel which in early Sanskrit was palatal, namely an i-sound or a rounded i-sound. It follows also that the so-called vowel r, the Sanskrit r, contained an i-sound. Early Sanskrit i-sounds were dental and r-sounds cerebral (lingual); but phenomena suggest that l was nearer to the cerebral configuration than other dentals, and r nearer to the palatal configuration than other cerebrals (linguals). A number of examples in support of the theory were adduced and exceptional cases exhaustively discussed. Skt. arāni 'elbow,' 'forearm' is not akin to Lat. ulna, ulna, but to Skt. arū 'joint,' Lat. artus. In the sense 'refreshing drink' irā, Id.-G. elā is akin to Eng. 'ale' (ole-), but represents Id.-G. erā in the senses 'earth,' 'water.' Most of the few exceptional cases which cannot be explained as due to analogy or assimilation are isolated or rare forms, of which no probable etymology has been offered. The only exceptional cases of this kind of which the etymology is ascertained are the isolated alipasta and calpā, the rare pulu- and clokā- (which may have been associated with a special class of noises and so exempted from change).

HELLENIC.—(Monday, February 17.)

PROF. PRECY GARDNER in the chair.—Mr. Edmund Oldfield read a paper on "The Mausoleum of Halicarnassus." After observing that the restorations at the early part of the present century were purely speculative and founded on a few passages in ancient writers, which were merely desultory references, sometimes parenthetical, figurative, or even contradictory of each other, the lecturer dealt with the discoveries of 1846 made by Sir Charles Newton when he was Vice-Consul of Mitylene. Sir Charles Newton suggested a restoration, in which he was assisted by Profs. Smith and Pullan, but which was assailed by James Ferguson, who proposed a restoration of his own, founded on the same materials, but arriving at a different conclusion. A third scheme was propounded by Herr Petersen, of Hamburg. Mr. Oldfield was an assistant forty years ago when the mausoleum marbles arrived at the British Museum, and he assisted at their unpacking. Since then, and especially since his retirement, he had devoted much labour to solving the mystery which had been still left in obscurity by the three elaborate schemes of Newton, Ferguson, and Petersen. The references in ancient writers were few. There was a passage of Vitruvius, a few lines in Martial, and a description in Pliny's Natural History. Pliny described the mausoleum as "hanging in empty air," which might refer to the many inter-columnar spaces in the roof. Cockerell, Watkiss Lloyd, and others had done their best to reconstruct the mausoleum in accordance with Martial's description. But Newton could not accept their conclusions. The passage in Pliny was the fullest description extant; but the text was not quite certain. Preferring the earlier text to later emendations, Mr. Oldfield gave a minute grammatical analysis of the passage, and a technical account of the way in which from the literal meaning of the words he conceived the structure ought to be reconstructed.

METEOROLOGICAL.—(Wednesday, February 19.)

EDWARD MAWLEY, Esq., president, in the chair.—The report on the pneumological observations for 1895 was presented by Mr. Mawley, in which it was shown that, owing to the great frost at the beginning of the year, all the first spring flowers made their appearance very late, and it was not until the middle of June that plants began to come into blossom in advance of their usual time. During July the dates recorded were, as a rule, exceptionally early. The yield of all the farm crops except potatoes was exceedingly poor. Pears and plums yielded badly, but there was a splendid crop of apples and also of all the small fruits. As regards vegetation generally seldom has a year ended under conditions so favourable for the one succeeding it.—Mr. R. H. Scott read a paper on the recent unusually high barometer readings in the British Isles, in which he stated that the daily weather chart for 6 p.m. on January 8 was the first in these islands that ever showed 31 inches. The station was Sornoway; and by the next morning all over the northern portions of Great Britain and Ireland the barometers were above 31 inches. The highest reading of all was 31.119 inches, photographically recorded at Glasgow at 9 a.m. on the 9th. The barometer pressure then gave way, and the region of highest readings moved southwards along our west coast, and finally left the south of Ireland on the 15th. Weather throughout the period was mild, an unusual thing with a very high barometer. At the end of the month a second anti-cyclone spread over the country, when the barometer rose to 30.96 inches at Cork. Reference was made to previous exceptionally high barometer readings in England and in Siberia; and it was stated that a reading of 31.62 inches at Barnaul, in Siberia, in 1877, was probably the highest ever observed.

HISTORICAL.—(Anniversary Meeting, Thursday, February 20.)

SIR M. E. GRANT DUFF, president in the chair.—Mr. W. E. H. Lecky, Lord Acton, and Sir D. M. Wallace were re-elected vice-presidents; and Prof. T. H. Rhye-Davids, Lord Edmund Fitzmaurice, Mr. B. F. Stevens, and Prof. Cunningham were re-elected members of council. Mr. J. P. Wallis was also elected a member of council. The council presented their annual report, dealing with the society's publications, meetings, list of fellows, library, and finances; and the report was duly adopted. The elections of a number of distinguished scholars—British, colonial, and foreign—as honorary fellows and corresponding members were reported.—The president delivered his annual address, taking for his subject "The Politics of Aristotle." He observed that at Oxford he took up the Politics instead of the Rhetoric, which was then the fashionable treatise. He had hardly looked at the book during all the forty-six years which had since elapsed. After referring to the various editions of the text since that time, he said that Aristotle's Politics was thought by some to be the work which ought first to be read by the political student. Was that so? Would a botanist begin with Theophrastus—would he not rather go to the best and completest treatise from a modern writer? and so with any other science. On the other hand, was there any book of politics comparable to the admirable handbooks on science which were constantly being published? He knew of no such handbook to politics. Even now, in 1896, there was no science of politics; and he was inclined to think that the best training for political life would be a careful study and written discussion of a collection of the best political maxims, founded on extensive historical reading. He wondered why nobody had made such a collection, of which Aristotle could supply a considerable number. The worst of it was that so many of the Greek philosopher's best thoughts had become part of our minds. That some should rule and others be ruled was a necessity of life, said Aristotle. This was in striking contrast to the will-of-the-wisp of modern equality. He had heard a cultivated Frenchman say he preferred equality to the utmost liberty, and the worst republic to the best monarchy. Aristotle kept himself singularly free from extravagant theories of that kind. Property, says the philosopher, should in a certain sense be common, but in the main private; and the special use of the Legislature was to create the disposition in good men to allow others to enjoy their property. His avoidance of the mercantile fallacy, or the notion that money constituted wealth, was most remarkable; he observed that a man rich in coin might be in want of necessary food. Aristotle's discussion of democracy and popular government was interesting and instructive: he thought that individually the public might be ignorant, but collectively arrive at sound conclusions, as their instincts were in the main sound. The value of the different kinds of government was in proportion to the degree in which the voice of the best was heard and obeyed. The best community Aristotle considered was that in which the middle class was numerous. Oligarchy and democracy were both departures from the best forms of government, though they might each be good in their way; but he thought little of democracy, for he said that no ordinary man could discern impending dangers: to do so required wisdom and goodness. One of his most profound observations was that sedition or rebellion arises ex imperio et reple imperio; the occasion might be alight, the issues momentous. The philosopher's remark, that the more restricted the prerogatives and powers of kings the more durable would be their rule, had striking appositeness in our time. He remembered a legal luminary who used to contend that retired judges should be made bishops. Curiously enough this amusing suggestion might be fortified by a passage in the seventh book of the Politics. On the right use of leisure Aristotle had valuable observations which might well be applied to our own days, when, both at home and in America, the spirit of athleticism had run mad. The crowning glory, however, of Aristotle was his conception of the functions of the State. The State, he held, should not seek to enslave the people it conquered, should resist the imposition of slavery on itself, and should exercise government for the good of the governed. The State exists, observes Mr. Newman, for the sake of that kind of life which is the end of man, and the development of those gifts and circumstances which constitute the real welfare of mankind. Aristotle's ideal was still in truth that of the best and wisest statesmen. But we should bear in mind that the State can exercise but little direct influence in realising the aims of society. The craze of the hour was to expect the State to do everything for everybody. The most enlightened nations and classes had not yet got beyond the conceptions of Aristotle, and many modern writers and politicians were far behind him. The circumstances of his time, however, prevented his area of observation from being adequate to our needs, and even to Aristotle and Alexander the problems of Greek petty States appeared trivial and ridiculous. But the marvellous range, the wonderful power of observation, and the historical spirit which were manifested in his ethical and political writings were beyond all praise.—In moving and seconding a vote of thanks to the president, Mr. Frederic Harrison and Mr. H. E. Malden spoke at some length in commendation of the original and scholarly treatment of the subject-matter of the address.

VICTORIA INSTITUTE.—(Monday, March 2.)

THE HON. A. McARTHUR in the chair.—Dr. H. B. Guppy gave an account of his researches on the light thrown by a study of the differences in plant-names in use among the Polynesians. He said: The more useful plants of these islands, and many also of their littoral plants, have in each case a story to tell not only of the history of a plant, but of a people. The distribution, the uses, the vernacular nomenclature, &c., are all so many guides in such an investigation. The wide range of the useful plants in this region, such as the banana, the breadfruit, and the paper-mulberry, is an indication of an age of free intercourse over the Pacific, an age long since passed away. Under the conditions prevailing in this region in the time of Cook, a newly introduced plant would acquire a very local distribution; and among such plants we may include the shaddock of Fiji and Tonga. Almost all the plants, and in most cases their names, have their homes in the Indian Archipelago and in Further India. On comparing the names of the different regions, the Malagasy names are found to be more closely connected with those of Fiji than with those of Polynesia. The Melanesian variety of man is regarded as the original possessor of the Malayo-Polynesian type of speech, which it has imposed to a greater or less degree on all that have come in contact with it.—Many took part in the discussion that followed.

FINE ART.

Patriarchal Palestine. By A. H. Sayce.
(S. P. C. K.)

"THE voice of archaeology is thus in agreement with that of authority, and here as elsewhere true science declares herself the handmaid of the Catholic Church." This utterance, with which Patriarchal Palestine concludes, may be reasonably regarded as marking some change of opinion, since some two years ago, in his 'Higher Criticism' and the Verdict of the Monuments, our author declared that, if presented as a veritable personage, "the woman Esther can have had no existence save in the imagination of a Jewish writer," that the author of the Chronicles used history pretty much as Sir Walter Scott did in some of his novels, and that the traditional teaching of the Church concerning the capture of Babylon, as narrated in Daniel, was altogether at variance with the cuneiform records. It is true that there are some things even in the present work which might be regarded with disfavour by divines of less obtrusive orthodoxy. But, whatever view is taken of the claims of authority with respect to the transcendental dogmas of theology, archaeological research falls exclusively within the domain of the scientific method. Here the critical balance should be held in equipoise, ready to be moved only by the weight of evidence.

It may be said at once that Prof. Sayce's book contains a large amount of matter of great interest to the Orientalist and the Biblical student. The book probably owes its origin to the discovery, some seven or eight years ago, of the Tel el-Amarna Tablets. The use in these tablets of the Babylonian script in diplomatic correspondence between Egypt, Syria, and Mesopotamia was naturally regarded as a fact pregnant with important consequences for archaeological science; while, for the Old Testament student, few things could be more likely to invite attention than the occurrence in these documents of the name of the renowned city Jerusalem, a fact which, if we mistake not, Prof. Sayce has the honour of discovering. Our author observes, with regard to this name and what is said of Melchisedek: "The critics, in the superiority of their knowledge . . . had denied that the name even of Jerusalem, or Salem, was known before the age of David." But the Tel el-Amarna Tablets, while mentioning Jerusalem, or Salem, say at the same time some other things which the "critics" are by no means likely to overlook. According to Prof. Sayce's reading and translation, one tablet speaks of "the city of the mountain of Jerusalem, the city of the temple of the god Nin-ip, whose name is Salim." The possibility of a somewhat different reading is mentioned, but in any case the fact remains that Jerusalem was "the house of Nin-ip." Nin-ip, it would thus seem, was "the most high god" to whom Melchisedek was priest. Such an exalted designation is quite suitable to the attributes of Nin-ip found elsewhere. But Nin-ip was concerned with hunting and war, rather than with peace. If his name was also Salim, this word can scarcely have meant "peace" as so applied. It possibly might mean "retribution," according to one sense of the Hebrew verb with which it is connected. And it may have come to signify peace as based on retribution. But in any case the probability is that Salim is used as the Canaanitish name of the by no means peaceful god Nin-ip.

In the same document mention is made of the "Chabiri," with their chief Malchiel. Who these Chabiri were, it is not easy to determine. Prof. Sayce translates the word "confederates," and speaks of them as "a body of confederated tribes who made themselves formidable to the governor of Jerusalem in the closing days of the Egyptian empire." It appears more probable that "Chabiri" is a proper name. Dr. Zimmern suggested that it might denote "Hebrews," a suggestion which philologically is not quite impossible. Certainly the name "Malchiel" is pure Hebrew, though a Babylonian scribe might alter the termination. And Prof. Sayce alludes to Gen. xlii. 17, where we have in close juxtaposition Heber (Chaber) and Malchiel as names of Asher's grandsons, a coincidence which is curious and may very possibly be significant. If the Chabiri are regarded as Hebrews, it is not necessary to identify them with the Israelites invading Canaan. On the supposition that the original home of both Phoenicians and Hebrews was the country near the northern end of the Persian Gulf, a tribe or body of Hebrews may have migrated and endeavoured to establish themselves in Palestine prior to the Exodus.

Prof. Sayce gives the date of the Tel el-Amarna Tablets as about 1400 B.C., a date which does not help much to remove the serious chronological difficulties which beset the post-diluvian chronology of the Old Testament. With the ante-diluvians we need not now concern ourselves; and if we agree with Prof. Sayce in accepting about 3750 B.C. as the date of Naram-Sin's reign, we shall find it useless to apply the chronology of either the Hebrew, the Septuagint, or the Samaritan text. And the question not unnaturally suggests itself: how long a period before the days of Naram-Sin must have passed in the development of Babylonian civilisation, with its language and mythology?

On the authority of both Egyptian and Babylonian monuments our author thinks that "Jacob and Joseph are abbreviations," and that "the full names of the Hebrew patriarchs must have been Jacob-el and Joseph-el." El ("God") is probably the subject of the verbs Jacob and Joseph preceding. To take the last name first. We certainly have in Gen. xxx. 23, 24, what looks very much like a confirmation of Prof. Sayce's view. The two verses, as is well known, give two different explanations of Joseph or yoseph, the word being in the first of these verses derived from asaph, "to take away"—"God hath taken away my reproach"; and in the second from yasaph, "to add"—"The Lord shall add to me another son." The first verse is Elohistic and the second Jehovistic, thus furnishing a remarkable example of the presence of different documents in Genesis. As to "Jacob-el," though the meaning of Jacob or yaakob is clear enough (Gen. xxv. 26, xxvii. 36), yet with El, or "God," as the nominative, it gives a sense which can scarcely have been tolerable except in rude and primitive times.

Our author seems to forget Exod. xlii. 19, Josh. xxiv. 32, when he says "Joseph was buried in Egypt, not at Hebron, though he made the Israelites swear before his death that his mummy should be eventually taken to Palestine." Prof. Sayce, it would seem, must either have forgotten the passages cited, or he must disregard their authority.

The apologist, too, if disposed to allow some distant resemblance between the temple of Solomon and other Oriental sanctuaries, is not unlikely to feel somewhat offended by the close parallel with Canaanitish, Babylonian, and Assyrian temples which our author draws. The temple of Solomon, it may be said, was essentially a reproduction in more solid materials of the tabernacle made "according to the pattern shown to Moses in the Mount," and was thus the "shadow of heavenly things," not a copy of a heathen temple. As regards its external appearance, Prof. Sayce tells us, "Like the temple of Jerusalem, the Babylonian temple looked from the outside much like a rectangular box, with its four walls rising up, blank and unadorned, to the sky." Some of the "higher critics," it is true, avoid the difficulties in which Prof. Sayce is involved by regarding the tabernacle as a purely ideal structure, copied from Solomon's temple with such modifications as were supposed necessary to adapt it to the migratory life of the Israelites in the desert, though a rectangular box-like structure with a roof of curtains would have been ill-fitted to withstand the hostile force of the elements.

Prof. Sayce also seems to forget the sacred narrative, or designedly to depart from it, when he tells us that "the father of the children of Ammon" was called Ben-ammi after the god Ammi. This is certainly not what is intended in Gen. xix. 35, sq. However unwelcome may be what is narrated of Lot and his daughters in the concluding verses of this chapter, there is no doubt whatever as to the etymologies suggested for the names Moab and Ammon. Prof. Sayce's view might suit those who think that the story was invented out of hatred towards the Moabites and Ammonites. And with regard to Ben-Oni, the ill-omened name which Rachel in her distress gave to Benjamin, it is clear that Prof. Sayce leaves behind the ordinary interpretation when he says: "Bethel was also Beth-On, 'the temple of On,' from whence the tribe of Benjamin afterwards took the name of Ben-Oni, 'the Onite.'"

But notwithstanding these questionable utterances, Prof. Sayce claims with regard to the names of three of the confederate kings mentioned in Gen. xiv. 1, that "the Hebrew text of Genesis has been verified even to the spelling of the proper names." This assertion goes a little beyond the facts. Still, Mr. Pinches may be very warmly congratulated on having found among the Babylonian archives stored in the British Museum, and on the same tablet, names which, notwithstanding some differences of orthography, are in all probability identical with Ohedorlaomer, Arioch, and Tidal. But there is no evidence that the matters with which the tablet is concerned have any connexion with the expedition recorded in Gen. xiv. The actual tablet is regarded by Mr. Pinches as comparatively modern, about 400 B.C. It may be reasonably concluded, however, that it is a copy of a far older document. But, until more distinct proof is obtained, it can scarcely be admitted that the evidence of this tablet (and of another giving two of the names) goes beyond giving an additional indication of what our author calls "the Babylonian colouring of Genesis." Even "the history of the Tower of Babel," he tells us, is of Babylonian origin.

Further information concerning the scene of the battle between the four and the five kings would have been acceptable, but this the Babylonian records do not give. We are still confronted with the difficulties surrounding the statement, "all these were joined together in the vale of Siddim, which is the Salt Sea." Prof. Sayce says, speaking of "the Salt Sea":

"What the lake is to-day it must have been in the days of Abraham. It has neither grown nor shrunk in size, and the barren salt with which it poisons the ground must have equally poisoned it then."

Another matter on which we might perhaps have looked for additional information from the Babylonian monuments is that very important question concerned with the origin, form, and meaning of the name "Jehovah." Mr. Pinches found on some tablets the syllable Ya or A, with the sign of divinity prefixed. These, it was thought, might be related to the Sacred Name. But Prof. Hommel, with more probability, regards these syllables as variants of the name of the Babylonian god, the god of the deep, Ea. And we cannot derive from Ea the proper name of the God of Israel.

THOMAS TYLER.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE AMATEUR ART EXHIBITION.

London: March 2, 1896.

I should be glad to direct the attention of your readers to the Amateur Art Exhibition to be held in May or June, and more especially to the loan collection in connexion with it, which it is proposed to form of miniatures and portrait drawings by Edridge and his contemporaries, such as Slater and Heapy, covering, roughly speaking, the last thirty years of the eighteenth and the first thirty years of the nineteenth century.

As I have undertaken the arrangement of this department, may I ask any of your readers who are owners of such miniatures and drawings, and who would be willing to lend them to this exhibition, to communicate with the hon. secretary of the loan collection, the Hon. Mrs. Mure, 4, Lennox-gardens, S.W., who will supply all further information?

CONSTANCE ROMNEY.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

THE following exhibitions will open next week: (1) the Royal Institute of Painters in Water Colours, in Piccadilly; (2) the Royal Society of Painter-Etchers, in Pall Mall East; (3) a collection of pictures and drawings of Imaginative Landscape in Europe and Asia, by Mr. Albert Goodwin, at the Fine Art Society's, in New Bond-street; (4) a collection of Yachting Reminiscences—"Wings, Winds, and Waves"—by Mr. A. Harvey Moore, at the Graves Galleries, Pall Mall; (5) water-colours, by Mr. A. Ludovici, at the Clifford Art Gallery, Haymarket; and (6) a collection of pictures and drawings, by various artists, illustrating Wilts, Somerset, and Dorset, at Messrs. Dickinson & Foster's, in New Bond-street.

THE gold medal of the Royal Institute of British Architects for this year has, subject to the approval of the Queen, been unanimously voted to Mr. Ernest George, vice-president, "for his executed works as an architect."

AT a meeting of the Royal Scottish Academy, held this week at Edinburgh, it was proposed to elect forthwith four new associates, who should be painters. The proposal requires to be sanctioned at a confirmatory meeting.

AT a meeting of the applied art section of the Society of Arts, to be held on Tuesday next, with Mr. Lewis Day in the chair, Mr. Joseph Pennell will read a paper on "English Book Illustration, 1860-70."

THE annual Amateur Art Exhibition will be held at the end of May or beginning of June for the benefit of the Parochial Mission Women's Fund, the East London Girls' Friendly Society Club Rooms, and the East London Nursing Association. Intending exhibitors should communicate with the hon. sec., the Hon. Mrs. C. Eliot, 8, Onslow-gardens, S.W. It is intended to arrange a loan exhibition in connexion with the above, consisting of portrait drawings by Edridge, Slater, and Heapy, together with specimens of old cut glass and old paste.

MR. FRANK BADEN-POWELL's large oil-painting of "The Wooden Walls of Queen Victoria" has been presented by its purchaser to the Corporation of Salford, for the permanent art gallery in Peel Park.

THE March number of The Theatre (Simpkin, Marshall & Co.) has an article by Mr. T. Edgar Pemberton, entitled "An Original Portrait of Shakspeare," which is illustrated with reproductions of the panel exhibited at the Society of Antiquaries last December, and of the well-known Droeshout engraving from the Folio. We are surprised at the readiness—not to say rashness—with which such professional authorities as Mr. Lionel Cust have been disposed to accept this new portrait as genuine. In all such cases, intrinsic evidence goes for very little; and it is proverbially difficult to prove a forgery, when that forgery itself is of some antiquity. For ourselves, we are content to abide by the dictum of Halliwell-Phillipps, who had unrivalled experience in Shakspeare relics, and who always used to inquire first of all for a pedigree. Of this panel there is no pedigree forthcoming; and we do not therefore care to consider the matter further.

WE quote the following from the Cairo correspondent of the Times, dated February 17: "The work of clearing the island [of Philae] of debris, so as to permit a thorough examination of the ancient monuments, which was intrusted by the Egyptian Government to Captain Lyons, R.E., will probably be completed next month. The satisfactory discovery has been made that the foundations of the main temple of Isis are laid upon the granite rock, being in some places over 21 feet in depth, and the temple has nearly as much masonry below ground as above. The south-eastern colonnade has also its foundations upon the granite, and, so far as excavated, they are curious if not unique in design. They consist of parallel cross walls some metres high, but varying according to the slope of the rock surface, with large stone slabs placed horizontally upon their tops, and the pillars forming the colonnade are erected upon the slabs. The nilometer is marked in three characters—Demotic, Coptic, and another much older, probably Hieratic, of which a copy has been sent to Berlin for decipherment. A stela was found bearing a trilingual inscription in hieroglyph. No traces have been discovered of any buildings anterior to the Ptolemaic periods. M. de Morgan, director-general of the Antiquities Department, is engaged upon repairing the great hall of columns at Karnak."

MUSIC.

"SHAMUS O'BRIEN."

THE history of English opera during the last fifteen or twenty years has been far from bright; of the works produced, some merely obtained a succès d'estime, others were still-born. Various have been the causes of failure. Unsatisfactory librettos have spoilt good music; the natural desire to work on the lines of one who seems to have been, for the most part, a law unto himself, led, in one notable instance, to speedy disaster; and some of the composers appear to have lacked the dramatic instinct necessary for success in so difficult an enterprise. Any new attempt at English opera is therefore watched with interest, not unmixed with anxiety.

The libretto of Dr. C. V. Stanford's "Romantic Comic Opera" was written by Mr. George H. Jessop, and founded on the poem of the late Sheridan Le Fanu. With that poem we are unacquainted, and hence cannot say how much credit is due to the librettist for the excellent delineation of character, the sharply marked contrasts, and the effective climaxes in his book. In the second act lyrics are plentifully supplied, giving to the various dramatis personæ a chance of appearing in a set piece, somewhat after the manner of old ballad opera; the action thereby suffers, but we imagine that in this matter the librettist had not altogether a free hand. Then, again, although many of the sayings and jokes in the spoken dialogue are humorous, there is at times a feeling that the writer is trying to be specially smart, when he defeats his own object: wit to be quite successful must appear to be unconscious. Moreover, as in the court-martial scene, the limits of probability are sometimes exceeded. The lyrics may not be particularly strong, yet the book as a whole deserves high commendation.

The story is connected with the suppression of the Irish Rebellion of 1798. A price has been set on the head of Shamus; and Mike Murphy, an unsuccessful suitor of Nora, wife of Shamus, informs Captain Trevor of his place of abode. After some display of Irish wit and cunning, Shamus is caught. The charms of Kitty, Nora's sister, have softened the Captain's heart, and he allows the two women and the parish priest to visit Shamus before the court-martial takes place. A plan is arranged to loosen the prisoner from his cords at the spot where he is to be hanged. Shamus escapes, and the soldiers firing after him kill Mike. Thus the patriot triumphs, and the treacherous villainy of the informer meets with its due reward.

Although our notice of the opera is necessarily brief, we have tried to render justice to the libretto, which, undoubtedly, contributed greatly to the success of the work on its production at the Opera Comique on Monday night.

With regard to Dr. Stanford's music we shall venture on a few "cautious ifs," but would at once frankly state that he has composed a work which not only redounds to his credit, but which, with slight modification, is likely to prove a lasting success. The national element in his opera is a feature quite in keeping with the tendency of the present day, and it is not used to excess. Then, the music is fresh: there is no sense of labour, although on many pages are traces of that skill in writing and in orchestration of which the composer has given so many proofs. We have already spoken of the set songs in the second act. It is not so much the formal, detached character of these songs to which we take exception, as to their length—i.e., number of stanzas. The songs and duets are in keeping with comic opera in the technical sense; yet with our strong sense of dramatic propriety, the outcome of Wagner's teaching, and the desirability of making the music and words parts of a whole, these songs seem open to question. Curiously enough, it is not the music, which in some of them is particularly bright and sparkling, but rather the words and acting, which produced the greatest effect: such was particularly the case in the duet between Kitty and the Captain. Nora, the grief-stricken wife, is the one sombre figure in the picture; the others, even Shamus, are light-hearted and humorous. The tragic scene before the final dance in the first act, when Nora tells of the ominous wail of the Banshee, and that at the place of execution in the second, give the composer opportunities of showing his dramatic gifts. Both scenes display power; the admirable scoring reveals the influence of Berlioz. In the latter, one cannot, indeed, help thinking of the Marche au Supplice of the Fantastic Symphony.

With regard to the performance of "Shamus O'Brien," a few words must suffice. The singers—Mr. Denis O'Sullivan (Shamus), Miss Kirkby Lunn (Nora), Miss Maggie Davies (Kitty), Mr. Joseph O'Mara (Mike), Mr. Stephens (Captain Trevor), and Mr. C. Magrath (the Priest)—all deserve high commendation. The chief honours were naturally won by Miss Davies, Mr. O'Mara, and Mr. O'Sullivan, both for singing and acting. The piece was admirably mounted. Dr. Stanford conducted, and was called after each act.

J. S. SHEDLOCK.

RECENT CONCERTS.

THE eighty-fourth season of the Philharmonic Society commenced at Queen's Hall on Thursday evening, February 27. There was an important novelty in the programme, yet it was placed at the very end. This, however, proved of so exciting—nay, sensational—a character that it ought to have preceded the sugary music of Spohr and the characteristic strains of Grieg. Of the former, the violin Concerto in D minor was cleverly interpreted by Mr. J. Dunn; of the latter, the pianoforte Concerto in A minor was played in a masterly manner by M. Sapellinkoff. This pianist has lost none of his technical skill, but he has gained in taste and feeling, and the Concerto gave him a splendid opportunity in either direction. The novelty, however, claims chief notice. This was a Symphony in B minor by Alexander Borodine, a gifted Russian composer, who was born in 1834 and died at the early age of forty-three. By the romantic character of its melodies, the freshness of its writing, and the picturesqueness of its orchestration, the work commands attention from first note to last. From a purely musical point of view, the Andante, at first hearing, appeared the most valuable. How far the composition will gain on further acquaintance remains to be seen; of the interest of the music there is no question. Clever works sometimes please, but only for a short time; mere novelty of manner may give to the subject-matter adventitious importance. César Cui, the clever Russian composer and critic, in a series of articles contributed to the Revue et Gazette Musicale in 1880, refers to the symphonies of Borodine as "remarquables, très individuelles et intéressantes au plus haut degré." He, however, mentions as a failing in them the "inquiétude nerveuse, qui lui fait changer presque à chaque pas de mesure et de rythme, surtout dans les andantes." It is, in fact, this restlessness that makes us doubt whether the B minor Symphony will achieve immortality; for it seems irreconcilable with true greatness. The work was admirably performed under the direction of Dr. Mackenzie. Miss Pälliser contributed songs by Dr. Mackenzie and Jomelli.

AN interesting concert was given at the Steinway Hall by Miss Rosa Leo on Tuesday evening. She sang four of a set of six "Chansons à Danser," by M. Bruneau. The music of this French composer has lately been the subject of discussion, and of considerable divergence of opinion. Hitherto we have known him only as the author of compositions on a grand scale: operas and the recently performed Requiem. In these songs M. Bruneau works within modest limits, but shows skill and originality of a high order. This, to our thinking, is another and striking proof of his greatness. The music has French lightness and grace: the vocal part is melodious, refined, and in a sense dramatic; and the characteristic pianoforte accompaniments are full of piquancy and charm. M. Bruneau shows throughout independence in the matter of harmony, but it is an independence the offspring of thought, not of mere lawlessness. These songs are sure to attract the notice of intelligent vocalists. The words are by M. Catulle Mendès. The songs were interpreted with fine feeling and power by Miss Leo, and effectively accompanied by Mr. A. Hervey. Three songs by the latter were also sung by Miss Leo, all three graceful and attractive. The first, as yet unpublished, had, perhaps, scarcely the requisite passion suggested by the words. The third, "Merry May," with its clever accompaniment, pleased us best. Miss Leo and Mr. Bispham sang two interesting duets by Miss Amy Horrocks. M. Sapellinkoff played various pianoforte solos with great and well-deserved success. One of them was a Rhapsodie by Liszt—very long, very difficult, and, with exception of one or two passages, very uninteresting.

MUSIC NOTES.

THE biography of the late Sir Joseph Barnby has been entrusted to the hands of Mr. W. H. Sonley Johnstone, and will be published before the end of this year by Mr. Heinemann. Friends of the composer are requested to forward any letters and reminiscences which may be useful in the compilation of the work. The greatest care will be taken of the originals, and they will be returned as speedily as possible.

FOR the principalship of the Guildhall School of Music, vacant by Sir Joseph Barnby's death, the following have up to the present come forward as candidates: Mr. W. H. Cummings, Herr Meyer Lutz, Dr. Ralph Dunstan, Mr. Henry Gadsby, Mr. William Henry Thomas, Mr. Orton Bradley, Dr. Charles Maclean, Mr. William Carter, Mr. Alfred J. Caldicott, Mr. C. Lee Williams, Mr. A. Gill, Mr. C. J. Hargitt, Mr. J. Parry, Dr. Roland Parry, and Dr. Roberts. The committee have not yet submitted their report to the Corporation as to the emoluments of the office and the age and qualification of candidates, and the election is not likely to take place for some time.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTIONS

TO
THE ACADEMY.

(PAYABLE IN ADVANCE.)

	YEARLY.	HALF-YEARLY.	QUARTERLY.
	£ s. d.	£ s. d.	£ s. d.
If obtained of a Newsvendor or at a Railway Station	0 13 0	0 6 8	0 3 3
Including Postage to any part of the United Kingdom	0 15 2	0 7 7	0 3 10
Including Postage to any part of France, Germany, India, China, &c.	0 17 4	0 8 8	0 4 4

CLARENDON PRESS LIST.

NEW AND RECENT BOOKS.

In 2 vols., demy 8vo, 28s.

Edited by the Right Hon. W. E. GLADSTONE.

THE WORKS OF JOSEPH BUTLER, D.C.L.

(SOMETIME LORD BISHOP OF DURHAM).

Divided into Sections. With Sectional Headings; an Index to each Volume; also Prefatory Matter.

Vol. I.—ANALOGY, &amp;c. | Vol. II.—SERMONS, &amp;c.

"Mr. Gladstone has earned the gratitude of English-speaking Christians. No praise we are confident, could be less acceptable to Mr. Gladstone than to say that he has given us the 'final edition' of Butler's Works."—Guardian.

"Mr. Gladstone has produced what may well be regarded for many years to come as the classical edition of Butler."—Times.

"The merits of Mr. Gladstone's edition are many, and considerable in value. By breaking up the 'Analogy' into small sections with appropriate headings, he has done a double service for students. These small intellectual crumbs will be all the more digestible, and the line of argument indicated by the headings will become the clearer to the reader, and help him to a firmer and more systematic grasp of the subject."—Morning Post.

SACRED BOOKS OF THE EAST.

Edited by F. MAX MÜLLER.

Vol. XXXVIII.—Just published, demy 8vo, cloth, 12s. 6d.

VEDĀNTA-SŪTRAS. With the Commentary by

SANKARAKARYA. Translated by GEORGE THIBAUT. Part II., Containing a Full Index by Dr. M. WINTERNITZ to Parts I. and II.

A Complete List of the Series will be sent post free on application.

Just published, extra fcap. 8vo, cloth, 3s.

EURIPIDES ION. Edited, with Introduction,

Notes, and Critical Appendices for Upper and Middle Forms, by C. S. JERRAM, M.A., late Scholar of Trinity College, Oxford.

Second Edition, extra fcap. 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.

FIRST MIDDLE ENGLISH PRIMER. Extracts

from the Ancren Riwe and Ormulum, with Grammar, Notes, and Glossary, by HENRY SWEET, M.A., Ph.D., LL.D.

ANECDOTA OXONIENSIA.

Now ready, crown 4to, with Three Facsimiles, 12s. 6d.

BIBLICAL and PATRISTIC RELICS of the PALESTINIAN SYRIAC LITERATURE. From MSS. in the Bodleian Library and in the Library of Saint Catherine on Mount Sinai. Edited by G. H. GWILLIAM, B.D., F. CRAWFORD BURKITT, M.A., and JOHN F. STENNING, M.A.

Small 4to, paper covers, 10s. 6d.; or bound in buckram, 12s.

THE CRAWFORD COLLECTION of EARLY

CHARTERS and DOCUMENTS. Now in the Bodleian Library. Edited by A. S. NAPIER and W. H. STEVENSON.

"A valuable addition to English history. The notes to each Charter have not only a special application to the matter in hand, but have a general and important bearing on many points of early English history."—Notts Guardian.

Second Edition, Revised and Corrected, crown 8vo, cloth, 12s. 6d.

NOTES on the TEXT of the BOOK of GENESIS.

With an Appendix by G. J. SPURRELL, M.A., formerly Hebrew Lecturer at Wadham College, Oxford; Examiner in the University of London (in Hebrew and New Testament Greek, 1888-93, in Semitic Languages, 1899, 1899, 1892, 1894, 1895), Assistant Master at the Merchant Taylors' School, London.

STANDARD WORKS.

LANCASTER and YORK. A Century of English

History (A.D. 1399—1485). By Sir JAMES H. RAMSAY, of Banff, Bart. 3 vols., 8vo, with Index, £1 17s. 6d. Index to the above, separately, paper cover, 1s. 6d.

"A great book.....There is no general history of the period yet written so full, so trustworthy, or even so interesting on the whole."—Athenaeum.

THE TABLE TALK of JOHN SELDEN. Edited, with an Introduction and Notes, by SAMUEL HARVEY REYNOLDS, M.A. 8vo, half-roan, 8s. 6d.

"It is the best and most authoritative edition that has been seen."—Notes and Queries.

LAND-SYSTEMS of BRITISH INDIA: being

a Manual of the Land-Tenures, and of the Systems of Land-Revenue Administration prevalent in the several Provinces. By B. H. BADEN-POWELL, C.I.E., F.R.S.E., M.R.A.S. 3 vols., 8vo, with Maps, £3 3s.

"A monumental and exhaustive work preceded by a learned and lucid general introduction, which may well attract the attention of all students of agrarian institutions, even if they are not specially or professionally concerned with the land systems of India."—Times.

LIFE of ISAAC CASAUBON (1559—1614). By

MARK PATTISON, B.D. Second Edition. 8vo, cloth, with a Portrait, 16s.

"The publication of a new edition has even increased our admiration for this admirable biography. The book has been in every way improved."—Athenaeum.

VILLAINAGE in ENGLAND. Essays in English

Medieval History. By PAUL VINOGRADOFF, Professor in the University of Moscow. 8vo, half-bound, 16s.

"There is no living English scholar who knows these materials better, and not more than two or three who know them so well, and Mr. Vinogradoff's command of our language is such as to make the reader constantly forget that he is not one of ourselves."—Saturday Review.

SIR WALTER RALEGH: a Biography. By

W. STEBBING, M.A. 8vo, 10s. 6d.

"A very solid piece of work, erudite and painstaking in treatment, judicial in temper, and written in a style which is always readable."—Times.

"Mr. Stebbing may claim, unless we are greatly mistaken, the credit of having written the definitive biography of Raleigh."—Daily Telegraph.

LETTERS of SAMUEL JOHNSON, LL.D. Collected and Edited by G. BIRKBECK HILL, D.C.L. In 3 vols., medium 8vo, half-roan (uniform with Boswell's "Life of Johnson"), 28s.

"Dr. Birkbeck Hill's notes are full of information, and would be excellent reading by themselves, even though without such a background as Dr. Johnson."—Standard.

THE COMPLETE WORKS of GEOFFREY

CHAUCER. Edited, from numerous Manuscripts, by the Rev. WALTER W. SKEAT, Litt.D., LL.D., M.A., Elrington and Bosworth Professor of Anglo-Saxon, and Fellow of Christ's College, Cambridge. In 6 vols., demy 8vo, with Portrait and Facsimiles, £4 16s.; or 18s. each volume.

"This edition makes an epoch in Chaucerian study.....It abounds in the results of vigorous and independent research as well as of a thorough acquaintance with [the investigations made by past and by contemporary students."—Athenaeum.

A CATALOGUE OF THE CLARENDON PRESS PUBLICATIONS WILL BE SENT POST FREE ON APPLICATION.

LONDON: HENRY FROWDE, CLARENDON PRESS WAREHOUSE, AMEN CORNER, E.C.

Printed by ALEXANDER &amp; SHEPHEARD, Lonsdale Printing Works, Chancery Lane; Published by the Proprietor, HENRY VILLERS, 27, Chancery Lane, W.C.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 1245.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, MARCH 14, 1896.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

OLIPHANT, ANDERSON & FERRIER,
LONDON and EDINBURGH.

FAMOUS SCOTS.

The Second Volume of the Series is Now Ready.
Price 1s. 6d. cloth; and in extra binding, gilt top, 2s. 6d.

ALLAN RAMSAY.

By OLIPHANT SMEATON.

IN THE SAME SERIES. Price 1s. 6d. cloth; extra binding, gilt top, 2s. 6d.

THOMAS CARLYLE.

By HECTOR C. MACPHERSON.

"Mr. Macpherson has done his work well. He is evidently an able man, a thinker and a critic. We heartily congratulate author and publishers on the happy commencement of this admirable enterprise."—British Weekly.

TO BE FOLLOWED BY

HUGH MILLER. By W. KEITH LEASK.

[In April.

JOHN KNOX. By A. TAYLOR INNES.

[In May.

THE BALLADISTS. By JOHN GEDDIE.

[In June.

Demy 8vo. cloth decorated, gilt top, with Map and Illustrations. Price 7s. 6d.

PERSIAN LIFE AND CUSTOMS.

With Scenes and Incidents of Residence and Travel in the Land of the Lion and the Sun.
By S. G. WILSON, M.A., Fifteen Years a Missionary in Persia.

FROM FAR FORMOSA: the Island, its People and Missions. By GEORGE LESLIE MACKAY, D.D., Twenty-three Years a Missionary in Formosa. Edited by the Rev. J. A. MACDONALD. With Portraits, Illustrations, and Maps. 7s. 6d.
"This book will take rank with the best missionary biographies, with such 'Lives' as those of Paton, Gilmour, or Mackay of Uganda. The volume is an admirable record of a noble work."—Presbyterian.

LANCELOT ANDREWES and HIS PRIVATE DEVOTIONS. A Biography, a Transcript, and an Interpretation. By Rev. ALEXANDER WHYTE, D.D. Second Edition. Cloth extra, 3s. 6d.
"It is a volume to be placed beside one's Bible and Thomas à Kempis—an example of devotional utterance of singular power and beauty."—Scotsman.

SUCCESSWARD: a Young Man's Book for Young Men. By EDWARD W. BOK. Cloth extra, 2s. 6d.
"It has never been our lot to light upon so practical, so sensible, so friendly, and so honest a work."—Liverpool Mercury.

NO AMBITION. By Adeline Sergeant. Author of "The Luck of the House," &c. Crown 8vo, 5s.
"This is a thoroughly admirable and wholesome book for all clever girls to read."—British Weekly.

THE QUEST OF A HEART. By Caldwell Stewart. Crown 8vo, 6s.
DR. ALEXANDER WHYTE says:—"Thank you for your beautiful, noble, truly Christian book. I have sat deep into the night to finish it."

SOME OF ANNIE SWAN'S BEST BOOKS.

A LOST IDEAL. 22nd Thousand. 3s. 6d.

MAITLAND OF LAURIESTON. Gilt top, 6s.

SHEILA. Gilt top, 6s.

THE GATES OF EDEN. New Edition, with New Portrait, 5s.

BRIAR AND PALM. With Frontispiece. 5s.

ST. VEDA'S. With Frontispiece, 5s.

THE GUINEA STAMP. 6s.

ALDERSYDE. Six Illustrations, 3s. 6d. Cheaper Editions at 2s. 6d., 1s. 6d., 1s.

CARLOWRIE. Six Illustrations, 3s. 6d. Cheaper Editions at 2s. 6d., 1s. 6d., 1s.

DORIS CHEYNE. 3s. 6d., 1s. 6d., 1s.

WHO SHALL SERVE? 3s. 6d.

THE AYRES OF STUDELEIGH. 2s. 6d. and 2s.

SOME SCOTTISH BOOKS.

JAMES INWICK. Ploughman and Elder. By P. Hay Hunter, Author of "Sons of the Croft," &c. Second Edition, with a Glossary. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.
"The sketches are exceedingly lifelike and humorous."—Athenæum.

MY DUCATS AND MY DAUGHTER. By P. Hay Hunter and WALTER WHYTE. Crown 8vo cloth extra, 3s. 6d.; Cheap Edition, paper covers, 1s. 6d.
"The nearest approach to an ideal Scottish novel."—Scottish Review.

THE PROVOST O' GLENDOKIE. By Andrew Smith Robertson. Cloth extra, 2s. 6d.
"There can be no question of the brightness and force of these pictures of Fifeshire folk."—Saturday Review.

OLIPHANT, ANDERSON, & FERRIER, LONDON AND EDINBURGH.

A SELECTION FROM

MESSRS. HUTCHINSON & CO.'S NEW LIST.

A FIRST EDITION of 20,000 COPIES of MARIE CORELLI'S New Book, THE MIGHTY ATOM, will be ready on March 23. In crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 3s. 6d.

THE LEISURE LIBRARY

OF COMPLETE ILLUSTRATED NOVELS.

In cloth gilt, 2s. 6d.; on artistic paper, 2s.; with Title-page and Frontispiece in Colours, and Original Illustrations, Headpieces, and Initials.

THE FIRST VOLUME IS READY THIS DAY.

THE SECOND OPPORTUNITY of MR. STAPLEHURST. By W. PETT RIDGE.

SECOND EDITION THIS WEEK.

TOWARDS the ETERNAL SNOWS. By Edmund MITCHELL.

"One can only wonder at the power of imagination and descriptive abilities possessed by the author. A book simply teeming with dramatic incident. Such 'a plain tale from the hills' as Kipling himself might have given us, and done justice to his reputation thereby. The book will stand among our most powerful works of fiction."—Aberdeen Press.

FLORENCE MARRYAT'S NEW NOVEL.

THE STRANGE TRANSFIGURATION of HANNAH STUBBS. [This day.

BY FREDERIC BRETON.

THE TRESPASSES of TWO.

"The author has again gone to the far North of Scotland for his scenes and characters. Such an unaffected, well-told, and admirably varied story seldom appears."—Manchester Courier.

A ROMANCE OF ADVENTURE IN AFRICA. BY J. PROVAND WEBSTER.

THE ORACLE of BAAL. A Narrative of Some Curious Events in the Life of Professor Horatio Carmichael, M.A. With 12 Full-page Illustrations by Warwick Goble. [On Monday next.

"A brilliant and notable historical novel."—BY S. R. KEIGHTLEY, LL.D.

THE CAVALIERS. By S. R. Keightley, LL.D. Second Edition. In cloth gilt, 6s. With Illustrations by S. H. Vedder. The FALL HALL GAZETTE says: "An excellent story, with a ring of both Scott and Dumas in it, yet with a strong original metal of its own. Extremely striking, the ramifications of the plot are skilfully drawn. The whole story is extremely interesting. The book will take its place in the first ranks of the historical novel."

BY MRS. HUGH BELL.

THE STORY of URSULA. By Mrs. Hugh Bell, Author of "Chamber Comedies," &c. In crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 6s.

Third and Cheap Edition next week.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "VIEWS OF ENGLISH SOCIETY."
IN a SILENT WORLD. In crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 3s. 6d.

"What special opportunities of studying the mind of the deaf-mute may have fallen to the lot of the author of 'In a Silent World' one does not know; but the description of that world is, at any rate, most convincing to a reader, and the dumb tragedy of which it is the daily scene is set before us with a vividness and a pathos which are beyond praise."—H. D. TRAILL in the Graphic.

FRANKFORD MOORE'S MOST SUCCESSFUL NOVELS.

Each Volume in cloth gilt, 6s.

PHYLLIS of PHILISTIA. Fifth Edition in the press

A GRAY EYE OR SO.

Eighth Edition.

ONE FAIR DAUGHTER.

Fourth Edition.

I FORBID the BANNS.

Eighth Edition.

THEY CALL IT LOVE.

Second Edition.

DAIREEN.

Second Edition.

New Volumes.—HUTCHINSON'S SELECT NOVELS.

Each in crown 8vo, handsome cloth gilt, 3s. 6d.

THE BANISHMENT of JESSOP BLYTHE. By JOSEPH HATTON, Author of "By Order of the Court."

THE VENGEANCE of JAMES VANSITTART. By Mrs. J. H. NEEDELL, Author of "Stephen Ellicott's Daughter."

FIDELIS. By Ada Cambridge, Author of "A Marriage Ceremony."

LONDON: HUTCHINSON & CO., PATERNOSTER ROW.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

	PAGE
DANTE GABRIEL ROSSETTI, by WILLIAM SHARP . . .	213
LAWRENCE'S INTERNATIONAL LAW, by R. W. LEE . . .	214
A SPY IN PARIS DURING THE TERROR, by W. E. GARRETT FISHER . . .	215
RODEN NOEL'S POSTHUMOUS POEMS, by J. A. BLAINE . . .	216
PARTS OF THE PACIFIC, by W. WICKHAM . . .	217
NEW NOVELS, by FRANK RINDER . . .	217
CLASSICAL BOOKS . . .	219
NOTES AND NEWS . . .	219
UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS . . .	220
ORIGINAL VEMPE: "DEATH," by Prof. G. C. W. WAER . . .	220
OBITUARY: PREKINGER, by C. H. H. . . .	220
MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS . . .	221
CORRESPONDENCE—
The Frisian Origin of the Mercian Dialect , by Prof. Skeat; Mons Indonius and Geoffrey of Monmouth , L., by E. W. B. Nicholson; The sin-Enter in Wales , by N. W. Thomas . . .
APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK . . .	223
TWO BOOKS ABOUT BAHAMAM AND JOSAPHAT, by F. C. CONYBEARE . . .	223
CORRESPONDENCE—
The Restored Pronunciation of Greek , by Profs. ARNOLD and CONWAY . . .
SCIENCE NOTES . . .	224
PHILOLOGY NOTES . . .	224
REPORTS OF SOCIETIES . . .	224
LETTER FROM EGYPT, by Prof. SAYCE . . .	225
NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY . . .	226
RECENT CONCENTS, by J. S. SHEDLOCK . . .	226

CATALOGUES

FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS
promptly supplied on moderate terms
CATALOGUES on application.
DULAU & CO., 27, BOND STREET.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE,
IMPORTERS OF FOREIGN BOOKS,
14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN,
20, SOUTH FREDERICK STREET, EDINBURGH,
AND
7, BROAD STREET, OXFORD.
CATALOGUES post free on application.

TH. WOHLLEBEN,
FOREIGN BOOKSELLER,
45, GREAT RUSSELL STREET
(Opposite the British Museum),
Supplies all Foreign Books and Periodicals at the most moderate prices.
Catalogues on application.

On application for one stamp.
THE INTERNATIONAL BOOKMARKET.
Monthly List of the most important Publications issued by
H. GREVEL & CO.,
Importers of Foreign Books,
33, KING STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C.

Just out, No. 70.
ALBERT JACKSON & SON'S CATALOGUE OF CHOICE, RARE, and STANDARD LIBRARY BOOKS, recently purchased, gratis and post free, 24, Great Portland Street, London, W.
N.B.—Established nearly a Quarter of a Century.

AGENCY FOR AMERICAN BOOKS.
G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS, PUBLISHERS
and BOOKSELLERS, of 27 and 29 West 23rd Street, New York, and 24, BEDFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C., desire to call the attention of the READING PUBLIC to the excellent facilities, presented by their Branch House in London for filling, on the most favourable terms, orders for their own STANDARD PUBLICATIONS and for ALL AMERICAN BOOKS and PERIODICALS—CATALOGUES sent on application

THE SIGN OF THE DIAL.—Messrs. HACON & RICKETTS, 52, Warwick Street, Regent Street, W.—Messrs. HACON & RICKETTS beg to announce the forthcoming publication of carefully edited Books, for which a font of type has been designed to accompany the illustrations and decorations cut on the wood by Charles Ricketts and other original engravers. The Editions will be printed with spelling in which they were written. Catalogues may be had on application. THE DIAL, of which No. 4 is now ready, will henceforth be published at their shop, 52, WARWICK STREET, REGENT STREET, W.

TYPE-WRITING.—MSS. of every description COPIED. Special attention to work requiring care. Examination Questions, Notices, &c., by DUPLICATING process. Usual terms.—Miss Thomas, 5, Cautley Avenue, Clapham Common, S.W.

PRIFYSGOL CYMRU. UNIVERSITY OF WALES.

The UNIVERSITY COURT is about to proceed to the ELECTION of EXTERNAL EXAMINERS in the following Departments for the year 1896:—

GREEK LANGUAGE and LITERATURE.
LATIN LANGUAGE and LITERATURE.
ENGLISH LANGUAGE and LITERATURE.
WELSH LANGUAGE and LITERATURE.
FRENCH LANGUAGE and LITERATURE.
GERMAN LANGUAGE and LITERATURE.
HEBREW LANGUAGE and LITERATURE.
HISTORY.
PHILOSOPHY.
MATHEMATICS.
PHYSICS.
CHEMISTRY.
BOTANY.
ZOOLOGY.

Candidates must send in their names to the Registrar, with any attestation of their qualifications they may think desirable, on or before WEDNESDAY, April 15th.

Information as to the work and stipends of Examiners may be obtained on application to IVON JAMES, Registrar.
University Offices,
Town Hall Chambers, Newport, Mon.,
March 14th, 1896.

NORWICH SCHOOL BOARD.

DUKE STREET HIGHER GRADE GIRLS' SCHOOL.

WANTED immediately, an experienced Teacher as FIRST ASSISTANT MISTRESS.

Good French, Mathematics, and Drawing essential.
Salary £85 per annum, rising to £110.
Candidates required to attend will be allowed reasonable travelling expenses.

Canvassing in person or by letter will be considered a disqualification.
Applications, on forms which may be obtained from the undersigned on receipt of stamped addressed envelope, must be sent in at once.
School Board Offices, Norwich,
10th March, 1896.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE, LONDON.

The COUNCIL invite APPLICATIONS for the YATES CHAIR of ARCHAEOLOGY. The Professor's Lectures should include Greek and Roman, but exclude Egyptian Archaeology. Further information regarding the duties and emoluments of the Chair may be obtained from the Secretary, to whom Candidates should address their applications not later than April 15th next, together with such evidence of qualification as they may desire to submit.

J. M. Houshoun, M.A., Secretary.

GUYS' HOSPITAL.—PRELIMINARY

SCIENTIFIC (M.B. Lond.).—CLASSES are held throughout the year. Special instruction is given for the July Examination. Fee 1s guineas.

GUYS' HOSPITAL.—ENTRANCE

SCHOLARSHIPS in September, 1896.—FIVE OPEN SCHOLARSHIPS. Two (£100 and £50) in Science, and Three (£100, £50, and £30) in Arts.
Particulars and copies of Examination Papers on application to the Dean, Guy's Hospital, London Bridge, S.E.

UPPINGHAM SCHOOL.—AN EXAMINATION

NATION will take place at UPPINGHAM on the 24th, 25th, and 26th of MARCH, 1896, for SIX OPEN SCHOLARSHIPS—Two of £70 per annum, and £50 per annum, Two of £50 per annum, each tenable at the School. Candidates entertained free of charge if application be made by 14th March, 1896.

ST. EDWARDS' SCHOOL, near

OXFORD.—Public School, founded 1883, to provide Education for Gentlemen's Sons in Preparation for Universities, Army, &c., on definite Church principles. Fees: £65 per annum (Sons of Clergymen, £80); Day Boys, 21 guineas. Classical and Modern sides. Scholarships, July 29th.—Rev. T. F. HOSMER, M.A., Warden.

ELTHAM COLLEGE.

THE ROYAL NAVAL SCHOOL. Incorporated 1840.

The ANNUAL EXAMINATION for OPEN ENTRANCE SCHOLARSHIPS will be held at ELTHAM on APRIL 8, 9, and 10. Ten Scholarships, value £40 to £20, may be awarded.—Apply to Head Master.

WINTER SEASON, 1896-7.—LAN-

TERN LECTURES and others by ERNEST RADFORD, LL.M. Cantab., formerly Secretary of the Arts and Crafts Exhibition Society.—For List of Subjects, &c., apply to the Lecturers, care of "The Artist," 14, Parliament Street, Westminster.

ROYAL HISTORICAL SOCIETY.

(Incorporated by Royal Charter.)

Patron—HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN.
President—The Right Hon. Sir M. E. GRANT DUFF, G.C.S.I.
THURSDAY, March 14th, at 5 p.m., the following paper will be read: "SHAKESPEARE AND HIS HISTORIAN," by H. E. MALDEN, Esq., M.A., V.P.R. Hist.S.
Museum of Practical Geology,
Jernyn Street, S.W.

ROYAL SOCIETY of PAINTER-

ETCHERS.—ANNUAL EXHIBITION of the Society NOW OPEN at the SOCIETY'S GALLERY, No. 54, FLEET MALL EAST, from 10 till 6.

THE ZOOLOGICAL SOCIETY'S GAR-

DENS, Regent's Park, are OPEN DAILY (except Sundays) from 9 a.m. till sunset. Admission, 1s; on Mondays, 6d.; children, 6d. Amongst the recent additions are a young Manatee from the Amazon and a Lion presented by Rowland Ward, Esq., F.Z.S.

9, HART STREET, BLOOMSBURY, LONDON.

MR. GEORGE REDWAY, formerly of

York Street, Covent Garden, and late Director and Manager of Kegan Paul, Trench, Trubner & Co., Limited, begs to announce that he has RESUMED BUSINESS as a PUBLISHER on his own account, and will be glad to hear from Authors with MSS. ready for publication, and to consider proposals for New Books. Address as above.

PICTURE PRESERVATION &amp; RESTORATION

For advice and full particulars address C. H. MIDFORTH, Studio, 288, Devonshire Road, Honor Oak Park, S.E.

TO INVALIDS.—A LIST OF MEDICAL

MEN in all parts, willing to RECEIVE RESIDENT PATIENTS, giving full particulars and terms, sent gratis. The list includes private asylums, &c.; schools also recommended.—Address Mr. G. B. STOCKER, 4, Leicester Place, Strand, W.C.

WANTED, to PURCHASE, fine PIC-

TURES, in OIL, by Old Masters of the Dutch, Flemish, and British schools.—DOWDERSWELL, 100, New Bond Street, W.

REVIEWING.—LITERARY WORK

WANTED, by an ex-Scholar and Chemical Honourman (Cambridge). Music and Theology specialties.—FRANK NEW, M.A., 4, Argyl Street, Regent Street, W.

CHARLES LOWE'S LATEST PUR-

CHASES.

Choice BOOKS offered for SALE by
CHARLES LOWE, New Street, Birmingham.
Wholesale and Export Depot—BASKERVILLE HALL.

PUNCH, a splendid Complete Set, from 1841 to 1894, quite perfect, 105 vols., new, half-morocco, gilt, £30 10s. 1841-94

PUNCH, another Set, bound in 52 years, half-morocco, blue cloth, £21 10s. 1841-94

PUNCH, another Set, very cheap, 53 years, half-calf, in excellent condition, £25 5s. 1841-94

GOULD'S Birds of Europe, a superb set of this sumptuous work, 105 vols., royal folio, in a walnut case, 130 Guineas. 1857

ROUSSEAU'S Works, Admiral Nelson's set, 38 vols., in superb old red morocco, £19 10s. 1793

DUGDALE'S Monasticon, 8 large vols., whole morocco extra, by J. Mackenzie, a sumptuous Set, £44. 1817

SHAW'S History of Staffordshire, fine copy, on Large Paper, 2 vols., royal folio, half-morocco, £42.

SCOTT'S Novels, various Editions from £3 12s. 6d. to 28 Guineas the Set.

GEORGE ELIOT'S Novels, Complete Set, best edition, 24 vols., new, half-calf gilt, £7 7s. 1880.

CHARLES LOWE.
Wholesale and Retail Bookseller, Exporter, and Literary Agent, New-st.
Wholesale Depot—BASKERVILLE HALL, BIRMINGHAM.
Telegraphic and Cable Address—"Books, Birmingham."

AUTOTYPE REPRODUCTIONS

OF FAMOUS WORKS

IN THE

NATIONAL GALLERY.

The AUTOTYPE COMPANY have pleasure in announcing the Publication of a NEW SERIES of REPRODUCTIONS of some of the CHIEF PICTURES in this COLLECTION.

Printed in rich sepia pigment these copies are not only absolutely permanent, but exhibit the latest improvement in translating the colour gradation and technical qualities of the Paintings.

Copies are sold at the usual prices, and among the subjects already published are examples of Works by—

TURNER.	BELLINI.
GAINSBOROUGH.	HALS.
CONSTABLE	GREUZE.
CROME.	VALASQUEZ
ROSSETTI.	FRANCIA.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY,

74, NEW OXFORD STREET,
LONDON.

MESSRS. J. O. DRUMMOND &amp; CO.,

ART REPRODUCERS,
14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C.
Are the sole representatives in Great Britain of HEER HANFSTAENGL of Munich,
the well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAPHY now patronised by the leading London Art Publishing Firms. A large Collection of important Plates always on view

Process Blocks for the purpose of Ordinary

Book Illustrations.

Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. supply the cheapest and best Processes in the market, which are specially adapted to meet the wants of Antiquarians, Archaeologists, and those engaged in the investigation and publication of Pictorial and Diocesan Records.

J. O. DRUMMOND & CO. invite attention to their

Improved Rapid Photo-Mechanical Process

For the Reproduction of Works of Art, Original MSS., Designs, Lace Manufactures, Photographs, Views, Book Illustrations, Artistic Advertisements, Catalogues, &c., &c., at a moderate cost.

Specimens and price list on Application.

Offices: 14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, LONDON

THE AUTHOR'S HAIRLESS PAPER-

PAD.
(The LEADENHALL PRESS, Ltd., 50, Leadenhall Street, London, E.C.)

Contains hairless paper, over which the pen slips with perfect freedom. Sixpence each. 5s. per dozen, ruled or plain.

NOW READY AT ALL LIBRARIES.
NEW SENSATIONAL NOVEL BY THE AUTHOR

OF
"THE GREY MONK,"
ENTITLED
THE HEART OF
A MYSTERY.

By T. W. SPEIGHT,
Author of "The Grey Monk," "The Mysteries of Heron Dyke," "Quittance in Full,"
"Wife or No Wife," &c.
Being Vol. XXVIII. of the "Greenback Series."
Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

AN INDIAN MARRIAGE STORY, ENTITLED
BRENDA'S EXPERIMENT.

By Surgeon-Major H. M. GREENHOW,
Author of "The Bow of Fate," &c.
(The "Unknown Authors" Series.)
Crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.

"Stirring scenes are brilliantly portrayed, and while they are in progress one almost forgets the perils of the heroine. How Brenda is rescued and her life again brightened is a very interesting episode, which the reader will have pleasure, we are sure, in finding out for himself."

Leeds Mercury.

London:

JARROLD & SONS, 10 and 11, Warwick Lane, E.C.;
And at all Booksellers, Bookstalls, &c.

IMPORTANT.—PRINTING AND PUBLISHING.
NEWSPAPERS, MAGAZINES, BOOKS,
&c.—KING, SELL & RAILTON, Limited, high-class Printers
and Publishers, 12, Gough Square, 4, Bolt Court, Fleet Street, E.C., have specially-built Rotary and other fast Machines for printing
illustrated or other Publications, and specially-built Machines for fast folding and covering 8, 16, 24, or 32-page Journals at one operation.
Advice and assistance given to anyone wishing to commence New Journals.
Facilities upon the premises for Editorial Offices, free. Advertising and Publishing Departments conducted.
Telephone 65121. Telegraph "Africanism, London."

THE ARTIST.

6d. net, Monthly.—Seventeenth Year of Issue.

'IT IS THE ONLY ILLUSTRATED ART NEWSPAPER PUBLISHED.'

THE MARCH NUMBER CONTAINS:

THE ART NEWS of the MONTH. Illustrated.
IMPORTANT INFORMATION CONCERNING a NEW EDITION of "CHAFFERS."
PERSONAL NOTES and STUDIO GOSSIP.
SOUTH KENSINGTON MUSEUM. With Illustrations.
QUESTIONS of MERIT. By Ernest Radford.
THE SOCIETY of LADY ARTISTS. Illustrated.
EXHIBITION FORECASTS.
IMPRESSIONISM; or, the LOGIC of MODERN PAINTING.—I. By D.S. MacColl.
THE ROYAL ACADEMY SCHOOLS. Illustrated.
STUDIES in the OLD ENGLISH MASTERS.—XI. THOMAS GIRTIN. Illustrated.
THORWALDSEN in COPENHAGEN. Illustrated.
ANECDOTES of OLD CHINA COLLECTORS.
LLEWELLYN RATHBONE. Illustrated.
SKETCHING in the ARDENNES. Illustrated.
RECENT ART SALES.
DUBLIN ARTS and CRAFTS.—III. Illustrated.

A few copies of the February Number, containing FULL DESCRIPTION and ILLUSTRATIONS of Professor HERKOMER'S NEW BLACK and WHITE ART—which was out of print immediately after issue—can now be obtained, by post 8d.

ARCHIBALD CONSTABLE & CO., 2, WHITEHALL GARDENS, WESTMINSTER.

SMITH, ELDER & CO.'S LIST.

Mr. Crockett's New Novel.

ON WEDNESDAY NEXT,

CROWN 8VO, 6s.

CLEG KELLY, ARAB OF THE CITY.

By S. R. CROCKETT,

Author of "The Raiders," "The Stickit Minister," &c.

SECOND EDITION, Crown 8vo, 6s.

THE SOWERS.

By HENRY SETON MERRIMAN,

Author of "With Edged Tools," "The Grey Lady," &c.

"From first to last the book teems with interest.....There have been few such good novels for years."
Mr. JAMES PAYN in the Illustrated London News.

THE SOWERS. Second Edition.

The GUARDIAN.—"We do not often read a novel that we can recommend so confidently all round. It is exceedingly interesting, thoroughly wholesome in tone, and above all most readable."

THE TRANSVAAL ORISIS.

Ready this day, with Illustrations, crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

JOHANNESBURG in ARMS, 1895-6.

Being the Observations of a Casual Spectator. By CHARLES G. THOMAS.

Now ready, SECOND EDITION, Enlarged, with Chapters on "The Eternal Gullible," and Note on "The Hypnotism of Trilby." Crown 8vo, 6s.

HYPNOTISM, MESMERISM, and the
NEW WITCHCRAFT. By ERNEST HART, formerly Surgeon to the West London Hospital and Ophthalmic Surgeon to St. Mary's Hospital.

LONDON: SMITH, ELDER & CO.,
15, WATERLOO PLACE, S.W.

THE AUTHOR'S MANUAL. By PERCY

RUSSELL. With Prefatory Remarks by Mr. GLADSTONE.
Crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d. net. (EIGHTH and CHEAPER EDITION.)
With Portrait.

"Mr. Russell's book is a very complete manual and guide for journalists and authors. It is not a merely practical work—it is literary and appreciative of literature in its best sense.... We have little else but praise for the volume."—Westminster Review.

Dixon, Lowe & Co., 18, Boulevard Street, London, E.C.

MACMILLAN & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

Third Edition now ready. 8vo, 30s. net.

THE LIFE of CARDINAL MAN-

NING, Archbishop of Westminster. By EDMUND
SHERIDAN PURCELL. In 2 vols., with Portraits.

8vo, 21s. net.

ULSTER AS IT IS; or, Twenty-

eight Years' Experience as an Irish Editor. By THOMAS MACKNIGHT, Author of the "History of the Life and Times of Edmund Burke," &c. In 2 vols.
TIMES.—"Mr. Macknight has a good deal to tell us that is interesting and instructive."

8vo, 8s. 6d. net.

The FAR EASTERN QUESTION

By VALENTINE CHIROL.

DAILY CHRONICLE.—"Mr. Chirol's book contains an admirable summary and description of China and Japan after the war, and thoroughly wise and vigorously stated conclusions as to British Imperial interests there in the immediate future."

8vo, 10s. net.

CAMPAIGNING in SOUTH

AFRICA and EGYPT. By Major-General W. C. F.
MOLYNEUX.

DAILY NEWS.—"General Molyneux's clear, rapid, fresh, and good-humoured manner."

Crown 8vo, 10s. 6d.

THE STATESMAN'S YEAR-

BOOK. Statistical and Historical Annual of the States of the World, for the Year 1896. Edited by J. SCOTT KELTIE, Assistant Secretary to the Royal Geographical Society. Thirty-third Annual Publication. Revised after Official Returns.

In 2 vols., crown 8vo, 17s. net.

LIFE, LETTERS, and WORKS

of LOUIS AGASSIZ. By JULES MARCOU. With Illustrations.

Demy 16mo, cloth, 1s. net; Persian, 1s. 6d. net;
each volume.

TENNYSON'S POEMS. The

People's Edition. Vol. IX., IN MEMORIAM.
Vol. X., MAUD, and other Poems.

MACMILLAN'S SIX-SHILLING NOVELS. NEW VOLUME.

THE COURTSHIP of MORRICE

BUCKLER: a Romance. By A. E. W. MASON,
Author of "A Romance of Wasdale." Crown 8vo.

EVERSLEY SERIES.

NEW VOLUMES.

HISTORY of the ENGLISH

PEOPLE. Vol. IV. By J. R. GREEN. Globe 8vo, 6s.

AMERICAN DISCOURSES. By

MATTHEW ARNOLD. Globe 8vo, 6s.

Crown 8vo, 4s. net.

COTTON SPINNING. By

WILLIAM SCOTT TAGGART. Vol. I. Including all
Processes up to the end of Carding.

Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

MECHANICS for BEGINNERS.

By W. GALLATLY, M.A., formerly Scholar of Pembroke College, Cambridge.

MACMILLAN & CO., LIMITED, LONDON.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S LIST.

NEW WORKS and NEW EDITIONS.

NOW READY.

A Memoir of Mrs. Augustus Craven.

By Mrs. BISHOP.

With Extracts from her Diaries and Correspondence.

A New Edition.

In one vol., crown 8vo, with Portrait, 7s. 6d.

NOW READY.

Richard Savage.

By CHARLES WHITEHEAD.

With 18 Full-page Illustrations worked from the Original Etchings on Steel by John Leech.

A New Edition. In one vol., crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

A few copies only in demy 8vo, 14s.

NOW READY.

OUTDOOR LIFE in ENGLAND.

By ARTHUR T. FISHER, Major, late 31st Hussars; Author of "Through Stable and Saddle Room," "Rod and River." In one vol., demy 8vo, 14s.

NOW READY.

THE LOST POSSESSIONS of

ENGLAND: Tangier, Minorca, Cuba, Manila, Coraica, Buenos Ayres, Java, the Ionian Islands, &c. By WALTER FREWEN LORD, Barrister-at-Law. In one vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

NEW NOVELS AT ALL THE LIBRARIES AND BOOKSELLERS.

NOW READY.

GIFTS AND WEIRDS.

By LILY PERKS,

Author of "A Late Springtime," &c. In one vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

NOW READY.

THE INDIAN UNCLE.

By LESLIE KEITH, Author of "Libbeth," &c.

In one vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

NOW READY.

THE MYSTERY OF MR. BERNARD BROWN.

By E. PHILLIPS OPPENHEIM.

In one vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

"This is the best mystery story we have read for many a long month."—Daily Chronicle.

NOW READY.

THE MADONNA of a DAY.

By L. DOUGALL, Author of "The Mermaid," &c.

In one vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

"This stirring tale is strange and remarkable, dealing with only one incident, and treating that in an original and vivid style."—World.

THE NEW ISSUE OF THE NOVELS OF MRS. HENRY WOOD.

THE FIFTEENTH VOLUME,

ELSTER'S FOLLY,

WILL BE READY ON TUESDAY NEXT.

In red cloth, gold lettered on side, similar to the 3s. 6d. Edition, 2s. 6d.

In green cloth, gold lettered on back, but with a plainer binding, 2s.

To be followed at monthly intervals by the other Stories in the Series.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington Street
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

WORKS BY W. H. MALLOCK.

NOW READY.

Classes and Masses ; Or, Wealth, Wages, and Welfare in the United Kingdom.

A Handbook of Social Facts for Political Thinkers and Speakers.

Crown 8vo, cloth, illustrated, price 3s. 6d.

NINTH THOUSAND.

Labour and the Popular Welfare.

Crown 8vo, paper covers, price 1s.; cloth, price 1s. 6d.

NOW READY.

Strikes and Social Problems.

By J. SHIELD NICHOLSON, M.A., D.Sc.,
Professor of Political Economy in the University of Edinburgh.

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 3s. 6d.

NOW READY.

Christianity and History

By ADOLF HARNAOK.

Translated, with the Author's sanction,

By THOMAS BAILEY SAUNDERS,

With an Introductory Note.

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 1s. 6d. net.

NOW READY.

Father Archangel of Scotland,

And Other Essays.

By R. B. CUNNINGHAME GRAHAM,

Author of "Notes on the District of Menteith"

AND

GABRIELA CUNNINGHAME GRAHAM,

Author of "Santa Teresa, her Life and Times."

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 4s. 6d.

FIFTH EDITION NOW READY.

Plea for a Simpler Life.

By GEORGE S. KEITH, M.D., F.R.C.P.E.

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 2s. 6d.

NOW READY.

Oh, What a Plague is Love!

By KATHARINE TYNAN,

Author of "An Isle in the Water."

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 3s. 6d.

NOW READY.

Margaret Drummond, Millionaire.

By SOPHIE F. F. VEITCH,

Author of "A Modern Crusader."

Cheap Edition. Crown 8vo, cloth, price 3s. 6d.

A. & C. BLACK, SOHO SQUARE, LONDON.

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS.

HULSEAN LECTURES, 1895.

THE ATTITUDE of the CHURCH to some of the SOCIAL PROBLEMS of TOWN LIFE. By the Rev. W. MOORE EDE, M.A., Rector of Gateshead, Hon. Canon of Durham. With a Preface by the Right Rev. the LORD BISHOP of DURHAM. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d. [Immediately.]

WOMAN UNDER MONASTICISM:

Chapters on Saint-Lore and Convent Life between A.D. 500 and A.D. 1500. By LINA ECKENSTEIN. Royal 8vo, 15s.

TIMES.—"The book covers a field of research as interesting as it is wide, and we may add that the treatment of it is such as to command attention both from the general reader and from students."

THE RISING in EAST ANGLIA in

1381. With an Appendix containing the Suffolk Poll Tax Lists for that Year. By EDGAR POWELL, B.A. Demy 8vo, 6s. net.

MEMPHIS and MYCENAE: an Examination of Egyptian Chronology and its Application to the Early History of Greece. By CECIL TORR, M.A. Demy 8vo, 6s. [Nearly ready.]

THE COMMENTARY of ORIGEN

on ST. JOHN'S GOSPEL. The Text Revised, with a Critical Introduction and Indices, by A. E. BROOKE, M.A., Fellow and Dean of King's College, Cambridge. 2 vols., crown 8vo, 15s. net.

SOME PAGES of the FOUR GOSPELS

RETRANSCRIBED from the SINAITIC PALIMPSEST, with a Translation of the whole Text by AGNES SMITH LEWIS. 4to, cloth, 12s. net; paper, 10s. 6d. net; or in separate Parts: Syriac Text, paper covers, 8s. 6d. net; Translation, paper covers, 6s. 8d. net. [Nearly ready.]

STUDIA SINAITICA, No. V.

APOCRYPHA SINAITICA. Edited and Translated into English by MARGARET DUNLOP GIBSON, M.B.A.S. Crown 4to, paper covers, 7s. 6d. net.

AN INTRODUCTORY TREATISE on the LUNAR THEORY. By E. W. BROWN, M.A., Professor of Applied Mathematics in Haverford College, Pa., U.S.A., sometime Fellow of Christ's College, Cambridge. Royal 8vo, 15s.

CAMBRIDGE GEOGRAPHICAL SERIES.

General Editor—F. H. H. GUILLEMARD, M.D., late Lecturer in Geography in the University of Cambridge.

ETHNOLOGY. By A. H. KEANE,

F.R.G.S., late Vice-President Anthropological Institute, Corresponding Member Italian and Washington Anthropological Societies. With numerous Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 10s. 6d.

Mr. GRANT ALLEN in the ACADEMY.—"Prof. Keane's book is the first systematic treatise on Ethnology as a whole that has appeared since the general acceptance of the evolutionary theory. He has made it worthy of the place it occupies. The treatment of the first part is ample and satisfactory. The second part—more original and novel—seems to me to give by far the best division of the human species into varieties and sub-varieties, on a scientific basis, that has hitherto been attempted."

GEOGRAPHICAL DISTRIBUTION of

MAMMALS. By R. LYDEKKER, M.A., F.R.S.

[Nearly ready.]

THE CAMBRIDGE HISTORICAL SERIES.

General Editor—G. W. PROTHERO, Litt.D., Fellow of King's College, Cambridge, and Professor of History in the University of Edinburgh.

THE AUSTRALASIAN COLONIES,

from their Foundation to the Year 1893. By E. JENKS, M.A., Fellow of King's College, Cambridge, and Professor of Law in University College, Liverpool, late Dean of the Faculty of Law in Melbourne University. With Maps. Crown 8vo, 6s.

THE UNITED STATES of AMERICA,

1765-1865. By EDWARD CHANNING, Assistant Professor of History in Harvard University. Crown 8vo, with Maps, 6s. [Nearly ready.]

CAMBRIDGE HISTORICAL ESSAYS, No. IX.

THE THEORY of the DIVINE RIGHT

of KINGS. By J. NEVILLE FIGGIS, M.A., Lecturer on History in St. Catherine's College, Cambridge. Prince Consort Dissertation, 1892. Crown 8vo. [Nearly ready.]

LONDON: O. J. CLAY & SONS,
CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS WAREHOUSE, AVE MARIA LANE.

SATURDAY, MARCH 14, 1896.

No. 1245, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscripts.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

Dante Gabriel Rossetti: his Family Letters. With a Memoir. In 2 vols. By William Michael Rossetti. (Ellis & Elvey.)

THE publication of these two handsome volumes was awaited with keen interest. If in some respects this anticipatory eagerness has been disappointed, it is not without reason. Towards the close of his preface Mr. W. M. Rossetti remarks:

"Some readers of the Memoir may be inclined to ask me—'Have you told everything, of a substantial kind, that you know about your deceased brother?' My answer should be given beforehand, and without disguise: 'No, I have told what I choose to tell, and have left untold what I do not choose to tell; if you want more, be pleased to consult some other informant.'"

Again, at the end of the Memoir, which extends to between four and five hundred pages, occurs this sentence:

"Here I close. I have tried to pay my fraternal debt to the memory of Dante Gabriel Rossetti: a memory and a name honoured throughout and beyond the precincts of the two lands of his origin."

It is because, on the one hand, Mr. W. M. Rossetti has so conscientiously tried to pay his fraternal debt; and, on the other, that he has, as he frankly states, left somewhat, and perhaps much, unrecorded or unexplained—it is for these reasons that his Memoir is bound to be a disappointment to many readers. Rightly or wrongly, Mr. Rossetti has thought it advisable to leave certain episodes in the poet-painter's life in the obscurity which has persistently enshrouded them. There has been some adverse criticism in connexion with this reticence; but, for one, I am well content that, since he could not speak in every instance with absolute frankness, he has left unsaid what there could be little good in saying, and would in no wise add to our real knowledge of his great brother. The ethics of biography have never been clearly set forth. There are some conscientious people who hold that nothing of a private nature is to be held sacred in the case of deceased men or women whose genius has brought upon them the pains and penalties, as well as the pleasures, of publicity. There are other conscientious people who maintain that there should be absolutely nothing of a great writer or artist preserved save what has a direct bearing upon his work, and even that only when the intimately personal element is not obtrusive, or of a nature which would pain living persons, or likely to be cancelled by the deceased were he able to give effect to his wishes. But whatever the ethics of contemporary biography may be, it is obvious that a wider latitude must be allowed to the biographers of the great men who belong either to the past or to a relatively remote period. Alas! Rossetti—whose death is still so recent an event in the memories of those who loved the man and revered his genius—is already, to many of the young and ardent minds whom he has inspired, one of "an earlier race." True, it is only fourteen years since he died; but in these fourteen years schools have come and gone, the new generation has made a clamorous knocking, and in the advent of "the new order" so much dust has been stirred that more than one heroic figure in the background has been temporarily obscured. Those of us who may live far into the coming century, as well as those who come after us, may perhaps be able to see more clearly the perspectives of this wonderful Victorian era, with all the tumult of to-day no longer audible.

To many, even of his own and of an immediately later generation, it seemed that the time had come when an authoritative biography of Dante Gabriel Rossetti might be produced. For years we have all been expecting the promised Life by Mr. Theodore Watts. That this brilliant and able writer, whose still greater distinction it is to have won from a man such as Rossetti the encomium, "the very hero of friendship," has refrained from the task for which he is pre-eminently qualified, is not only a serious disappointment to all Rossetti's admirers, but also a distinct loss to our scanty literature of biography. The epithet here may seem ironical. Alas, it is not so: for though we have a deluge of biographies, from the penny tractate to the thirty-shilling tome, these are for the most part mere chronicles of accidental circumstances and haphazard relations. Biography, to be vital, must in a sense be re-creation. A memoir is not, or should not be, a mere reproduction of incidents, doings, and sayings in the life of an individual; but a vivid picture, painted as it were across the angle of another individual temperament, and delineated with sympathy, insight, and adequate understanding of motives, as well as of actual achievement. The born biographer is as rare, perhaps, as the born critic; and there are folk who say that both are wild swans—heard of often, though rarely, if ever, seen. But Mr. Theodore Watts is not only one of the best equipped and most brilliant critics of our time, he has also that faculty of vivid visualisation without which no portraiture of a convincing kind is possible. Circumstances have so ruled it that there is no one now living who could so well write the Life of Rossetti. Possibly it is because Mr. Watts recognises this with such painful surety that he is handicapped by the very knowledge; for deep friendship has its inviolable loyalties, and these are not to be lightly considered even after the lapse of years, and when personal gossip has lost much of its poignancy. It is quite conceivable a man may know his subject too well; and the very intimacy with which Mr. Watts's long friendship with Rossetti was crowned may have proved a barrier to that disengagement without which events and actions, mental episodes and spiritual experiences, cannot be viewed harmoniously. The fact remains, however, that by Mr. Watts's abnegation of his task we are all the losers. True, he has already written much concerning Rossetti, not only in articles about the poet-painter, but also in his always charming and vivid reminiscent papers upon members of the Rossettian circle—and lately, and most eloquently, upon the beautiful mind and spirit, the incomparable genius, of Christina Rossetti. Still, these fragmentary chapters do not constitute the promised biography; and now it seems certain that that work may not be looked for till—well, perhaps when the even longer promised "Poems," and the romance of "Aylwin," and "Poetics," have made their appearance!

Meanwhile, several writers have ventured a difficult enterprise. These, however, admittedly have been pioneers, and no one of them has given us even an approximately adequate Life, unless it be Mr. Joseph Knight. Now, at last, we have a bulky volume of 440 pages by Mr. W. M. Rossetti. It would be disingenuous to pretend that Mr. Rossetti succeeds in reconciling us altogether to the reticence of Mr. Theodore Watts. He has achieved admirably what he set himself to achieve; his memoir is invaluable as a pageant of facts and circumstances. If, taking it as a whole, we lack the animating breath which can make even a badly written book live, it must be borne in mind that the writer of the memoir is not only a brother who knew the poet-painter from the days of childhood. Moreover, Mr. Rossetti is naturally averse from entering into details which he holds to be of a purely private nature—details which are even less within his scope than they would be in the hands of one not allied by kinship. Nevertheless, I find his book full of charming and delightful touches, which help to reveal the personality, and in some sense to interpret afresh, or more keenly, the genius of his brother. It is one of the few well-ordered and thoroughly chronological biographies which we possess. This is itself no small merit; and when we take this in conjunction with the unquestionable veracity, general discretion, and sincere impartiality which characterise the narrative throughout, we may afford to give so rare a book a double welcome.

A great deal of Rossetti's personality is expressed in his quoted remarks, opinions, and other interpolated passages. There seems to me, perhaps, an undue dwelling on minor details, and certainly an unnecessary amount of explanation of a remonstrative kind. It may be a mistake to discuss the privacies of intimacy, but it is not less an error of tact to indicate or hint at episodes of more or less vital moment, without adequate explanation. Again, the latter half of the book is not written with the same deftness of touch, nor with so much verve as are the opening chapters, though the inherent interest is really far greater.

To begin to quote from this ample biography of so remarkable a man would be too seductive: innumerable passages incite, but it is imperative to refrain. Even in what may be called the superabundance of small talk, there is seldom actual irrelevancy; and though the memoir, if lightened of unimportant details, would offer more attraction to the reader interested rather in Rossetti's genius than in his affairs, the literary student will doubtless declare otherwise, and welcome so full and explicit a record.

Of the Letters which constitute the second volume, there is really not much more to be said than can be expressed in a few words. They consist almost entirely of family correspondence, addressed by Rossetti to his brother William, to his mother, to his sister Christina, and to his aunt Miss Polidori. These names are given according to the number of letters quoted. Besides, there are three or four letters in English and Italian to Gabriele Rossetti the elder, eight or nine to Lucy Madox Rossetti (the daughter of Ford Madox Brown, and wife of Mr. W. M. Rossetti); and five others to H. F. Polidori and Gaetano Polidori. Of course they reveal much of "the real Rossetti." They do not, however, represent the poet-painter as letters of a less familiar or of a less domestic kind might do. The greater proportion are of a purely incidental and transient interest to all save the actual student of Rossetti's life, and, perhaps, to fellow painters and poets. On mundane and not artistic grounds, some of those letters would unquestionably be better away, not because of anything objectionable, or even regrettable, but on account of their association with matters which have lost their interest for us now, or which cannot fairly be appreciated and estimated when thus isolated.

What does interest one is to find Rossetti, in these letters to his mother and brother and sister, one of the sunniest, brightest, and most winsome of natures. Far from being the hypochondriacal dreamer of morbid phantasies, as some would have him, he appears here as a man eminently lovable, generous, earnest, blithe, and—both in strength and weakness—emphatically human. As in the instance of Robert Louis Stevenson, Rossetti frequently finds delightful expression in colloquial phrases; for example, when he speaks of that strange and unhappy genius, David Scott, in this fashion: "David Scott is a tremendous lark." The way in which he mixes up domestic affection, his art, his poetry, and his endless succession of animal pets is very delightful. In his love of animals, particularly of fantastic creatures (from zebras to armadilloes), he was akin to Bazzi; for "Sodoma," too, loved to surround himself with all manner of strange beasts. There is a solicitude about these pets, in his letters, which is charming. Opening the second volume at random, I find a long and extremely interesting letter about several of Rossetti's most beautiful poems, with the following eager P.S.: "Have you seen the wombat?" A little later he writes again to his brother: "I have written some more poetry—one ballad, which is my best thing, I think—'Troy Town.' The wombat is a joy, a triumph, a delight, a madness." Appropos, it is interesting to note that Rossetti was by no means so inobservant of nature as has been averred. In many of his letters there occur lines and passages which convince to the contrary. Turning over the leaves in haphazard fashion, I chance upon p. 225; and here, in a letter to his mother, is the following:

"The air is delicious. . . . I send you specimens of the wild flowers which are all out in immense profusion everywhere; as to the primroses, the country is already smothered in them. The wood-violets came in a swarm, and are now almost gone. The blue ones are everywhere now, and the wood-anemones, of which I send a few, are most delightful, as well as the wild daffodils. Lambs have tails, and begin to prance a little."

I know of no other instance of more beautiful filial affection, save that of Heine for his "arme, liebe Mutter." Not only did both poets love and reverence their "dear Antique" (to quote Rossetti's phrase), but both habitually sought to keep from a mother's heart all that might give pain or distress. From first to last these letters reveal a nature which is altogether sweet and healthy. When at last the change comes, it is too evident that the curse of chloral and not inherent alteration is the true cause. It will be a surprise to many readers to find how much humour and gaiety Rossetti displayed. There are many charming parodies or humorous pieces in these volumes which can be heartily enjoyed for their engaging wit: sometimes, as in the fragments sent from Folkestone, Boulogne, and Paris to his brother William, strikingly juxtaposed with lines that have now become classical for their beauty. In one of these short pieces we find the first version of that lovely lyric beginning:

"Consider the sea's listless chime, Time's self it is made audible"— which here runs:

"The sea is in its listless chime,
Like Time's lapse rendered audible."

It is highly interesting to compare this first version with its flawless later variant.

Finally, it should be added that these volumes comprise several interesting portraits of Rossetti himself, of his sister Christina, his wife, and other relatives, besides a facsimile of a letter to his mother, in which he announces abruptly his forthcoming marriage. Cordial recognition, too, must be made of the careful and satisfactory index—a desideratum far too frequently overlooked in publications of the kind. It is almost superfluous to add that not only can no Rossetti student dispense with these two volumes, but that no lover of what is best in contemporary literature can afford to ignore them.

WILLIAM SHARP.

The Principles of International Law. By T. J. Lawrence. (Macmillans.)

DR. LAWRENCE is already well known both here and in the United States as a careful writer on International Law. This book, therefore, dedicated "to my American pupils," appears with peculiar fitness at a time when, as some think, the movement in favour of the establishment of a permanent tribunal of arbitration is stronger than it has ever been before. It is a matter which the author has very much at heart, and recommends with the sound common sense never absent from his pages.

Common sense, indeed, is the crowning excellence of his work. It is free from the besetting sin of writers upon this topic: the tendency to confound what is with what ought to be. It is free, too, from the a priori methods which, for English readers at least, diminish the value of the writings of many continental jurists. With regard to the plan of the work, it is enough to say that the author adheres to the scheme laid down in his well-known Handbook of Public International Law.

Among the subjects of International Law Dr. Lawrence includes corporations and individuals. The better plan is to confine the limits of international personality to independent States and some other bodies bearing a close analogy to them. The question is not free from difficulty. On the one hand, the rules of International Law are, and always must be, appeals to the individual conscience. In the last resort it is an individual who keeps them or breaks them. On the other hand, the difficulty of bringing home to the individual the penalty of his wrong-doing has, along with other causes, produced the modern theory of international personality based upon the principle of collective responsibility. In contrast with this view, it is quite possible to conceive a system of International Law founded not upon collective but upon individual responsibility. In such a system there would be tribunals to punish offences, and an executive to give effect to the decrees of the judiciary. There would be no question of collective responsibility, for an offence against International Law would be punished in the same way and with the same certainty as at present an offence against Municipal Law. The prosecutor would be the injured State, the defendant the peccant individual. An international suit would, in short, be precisely similar to one class of cases reserved by the constitution of the Swiss Confederation to the cognizance of the Federal Court: those, namely, in which a canton is plaintiff, and a citizen of another canton defendant. Any such system is, of course, a dream of the future. The existing scheme of International Law looks upon individuals not as persons but as instruments of State activity. The law of international persons knows them not. International Law is "the body of rules regulating those rights in which both the personal factors are States" (Holland, Jur., p. 343).

What, then, are we to say of the rules of maritime capture and the like, under which traders have to submit to an alien jurisdiction? To many writers, including Dr. Lawrence, they have seemed to necessitate the inclusion of individuals in the list of international persons. The distinguishing mark of these cases is that a foreign State is, by way of exception, "empowered to deal directly with citizens of another in their individual capacity; and when this occurs they are for the time, and so far as the question extends, subjects of International Law." Others writers have maintained that these cases form no real exception. The necessity of submission to an alien jurisdiction is merely the result of a law of nations, in virtue of which acts of constraint, which would normally be illegal, are within strict limits and under exceptional circumstances legalised. A blockade-runner, for instance, is condemned by a prize court. There has been no breach of International Law, for no nation has done wrong. All that has happened is that some trader has got into a difficulty, out of which his country will not help him. The case of an unauthorised combatant firing upon the enemy from a window is similar, with a difference. Here there has been a breach of International Law, not by the individual, for International Law knows nothing of individuals, but by the State to which he belongs. The consequences of the crime are two. First, the instrument of offence—the civilian combatant—may be lawfully slain; secondly, the injured state has a just cause of complaint against the delinquent State. But to say that, by discharging his fire-arm, the individual becomes in any special sense a subject of International Law is nonsense. A man does not make himself subject to a law by breaking it, if he was not subject to it before. Indeed, in such a case he cannot break it at all, for he lies not under an obligation to conform to it.

It would seem, then, that Dr. Lawrence's difficulty may be surmounted. On the other hand, it must be admitted that the jurisdiction of prize courts introduces an anomalous element into International Law. The anomaly, as Dr. Lawrence himself sees, consists in the character of the procedure. But this procedural difference is, we venture to think, even more important than Dr. Lawrence supposes. It is an intrusion into our present system of an alien element. Prize court law has nothing to do with State responsibility, everything to do with individual responsibility. It speaks to individual selfishness in a way that International Law does not. Herein it seems to possess a peculiar interest. It is often said that an increasing regard for International Law will come with an increasing sense of national responsibility. This is true; but it is at least equally true that International Law will never be entirely effective until it ceases to be international—until it appeals direct to the individual conscience, sanctioning its appeal by a penalty to be inflicted not upon the peccant State but upon the peccant individual. What we are waiting for and have not got is a treatise which shall present the rules of International Law, not as a subject of diplomatic palaver, but as obligations binding upon the individual conscience, because it is right to obey them and wrong to disregard them. As things stand, the shocking immorality of public sentiment is a constant menace to international peace.

Among the topics that Dr. Lawrence has not handled with complete success we place intervention and piracy. Intervention, we submit, implies at least three international persons. Where one State interposes in the internal affairs of another, we prefer to speak not of intervention but of interference. We do not agree that the essence of intervention is force or the threat of force. Intervention may begin with suasion and end with violence, or it may end, as it began, with pacific advice. Again, we do not speak of intervention where two or more States being at war another Power joins in on this side or on that, having its own quarrel with one of the parties to the struggle. Intervention we consider to be interposition by a State to prevent such a change in the relations between two or more other States as will, in the opinion of the intervener, be prejudicial to its interests. We agree with Mr. T. A. Walker (International Law, p. 134) that the imperative necessity of self-protection is the only legal justification of intervention. This does not exclude the view that international morality may sometimes in this respect go beyond International Law.

Piracy, again, is not quite adequately treated. According to Dr. Lawrence, "it is a crime by International Law, which defines it, and provides that the death penalty may be inflicted upon those that are guilty of it." A crew in revolt against their officers are stated to be pirates. Suppose them caught by a cruiser, what is to be done with them? In one passage Dr. Lawrence seems to countenance the vulgar notion that pirates may be hanged from the yard-arm without further ado. We cannot find any authority for such a statement.

In one or two places Dr. Lawrence has not verified his references. Grotius is credited with holding that human law cannot contravene the law of nature. This seems to be a reminiscence of Blackstone rather than of Grotius. It is unsupported by the passage referred to.

The sections of treaties quoted are sometimes incorrectly given. There are errors of this kind on pp. 112, 497. With regard to the Transvaal Convention of February 27, 1884, it is not precisely correct to say "that the rulers of the Transvaal are bound to obtain the assent of Great Britain before they can take action in a most important sphere." They can take any action they like, but Her Majesty's Government may refuse to endorse it.

These are small blemishes. Dr. Lawrence has produced an interesting and useful book. It may be consulted with advantage upon most of the problems of modern International Law.

R. W. LEE.

The Journal of a Spy in Paris during the Reign of Terror, January—July, 1794. By Raoul Hesdin. (John Murray.)

In these days of verisimilar historical novels and ingenious representations of the past, the student is naturally inclined to look with some suspicion upon anything that purports to be the reproduction of a newly discovered manuscript. Not Mr. G. P. R. James's two cavaliers themselves were a more certain prologue of fictitious fighting and love-making than is this recent device. Thus it is with some misgivings that one regards the claims of "Raoul Hesdin's" lively work to rank among the recognised authorities upon the French Revolution. In a somewhat full but unsigned Introduction we are told, with a great appearance of candour, that nothing at all is known about the gentleman whose name appears "upon the brown paper cover of the book." If he was, as is hinted, a spy in the employment of the English Government, he has very effectually succeeded in covering up his traces. That the supposed author was a wood-engraver, a man of some humour, taste, and education, and a strong contemner of the ways and means of the Revolution, is sufficiently apparent from internal evidence. There is nothing inherently improbable, indeed, in the supposition that his notes never made their way to Philadelphia, as was intended, and have now found their way into print just a hundred years behind the fair. And if we assume the truth of this supposition, we can quite agree with the editor that Hesdin's "observations seem to possess no little interest and value. No contemporary book, either in French or English, paints these conditions quite in the light which this manuscript throws upon them."

But can we safely assume this? There is one grave obstacle in the way, as it seems to me. A great deal is said in the Introduction about Hesdin and his brown-paper-covered MS. But the one omission is of the really vital thing: there is not a word about the history of the MS., the place, time, and conditions of its discovery, or the circumstances which have prevented its existence from being made known before. Now, this is the one thing that must be stated as a matter of course before a new MS. has any first-hand value for the historian. A MS. without a pedigree is worth no more than an Old Master or a racehorse in a similarly orphaned condition. It may be quite genuine, but who is to prove it? With Johnson and Voltaire, one demands the production of the original, or at least an explanation which will remove the suspicion that Hesdin's diary is an ingenious tour de force on the part of one who is extremely well acquainted with the social condition of Paris in 1794, and has a strong share of the historical imagination without the desire or the ability to write an historical novel. Yet the motive of such a mystification, so cleverly carried out, is not very easy to see. In fact, the absence of any story or any polemical object, like that which incited Meinhold, for instance, is the best guarantee one can at present see for accepting the diary as genuine. Perhaps a desigu of instruction might be read into the last sentence of the Introduction:

"Can the Englishman who lives, as the late Sir H. Maine said, in facies Romuli, altogether afford in 1895 to neglect the terrible object lesson afforded to him by Paris one hundred and one years ago?"

Having thus shown that, in the absence of fuller information as to the descent of this diary, it cannot be of much use to the historian, one is free to praise either the observing powers of the imagined Hesdin or the compiling skill of his modern creator. The book gives a very lively picture of the state of Paris during the Reign of Terror, in which special emphasis is laid upon the influence of a failure in the food supply of a great capital. Paris was in as bad a way in 1794, under the Terror, as when the Prussian lines girdled her about in 1870:

"Paris is on Ration, like a besieged city," writes Hesdin; "each person receives from his Section a baker's card, and is thereby entitled to receive from the baker, at the maximum price, as much bread as the Municipals consider sufficient for him and his family. This ration varies weekly. The baker is bound to calculate, from the number of mouths he feeds, the quantity of corn he will need to buy from the Municipals, who distribute it weekly. We, who are not obliged to faire queue at the bakers' doors—thanks to my employ, I am exempt from this, and a bare sufficiency of bread is delivered, together with meat and vegetables, at my lodging daily—have very little conception of the sufferings of those who are. The queues are somewhat differently regulated in different Sections; but my host's daughters, who take it in turn to go, are often waiting from four of the clock after midnight till eight or nine in the morning."

It is true that, as one is credibly informed, men and women voluntarily undergo equal discomfort nowadays in order to secure a good seat for some trifling theatrical amusement; but then they are not obliged to do it, which makes all the difference.

A more painful symptom of the Terror is afforded by the frequent allusions to the guillotine and its work, of which a very lurid picture is drawn. "The very paving-stones smell of blood," writes Hesdin, "and the river seems to run blood." This is about the time when "the Spring sends its green leaves and bright weather, bright May, brighter than ever: Death pauses not." This sentence of Carlyle's finds an interesting confirmation, or at least a parallel, in one of Hesdin's: "It is wonderful weather: all the trees in bloom six weeks before their time, as if the smile of Nature meant to mock at the horrors of Mankind." As to these latter, our diarist gives plenty of picturesque detail.

"The high and mighty Princess Guillotine has recently taken to speaking, as well as acting. I bought at Petit's, a few days back, an account of the late trial (Danton's) together with an address of Mrs. Guillotine to her faithful breechless ones. . . . If the Terror is to be maintained, such literature is necessary. For instance, nothing is more common than for women to faint at the sight of the guillotine, especially those with child: and one hears horrible stories of children being born with the mark of a lunette on their necks. People are beginning to desert the quarter of the place, or to close their shutters when the death cart comes by, though not unfrequently the brutal mob has broken the windows of those who dare to do so; and though it has become necessary to station guards to prevent the street urchins from leaping on the scaffold and playing there. . . . In order that everyone may have a full opportunity of seeing the horrors, the route taken by the death cart on its way from the prison to the Place is frequently varied as well as the hour, though it's generally five of the evening. If the streets are blocked the journey often lasts an hour, and the crowd on the quays is an unusually fierce one. I have seen a mother suckling her infant in the death cart amid the howlings of the mob."

But enough of horrors. There is a curious contrast in Hesdin's disgust at the revolutionary practice of smoking tobacco instead of using it as gentlemanly snuff.

"Even virtuous women," he says, "complain of the coarse language and the rude puffing of tobacco smoke in their faces, with which they are daily regaled on the Terrace. . . . The disgusting habit of smoking tobacco in all the coffee houses poisons me. It was formerly the mode to do so only in the lowest cabarets; it was regarded as a mark of Dutch vulgarity and boorishness. I find many of the patriot fashions difficult to assume, but this one impossible, and shall no doubt soon become suspect in consequence. All the Mucios Scaevolae were puffing their pipes there this evening."

Hesdin makes some curious hits at the events of to-day. His prediction that Europe would one day be in dread of a Franco-Russian alliance; his prophecy that it would take a century for the sensible metric system to become universal, as it only now shows signs of doing; his allusion to "flying machines to cast shells into besieged towns" among the military experiments of the Convention—these are curious confirmation of the editor's assurance that the book may form an object lesson for the modern Englishman.

Finally, in taking leave of this very interesting little book, one may reasonably express a wish for further information about its origin. If it is really a historical document, the editor is inexcusable for having omitted to give the needful details about his original; but if it is merely an ingenious cento of existing authorities, one would like to know the name of the historian who has been clever enough to give so realistic a form to the product of his researches. There is plenty of demand for yet another historical novelist of his calibre.

W. E. GARRETT FISHER.

My Sea, and Other Poems. By the Hon. Roden Noel. With an Introduction by Stanley Addleshaw. (Elkin Mathews.)

THIS selection of posthumous verse by the late Mr. Roden Noel should not fail to interest the poet's admirers, since it is fairly representative of the characteristics of his poetic work. As in previous volumes, the somewhat morbid sensibility to what has been called the night side of nature finds utterance in several of the poems. There may be noted, too, the poet's tendency to refer much of the evil wrought under the sun to the action of some eyeless and arbitrary force in nature. It seems, indeed, that Mr. Roden Noel, like the rough wind in Shelley's stormy lyric, wails for the world's wrongs. Whether he is to be considered in any sense a mediciner of such wrongs is, perhaps, a little dubious. Mr. Stanley Addleshaw, however, has no doubt on the subject. He claims that what Matthew Arnold says of Goethe is equally true of Mr. Roden Noel:—

"He took the suffering human race,
He read each wound, each weakness clear,
And struck his finger on the place,
And said, 'Thou ailst here, and here.'"

Possibly this represents what the younger poet would have done, had his powers of lyrical expression been proportioned to his emotional sensitiveness and enthusiasm. It is necessary to distinguish between his benevolent intent and his poetic performance. His sympathy with suffering humanity was undoubtedly both genuine and deep. There is touching testimony to the warmth and generosity of his heart in "Poor People's Christmas," and many another poem. Still, I cannot think that Mr. Roden Noel possessed Goethe's gift of spiritual diagnosis.

Mr. Addleshaw, however, is no cold commentator nor faint encomiast. He places Mr. Roden Noel with the greatest poets of our age.

"As a nature-poet," he remarks, "he took rank with the greatest of his contemporaries, for he understood, as Wordsworth did before him, not only the external beauty of nature, but knew also the great guiding spirit that lies beneath it."

Further, as if to emphasise his sense of Mr. Roden Noel's interpretative power, it is said that in certain of his poems he did not hesitate "to touch upon much that may seem ironical or cruel in nature, or even to explore the darker shadows of life. 'From doing this,' Mr. Addleshaw observes, 'Wordsworth himself shrank, with the result that his nature-pictures, though always fine, sometimes lack artistic completeness.'"

It does not follow, of necessity, that, because a nature-poet like Mr. Roden Noel should have attempted something from which a poet of nature like Wordsworth shrank, there must be something essential wanting in Wordsworth's poetry. It should be proved (1) that the thing attempted was worth the attempt, and (2) that Mr. Roden Noel's success justifies the inference that there is anything in his poetry complementary to that of Wordsworth. Mr. Addleshaw scarcely convinces me on this point. But did the author of "Peter Bell" shrink in the way suggested? I confess I know not where to find in his writings the evidence of this timidity. Is there anything in Mr. Roden Noel's method of interpretation that is wanting in the artistic completeness of, let it be said, "Resolution and Independence," or the stanzas on Sir George Beaumont's picture of Peele Castle in a Storm? If, for instance, in the Peele Castle stanzas Wordsworth had indulged in sentiment of the "cruel crawling foam" order, instead of transmuting the deep distress of his personal affliction to a noble, impersonal appeal to humanity, the poem must have lost greatly in dignity and pathos, and have gained nothing in artistic completeness.

In the present volume are several poems of the sea, brief lyrical outbursts, that are notable for a sympathetic spirit, and touched with a light and happy play of fancy. Of these the song "Wild Love on the Sea" appears to be the most spontaneous and moving. "At Porthcurno," again, natural emotion finds tender and musical expression. This poem, too, has precisely that measure of emotional restraint, the want of which in certain other examples is a grave defect. It is the sea, as Mr.

Addleshaw says, that inspired the poet with his finest thoughts. Yet even in some of these are to be noted verses that tell of an insensitive ear and an imperfect command of metrical expression. In "Light Love by the Sea-Glory" we have rhymes that strike the ear like blows of a hammer on an anvil:

"Little shells on a yellow sand
With a wave-damascening,
Little wells in the mellow land
Eyes of deep meaning!
The glad ripple in dancing
On the shore with a light froth,
In his footing and glancing
Leaves it marked like a night-moth."

In the same poem we have verse so laboured and discordant as to suggest a first draft that has been left unrevised:

"From flickering foam-blossom
Shadows are sliding,
Down the waves' hollow-dome-bosom,
Gleaming and gliding."

In "Natura Naturans," the longest and most ambitious poem of the selection, several lines occur that must surely be lapses due to inattention. It is almost inconceivable that Mr. Roden Noel could have given these poems his final revision.

J. ARTHUR BLAIRKIE.

Parts of the Pacific. By a Peripatetic Parson. (Sonnenschein.)

THE Peripatetic Parson is one of those easy and fluent writers who must be urged by others to venture into print. First an American humorist, and then many other people, requested him to publish an account of his life in some of the less frequented regions of the Pacific. We fancy he was by no means unwilling to comply with their request. Certainly no excuse is needed for the publication of an amusing book, which gives a lively picture of the countries visited by the author—Fiji, New Zealand, Hawaii, and especially North Queensland, the "Never Never Country," where he spent several years, and which, unless his description is very much exaggerated, is the most detestable country it has been thought worth while to colonise. What took him to Australia or when he went there, he does not tell us. But, leaving Australia proper, he passed several years in tropical Queensland, a region spoken of in the South as an unknown district—a place unfit for human habitation, and so it certainly seems to be; and, were it not for the humorous aspect even of serious affairs, our Parson considers rough life in a rough country would be almost unbearable. This humorous aspect he is ever ready to make the most of, and the fault of his book is that it is too jocular.

He undertook the charge of a parish of vast extent, and for this he seems to have been the right man in the right place. The rough colonists are ready enough to attend a chance service, if properly called upon beforehand; but they are critical, and at a place called Hughenden, after church, a certain amount of indignation was expressed because "the parson was too severe." The outcome was that he was requested to step outside and fight some of the congregation; but others argued, "Was not what the parson said quite right?" And so the matter was compromised, and they all came again the next Sunday. This place Hughenden is described as an awful part of the country, right in the interior.

"The scorching dry heat in the sun was almost insufferable, and the iron-roofed houses afforded no proper shade; 122° was the temperature inside. Although not the fly season, flies nevertheless covered everything; and when the horses played up so that both hands were required, flies immediately swarmed into the eyes. Most of the people suffer from sandy blight, a painful disease in the eyes. There were no trees, there was no shelter, hardly any water. No rain had fallen for eight months, and the hot air was thick with a stifling haze of dust. The mighty Flinders, a vast river of sand, with water beneath, mooked the parched township, the dusty downs, and the burning limbs of the population.

"Frequently all the doors and windows of the wretched tin and wood houses had to be hurriedly closed to keep out the hateful Sirocco. The almost bare downs rolled away into the distance, with pillars of hot dust a thousand feet high travelling along in the scorching whirlwinds, at a few miles distance from each other, like giants stalking through the land, rearing their dim heads into the brass-coloured sky. These dust spouts are only a few feet in diameter for hundreds of feet up. They come eddying along, sometimes lifting even oil-tins and pieces of corrugated iron; and woe betide the houses they take in their track, for they fill them with dirt and rubbish, making a clatter on the roof. Even if people are on the alert to close all the apertures as they see a column approaching, they are filled with fine dust, and the very bookcovers coil up with the heat. The people are as happy as anybody else. There they live and toil, make lots of money, marry and are given in marriage. They have their excitements—the shearing season, dancing, and race meetings. All the vices and a few of the virtues belonging to the rest of the world are to be met with in that dreary, scorching wilderness."

The highest reading of the thermometer in the interior of Queensland which came under the author's notice was 130° in the shade. He gives a frightful picture of three weeks at Charters Towers Gold-field, during which the thermometer ranged from 112° to 120° inside the miserable houses of the place.

"During that terrible period people dropped down dead in the streets from overheated blood, or falling lifeless from drays and buggies, were carried away and in a few hours their friends would be following them to the grave. The streets were filled with long funeral processions following one upon another. Clergy of all sects spent the days at the cemetery without a twig of any sort to afford shelter from the blazing sun. Rows of open graves ready dug yawned in every direction to receive many of the very people who were standing near them to take leave of those who succumbed first."

It is extraordinary that Englishmen should be so absolutely incapable of adapting themselves to the climate of the country to which they emigrate: they continue to carry on their out-door life in the very hottest part of the hottest days and build houses as if their object was to have them as hot and airless as possible. Indeed, our Parson met only one house where a punka was used; and he says that, with all their go and energy, not one Queenslander in a thousand has the smallest idea how to build a house or how to live.

The rainfall and floods in North Queensland are on as gigantic a scale as the heat and droughts. There may be no rain for eight or ten months, but when the rain does come it comes with a vengeance. We read of rivers rising a hundred feet and more, and the enormous masses of debris brought along by the torrents sweep away everything that comes in their way. This had led engineers to devise the greatly celebrated low-level railway bridge over the river Burdekin. This bridge crosses the bed of the river at about thirty feet above the level of the lagoons, and is so placed that when the river is full enough to uproot trees and carry away houses the water is thirty or forty feet above it, so that the floating debris does not hitch in the structure. The bridge has been fifty or sixty feet under water for five or six weeks at a stretch; and yet when the author saw the Burdekin, it was a mere succession of lagoons and pools among the rocks and sand in a dry bed.

The Parson dilates on the Australian customs of "shouting" and "knocking down cheques," which are rife in the tropical parts of Queensland—the hotter the climate the more spirits the colonists consume; and he is justly severe on parents who send out sons whom they cannot manage or control at home to such a country and to such temptations.

We cannot say much in favour of the illustrations, and think that the publishers might have provided a better map.

WM. WICKHAM.

NEW NOVELS.

The Wrong Man. By Dorothea Gerard. (Blackwoods.)

The Demagogue and Lady Phayre. By William J. Locke. (Heinemann.)

The Fiery Furnace. By F. Reginald Statham. (Gibbings.)

The Wood of the Brambles. By Frank Mathew. (John Lane.)

Gildas Haven. By M. S. Haycraft. (Jarrold.)

The Mystery of Jamaica Terrace. By Dick Donovan. (Chatto & Windus.)

What We are Coming To. By Henry Maurice Hardinge. (Digby, Long & Co.)

The Dowager Lady Tremaine. By Mrs. J. B. Alliot. (Elliot Stock.)

A Pagan Soul. By Louis Vintras. (Hurst & Blackett.)

The Cavaliers. By S. R. Keightley. (Hutchinson.)

THE distinguished novelist, Dorothea Gerard, might with advantage have chosen a more appropriate title for her latest book. The Wrong Man is suggestive of a sensational element quite foreign to the story, whose interest depends rather on the true conception and faithful presentation of the characters and of their environment than on thrilling situations and highly coloured pictures. The plot is so slender that, were it not for the admirable way in which each point is made to enhance the general effect, the critic would be inclined to cavil at the length of the book. Mme. Longard de Longgarde's method is, however, that of the artist who uses scrupulous care in the selection of material, and is equally heedful in the moulding of that material towards the end in view. The proud and stern young Austrian, Lieutenant Milnovics, his half-English brother officer Radford, and Antonina Brunowaka, the warm-hearted landowner, who in the course of the narrative develops from girlhood to womanhood, are the three principal figures in The Wrong Man—each stands out as a definite personality; and several of the minor characters, notably that of Father Floryan, are skilfully sketched. The descriptive passages are full of charm, inasmuch as they call up vivid pictures of village life and scenery in the Ruthenian country with which the author is intimately acquainted.

It is no time-serving agitator that Mr. William J. Locke presents to the reader in his new novel. Daniel Goddard is a leal-hearted son of the people: in his case, sympathy with and devotion to the cause of the workers are something more than party cries, they are the master-spirits of his honest, hopeful nature which must and do find expression in his life. It is upon the delineation of his hero that the author concentrates all his attention, and in this fact lies the strength and the weakness of The Demagogue and Lady Phayre. Mr. Locke has realised the character of Daniel Goddard; more than this, he enables the reader to realise it by means of a series of well-conceived and carefully selected scenes. Daniel's early life as a cabinet-maker, his sudden accession to comparative wealth, his marriage, in spite of his changed position, to the empty-headed and coarse daughter of a drunken sea-captain, his growing power as an orator, his friendship and, finally, his love for Lady Phayre—these things are described clearly, succinctly, at times powerfully. The drawing of the heroine, Lady Phayre, however, is less satisfactory. Although she is made to exercise a potent influence for good on the life of the ardent young democrat, she flits across the book as a shadow with a name, a shadow to whose inconsistent movements the reader is given no key. The minor character of Lizzie, the drunken wife, is excellently suggested. The book as a whole is written with praiseworthy reserve, and gives evidence of considerable insight and grasp.

The Fiery Furnace is dedicated to all suffering women; and it cannot be doubted that Mr. F. Reginald Statham is earnest in his endeavour to enlist the sympathies of his readers in favour of his heroine, Constance Holt. But a worthy aim does not necessarily mean a good story; and the author's art must itself pass through a transmuting furnace, before he can hope to convey his message with force and beauty. The machinery obtrudes; the construction halts and turns this way and that; the characters, instead of throbbing with life, too often act and speak like the players in a third-rate theatrical company; and when Mr. Statham wishes to be impressive, he frequently succeeds only in being melodramatic. If, however, the faults are numerous and obvious, the book has redeeming merits. The attempt to portray a woman whose early disgrace is the starting-point of a fuller and nobler life is a worthy one, and the writer sustains the interest in his theme wonderfully well: there are many happy touches in the dialogue, and one or two of the situations are treated with skill. The "first act" of the drama takes place in the Isle of Man, the second in the ancient town of Maperley, near London; and several of the descriptive passages are full of characteristic colour.

Those who have read At the Rising of the Moon are aware that Mr. Frank Mathew can present vivid pictures of life on the green isle of Eiré: he unites an intimate knowledge of his country and a keen sympathy with his race to considerable literary ability. The Wood of the Brambles is the title of his new book, and a delicious old wood it must have been as he describes it a hundred years ago; a fitting trysting-place, too, was the picturesque well in its centre, where Agatha Considine and her unsoldierlike lover were wont to meet. On the outskirts of the wood stood the ancient pile where Sir Dominick, the hero, lived, with its great quiet rooms, its hall of books, and its buttery. No less charming than the descriptions of these things and places is the delineation of the innocent, kindly, yet dangerous dwellers in county Wexford; for on nearly every page some characteristic trait is revealed, some humorous sally recorded. The narrative deals with the rising of the peasantry at the end of the last century in favour of an Irish republic; and if, on the surface, the rebels appear to be rather half-hearted, the reader can re-echo the words of Sir Theophilus Considine, "if the people were exiled they would be breaking their hearts for the wet wind on the hills and the olive tints on the moors." As a story of adventure The Wood of the Brambles is ill-knit and rambling; but as a picture of old country life in Ireland it has great interest. The format of the volume calls for a word of praise.

The reader of Gildas Haven carries away two very distinct impressions: one that the text is overlaid with quotations in verse, for the most part of a religious kind; the other that Mrs. Haycraft has an unbridled passion for italics, which are employed inappropriately some hundreds of times in the volume. If the art of fiction consisted in the power to make a haphazard mixture of these two dangerously facile practices, this book would be remarkable; as it is, they are unmistakable blemishes. The heroine, whose name supplies the title, an ardent and narrow young puritan, becomes, in spite of herself, passionately attached to a ritualistic curate, fresh from Oxford, with an unquestioning faith in his Church, her doctrines, and her ceremonies. Gildas's affection is returned, and the interest of the story depends mainly on the struggles which take place between faith and love. The author might well have concluded her narrative with the marriage of Pendrill and Gildas, for the additional chapters add nothing to what we already knew. Much space is devoted to the religious discussions and disquisitions, which, though not profound, are written in a fair spirit; there is, too, an undertone of earnestness, which to some extent redeems the faulty construction and characterisation.

Dick Donovan has attempted to add the interests of a love-story to those of a detective narrative in The Mystery of Jamaica Terrace, but unfortunately the compound fails to be either touching or exciting. The most inexperienced reader cannot fail to recognise at once in the malevolent Falwasser the instigator of the crime—for, of course, there is a murder. The detective, so far from exciting wonder at the rapidity and precision with which he tracks the criminal, succeeds only in arousing pity for his incapacity; but then he falls a victim to the fascinations of a middle-aged lady with a past, and perhaps this fact is sufficient to explain his lack of acumen. As is usual in this type of book, the characters are overdrawn, many of the incidents highly improbable, and the conversations pitched in too exalted a key. In point of style, however, The Mystery of Jamaica Terrace is an advance on the author's previous efforts.

On her title-page (Mrs. or Miss?) Henry Maurice Hardinge quotes the proverbial saying: "Of the making of books there is no end." It is therefore fair to assume that she recognises the fact, and that she had a definite purpose in writing What We are Coming To: the Produce of To-Day. Several plausible theories suggest themselves. The author may have wished to show that effects otherwise unattainable can be attained if simple rules of grammar be disregarded, words loosely employed, or vulgarisms indulged in. She may have desired to prove that a writer can obtrude his theories at considerable length on any and every subject, and on any and every occasion, without detriment to the movement of the story. She may have attempted to demonstrate that from an artistic or a moral point of view it is necessary to introduce "exquisite" young men who say: "How beautiful is sin. . . . The only pure, beautiful sin is the strange sin"; or—but the possibilities are too numerous to particularise. An example of the style may be given:

"Here was his cousin Ichtheosaura—one of those people he most detested, and who he would drop in a moment, only she was considered smart—smart because she was thoroughly outré, and considered so because she told everyone that everybody else said so, which, of course, made everyone say so too, in order that they might not be considered not to know what was what."

For the rest, the plot is featureless, the characters are vulgar and unconvincing, and the tone of the book is unhealthy.

In twelve brief chapters Mrs. J. B. Alliot relates certain spiritualistic experiences which befell The Dowager Lady Tremaine and her family. It cannot be said that in any particular place the writer permits herself to preach, and yet an atmosphere of simple goodness pervades every page. The characters bear too close a resemblance one to the other to fulfil the requirements of a story: all are noble, high-minded, self-sacrificing; not once do they disobey the whispers that come to them from the spirit-world; never, even in thought, are they guilty of sin. Though the words are assigned to various actors, one voice and one voice only speaks throughout in soft and pleading tones. A little more fire, a firmer grasp of life, and The Dowager Lady Tremaine might have been a slight but persuasive idyll.

The atmosphere in which Louis Vintras surrounds his heroine is surcharged with love: the men and women, young and old, speak of little else, and if for a moment another topic is introduced, they rapidly revert to the all-absorbing theme. It may be that Dora Congreave had her romance, "a secret romance hidden away in the depths of her heart, safe from the gaze of the world, unreachd by the gleam of a star"; but the author has failed to make interesting its revelation. A Pagan Soul is a semi-sentimental, semi-sensational novel with an undesirable tendency.

Mr. S. R. Keightley's The Cavaliers is healthy in tone, spirited in treatment, and written in a manner calculated to attract lovers of historical adventure. Unlike many of his predecessors in the same field, the author is singularly impartial; but while this impartiality does not detract from the force of the narrative, it is a meritorious feature in a capital book.

FRANK RINDER.

CLASSICAL BOOKS.

Eight Orationes of Lysias. Edited with Introduction, Notes, and Appendices. By M. H. Morgan. (Boston: Ginn.) Lysias is not read by young students so much as he deserves to be. This last addition to Messrs. Ginn's College Series of Greek Authors puts it in the power of teachers to introduce Lysias to their classes, for it contains text and useful notes within reasonably small compass. Placed on a level with other authors in this respect, Lysias should have no difficulty in attaining to a certain amount of school popularity. He is not hard to read; he is not dull; and—which may be the triumph of his art—he conveys a general impression of honesty. Some of these good points seem closely connected with his style, his λεπτολογία. Mr. Morgan's straightforward introduction explains what this is; and there can be no doubt that boys should be introduced to the plain style before they are allowed to see anything more magnificent or inflated. Mr. Morgan's commentary, the outcome of exact and acute scholarship, rarely passes a difficulty by. Explanation is not overdone, but help is ready where it is needed. The plan of sending boys for bits of elucidation to some large Grammar, as those of Hadley or Goodwin, is a good one, if you can get the right sort of boy; but notes are written for all sorts of boys to use, and it will not do to trust them to look up several such references in one day's lesson—e.g., in the speech κατ' Ἐπαυροδίου (§ 7), ὅσον τε, κ.τ.λ., the note "just as on the adoption, on good grounds, of any other measure," with its added reference to G. & H., will, we fancy, leave the class as a whole less well informed of what Lysias meant than the note given in Mr. Shuckburgh's commentary—"as they might have defended themselves (ἀπελογησαίτο &c.) if they had carried out any other reasonable measure." As to text, Mr. Morgan has printed the readings of X, as collated by Kayser, and his text is in general agreement with that of Fuhr. Prof. Gildersleeve contributes a neat little emendation on the speech πρὸς τοὺς ἀρκυνοῦς (§ 14).

Socrates and Athenian Society in His Day. By A. D. Godley. (Seeley.) It is well that every age should read the story of the life, the trial, and the death of Socrates. But, as no generation seems to find much of relish in the books which were written for its fathers, even the careful and sympathetic work of Grote and Mill is ceasing to be used. Mr. Church's excellent translation of certain dialogues wants the modern setting and connexion to make it generally readable. The field is therefore open for a new and popular study of the great Athenian cross-questioner. For supplying such an account no better man could be found than Mr. Godley. His knowledge of Plato, his judgment in selection, and his light touch (a thing not always found with erudition) go to make up a book which no one can find either dull or uninteresting. In his pages Plato speaks to us of Socrates in large and full quotations; and the passages selected are partly such as show Socrates' method at work, partly the great myths. The vision of Er, inserted with excellent taste after the affecting death-scene of Socrates, makes a fitting close to a striking and complete little volume. Of Xenophon, as a witness to his master's life, Mr. Godley thinks less than he does of Plato; but the caricature which Aristophanes perpetrated is duly brought in, and Mr. Godley's verse-translations from the Clouds are very happy indeed. We wish sincerely that he would translate some more Aristophanes for us.

Latin Prose of the Silver Age: Selections. Edited by C. E. Brownrigg. (Blackie.) This is an interesting book for students of Latin literature who want a convenient and well-selected set of specimens of—e.g., Apuleius (p. 154) or Petronius (p. 49). A pleasant introduction, by the President of Magdalen College, Oxford, is prefixed; also a careful scheme of the writers represented by the term "Silver Age," with notes on the authors from whom the selections have been made. For the boys of higher forms (see pref., p. v.) a book like this may be a convenient diversion; but it seems hardly desirable to let a schoolboy too early into the secret that some Romans wrote Latin like that on p. 4—it is just the Latin he is, rightly or wrongly, taught to eschew. Even if boys ought to know their Tacitus or the Plinies, &c., it is very doubtful whether it is wise to bother them with the manner, apart from the matter, of Velleius Paterculus or Gellius. Life, and especially school life, is too short for that.

The Peloponnesian War: a History of Greece 431-404 B.C.—Sparta and Thebes: a History of Greece 404-362 B.C. By A. H. Allcroft. (W. B. Clive.) We can say little of these volumes beyond chronicling their appearance. They are, so far as we can see, carefully done; they are helpful, being provided with test-questions, chronological tables, and even little chapters on literature; but they are essentially commonplace, and we cannot distinguish them from other small hand-books of Greek history. If a certain class of students will have manuals on such a scale, we cannot blame the writers who answer the demand; indeed, we must give credit to those whose manuals are accurate; but it is a great pity that readers who are (as we suppose from these books being published by the University Correspondence College Press) young should be satisfied with what is, after all, but meagre food. No real education can be got from the determination not to look an inch beyond what the next examination requires. A little more resolution, and the student would get far more lasting good out of a larger book.

No. V. of Cornell Studies in Classical Philology (Boston: Ginn) consists of an index to Antiphon, compiled by Dr. Frank Lovis van Cleef. The text followed is that of Blass's second edition; but variant readings and notable conjectures have also been included. The elaboration of the work may be inferred from the fact that it fills 173 pages, closely printed in double column; and that the meanings of the particles, &c., are carefully discriminated. The author takes credit for the pains he has taken to secure accuracy in his references; and he hopes that he may receive encouragement to publish similar indexes to the other Attic orators who have not yet been dealt with. Cornell University deserves credit for publishing the work, and the Athenaeum Press for the excellence of the typography.

MR. EUSTACE H. MILES, of King's College, has published—and dedicated to his sisters—a pamphlet entitled How to answer Grammar and Philology Questions (Cambridge: Macmillan & Bowes), with hints and specimens, full answers to two specimen examination papers, and two indices. The impression left on us is one of pity for the examiner, no less than for the examinee.

NOTES AND NEWS.

APPARENTLY under the stimulus of the recent Gibbon centenary, Messrs. Longman & Co. announce that they have in preparation The Girlhood of Maria Josepha Holroyd, 1776 to 1796. The book will be composed mainly of letters written by the daughter of Gibbon's Lord Sheffield. Accounts are given of the trial of Warren Hastings, the apotheosis of Voltaire, and incidents of the French Revolution, as described by an eye-witness; and also the writer's personal intercourse with Count Lally Tollendal and other leading refugees. It will be illustrated with numerous portraits.

MR. JOHN MURRAY will issue next week a Life of Sir John Franklin, by Mr. A. D. Traill, based on private and hitherto unpublished documents, with maps and portraits; and also a new edition of Borrow's The Bible in Spain, in two volumes, carefully revised by the late Ralph Ulrick Burke, who has added notes and a glossary.

MESSRS. MACMILLAN & Co. announce Old Melbourne Memories, by Rolf Boldrewood, the well-known Australian novelist.

MESSRS. HENRY & Co. will publish this week the first volume of the collected works of Friedrich Nietzsche.

THE third and fourth volumes of Mr. Justin Huntly McCarthy's History of the French Revolution, dealing with the Constituent Assembly from 1789 to 1791, and completing the work, will be published shortly by Messrs. Chatto & Windus.

MESSRS. SAMPSON, LOW, MARSTON & Co. have in preparation, under the general editorship of Mr. W. Laird Clowes, an exhaustive history of the British Navy from the earliest times down to the present day. It is the work of the best known naval writers both of this country and of America, and will be fully illustrated with portraits, plans, copies of contemporary pictures, facsimiles of documents, &c. The first volume, consisting of between five and six hundred pages, will bring the record down to about the reign of Elizabeth; but later periods are, of course, being dealt with at greater length. The publishers will be glad to hear of little known portraits of distinguished seamen, and unpublished sketches, &c., by eye-witnesses of famous naval events.

MESSRS. SWAN SONNENSCHN & Co. announce, as the next volume in their "Ethical Library," Social Rights and Duties, by Mr. Leslie Stephen.

Messrs. WILLIAMS & NORGATE will shortly publish the second volume of Kittel's History of the Hebrews, translated by the Rev. Hope W. Hogg and the Rev. E. B. Speirs, under the immediate supervision of Prof. Cheyne. We have nothing in English corresponding to this work, which, while written from the standpoint of the Higher Criticism, is eminently cautious in tone and gives special prominence to the data supplied by archaeological research.

Messrs. HODDER & STOUGHTON have in the press a new book by Archdeacon Sinclair, to be entitled The Leaders of Thought in the English Church.

MR. ELLIOT STOCK announces a new work on the Chevalier D'Eon, by Captain Telfer, which will take the form of a reply to, and a remonstrance against, the recently issued True Story of Chevalier D'Eon.

Messrs. CASSELL & Co. will publish in a few days "Q.'s" new work, entitled Iu. The book, we hear, owes its existence in a great measure to Mr. J. M. Barrie, who having seen a fragment of the story persuaded the author to complete it.

MR. T. FISHER UNWIN is about to publish a novel by Miss Emma Bentley, entitled Silvio Bartholi, the scene of which is laid in Siena.

Messrs. F. V. WHITE & Co. will publish this month the following novels, each in one volume: Joan and Mrs. Carr, by Rita; To Step Aside is Human, by Alan St. Aubyn; A Regular Fraud, by Mrs. Robert Jocelyn; and A Fight with Fate, by Mrs. Alexander.

Messrs. JARROLD & SONS will publish immediately, in their "Greenback" series, a new novel by Mr. T. W. Speight, entitled The Heart of a Mystery.

Messrs. TYLSTON & EDWARDS will publish immediately two new volumes in their "Pocket County Companion," dealing with Berks and Derbyshire, to be followed by Norfolk and Devon during May.

MR. JOHN MORLEY's Life of Richard Cobden, including the abridged edition, has been transferred from Messrs. Chapman & Hall to Mr. T. Fisher Unwin, who is also the publisher of Mrs. Salis Schwabe's Reminiscences of Cobden.

MR. HARRY SPEIGHT, author of two works dealing with the history, antiquities, and scenery of Craven and Nidderdale, will publish shortly, through Mr. Elliot Stock, a similar volume on Richmondshire, embracing the picturesque valleys of the Yore and Swale. Mr. Speight has made the Yorkshire dales his life-long study, and in the present volume will be found a great deal of new and valuable matter. The book will be illustrated with many rare prints of buildings, monuments, &c., some of which no longer exist.

THE annual meeting of the English Goethe Society will be held on Wednesday next, at 8, Belzize-avenue, Hampstead. The report shows a net gain of twelve members during the past year. Prof. Edward Dowden, the president, has promised to deliver an address on "The Case against Goethe," some time during April, in which he proposes to comment on the sources of English prejudice in ethics, political feeling, and art.

THE Irish Literary Society has just issued, from its new premises at 8, Adelphi-terrace, its annual report for 1895-96. The number of members is 435; the literary and social work of the society has developed, and its financial position is sound and hopeful. The new work under consideration by the general committee comprises the following schemes: The formation of an Irish text society; the publication of a standard work of reference on Irish history, ancient and modern; and the organisation of an Irish dramatic club. The Irish text society will undertake the translation and publication of the more modern Irish works which the antiquarian and archaeological bodies have hitherto neglected or ignored. Many offers of support have already been received. Two Irish classes, a junior and a senior, are held in connexion with the society; and a library is being formed of works on Irish history, biography, topography, poetry, fiction, folk-lore, art, and music, the number of books having now reached nearly 500.

Two papers dealing with Irish literature are to be read before the Goldsmiths Institute Literary Society, on Tuesday next—"Edmund Burke," by Mr. Horace B. Lakeman, and "Footprints on the Threshold of Irish History," by the hon. secretary, Mr. H. O. Newland. A special meeting of the society will be held on March 24, to commemorate the anniversary of Longfellow's death, when selections from "The Golden Legend" will be rendered.

We extract the following from a letter recently addressed by Mr. Gladstone to Mr. Hermann Oelsner, author of the Le Bas prize at Cambridge in 1894 for an essay on "The Influence of Dante on Modern Thought":

"The antipathy of Goethe seems to me a point worth probing in detail. So also the curious passage 'io non gli Apersi,' which I have, too hastily it may be, been accustomed to regard as associated with a defect in Dante. It seems to me most remarkable that the study of Dante should decidedly have gained ground in England during a period in which Italian studies generally have so miserably fallen off."

UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS.

IN Congregation at Oxford, on Tuesday, the remaining resolutions about diplomas or certificates for women were all rejected one after another. Only two of the four resolutions were seriously considered: (1) that proposing a diploma certifying that a woman has kept the same terms and passed the same examinations as a B.A., which was rejected by 178 votes to 111; and (2) that merely proposing a diploma certifying that a woman has studied at some institution and passed some examination, which was rejected by 140 votes to 136. The whole question, therefore, remains, so far as Oxford is concerned, in statu quo ante.

AT Cambridge, the voting on the question took place on Thursday. No opposition was offered to the grace proposing that a syndicate shall inquire into the whole subject; but the second grace, nominating the syndicate, was rejected by 186 votes to 171. The majority seem to have thought that some of the names were too closely associated with the women's colleges.

IN Congregation at Oxford on Tuesday next, it will be proposed to confer the degree of M.A. "by decree of the house," upon the Rev. Dr. Andrew Fairbairn, principal of Mansfield College, who is already an honorary M.A. of the university.

MR. REGINALD LANE POOLE, sub-editor of the Historical Review, has been appointed by the delegates of the common university fund at Oxford to read Diplomats with a class of students during two terms in each of three years, beginning next October.

PROF. SAYCE has been re-appointed to the chair of Assyriology at Oxford for a further term of five years.

MR. CHARLES DAVISON has been approved by the general board of studies at Cambridge for the degree of Doctor in Science.

MR. J. G. LEATHEM, of John's, has been elected to the Isaac Newton studentship at Cambridge, for study and research in astronomy. This studentship is of the annual value of £250, and is tenable for three years.

MR. H. T. GERRANS, of Worcester, has been nominated a delegate of the Clarendon Press, in place of Mr. T. Raleigh.

MR. H. E. WOOLDRIDGE, Slade professor of fine art at Oxford, proposes to deliver three lectures during next week on the "The Powers of the Material," as the first part of a general course on "The Art of Painting."

THE Council of the Senate at Cambridge recommend that the Punjab University be adopted as an affiliated institution, subject to the condition that the privileges of affiliation be extended only to graduates in Arts.

CANDIDATES for the new honour school of English at Oxford are requested to send, before the end of the present term, to the senior examiner (Prof. Napier) a list of the special subjects which they propose to offer.

We observe that one of the public examiners at Oxford, in the school of Semitic studies, is a non-collegiate student.

MR. ERNEST GARDNER, late director of the British School at Athens, has undertaken to arrange and catalogue the ancient vases in the Fitzwilliam Museum at Cambridge.

PROF. J. J. SYLVESTER, Savilian professor of Geometry at Oxford, has been elected a foreign member of the Royal Academy of Sciences of Turin.

HARVARD UNIVERSITY has requested permission from the municipality of Ravenna to make a photographic reproduction of the famous MS. of Aristophanes now in their custody. This MS. dates from the eleventh or possibly the tenth century. Mr. W. G. Clark showed some years ago that it must have been the basis for the second printed edition of Aristophanes, containing for the first time the "Lysistrata" and the "Thesmophoriasusae," which was published by Bernard Junta at Florence in 1515.

ORIGINAL VERSE.

DEATH.

(To a Theosophist.)

SOOTH, there are bodies of the dead, you say,
That loitering waft us filmy evidence,
Jingling and ciphering to mortal sense,
Mechanic mummers of a parlour-play!
No! To our life, as to a holy day
Of godly wisdom and of penitence,
Is given no sight of the Supreme, but thence Shine symbols manifest, and as she may Faith builds in emblem true and miracle
Mysteries, where the soul itself doth glass,
Where Art stern-eyed and visored Duty well
Discourse of things eternal, until Death
Rings for the veil to fall, the show to pass:
Diserte et discedit, he saith.

GEORGE C. W. WARR.

OBITUARY.

HEINRICH PREISINGER.

CULTIVATED Manchester lost last week one of its most remarkable representatives. As one of the founders, and latterly the hon. secretary, of the Manchester Goethe Society, he took from the first a distinguished part in an organisation which, besides publishing much solid and some brilliant original work, has done valuable social service as a bond between the English and the German, the academic and the commercial elements of that community. In all these points Mr. Preisinger, more perhaps than any other single member, was the society. Himself engaged in business, he had a scholarly command of many languages, and a familiar acquaintance with many literatures, which occasionally embarrassed the specialist in literary study. He had the true instincts of the scholar, the true sensibility of the poet. And few men, under a reserved exterior, have hidden a rarer genius for friendship, a more absolute devotion to his friends.

C. H. H.

MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS.

THIS is a more than ordinarily good number of The Antiquary. Mr. H. S. Cowper's second paper on "The Megalithic Temples of Tripoli," contains much new knowledge. It is illustrated with excellent engravings, one of which shows a square column of masonry at Senam Aref, on which are many graffiti. We wonder whether these are as old as the column, or whether they belong to a later time and another race. Mr. James A. Lovat-Fraser's account of the wolf in Scotland is also very interesting. When the animal finally disappeared will probably never be known. There is a tradition, which has found its way into many books of reference, that the last wolf seen in Scotland was killed at Loochaber in 1680, by Sir Ewan Cameron. Mr. Lovat-Fraser shows this to be a mistake. Wolves lingered on in the Highlands far into the eighteenth century. MacQueen, of Pollochcock, killed one in 1743, and this may well have been the last of its race. The Rev. Dr. J. T. Fowler, of Durham, continues his annotated account-book of William Wray, a Ripon shopkeeper. His local knowledge enables him to identify nearly all the persons and places mentioned in this instructive record. Why a certain sort of fustian was called "Holmes fustyon" he is unable to explain. It may, however, be not amiss to note that the late Prof. Rogers, in his History of Agriculture and Prices, vol. vi., mentions this fabric on several occasions, ranging from 1583 to 1631. Guessing at the derivation of words is generally a harmful pastime; we may remark, however, that analogy makes it possible that Holmes may be the name of the place where it was made, perhaps corrupted beyond hope of recognition. We are glad to find that Mr. William Wray knew how to spell "comfit." Under the year 1587 he makes an entry of having sold "one box of comfites" for tenpence. In more than one local dialect this word has assumed the form of "comforts"; and we have been gravely told that these sweetmeats were so called because they were given to testy children for the sake of bringing them once more into a good temper. Finally, the notices of manorial courts which are still in existence, though far from complete, will prove very useful.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE FRISIAN ORIGIN OF THE MERCIAN DIALECT.
Cambridge: March 2, 1896.

In my Principles of English Etymology (p. 33), I remarked that the Frisians were "probably distributed over the midland and southern rather than over the northern portion" of England. The reason why we do not hear much of the Frisians in our history may very well have been that they were, to a considerable extent, distributed among various groups of Angles and Saxons; nevertheless, I think we ought to conclude that most of them colonised the midland district of Mercia. If so, it is an important fact; for it was the Mercian or Midland dialect that, in the long run, has come to the front.

There are many reasons for concluding that Mercian was more influenced by Frisian than the other dialects.

The first reason is geographical. In England,

Mercia lies between the Anglian and the Saxon. Abroad, Friesland lies between Scandinavia and Holland. It was only natural that in crossing the sea the Scandinavians should make for the north of England, the Saxons (from the coast of Holland) should go southwards, while groups of Frisians or East Saxons, would make for Essex.

The Mercian dialect came to the front because it was more generally understood than the others, as Trevisa so clearly explains to us. Frisian, in like manner, has characteristics which would make it somewhat easy for a Frisian to understand both Anglian and Saxon, much more readily than a South Saxon could understand an Anglian or a Dane. This is a matter into which our philologists should look a little more closely.

I give a few details. We know that Southern English is still remarkable for sounding f and s when initial like v and z. Modern Dutch actually writes v for f and z for s initially. On the other hand, the close connexion between our Northern dialects and Scandinavia is universally admitted. I refer, for convenience, to the dictionary of Old Frisian by Richtofen, and to the grammar by Cummins as being sufficient for the present purpose. Those who desire further information may consult the work on Anglo-Frisian by Th. Siebs.

O.Fr. agrees with A.S. (Wessex) in the present tense of the verb to be; cf. O.Fr. ik ben, thū bist, hi is, pl. sind, with the A.S. ic hæb, thū bist, he is, pl. sindon. That is to say, the form we are is not Frisian, but Norse; not Mercian, but Northern. On the other hand, final n is uniformly rejected in all infinitives in Frisian; and in this respect it does not agree with the Wessex dialect, but with Scandinavian.

Once more, the chief dialectal test for English dialects is in the ending of the present participle of the indicative: Southern -ath, Midland -en, Northern -es. Here the Frisian has -ath, which is Southern. Various tests of this kind show that it sometimes agrees with Southern, and sometimes with Northern, and thus holds, like Mercian, an intermediate position. We ought, therefore, to expect that in some respects it agrees with Mercian very closely.

I now note some of the points in which Frisian agrees with Mercian from a phonological point of view.

Mercian has all for A.S. eall; half for A.S. healf, &c. Frisian has al "all"; half "half"; also ald "old," bald "bold," aloth "ale," falla "to fall," halda "to hold," halt "lame," balu "hale," &c.

We sometimes find in Mercian e for A.S. eo, as in werce for A.S. weorc, werpan for A.S. weorpan, berg for A.S. beorg; so Frisian has werk, werpa, berch. Again, we find Mercian ē for A.S. ē in hēr "hair," dēd "deed"; so in Frisian we find hēr "hair," dēda "deed." Again, we find Mercian ē for A.S. ȳ in Mercian gehēran "to hear": the Frisian form is hēra. Also in nēd "compulsion," Fr. nēd.

I have no time to consider the matter further; but it would be a good deed if some scholar would work the matter out more thoroughly, so as either to confirm or refute the theory. It may possibly throw much light upon the distribution of dialectal words. Who will tell us, for example, what dialectal words we owe rather to Frisian than to Anglo-Saxon or Norse?

WALTER W. SKEAT.

MONS BADONICUS AND GEOFFREY OF MONMOUTH.—I.

Bodleian Library, Oxford: Jan. 19, 1896.

I propose in this and one other letter to show that the fashionable identification (after Guest) of Mons Badonicus with Badbury in Dorset will not bear serious investigation, and that the old British tradition which puts Mons Badonicus at Bath is right.

Guest's case against Bath consists of three propositions (Origines Celticae, ii. 188). I will here state and answer them separately.

The first is, that "the name of Mount Badon is inapplicable to a place situated as Bath is." The reply to this is, that there is no "name of Mount Badon." The hill was called "the Mount of Badon," or "the Badonic Mount"—which is quite a different thing. Nennius, writing about 796, calls it by the former name ("in monte Badonis," § 56); and without other information we might be in doubt whether Badon was a place or a man. But Gildas, writing about 547, calls it "the Badonic mount" ("Badonici montis," § 26), which suggests that Badon was a place—in other words, that the hill was one upon or below which Badon stood. And everyone who knows Bath knows that it does stand below high hills.

The second proposition is, that

"the version of the story which Camden took from Geoffrey, and according to which Arthur drove the Saxons from the walls of Bath, and then defeated them on Bannesdown Hill, will not explain the difficulty that meets us; for, according to Gildas, there was an actual siege of Mount Badon, and not merely a battle fought in its neighbourhood."

The reply to this is, that Geoffrey (who has nothing about Bannesdown Hill) is quite consistent with Gildas. He says that, after an indecisive battle, the Saxons towards sunset occupied the nearest mount, intending to use it as a camp ("Vergente tandem ad occasum sole, proximum occupant montem, pro castris eum habituri," ix. § 4); that at the next sunrise Arthur stormed the ascent with heavy loss, fought a second indecisive battle on the summit, and eventually decided the day by a personal charge. Gildas (§ 26) speaks of an obsession of the mount ("obsessionis Badonici montis") and a slaughter of the scoundrels ("de furciferis . . . stragis"). If anyone suppose, that obsessio necessarily means a circular investment, he has only to turn to Cicero (Pis. 17, 'Obsessio militaris viae!'). As regards the actual hill, I shall show excellent ground for believing that it was not Bannesdown, but Hampton Down, which rises directly behind Bathwick, the southern suburb of the city.

The third proposition is as follows:

"It is highly improbable that the West-Saxons, though they might possibly 'harry' the country as far as the neighbourhood of Bath, should lay siege to a fortress so far from their own frontier, and in the rear of such fortresses as Old Sarum, Barbury Hill, and Cirencester. They were foot-soldiers, and not, like the Danes, horsemen, who could rapidly transport themselves from one side of the kingdom to the other. At the date of this battle they had been settled in Hants and Berkshire for about twenty-five years; and for more than seventy years after their arrival in Britain, all the battles which they have recorded were fought either within the limits of those two counties or only a few miles beyond their borders (Orig. Celt. ii. 158)."

The reply to this is that it is directly contrary to Geoffrey's statement to suppose the Saxons defeated at the Badon Mount to have been West Saxons at all. He distinctly tells us (§ 3) that they were a force which had been driven out of the province of Lindsey (a North-Midland district) by Arthur, and which had sailed round and landed at Totnes. The question before us at the moment is not whether Geoffrey's account is true—as I shall try to show it to be in my second letter—but whether a new invasion on the south coast was reasonably possible. If it was—as is obvious—then all this talk about the West-Saxons collapses at once. And, if anyone observes that the Anglo-Saxon Chronicle mentions no new invasion, the answer is equally obvious that the Chronicle ignores the defeat of the Badon Mount altogether.

So much for Guest's case against Bath. His case for Badbury is as follows:

"Its elevated site, its great strength and evident importance, and its name all favour the hypothesis. It exhibits ample proof of Roman occupancy; though, I believe, no Roman baths have yet been discovered in the neighbourhood. It lay also on the borders of the West-Saxon territory, and in the very district where the Welsh and English were at that time contending, and where, only the year before, Cerdic had fought the battle of Charford" (ib. 189).

Guest here not only ignores Geoffrey's statement as to who the invaders were (not West-Saxons at all), but he supposes that the affair of the Badon Mount took place in 520, and that of Charford in 519. He gets the latter date from the Chronicle, and the former (p. 187) from Roger of Wendover and Higden. But from the Annales Cambriae the affair of the Badon Mount seems to have taken place in 516; and even this may be thirteen years too late, for they appear to place the death of "Mailcun rex Genedotae" in 547, whereas, according to Gildas, king Maglocunus* was alive when he wrote, and that was forty-four years after the obsession of the Badon Mount.

That Badbury was a strong hill-fort of the British period is undeniable; but there were a score more such in Dorset alone. If its name cannot be fairly equated with that of the Mons Badonicus, then all ground for Guest's identification obviously disappears.

Guest says (p. 189): "The Mons Badonicus was doubtless so called from the baths (badon, Welsh) in its neighbourhood." There is no Welsh badon "baths" (according to Silvan Evans's dictionary), but only baddon (pronounced baðon), "a bath," and this apparently only a modern word. But let that pass, as I shall submit that the name really is connected with a Keltic stem bad, "bath." Unhappily no baths can be found near Badbury! After this, it is needless to spend time on Guest's suggestions that the Saxons called the hill Baddanburh from the same baths; that baddun was South Wessex for bathan; and that this bathan was gen. of a subs. bath (not locative-plural of beth!). The fact is, that Baddanburh was once occupied by the Saxons themselves, in 901; that the name apparently = "Badda's fort"; and that Badda may very well have been a Saxon to whom the old place was granted. Indeed, the very king who occupied it in 901 had a moneyer named Badda (Brit. Mus. Cat. of A.S. Coins, ii. 83).

I pass from destructive to constructive criticism—to the exposition of the evidence, linguistic and traditional, in favour of Bath.

Bath appears in Giraldus Cambrensis (twelfth century) as Badunum (Rolls Ser., vol. iii. p. 386). Now all A. S. forms of the name have ð or th, not d; consequently, the presumption is that Badunum is Latinised from a Keltic and not an A. S. original. This presumption is, to my mind, confirmed by the fact that in A. S. Baðun, if it be a specific Anglo-Saxon name at all, the termination -un is beyond any dispute merely the locative case-ending; to incorporate it in a Latinised nominative seems to me most unnatural. Geoffrey of Monmouth (also twelfth century) says that Bladud built "urbem Kaerbadū,† que nunc Bado nuncupatur, fecitque in illa calida balnea" (ii. 10). Now Bado is only Badon Latinised into a nominative—the genitive would still be Badon-is; and in ix. 3 he actually calls the district "pagum Badonis." Again, Badū = Giraldus's Latinised Badun-um. And it is clear that the old Breton book which Geoffrey tells us was his source regarded the name Badun and the baths as prae-Roman.

In the thirteenth century the Cambridge MS. X of Gildas adds to the words "Badonici montis" qui prope sabrinum hostium (= ostium) habetur. And in the fourteenth century the Red Book of Hergest calls Bath Kaerbadon and the battle gwaith Badun—but Mr. J. Gwenogfryn Evans tells me that the d at that time might represent ð: early Welsh medial d is liable to pass into the sound of ð (mod. Welsh dd), and we cannot tell whether the Welsh *Tref Faddon, Caer Faddon, Afon Baddon, are from A. S. Baðon or O. British Badon. The form Baddwm may be from A. S. Baðun.

I submit that the Britons, or maybe the Goidels before them, named the place (as the Saxons did at a later time) from its baths. I ask Prof. Rhys whether the Welsh bawdd, "demersion," may not point to an earlier substantive bād; and he tells me that the difficulty would be to explain bawdd in any other way. I ask him if the Irish verb buidim, "I dip under," may not be formed from a substantive stem bud-; and he tells me it may. Add to bad the Welsh termination -on or -un (-un), for which see Zeus, (p. 824), and we get Badon, Badun-um, or Badwn = "bathing-place." The Saxons, when they called the place Baðum, Baðun, Baðan, or Baðon (varying locative plurals of beth), probably did no more than adapt the existing British name. The common explanation of the -n forms is that they are later varieties of that in -m; but there are two instances of Bathan in the Chronicle which go far to prove that it was not a locative at all—in other words, that it is not a real case of A. S. beth, but an adaptation of the pre-existing Keltic name. The Chronicle, mentioning the capture of the place in 577, says that the Saxons "genamon [took] III cestra Gleawanceaster [Cirenceaster] Bathanceaster": if Bathan is only a locative, how comes it to form the first part of a compound, as if it were a simple stem? Again, under 973 the Chronicle says that Badgar was hallowed to king "on ðære ealdan byrig"

Acemannes ceastre eac hi lgbuend oðre worde
beornas Baðan nemnað"

Here Baðan is apparently an accusative; "and it men of the isle by other word name Baðan": if it were an instrumental in opposition with oðre worde would not the order have been Baðan beornas nemnað? And the oldest MS. puts an o over the second a.

It is not, indeed, necessary even to suppose that the English changed Welsh d into ð, for the Welsh medial may already have become aspirated before the English borrowed the name.

In the passage above cited we have come across another name of Bath—Acemannes ceaster, otherwise Acemannes burh (Latin, urbs Acumanensis or Acuminensis). The old derivation of this, repeated in Bosworth-Toller's A. S. dictionary, as = sohe-man's city (from the potency of its waters in rheumatism?), is open to the apparently fatal objection that there is no adj. ace = "aching" but only a subs. ace = "ache." Prof. Earle regards Acemannes as of Keltic origin, and derives it from Aquae + man, which is Welsh for place, and supposed to be allied to O. Ir. magen, "enclosure, place." This, again, is open to three objections—that one would have expected Aceman, not Acemannes; that no parallel is given of a British place-name formed by the addition of man to a Roman name; and that the place probably had a British name before the Romans knew it.

* See the instances of all the Welsh forms in Silvan Evans's dictionary.

The objections to a Keltic derivation might be modified by supposing that Aceman meant not Aquae alone, but the district of Aquae, or that the last king of the place was named Aceman (for man is a Keltic personal suffix). But I strongly suspect that the name is derived from some Saxon who received a grant of the site on condition of restoring the old walls, as a protection against the Danes; for Bath had medieval walls built over the ruins of the Roman ones, and the occupier of land was bound to maintain its fortifications (Stubbs's Const. Hist. i. 82). It is noticeable that the Chronicle, when mentioning the capture of Aquae, calls it not Acemannes-ceaster, but Bathanceaster, and the only early instances of the other name which I see are in a charter of 965 (Kemble, No. 516) and a poem relating to 973 imbedded in the Chronicle; there are some ten or twelve charters before 965 in which it does not occur.

The name "Akeman (or Akeman's) street" for a road leading to Bath is apparently even less ancient. It is not in Kemble or Bosworth-Toller, and Profs. Earle and Napier and Mr. Haverfield cannot tell me of any early instance of it. I suspect it to be a modern antique.

One more fact must be mentioned in this letter. Prof. Sayce pointed out to me that the Annales Cambriae mention a "battle of Badon a second time" ("Bellum Badonis secundo") in 685. Speaking without an English history at his elbow, he regarded that as an objection to Bath, because it pointed to Badon being on the Welsh border; but it turned out to be the strongest confirmation, because at the time in question the Avon at Bath was the boundary of West Wales—see the map of Britain in 685 at p. 329 of Green's Making of England. And the first attack of a Saxon army crossing the frontier would be upon the Romano-British settlement on Hampton Down, which rises behind Bathwick.

E. W. B. NICHOLSON.

THE SIN-EATER IN WALES.

New College, Eastbourne: March 7, 1896.

With regard to my first point, as Mr. Hartland questions the competence of the schoolmaster, Mr. Rowlands, to give satisfactory evidence, it will be convenient if I state what I believe to be the facts with regard to his position. I am obliged, unfortunately, to speak from memory, so I trust Mr. Hartland will be merciful if he finds me tripping. Mr. Rowlands's own statements are: (1) that he became schoolmaster at Llandeibie in 1852, the year of the Ludlow meeting—if, as I suppose, he was schoolmaster there when Canon Evans wrote, Mr. Owen's recollection seems to be at fault; (2) that he was in the habit of attending funerals; (3) that he collected for Sir Thomas Phillipps the traditions and customs of the district. He has also, I believe, published a pamphlet on some Welsh archaeological question. He was therefore, before Canon Evans applied to him, taking an interest in matters of this sort. Of course, if he had no acquaintance with a larger area than the immediate surroundings of Llandeibie, his evidence is only valuable for that area; but Mr. Hartland (ACADEMY, November 9) stated that the ritual was in use "at Llandeibie." I admit that if Mr. Hartland's assumption as to the extent of Mr. Rowlands's knowledge be correct, the value I attach to his evidence is unwarranted; but Mr. Hartland must also admit that it is his change of ground which renders it so. If, however, he was employed by Sir Thomas Phillipps for the purpose stated, I infer that his knowledge extended to more than the immediate surroundings of Llandeibie.

* I do not dispute that there may have been two Maglocun—say, uncle and nephew.

† Glee's text gives Kaerbadum and Badus. But of thirteen Bodleian MSS. six read Bādū, and all read Bado.

I offer apologies for not having stated my second point more clearly. It is this. Mr. Hartland regards Sin-eating as a survival of a specific feast of the kin; he regards as survivals of Sin-eating customs of eating and drinking at funerals where we find no Sin-eater and no special virtue attributed to the dole. I suggest that these customs are allied to Sin-eating in virtue of a common descent from the feast of the kindred, not by direct descent from Sin-eating itself. I suppose that the feast of the kindred is now represented by various practices—A, B, C. Evidence shows that these were occasionally associated with or replaced by D. No amount of evidence that A, B, and C were, or are, generally practised will lead to the conclusion that D was prevalent in the area in question. I contend that we find certain customs involving the giving of food at funerals. There is evidence that these customs sometimes took the form of Sin-eating, but we cannot infer the existence of Sin-eating wherever we find these offertories at funerals. And be it noted in this connexion that Aubrey himself does not connect the offertories with the Sin-eater.

As to the third point, I do not agree with Mr. Hartland that no one was concerned to take up the challenge. The ACADEMY controversy arose out of an article in Blackwood. The writer (Prebendary Davies of Hereford, according to a good authority) professed to be well acquainted with Wales, and having taken up the challenge, was certainly interested in the matter, and, I think, in a position to investigate.

N. W. THOMAS.

APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK.

- SUNDAY, March 15, 4 p.m. Sunday Lecture: "Cycling Tours in Relation to Health and Education," by Mr. W. L'Aigle Cole.
- 4 p.m. South Place Institute: "The British Empire of To-Day," by Col. Howard Vincent.
- 7 p.m. Ethical: "Dante," by the Rev. P. H. Wicksteed.
- MONDAY, March 16, 4.30 p.m. Victoria Institute: "Relations of Mind and Body."
- 4.30 p.m. Geographical: "The Maps used by Herodotus," by Mr. J. L. Myers.
- 8 p.m. Aristotelian: "Hindu Philosophy," by Mr. A. Boatwood.
- 8 p.m. Royal Institute of British Architects.
- TUESDAY, March 17, 8 p.m. Royal Institution: "The External Covering of Plants and Animals," X., by Prof. C. Steward.
- 8 p.m. Statistical: "Reformatory and Industrial Schools," by Mr. John Watson.
- 8 p.m. Imperial Institute: "My Twelve Years' Stay in Cyprus," III., by Dr. Max Ohnesfalsch-Richter.
- 8 p.m. Civil Engineers: "The Lixivation of Silver Ores," by Mr. John H. Clomea; "Mining and Treatment of Copper Ores at Tharsis, Spain," by Mr. C. F. Courtney; and "Tin-Smelting at Pulo Brani, Singapore," by Messrs. John McKillop and T. Flower Millie.
- 8.30 p.m. Zoological: "A Contribution to our Knowledge of the Hymenoptera Fauna of Ceylon," by Lieut.-Col. C. T. Bingham; "British Hydroids and Medusae," by Mr. Edward T. Browne; "Some Extinct Fishes of the Teleostean Family Genorhynchidae," by Mr. A. Smith Woodward.
- WEDNESDAY, March 18, 7.30 p.m. Meteorological: "Weather Forecasts and Storm Warnings," by Mr. F. Gaister.
- 8 p.m. Society of Arts: "The Bahamas Sisal Industry," by Dr. D. Morris.
- 8 p.m. Microscopical: "Some American Rotifers," by Dr. A. C. Stokes.
- 8 p.m. English Goethe Society: Annual Meeting.
- THURSDAY, March 19, 8 p.m. Royal Institution: "Masters of Modern Thought," III., by the Rev. Dr. W. Barry.
- 8 p.m. Linnean: "The Structure of the Female Flowers and Fruit of Sararanga, Hemsl. (Pandanaeeae)," by Dr. O. Stapf; "Two Little-known Opisthophorous Snakes," by Mr. G. S. West.
- 8 p.m. Chemical: "The Constitution of a New Organic Acid," by Mr. E. J. H. Fenton; "The Volume and Optical Relationships of the Monoclinic Series of Double Sulphates," by Mr. A. E. Tutton.
- 8.30 p.m. Society of Arts: "The Great Landship at Gohna, in Gurbhwal, and the Measures adopted to Prevent Serious Loss of Life," by Mr. J. H. Glass.
- 8.30 p.m. Antiquaries.
- FRIDAY, March 20, 8 p.m. Philological: "The Text and Metre of Chaucer's Early Minor Poems," by Prof. Frank Heath.
- 8.30 p.m. Viking Club: "Illustrations of the Sagas from Manuscripts," by Mr. P. M. C. Kermode.
- 9 p.m. Royal Institution: "Immunisation against Serpentine Venom," by Prof. T. R. Fraser.
- SATURDAY, March 21, 8 p.m. Royal Institution: "Light," V., by Lord Rayleigh.

SCIENCE.

TWO BOOKS ABOUT BARLAAM AND JOSAPHAT.

Barlaam u. Josaphat. Von Dr. E. Kuhn. (München.)

"BIBLIOTHEQUE DE CARABAS."—Vol. X: Barlaam and Josaphat. By Joseph Jacobs. (David Nutt.)

It is many years now since the polished essay of Prof. Max Müller in the fourth volume of Chips from a German Workshop acquainted the English reading public with what is certainly one of the greatest curiosities of literature: namely, the transformation of the Buddha into a Christian saint, with his place in the calendar, with churches dedicated to him, and even with relics of him preserved in them. In 1891 a fresh interest was imparted to the history by Prof. Armitage Robinson's discovery that the early Apology for Christianity of Aristides was worked into the same legend.

Dr. Ernest Kuhn's monograph was published two years ago in the Transactions of the Bavarian Academy of Science, but has been unnoticed in England. It is a large quarto, half an inch thick, and most exhaustive. Specially admirable is the reconstruction of the original form of the tale by a comparison of the main sources—s.g., Greek, Georgian, and Early Arabic. Dr. Kuhn adds a list of all the known texts and versions of the tale: a work of great research, as there is scarcely a modern or medieval language which some time between the years 600 and 1600 A.D. did not produce one.

Mr. Jacobs's volume is not so learned as Dr. Kuhn's, but less wearying to the eye. The etched frontispiece, by Mr. Harry Ryland, of Barlaam the ascetic squatting on the ground and expounding the true faith to the sad-eyed prince is charming; and the get-up of the little volume is of the daintiest. There are chapters on the Greek Barlaam, on the oriental versions, on Barlaam in India and in Europe. An appendix gives the various apologies, along with the variations of the chief sources; and the book ends with reprints of Caxton's Lyf of Saynt Barlaam, a quaint old English text, and of an eighteenth-century chap-book containing a dramatisation of the story of no particular poetic merit. Mr. Jacobs writes lightly and pleasantly, indeed; but too often yields to the temptation to be jocular. He, like Dr. Kuhn, constructs a pedigree of the tale, with a view to show how it developed into the Greek text, commonly but wrongly ascribed to St. John of Damascus. The solution of this problem turns upon the right place being assigned to the Georgian version, which gives a primitive form of the tale, already Christian indeed, but otherwise agreeing, not with the Greek text or with the Latin, modern Arabic, and European derivatives of the same, but with the old and possibly non-Christian and medieval Hebrew forms.

Dr. Kuhn thinks that an early non-Christian form of the story (X), written perhaps in Pehlevi, gave rise to two derived texts, one of which is the existent early Arabic, while the other (Y) was a distinctly Christian form, which in turn bifurcated into the Georgian and Greek forms. Mr.

Jacobs, however, argues that the Georgian is descended direct from the old Arabic, with which it agrees in the order of the apologies, in the chronology of the saints' lives, in the spelling of names, and in much else. He thinks that the link (Y) was a Syriac text, and that only the Greek flowed from Y and not the Georgian as well. "I think," he writes (p. xxxiii.), "there can be little doubt that it [the Georgian] was derived from the Arabic."

On this point Dr. Kuhn seems to me to be in the right rather than Mr. Jacobs; and, as a correct appreciation of the position of the Georgian is the key to the real history of the migration of the story, I venture to furnish an example. In the non-Christian or early Arabic text, from which Mr. Jacobs believes the Georgian to be derived, we have the following passage, of which I owe the translation to Prof. Margoliouth:

"Do you not see that when you see a work of art you know that it has an artificer, even though he be absent from thee. Likewise then thou knowest him from these works which thou seest, the heaven and the earth, and the sun and the moon, and the stars and the revolution of the spheres, and the flowing of water, and the motion of the wind, and fire, and the government of the rest of created things, that they have a creator and one who is powerful and wise—and he is the lofty, the mighty."

How can the corresponding section of the Georgian be a translation of this very bald Arabic text? I translate it from the text printed by Prof. Marr, of St. Petersburg:

"When you see any vessel made with hands, though you don't see the maker, yet you believe that there was a maker. In same way, when you see a house, though you do not see the builder, yet your mind shows you that there was a builder of it. But so soon as I saw my own self, I recognised my createdness. I knew that I had a creator, and that he created me as he wished, and gave me a form without having asked me. If I had been my own maker, I should have made myself with more beauty and completeness; but he who created me, made me lower than some and higher than others. But I also understood that he would take me out of this life without asking me. And when I understood this, and realised the facts of our life—viz., that we can neither magnify nor diminish our stature, nor renew what is grown old, nor recover any of our limbs that fall off; and that neither king can do this, nor braves, nor sages, nor the mighty ones; and as I saw the coming of night after day, and the revolutions of the heavens—from this I ascertained that all have a creator and that he is not like his creatures. For if he were like, then that which happens to his creatures would also happen to him; as he says, so a thing happens, and when he wishes anything, it is at once fulfilled. He raised to life people in such a form as they had at first. For his command is swifter than a two-edged sword, and more lofty than glittering lightning. He, if it so please him, annihilates and again establishes everything. Blessing and glory to his name for ever. Amen."

Now, if we turn to the Greek text printed in Boissonade's Anecdota (p. 145), we see at once that the Georgian derives from it rather than from the Arabic. I give the Latin version of Boissonade:

"Quemadmodum enim quispiam domum praeclare et summa arte constructam, aut vasculum eleganter concinnatum perspicimus, architectum aut fabrum statim ob animum sibi proponit, sic etiam ego ex nihilo effictus, atque in ortum productus, etiam si fictorem ac productorem meum cernere nequeam, tamen ex aptissima maximeque admiranda mei constructione ad sapientiae ipsius cognitionem veni, non quatenus est sed quatenus intelligere queo: nampe quia non casu ac fortuito productus sum, nec a me ipso exstiti, verum ipse arbitrato suo me effinxit: sic nimirum ut me rerum omnium conditarum principem constituerit, quibusdam autem inferiorum fecerit, ac contritum me iterum meliori renovatione refingens, etiam divino suo imperio me ex hac vita educens, ad alteram vitam finis expertem ac sempiternam transferat. Quibus omnibus in rebus providentiae ipsius viribus oblutari nequeo, nec mihi quidquam, vel quantum ad staturam, vel quantum ad formae figuram attinet, adjicere aut subtrahere, nec ea quae in me vetustate confecta sunt, renovare, nec quae latefactata et corrupta sunt, in integrum restituere. Neque enim mortalium ullus unquam fuit, qui horum quidquam efficere posset, non rex, non sapiens, non dives, non potens, non denique alius quispian humana studia consectans. Nullus enim, inquit ille, regum aut eorum qui in sublimitate sunt, aliud habuit nativitatis initium. Unus enim est omnium introitus ad vitam et idem exitus."

I forbear to quote further, but it continues to follow the Georgian so closely as to prove that the latter derives from it rather than from the Arabic. Moreover, such ratiocination is more likely to have been originally penned in Greek than in Arabic, Syriac, Pehlevi, or any other Eastern language. But if this be so, another conclusion drawn by Dr. Kuhn, but disputed by Mr. Jacobs, must be accepted: namely, that the earlier form of the story, from which the old Arabic and Hebrew flowed, was a Christian form; for, if it was Greek, it was certainly Christian. Thus, we have an originally Christian and Greek form, which passed, probably through Pehlevi, into Georgian and Arabic. In it the apologues followed in a different order, the chronology of the saints' lives and order of incidents was different, and, above all, the spelling of the names was closer to the original Indian forms. This early and probably much shorter Greek form is lost, but has left traces of itself in the Georgian and Arabic. In any case, the problem of the order of derivation of the text is more complex than readers of Mr. Jacobs's book might suppose, and needs much additional study before it is quite cleared up.

FRED. C. CONYBEARE.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE RESTORED PRONUNCIATION OF GREEK.

Bangor }
Cardiff } March 5, 1896.

On the only new point which Dr. Lloyd raises in the ACADEMY of February 29 a very brief reply will suffice. He first "denies" our statement that "to give to the accented syllables in Greek the same stress as we do to the accented syllables in English would make our pronunciation more, not less, remote from that of the Greeks"; and then a few lines subsequently admits that it would be necessary to "modify the native violence of the English stress." It is the disastrous effects of such "violence" as heard in the pronunciation of American or German students who have learnt to give a stress-value to Greek accents that have convinced us, as practical teachers, of the truth of our proposition.

In arguing that the "practical reform" which we tentatively suggested of pronouncing Greek words with an "even degree of stress on all syllables" would result in "intelligent men reading out the masterpieces of human speech in monotone and without accent," Dr. Lloyd falls into a double confusion—between stress and tone, and between word-accent and sentence-accent. Nothing we have suggested would prevent any passages of a Greek author from being recited with the fullest and most appropriate variation of tone, and of stress also as between different words in a sentence.

The practical question whether schoolboys can at present be taught to give a musical value to the Greek accents is one which we have expressly left open in the pamphlet. The sooner the better, no doubt; but to insist on it at present would be, in our opinion, "quite premature."

Finally, we must again call attention to the fact that we are dealing with a practical question in Wales. Why is it less "premature" to force upon Welsh-speaking students a foreign pronunciation which, on Dr. Lloyd's own computation, is half wrong, than to encourage them to adopt a pronunciation which is largely native to them, and which, even on Dr. Lloyd's contention, which we are far from accepting, is only one quarter wrong?

E. V. ARNOLD.

R. S. CONWAY.

March 11, 1896.

P.S.—It will be convenient to your readers if we reserve our answer to Dr. Lloyd's further criticisms until they are complete.

SCIENCE NOTES.

PROF. JAMES DEWAR and Prof. W. A. Tilden have been nominated vice-presidents of the Chemical Society.

At the meeting of the Royal Meteorological Society, to be held in Great George-street, Westminster, on Wednesday next, a lecture will be given by Mr. Frederic Gaster, on "Weather Forecasts and Storm Warnings, how they are prepared and made known," illustrated by instruments, diagrams, and lantern slides.

The evening discourse at the Royal Institution on Friday next will be delivered by Prof. T. R. Stewart, of Edinburgh, on "Immunisation against Serpents' Venom, and the Treatment of Snake-bite with Antivenene."

THE executive committee of the City and Guilds of London Institute have awarded the second Salters' Company's fellowship for the encouragement of higher research in chemistry in its relation to manufactures to Dr. Sidney Williamson, who proposes to work on some questions bearing on food-stuffs generally, more particularly the examination of some definite albumenoids, with the ultimate object of ascertaining the influence of various manures on the growth of crops in so far as quality of produce is concerned.

PHILOLOGY NOTES.

Messrs. Macmillan & Co. will publish immediately as the fourth volume of their "Parnassus Library of Greek and Latin Texts" an edition of Catullus, by Prof. Arthur Palmer, of Dublin, with a brief introduction, but no notes.

At the meeting of the Philological Society, to be held on Friday next at University College, Prof. Frank Heath will read a paper on "The Text and Metre of Chaucer's Early Minor Poems."

At a meeting to be held on Monday next in the map-room of the Royal Geographical Society, Mr. John L. Myres, of Magdalen College, Oxford, will read a paper on "The Maps used by Herodotus."

REPORTS OF SOCIETIES.

VIKING CLUB.—(Friday, February 21.)

THE Rev. A. Sandison, the president, in the chair. —Mr. Einar Benediktsson read a paper on "The Ancient Thule, or the Isle of Sun." The old Thule, said the lecturer, was known long before Pytheas made his travels in the north-west of Europe. Thus, both Otesias as Cnidius and Diogenes Antonius wrote on Thule; and, from a work by the latter, it is certain that the name was applied to a country near the region of Iceland as early as the fifth century B.C. One of the strongest proofs that the original Thule was Iceland is that the name correctly understood means the Isle of Sun; for no other island, corresponding with the earliest descriptions, could have been known to the ancient Greek writers in which the sun for days never set. The main part of the name Thule corresponds remarkably with the various forms of the Celtic houli, "sun." As we have Thule, Thyle, Thile, so we have houli, houl, hiol. The old writers differ as to old dialects. The original name of Iceland was Houl-i, or some other combination of the two words, meaning "sun" and "isle," according to the dialect of the discoverer, who is supposed to be a Celt from the British islands, the nearest inhabited land to Iceland at the time. The prefixed T may have arisen in various ways; e.g., as a Gaelic euphonym before a masculine noun beginning with a vowel—and it may be remarked that Bede in one place uses the name Thyle as masculine, and that various forms of names for islands are masculine in old Gaelic dialects; or the prefixed T might be derived from the genitive sign d' changed into t before the aspirated vowel; or, again, it might have come from a wrong reading or pronunciation of the Greek equivalent of the name τῷ ἡλίου ῥήματι, a form in which the name probably passed into Greek, as such proper names as "A Land of Sun" are usually translated in foreign languages. Another possibility is that the Gaelic euphonic i was prefixed to the Norse name Sol-ey and changed to an aspirated t, or that the name Houli was adopted in Greek and not understood, the pronoun τῷ being prefixed, and later on passed into Θούλη. Taidou of Seville states, without giving any philological reason, that Thule is named after the sun, and he seems to have had some earlier authority for this. In fact, this explanation of the name turns out to be the most natural of the multitude of etymological definitions brought forward by writers on the mystic Thuleland. Whoever first set out to search for an island in the northern ocean, must naturally have started in the season of the year when the days are long. Gradually he must have seen the day lengthen until he came to a large island where the sun never sets. Thus he got corroboration of the theories of old men of science about the length of the day in the north; and struck by the glory of the midnight-sun, which no one forgets who has once seen it, he gave the land a name harmonising with his strong impression of the wonderful sight. What was more natural than that he should call it the Isle of Sun? And what is more natural than it should be a Celtic name of that signification, which was given to the land nearest to the British Islands, from which also the Phoenicians and Greeks must have got their earliest information about Ultima Thule. As Iceland was most likely first discovered and named by Celts, so one can see from a passage of Bede that the island was visited (probably from the British Isles) long before 795 A.D., when Dicuilus says that Irish monks went there. The usual interpretation of Landnám and Íslendingabók, that only a few monks were in Iceland when the Norwegians arrived, is unreliable. Many things point to the Irish colony being spread over a large part of Iceland. The Celtic settlement in Iceland partly took place independently of the Norwegian discovery; and it is worth mentioning that the first settler of Iceland in historical times is a Celt, who arrived in the north of Iceland about ten years before Ingolfur Arnarson, commonly called the first settler. As a great part of the population is undoubtedly of Celtic descent, and as the geographical position of Iceland places it in a close connexion, commercial and political, with Great Britain, so the earliest traces of any knowledge of Houlce, the Isle of the Sun, have come down to us indirectly from the old Celtic inhabitants of the British Isles.—Mr. J. M. Mitchell said that he had heard the lecture with very great interest, especially the latter part of it. He had always thought that too much stress was laid on the colonisation of Iceland from Denmark and Norway. From many indications he considered that for the origin of the Icelanders we must look to the East, as we must in the case of the Celts also. It has long been recognised that in islands old forms of life and customs that have died out on the mainland survive, as is seen to be the case to-day in Orkney, Shetland, and Iceland. He had been struck in Shetland with the Spanish pattern of the wool-work, even before he learned that it could be traced to the time of the Armada. Now, among the Icelanders there were many facts in their customs, legends, and arts to show that the race came, in part at least, from the East. He had a very curious ring, which he bought in Iceland, not perhaps itself more than 400 years old, but of a pattern much more ancient. It was formed of a serpent, not the Midgard Worm of the Eddaic mythology holding his tail in his mouth, but the Eastern serpent that figured as the emblem of the ancient sun worship. At its tail there was a very curious ornament; and he had been told by experts that both that and the serpent ring were almost identical with specimens found in the ruins of Persepolis. He also produced an Icelandic bed-quilt of modern make, but reproducing an antique pattern, which closely resembled patterns of Persian carpets. Again, old fairy tales and folk-lore akin to those of the Celts were also found in Iceland; and in many other points a resemblance to the East could be traced in the habits and customs of Iceland. In conclusion, he would like to ask whether any old serpent-mounds had been found in Iceland, such as those on the west coast of Scotland and in the Hebrides. They were heaped up in the form of a snake, with flat stones to represent the head, and were no doubt a relic of sun worship.—Mr. A. F. Major, hon. sec., said that he had been extremely interested by Mr. Benediktsson's suggestive lecture, and thought he had made out a strong case in support of his theory as to the origin of the name "Thule" and its poetical meaning. His argument in favour of a Celtic derivation was so strong that he seemed rather to have weakened than strengthened his case by suggesting a possible derivation from the Greek. But there were points in the latter part of the paper on which he did not quite hold with the lecturer, and he thought the Celtic origin of the Icelanders was by no means so pronounced as was suggested. In the first place, there was no historical evidence in favour of the Celtic inhabitants of the British Isles being a seafaring people. The Romans appear to have met with no seafaring people on the northern shores of Europe, except the Veneti whom Caesar encountered in Brittany; and surely if the Britons had been seamen also they would have tried to repel Caesar's invasion by sea, or, at any rate, some naval attack on the Romans during the long time the conquest of Britain lasted would have been recorded. But though Greek and Phœnician sailors had been coasting round their shores for centuries, navigation in the North seems to have had no existence; and a hundred years or more after Caesar's time Tacitus says of the Suiones, apparently a Scandinavian people inhabiting the south of Sweden, that their vessels had no sails but only oars. Of course some means of traversing the sea they must have had—dug-out canoes, perhaps, or skin-covered boats; and in these they may well have been driven by storms even as far as Iceland—but there was no evidence to show that they were a maritime people, as described by the lecturer. Again, he had found nothing in the facts brought forward by Mr. Benediktsson to shake the conclusions drawn from the statements in the early Icelandic records, that the Celtic settlements before their time consisted only of a few anchorites and recluses. There was no colonisation in the proper sense of the term. For one thing, these Irish monks generally chose the desolate places of the earth to dwell in; and the story told of an Irish bishop directing one of the later settlers where to go points only to a monkish knowledge of the island. Again, had there been an Irish colonisation, Celtic place-names would be found in Iceland; but he was under the impression that the names were almost entirely Scandinavian in their origin. Surely, too, the proportion of the Celtic stock among the settlers of Iceland was nothing like so great as the lecturer affirmed. An admixture there undoubtedly was, yet the language, laws, and customs of the Icelanders remained Norse, which pointed to the settlers, too, having been Norse in the main. Most of those who went thither from Great Britain were of Scandinavian stock, no less than direct immigrants from Norway, coming from England, Orkney, Shetland, and the Norse settlements in Scotland; while even in the case of Ireland the settlers came from the Norse kingdoms which fringed a great part of the coast, and, if of mixed race, the Scandinavian element seems to have been the preponderating one.—Dr. Jon Stefansson wished to thank the lecturer for his paper. He thought Mr. Benediktsson had brought forward good arguments to account for the name Thule, and that his explanation of the poetical name given to Iceland in ancient times—the Sun Isle—was the best yet offered. He was grateful to him for it. He did not think there were any serpent-mounds in Iceland, though he understood that Dr. Phené, lecturing for the Club last year, believed he had discovered them there. He himself had unfortunately not been present at that lecture; but he could confidently affirm that he had never seen or heard of any such thing in Iceland, and never met anyone else who had done so. Although in the main he agreed with the lecturer, he could not assent to his opinion that more than half the population of Iceland were of Celtic stock. Take Landnámabok, which records the names of thousands of the original settlers. It is true that there are a great many Celtic names there, but the proportion is nothing like so great as Mr. Benediktsson argues. As regards place-names, very few in Iceland are Celtic: he should doubt if a dozen could be found in the island. But it is quite true that a large proportion, at least two thirds of the original settlers, came from the British Isles. But many of these were Norwegians who touched there on the way or came from the Orkneys, Shetlands, and other Norse regions.—Mr. Benediktsson, in reply, said that with regard to the early inhabitants of the British Isles not being a seafaring nation, he did not think the silence of Caesar proved this. We did not know where Caesar landed, but obviously he would do his best to evade any seafaring tribes, or would avoid the coast they inhabited. Besides, though they engaged in commerce and peaceful intercourse by sea, it did not follow that they would likewise take to the sea in warfare. Moreover, there might have been a population living in the British Isles at the time of the Roman invasion quite different from those inhabitants of the islands who are supposed to have discovered Iceland for the first time. With regard to the Celtic names, the chief's name alone was generally given in the records, and even though he were a Norseman his followers might be largely of Celtic stock. There was no doubt that the governing race in Iceland was of Norse origin; but the Icelanders trace their descent back to the followers rather than to the chiefs, because the last-named were few, the first many. Even considering Landnámabok, his opinion was that the pure Celtic names of historical settlers indicated a Celtic origin of the greater part of the population. But this, after all, was a subsidiary point; and with regard to it he was here content to rely on the opinion of Gudbrandr Vigfússon, as expressed in his article on "Iceland" in the Encyclopædia Britannica.—The president said he wished to express his personal indebtedness to Mr. Benediktsson for his learned and luminous paper. His only regret had been that it did not last longer. He had come there, as a Shetlander, prepared to resent any attempt to locate "Thule" elsewhere than in Shetland, but he was bound to say the lecturer had converted him. With regard to the point raised as to the existence of seafaring in early Britain, he thought great weight ought to be attached to the absence of evidence on the point from Caesar, who was such a close and careful observer that, had the Britons come under his notice as a seagoing race, he would certainly have recorded it.

FINE ART.

LETTER FROM EGYPT.

Dahabiyeh Istar, Assuan: Feb. 20, 1896.

MY late departure from Cairo, persistent gales from the south, and the abnormal cold of the winter, have prevented me from doing much more than hurry as rapidly as possible up the Nile into the sunnier, if not warmer, regions of Upper Egypt.

Consequently, I have little to report about my own doings. Near Kafr el-'Ayyât, however, I visited the village of Behbêt, which bears the same name as Behbêt el-Hagar near Mansûra; and as the latter derives its name from the old Egyptian Pi-Hebit, "the temple of the festive gathering," and was celebrated for its temple of Isis, it is reasonable to suppose that the other Behbêt also was the site of an ancient sanctuary. I found that it stands on a lofty tel, and the blocks of granite and sculptured stone which lie about show that a temple must once have existed there. In the hills to the west are some large quarries.

A good many excavators have been at work at Thebes this winter; but the results are somewhat disappointing. M. de Morgan has succeeded in pumping the water out of the sacred lake at Karnak, but without finding anything of importance; and Dr. Naville at Dêr el-Bâhari, and M. Daresy at Medinet Hâbu, have been mainly occupied in completing the work of last year and clearing the floors of the two temples. Miss Benson, however, has discovered some fragments of statues of a good period in the temple of Mut at Karnak; and Prof. Petrie has found that the Kom-el-Hellân, west of the Colossi, is not the site of a temple of Amenôphis III., as has hitherto been supposed, but of Menepthah, who made use of sculptured stones and other monuments belonging to a building of Amenôphis III., which may have been the palace discovered by M. Grébaut in 1889 to the south of Medinet Hâbu. North of this temple of Menepthah Prof. Petrie has discovered a temple of a queen who reigned in her own right and assumed the titles of a king. She seems to have been the Thuôris of Manetho, the last sovereign of the XIXth Dynasty. North of her temple, and between it and the Ramesseum, Prof. Petrie has further laid bare the foundations of a temple of Thothmes IV.; while to the north of the Ramesseum Dr. Spiegelberg (who has been copying the multitudinous hieratic graffiti of Thebes) has found the remains of a temple of Amenôphis I. And at Abydos M. Amelineau has discovered a tomb belonging to a son of Shishak I.

At El-Kab Mr. Somers Clarke had no new inscriptions to show me; but the excavations of Captain Lyons at Philæ have been fruitful in results. On the north side of the island he has cleared the site of a temple of Augustus; and on the south side of it he has restored the stately colonnade to something of its original splendour, by removing the rubbish in which it was buried and repairing the columns. Here, too, he has been able to rebuild a ruined temple begun by Ptolemy IV., and finished by Tiberius, and has found that the Ethiopian king Ergamenes also took part in its construction, thus verifying Prof. Mahaffy's conclusion that he was a contemporary of Philopator. At present Captain Lyons is clearing the houses and streets of the Coptic town of Philæ, or rather the "Castrum" of the late Roman period, and in the course of doing so has disinterred several interesting inscriptions. Two of these are on the walls of the great temple, and record the names of two prophets of a new deity, Ptiris, who is represented in an adjoining picture with a hawk's head, a crocodile's body, and a tail in the form of an uræus serpent. One of the inscriptions is dated in the year 435 A.D. Several other inscriptions have turned up which throw light on the history of Philæ in the late Roman or Byzantine period; but the crowning discovery of all was made last week. In the neighbourhood of the temple of Augustus Captain Lyons found a granite stele, on which, below the figure of an armed horseman trampling on a fallen enemy who vainly tries to defend himself with a shield, is a trilingual inscription in hieroglyphs, Latin, and Greek. The text is of historical importance, as it relates to

"the Roman citizens C. Cornelius Gallus, the first prefect of Alexandria and Egypt," who, "after the conquest of the kings by Augustus, suppressed a revolt in the Thebaid in fifteen days and captured the five cities of Borais, Ooptos, Ceramicê, Diospolis [Thebes], and the great city of Ophiûm, putting to death their five leaders and leading the Roman army beyond the cataract of Abaton, into a region never before visited by the Roman people or the kings of Egypt."

He then "received the ambassadors of the Ethiopians at Philæ," took their king under Roman protection, and made him ruler of the Triacoutaschoenus (for which see Ptol. Geog. iv. 7, 32, ed. Nobbe). Finally, the Roman prefect gave thankofferings to all the gods and especially "to Nilus who had helped" him. The hieroglyphic text is dated in the first year of Augustus, the 20th day of the fourth month.

The sebakh-diggers have brought to light three Roman altars of granite, with Latin inscriptions, in the rubbish-heaps south-east of the railway station at Assuan. Two of them stand on the southern side of a roadway which once led to a temple, in a line with a stone (to the east) which formerly served as part of a gatepost, while the third faces them on the opposite side of the old road. The latter bears inscriptions on two of its sides. One of these is dedicated to Tiberius by the prefect of Egypt, C. Vitrasius Pollio, and the Ituraean cohort, in the third year of the emperor; while the second is addressed to Nerva by C. Pompeius Planta, the prefect of Egypt, and L. Cinucius Prisons, the prefect of the camps on the part of the first regiment of Spanish cavalry, the second regiment of Ituraean cavalry, and the first regiment of Theban cavalry under the general command of Claudius Justus, the prefect of the Theban cohort. On the south side of the old roadway one of the altars is dedicated to Trajan by C. Avidius Heliodorus, the prefect of Egypt, and M. Oscius Drusus, the prefect of the camps, on the part of the first cohort of Cilician horse, and the other to Aurelius Verus by M. Annius Suriacus, the prefect of Egypt, and L. Arivasius Casianus, the prefect of the camps, on behalf of the same cohort.

To turn from comparatively modern times to the beginning of history, I have discovered an inscription coeval with Cheops, the builder of the great pyramid of Gîzeh, here in the island of Elephantinë. The sebakh-diggers have been very busy during the past summer among the mounds of the old city, which stood at the southern end of the island, and have pulled down a part of the ancient city wall, which was built in one place upon granite boulders. The inscription is upon one of the boulders, and records the visit to Assuan of Khufu-ânkh, whose beautiful granite sarcophagus is now in the Cairo Museum. There is a drawing of Khufu-ânkh himself, leaning upon a stick, as well as of his boat, and the name of the king is "writ large" within a horizontal cartouche. The only deity mentioned is Anubis. The inscription seems to have been engraved at the time when Khufu-ânkh conveyed his sarcophagus to the north; as there is no reference to a pyramid, his visit can hardly have had anything to do with the transport of the granite blocks for the tomb of the king at Gîzeh. It is the first time that any monument so old as the IVth Dynasty has been found in the extreme south of Egypt, and it must have been inscribed before the city of Elephantinë was surrounded with a wall. Indeed, it is doubtful whether any city would at the time have existed on the spot. In that case, however, it would not have been long afterwards that a town sprang up. I have bought a seal-cylinder, discovered in the rubbish-heaps, which is of very early date, and were it not for the hieroglyphs upon it would be pronounced of archaic Babylonian origin. It bears the name of "Sat(?)-khens, the governor of the two lands," as well as of his dogs Unsha and Zetef, whose pictures accompany their names. Small fragments of papyrus have also been found, containing the names of Ra-meri and Nefer-ka-Ra, thus affording a fresh confirmation of Manetho's statement, that the Vth and VIth Dynasties came from Elephantinë.

A. H. SAYCE.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

SIR EDWARD BURNE-JONES has from time to time lent to various exhibitions small selections of the studies which he makes as preliminaries for his finished works, but these designs have never been seen in any number or fitting arrangement. He has, however, now assented to the Fine Art Society's making a complete exhibition of them, which will open directly after Easter.

WE regret to learn that Dr. Drury E. Fortnum is seriously ill at his villa, "La Fantaisie," Mentone, from the effects of a chill, lung congestion, and bronchial irritation. The printing of his promised work on "Maiolica" is fast approaching completion, and we trust that this illness may not cause any serious delay.

THE following exhibitions will open next week: Rosa Bonheur's "The Duel"—a fight between two horses, the Godolphin Arab and Hobgoblin—with the latest portrait of the painter, and a complete series of engravings of her works, at Mr. Lafèvre's Gallery, King-street, St. James's; a small collection of pictures and drawings by Mr. Arthur Studd, at the Goupil Gallery, Regent-street.

SIR JOHN MILLAIS has been elected an honorary member of the Royal Society of British Artists.

MONDAY, March 30, is the receiving day for the exhibition of the New English Art Club, at the Dudley Gallery. The written invitation of two members is required for those who wish to submit pictures for approval.

A PICTURE of "The Crucifixion," by Spinello Aretino, has been bequeathed to the National Gallery by the Rev. Jarvis H. Ash, of Tunbridge Wells: it is placed with the early Italian pictures in the North Vestibule at the top of the principal staircase. Mr. Henry J. Pfungst has presented a picture of still life, by William K. Heda: this will shortly be hung in Room No. XI. A small picture of a battle-scene, by Jacob Weier, a little-known German painter of the school of Wouverman, has been given by Sir Augustus Wollaston Franks: it will be hung shortly among the Dutch pictures. A supplementary catalogue of the pictures acquired since the publication of the last editions of the foreign and British catalogues up to the end of 1895 is in the press, and will be for sale in the gallery on April 1, at the price of one penny.

THE committee of the Southport Art Gallery have purchased the painting, by Mr. Arthur Hacker, entitled "The Children's Prayer," out of their present spring exhibition, for their permanent collection.

ON Wednesday next, Messrs. Sotheby will sell a collection of old Japanese hand-block colour prints, by the First Toyokune, Hiroshige, Kunesada, Harunobu, Outamaro, Hokusai, Eizan, and other artists of the best periods, of which the authenticity is guaranteed.

At the meeting of the Viking Club, to be held in the King's Weigh House Rooms on Friday next, Mr. P. M. C. Kermode, of the Isle of Man, will read a paper on "Illustrations of the Sagas from Manx Monuments," illustrated with photographs, diagrams, &c.

THE Sultan has presented to the Louvre the famous silver vase of Tello, which was found by M. de Sarzec in 1888, on the site of the ancient Sirpoula, and then passed to the Turkish government in accordance with the conditions of the excavations. This vase is believed to be one of the oldest surviving examples of engraving upon metal.

MUSIC.

RECENT CONCERTS.

At the orchestral concert of the students of the Royal College of Music given at St. James's Hall last Friday week, the first three movements of a Symphony in A minor, by Mr. S. Coleridge Taylor, were performed under the direction of Dr. C. V. Stanford. The first movement, though well written, does not show much individuality; the second, a Lament, has feeling and tender charm; the third is clever and attractive, though it scarcely answers to its title of Scherzo. The "first three movements" on the programme would seem to indicate that a fourth has been composed—possibly the composer is not satisfied with it. Mr. Taylor gives good promise for the future. Another interesting novelty at this concert was a Festal Overture by Dr. Joachim, ably rendered under his direction. The eminent violinist has been neither a prolific nor a particularly successful composer. This Overture, like a few other works of his which have been heard here, contains thoroughly sound music, and it is ably and effectively scored; but it is not the outcome of deep thought or vivid imagination. Mr. W. Hurlstone played a clever pianoforte Concerto of his own, a work which had been previously heard at one of the ordinary college concerts.

On the same evening Herr Franz Fischer, Hofkapellmeister of Munich, gave a Wagner recital "on the pianoforte" in the small Queen's Hall. It appears that similar recitals in Germany have gained for him great reputation; and from the little we heard of his performance last week there is no doubt whatever that he is conversant with Wagner's scores, and that he is an able pianist. Wagner, however, on the pianoforte, even under the best conditions, is eminently unsatisfactory. The only excuse for such recitals would be that they were given in towns in which orchestral concerts were conspicuous by their absence; in London, where we have Messrs. Mauns, Richter, Mottl, Nikisch—to these names will soon be added that of M. Lamoureux—constantly giving Wagner music, they have no raison d'être. In the preface to his wonderfully clever arrangement of Beethoven's Symphonies, Liszt boldly declared that every effect could be reproduced on the modern pianoforte. Mendelssohn, according to Hiller, on reading this, remarked: "Well, if I could only hear the first eight bars of Mozart's G minor Symphony, with the delicate figure in the tenors, rendered on the pianoforte as it sounds in the orchestra, I would believe it." Liszt, who knew Beethoven's Symphonies thoroughly, could not, we imagine, distinguish between what he produced outwardly and what he heard inwardly. This, too, is probably the case with Herr Fischer. Herr Levi, his colleague, has declared that in listening to him "one imagines hearing a whole orchestra." That may be so with Herr Levi and a few other gifted musicians; with the general public, imagination does not work such a miracle.

"Sardanapalus," a Dramatic Musical Poem, written by Mr. William Akerman and set to music by Mr. Franco Leoni, was performed at an opera concert at the Queen's Hall on Saturday afternoon. The poem is clever, and offers to the composer opportunities for displaying his lyric and dramatic powers. The music possesses many excellent qualities: it is melodious, full of life and variety, while the orchestration, on the whole, is effective. The composer has certainly studied the works of his contemporaries, also those of Wagner; of this his music gives evidence. Such influence is quite natural. Some of the greatest composers were at first so largely influenced by their predecessors that their individuality was but faintly visible. Mr. Leoni, for the present, seems to us in an early stage of development; but he has in him, if we mistake not, the making of a good composer.

An interesting organ recital was given at Queen's Hall on Monday afternoon by students of the Royal Academy. The programme opened with a clever and pleasing Sonata by Rheinberger, well interpreted by Mr. Eustache Turner; in the other organ pieces French composers were favoured. As the concert was not one of a series, the programme might, we think, have been more cosmopolitan. The selection, however, was good. The movements from Widor's Symphony in F, performed in first-rate style by Mr. G. D. Cunningham, proved interesting, if not inspired. In the rendering of the Pastorale and Finale from M. Guilmant's First Sonata—admirable specimens of modern French organ music—Miss Claiborne Dixon distinguished herself greatly. The programme included songs, and Lord Lytton's "The Wife of Miletus" was recited in able manner by Miss Katie Thomas.

A morning concert in aid of the parish of St. George-the-Martyr, Southwark, was given at Grosvenor House, and well attended. Mr. and Mrs. Henschel, Señor Arbos, Señor Rubio, and other well-known artists took part in the programme. Mr. Leonard Borwick played three pieces of Scarlatti with great precision and refinement. Mrs. Beerbohm Tree gave two recitations.

J. S. SHEDLOCK.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTIONS

TO

THE ACADEMY.

(PAYABLE IN ADVANCE.)

	YEARLY.	HALF-YEARLY.	QUARTERLY.
	£ s. d.	£ s. d.	£ s. d.
If obtained of a Newsvendor or at a Railway Station	0 13 0	0 6 6	0 3 3
Including Postage to any part of the United Kingdom	0 15 2	0 7 7	0 3 10
Including Postage to any part of France, Germany, India, China, &c.	0 17 4	0 8 8	0 4 4

GEORGE NEWNES, Ltd., Publishers.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "SHERLOCK HOLMES."
THE EXPLOITS of BRIGADIER GERARD. By A. CONAN DOYLE. With 24 Illustrations by W. B. Wollen, R.I. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

THE STRATFORD-ON-AVON SHAKESPEARE.
THE WORKS of WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE. Vol. I., containing "The Tempest," "Two Gentlemen of Verona," "Merry Wives of Windsor," and "Measure for Measure." Small 8vo, cloth, with edges cut, or uncut, 1s. 6d. To be completed in 12 Monthly Volumes.

Oblong 4to, cloth extra, 10s. 6d.
ROUND the COAST. An Album of 284 Pictures from Photographs of the Chief Scenic Places of Interest in Great Britain and Ireland.

Oblong 4to, cloth extra, 10s. 6d.
ROUND the WORLD, from London Bridge to Charing Cross, via Yokohama and Chicago. An Album of 284 Pictures from Photographs of the Chief Places of Interest in all Parts of the World.

Vols. I. and II. now ready, cloth, 6s. each.
THE ORACLE CYCLOPEDIA. Profusely Illustrated, and containing the most accurate information in the most readable form. Edited by R. W. EGERTON EASTWICK, B.A., of the Middle Temple. To be completed in Five Volumes.

THE LIBRARY OF USEFUL STORIES.
THE STORY of the SOLAR SYSTEM. Simply Told for General Readers. By G. F. CHAMBERS, F.R.S.E. With 28 Illustrations. Cloth, 1s.

Previous Volumes in the same Series.
THE STORY of the STARS. By G. F. Chambers.
THE STORY of PRIMITIVE MAN. By E. Clodd.
THE STORY of the PLANTS. By Grant Allen.
THE STORY of the EARTH. By Prof. H. G. Seeley.

LONDON: SOUTHAMPTON STREET, STRAND.

BERTRAM DOBELL'S PUBLICATIONS.

Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 4s. 6d. net.
HUMAN DOCUMENTS: Character Sketches of Representative Men and Women, of the Time. By ARTHUR LYNCH.
Mr. Lynch is a daring man, and searches his documents with the critical eye of an expert, and I shall be surprised if his work does not become one of the much-talked-about books of the season. Sunday Times.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 5s. 6d. net.
THE MYSTICAL HYMNS of ORPHEUS Translated from the Greek by THOMAS TAYLOR.
"This reprint is a faithful facsimile of the second edition of the work, and is itself an elegant piece of typography."—Scotsman.

8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d. net.
IAMBlichUS on the MYSTERIES of the EGYPTIANS, CHALDEANS, and ASSYRIANS. Translated from the Greek by THOMAS TAYLOR.

Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 4s. 6d. net.
LIKE STARS THAT FALL: a Novel of Music-Hall Life. By GEOFFREY MORTIMER.
"Life and reality mark this story."—Black and White.

8vo, cloth extra, 6s. net.
GLUCK and the OPERA: a Study in Musical History. By ERNEST NEWMAN.
"Gluck and the Opera" is an admirable study, not only of the great musical reformer's career and artistic work, but of the philosophy of musical drama, with more especial reference to its earlier manifestations. — Times.

BERTRAM DOBELL, 77, Charing Cross Road, W.C.

Post 8vo, strongly bound, price 7s.
CAREYS "GRADUS ad PARNASSUM," with the English Meanings. Revised, Corrected, and Augmented by a Member of the University of Cambridge.
London: Published by the STATIONERS' COMPANY, Stationers' Hall, Ludgate Hill.

Just published, price 2s. 6d., post free.
GOUT and ITS CURE. By J. COMPTON BURNETT, M.D.
"Sufferers from gout will be interested in a little book by the well-known specialist."—Land and Water.
London: JAMES ERSE & Co. (Ltd.), 170, Piccadilly, and 48, Threadneedle Street.

FOURTH EDITION, pp. 300, 5s.
PROTOPLASM: Physical Life and Law. By Prof. LIONEL BEALE, F.R.S. Facts and Arguments against Mechanical Views of Life as accepted by Huxley, Herbert Spencer, Strauss, Tyndall, and many others.
HARRISON & SONS, 59, Pall Mall.

WARD &amp; DOWNEY'S NEW NOVELS

Now ready.—By TIGHE HOPKINS.
NELL HAFFENDEN: a Novel. By TIGHE HOPKINS, Author of "Lady Bonnie's Experiment," &c. 2 vols., crown 8vo, cloth, price 10s. net.

Now ready.—By W. CARLTON DAWE.
THE HISTORY of GODFREY KING: a Novel. By W. CARLTON DAWE, Author of "The Ema's Head," &c. 1 vol., crown 8vo, cloth extra, price 6s.
"There is a delightful mingling of comedy with pathos, and Mr. Dawe shows that he is not the pessimist we might have believed."—Times.
"A breezy novel, single in sentiment, honest in its intentions, and generous in incident. Extremely interesting."—Star

Now ready.—By R. LUCAS.
FELIX DORRIEN: a Novel. By R. LUCAS. With Illustrations by the Lady Boston. 1 vol., crown 8vo, art linen, price 6s.
"The story is happily conceived and is developed with conspicuous skill."—Scotsman.
"The author, it is apparent, knows the world of politics well. The story is undeniably clever."—Dundee Courier.

Now ready.—By PAUL CUSHING.
The SHEPHERDESS of TREVA: a Novel. By PAUL CUSHING, Author of "The Blacksmith of Voe," &c. 3 vols., crown 8vo, cloth, price 16s. net.
"Mr. Cushing has achieved a very great success in 'The Shepherdess of Treva.'"—Academy.
"There is a vigour and a vitality and a certain gusto in the work of Mr. Paul Cushing which make it attractive and exhilarating."—Spectator.

WARD &amp; DOWNEY (LIMITED), 12, YORK BUILDINGS, ADELPHI, W.C.

THE FORUM.

CONTENTS.—MARCH, 1896.—Eighteenpence.
FAMILY LIFE in AMERICA. By TH. BENTON.
THE NICARAGUA CANAL and IMPRACTICABLE SCHEME. By JOSEPH NIXON, Jun.
THE ARMY AS A CAREER. By OLIVER O. HOWARD.
THE BEST THING COLLEGE DOES FOR A MAN. By CHARLES F. THWING.
SOME MUNICIPAL PROBLEMS. By E. W. DENNIS.
THE MANITOBA SCHOOLS QUESTION. By GOLDWIN SMITH.
COST of an ANGO-AMERICAN WAR. By EDWARD ATKINSON.
AN ALLIANCE with ENGLAND the BASIS of a RATIONAL FOREIGN POLICY. By SIDNEY SHERWOOD.
THE EUROPEAN SITUATION. By F. H. GEFFCKEN.
SPIRIT of RACING in AMERICA. By JEO. GILMER SPEER.
MANNERS and CUSTOMS of the BOERS. By T. LORRAINE WHITE.

24, BEDFORD STREET, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK
Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane, London.
TWO-AND-A-HALF PER CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS repayable on demand.
TWO PER CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, on the minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.
STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.
For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposit and allows interest monthly on each completed £1.

BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.
HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE
FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH.
BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY.
HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND
FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.
The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post free.
FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

WM. & GEO. LAW.
COFFEE—SUGAR—TEA.

104, NEW OXFORD STREET, W.C.

BREAKFAST—SUPPER.
EPPS'S
GRATEFUL—COMFORTING.
COCOA.
BOILING WATER OR MILK.

MR. MURRAY'S PUBLICATIONS, SEASON 1895-96.

- THE HEART of a CONTINENT : a Narrative of Travels in Manchuria, the Desert of Gobi, Turkestan, the Himalayas, the Hindu Kush, the Pamirs, &c. From 1881 to 1894. By Captain FRANK YOUNGHUSBAND, C.I.E., Indian Staff Corps, Gold Medalist Royal Geographical Society. With Maps, Illustrations, &c., medium 8vo, 21s.
- THE BIBLE in SPAIN; or, the Journeys and Imprisonments of an Englishman in an Attempt to Circulate the Scriptures in the Peninsula. By GEORGE BORROW. A New Edition, carefully Revised, with Notes and a Glossary, by the late RALPH ULICK BURKE, Author of "A History of Spain." With Map and Etchings by M. Manasse, 2 vols., crown 8vo, 12s.
- THE LIFE of ADMIRAL SIR JOHN FRANKLIN. Based on Private and hitherto unpublished Documents. By H. D. TRAILL. 8vo, 16s.
- LETTERS and VERSES of ARTHUR PENRHYN STANLEY, D.D., late Dean of Westminster. Edited by ROWLAND E. PROTHERO, Author of "The Life and Letters of Dean Stanley." 2 vols., crown 8vo, 21s.
- JOURNALS and CORRESPONDENCE of LADY EASTLAKE. Edited by her Nephew, CHARLES EASTLAKE SMITH. With Facsimile of her Drawings and a Portrait. With Plans, 8vo, 18s.
- REMINISCENCES of THIRTY-FIVE YEARS of MY LIFE. By Sir JOSEPH A. CROWE, K.C.M.G., C.B., Author of "The Early Flemish Painters," "Painting in North Italy," &c. Including the Founding and Early Days of the Daily News, Experiences as War Correspondent during the Campaign on the Danube, 1854, the Crimean War, Bombay during the Mutiny, the Franco-Austrian War in 1859, &c. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.
- METHODS of SOCIAL REFORM. Essays, Critical and Constructive. By THOMAS MACKAY, Author of "The English Poor," Editor of "A Plea for Liberty," &c. Medium 8vo, 31s. 6d.
- LIGHTS and SHADES of INDIAN HILL LIFE in the AFGHAN and HINDU HIGHLANDS. A Contrast. By F. ST. J. GORE, B.A., Magdalen College, Oxford. Beautifully Illustrated with 72 Full-Page Reproductions from Photographs taken by the Author, Illustrations in Text, and Maps. With Maps and Illustrations, crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.
- A WANDERING SCHOLAR in the LEVANT. By DAVID G. HOGARTH, Fellow of Magdalen College, Oxford. With Portrait, crown 8vo, 9s.
- WITH an AMBULANCE: a Narrative of Personal Experiences during the Franco-German War, 1870-71. By CHARLES E. RYAN, F.R.C.S.I., M.R.C.P.I. With Portrait, Illustrations, and Maps, 8vo, 10s.
- LIFE and LETTERS of the LATE ADMIRAL SIR B. J. SULLIVAN, K.C.B. Including Personal Narratives of Active Service during the Paraguayan Campaign in 1846, and with the Baltic Fleet during the Crimean War in 1854-5, &c. By his Son, H. N. SULLIVAN. With Personal Reminiscences by Admiral Sir G. H. RICHARDS. 8vo, 10s. 6d.
- THE BIOGRAPHY of HARVEY GOODWIN, late Bishop of Carlisle. By H. D. RAWNSLEY, Hon. Canon of Carlisle. With Portrait and Illustrations. Fcap. 8vo, 5s.
- THE JOURNAL of a SPY in PARIS. From January to July, 1794. By RAOUL HESBIN. Crown 8vo, 2s.
- THE TRANSVAAL TROUBLE: How it Arose. Being an Extract from the Biography of the late Sir Bartle Frere. By JOHN MARTINEAU. Large crown 8vo, 10s. 6d.
- BISHOP HEBER: Poet and Chief Missionary to the East, 1783-1826. With Letters and Verses not hitherto published. By Dr. GEORGE SMITH, C.I.E., F.R.G.S., Author of "The Life of William Carey," "Henry Martyn," &c. With Portrait, Maps, and Illustrations. 8vo, 10s. 6d.
- FOUR HUMOURISTS of the NINETEENTH CENTURY. 1. DICKENS: the Humourist as Democrat. 2. THACKERAY: the Humourist as Philosopher. 3. GEORGE ELIOT: the Humourist as Poet. 4. CARLYLE: the Humourist as Prophet. Lectures delivered at the Royal Institution of Great Britain. Revised and Enlarged. By WILLIAM SAMUEL LILLY. 2 vols., 8vo, 30s.
- THE LIFE and CORRESPONDENCE of THOMAS VALPY FRENCH, Scholar and Missionary, First Bishop of Lahore, 1825-1891. By the Rev. HERBERT BIRKS, M.A. Portrait, Illustrations, and Map. 8vo, 7s. 6d.
- DISSERTATIONS on SUBJECTS connected with the INCARNATION. By the Rev. CHARLES GORE, Canon of Westminster. With Illustrations and Map, crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.
- THE NEW FOREST: a Short Account of its History, Traditions, Folk-lore, Natural History, Sports and Games, &c. By ROSE C. DE CRESPIGNY and HORACE HUTCHINSON, Author of "Golf," in the "Badminton Series." Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.
- LATIN LITERATURE. By J. W. MACKAIL, Balliol College, Oxford. Forming a New Volume of the "University Extension Manuals," Edited by Professor KNIGHT, of St. Andrews University. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.
- COLLEGE SERMONS. For the most part preached in the Chapel of Balliol College, Oxford. To which are added some Short Addresses to Communicants. By the late BENJAMIN JOWETT, M.A., Master of Balliol College. With Facsimile Reproduction, 12mo, 5s.
- MARGARET WINTHROP (Wife of Governor John Winthrop, of Massachusetts). Forming the First of the Series of "Women of Colonial and Revolutionary Times." Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.
- SOME POOR RELIEF QUESTIONS. With the Arguments for and against the Present Law, and the various proposed Changes in it. (On the Plan of Mr. Sydney Buxton's "Handbook of Political Questions.") A Manual for Administrators and Workers. By Miss GERTRUDE LUBBOCK. With a Preface by the Right Hon. Sir JOHN LUBBOCK, Bart., M.P. Crown 8vo, 10s. 6d.
- A POCKET DICTIONARY of MODERN GREEK and ENGLISH, as actually Written and Spoken: being a Copious Vocabulary of all Words and Expressions current in Ordinary Reading and in Every-day Talk. By A. N. JANNARIS, Ph.D. A NEW, REVISED, and CHEAPER EDITION, crown 8vo, 6s.
- ROMAN GOSSIP. By Mrs. MINTO ELLIOT, Author of "An Idle Woman in Sicily," &c. NEW and CHEAPER EDITION, 32mo, 1s. net.
- THE PSALTER: according to the Prayer-Book Version. With a Concordance and other Matter compiled by the Right Hon. W. E. GLADSTONE, M.P. Crown 8vo, 2s.
- TRANSLATION at SIGHT; or, Aids to Facility in the Translation of Latin. Passages of Graduated Difficulty, carefully Selected from Latin Authors, with Explanations, Notes, &c. By Professor T. D. HALL, Author of "The Student's Latin Grammar," &c. Crown 8vo, 18s.
- A HANDBOOK for ASIA MINOR, TRANSCAUCASIA, PERSIA, &c. An entirely New Work. Edited by Major-General Sir CHARLES WILSON, R.E., K.C.B. With assistance from Colonel CHERMSIDE, R.E., C.B., Mr. D. G. HOGARTH, Professor W. RAMSAY, Colonel EVERETT, C.M.G., Lieutenant-Colonel HARRY COOPER, Mr. DEVEY, and others. With numerous Maps. Folio, £3 15s. 6d. net.
- PLAYING CARDS of VARIOUS AGES and COUNTRIES. Selected from the Collection of Lady CHARLOTTE SCHREIBER. Vol. III. Swiss, Swedish, Russian, Polish, Italian, Spanish, and Portuguese.

JOHN MURRAY, ALBEMARLE STREET.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 1246.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, MARCH 21, 1896.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

TABLE OF CONTENTS.
RECENT PHILOSOPHY, by A. W. BENN	233
MRS. DE MORGAN'S REMINISCENCES, by R. C. BROWN	234
MANAFT'S EMPIRE OF THE PTOLEMIES, by F. T. RICHARDS	235
BENEDICT'S STUDIES IN DIPLOMACY, by J. G. C. MITCHELL	236
STREET'S QUAKER EGO, by PERCY ADDLESHAW	237
NEW NOVELS, by G. BARNETT SMITH	238
CURRENT LITERATURE	239
NOTES AND NEWS	240
THE FORTHCOMING MAGAZINES	240
UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS	240
ORIGINAL VERSE: "Daffodils," by DORA CAVE	240
MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS	240
CORRESPONDENCE—
The Etymology of "Thule," by Prof. Skeat; The Middle Temple Records, by W. G. Thorpe; How Folk-Lore is Spread, by J. P. Owen; The Sin-Eater in Wales, by E. Sidney Hartland; Barlaam and Josaphat, by Prof. C. de Harlez; "The Journal of a Spy in Paris," by J. G. Alger	241
APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK	242
VON ROSTKOW'S CHINESE STUDIES, by Prof. LEGGE	243
SOME MEDICAL BOOKS	243
CORRESPONDENCE—
"Tidal King of Nations," by Prof. Sayce; The Restored Pronunciation of Greek, by Dr. R. J. Lloyd	243
SCIENCE NOTES	244
PHILOLOGY NOTES	244
REPORTS OF SOCIETIES	244
VERNON LEE'S RENAISSANCE STUDIES, by MAURICE HEWLETT	245
CORRESPONDENCE—
The Theatre at Etruria, by Edward Capps; The Sphinx, by Lieut.-Col. J. C. Ross	246
NOTES OF ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY	246
STAGE NOTES	247
RECENT CONCERTS, by J. S. SKEDLOCK	247

CATALOGUES
FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS
promptly supplied on moderate terms
CATALOGUES on application.
DULAU & CO., 27, SOHO SQUARE.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE,
IMPORTERS OF FOREIGN BOOKS,
14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN,
80, SOUTH FREDERICK STREET, EDINBURGH,
AND
7, BROAD STREET, OXFORD.
CATALOGUES post free on application.

JUST OUT.
FREE ON APPLICATION.
WILLIAMS & NORGATE'S
FOREIGN BOOK CIRCULAR.
SCIENTIFIC SERIES, No. 63.
A CLASSIFIED LIST OF THE MOST IMPORTANT PUBLICATIONS,
NEW PUBLISHERS, &c.
WILLIAMS & NORGATE, 14, Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, London;
20, South Frederick Street, Edinburgh; and 7, Broad Street, Oxford.

TH. WOHLLEBEN,
FOREIGN BOOKSELLER,
45, GREAT RUSSELL STREET
(Opposite the British Museum).
Supplies all FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS at the most moderate prices.
Catalogues on application.

On application for one stamp.
THE INTERNATIONAL BOOKMARKET.
Monthly List of the most important Publications issued by
H. GREVEL & CO.,
Importers of Foreign Books,
23, King Street, Covent Garden, W.C.

Just out, No. 70.
ALBERT JACKSON & SON'S CATA-
LOGUE OF CHOICE, RARE, and STANDARD LIBRARY
BOOKS, recently purchased, gratis and post free, 224, Great Portland
Street, London, W.
N.B.—Established nearly a Quarter of a Century.

FIRST EDITIONS of MODERN
AUTHORS, including Dickens, Thackeray, Lever, Almsworth, Books Illustrated by G. and R. Cruikshank, Phila. Rowlandson, Leech,
&c. The largest and choicest Collection offered for Sale in the World.
Catalogues issued and sent post free on application. Books bought—
WALTER T. STRECKER, 27, New Oxford Street, London, W.C.

4, HART STREET, BLOOMSBURY, LONDON.
MR. GEORGE REDWAY, formerly of York Street, Covent Garden, and late Director and Manager of Kegan Paul, Trench, Trubner & Co., Limited, begs to announce that he has RESUMED BUSINESS as a PUBLISHER on his own account, and will be glad to hear from authors with MSS. ready for publication, and to consider proposals for New Books. Address as above.

PICTURE PRESERVATION & RESTORATION
—For advice and full particulars address C. H. MIDGORTH, Studio, 208, Devonshire Road, Honor Oak Park, S.E.

TO INVALIDS.—A LIST of MEDICAL
MEN in all parts, willing to RECEIVE RESIDENT PATIENTS, giving full particulars and terms, sent gratis. The list includes private asylums, &c.; schools also recommended.—Address
Mr. G. B. BROOKER, 5, Lancaster Place, Strand, W.C.

WANTED, to PURCHASE, fine PIC-
TURES, in OIL, by Old Masters of the Dutch, Flemish, and British schools.—Downes & Co., 160, New Bond Street, W.

TYPE-WRITING.—MSS. of every
description COPIED. Special attention to work requiring care.
Examination Questions, Notices, &c., by DUPLICATING process.
Usual terms.—Miss THOMAS, 5, Cantley Avenue, Clapham Common,
S.W.

PALL MALL.—A portion of the Collection of Pictures from
Carlton Towers, Albany, Yorks, late the property of HENRY,
LORD BEAUMONT, by direction of the Administratrix.

MESSRS. FOSTER respectfully announce
for SALE by AUCTION, at the GALLERY, 54, PALL MALL, on WEDNESDAY NEXT, the 26th March, at 1 o'clock precisely, about 120 PICTURES from the Carlton Towers Collection, including Works of the Early Italian, Spanish, and Dutch Schools; also a few English Pictures. May be viewed on Monday and Tuesday next, when Catalogues may be had.—54, Pall Mall.

PALL MALL.—Old English Silver and Decorative Effects from
Carlton Towers, Albany, Yorks, late the property of HENRY,
LORD BEAUMONT, by direction of the Administratrix.

MESSRS. FOSTER respectfully announce
for SALE by AUCTION, at the GALLERY, 54, PALL MALL, on THURSDAY NEXT, the 26th March, at 1 o'clock precisely, OLD ENGLISH SILVER, including large tankards, Monteth candlesticks, gilt net, salvers, bread basket, entrée dishes and covers, salt cellars, sauce boats, small plate, &c.; also old Dresden figures, bronzes, hohl clock, and several panels of old Italian (Sacchi d'Erbi) tapestry. May be viewed Tuesday and Wednesday next, when Catalogues may be had.—54, Pall Mall.

THE AUTHOR'S MANUAL. By PERCY
RUSSELL. With Prefatory Remarks by Mr. GLADSTONE.
Crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d. net. (EIGHTH and CHEAPER EDITION.)
With Portrait.
"Mr. Russell's book is a very complete manual and guide for journalist and author. It is not a merely practical work—it is literary and appreciative of literature in its best sense.... We have little else but praise for the volume."—Westminster Review.
Distr., Lowe & Co., 18, Rouverie Street, London, E.C.

AGENCY FOR AMERICAN BOOKS.
G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS, PUBLISHERS
and BOOKSELLERS, of 27 and 28 West 23rd Street, New York, and 24, BEDFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C., desire to call the attention of the READING PUBLIC to the excellent facilities presented by their Branch House in London for filling, on the most favourable terms, orders for their own STANDARD PUBLICA-TIONS and for ALL AMERICAN BOOKS and PERIODICALS—
CATALOGUES sent on application

CHARLES LOWE'S LATEST PUR-
CHASES.
Choice BOOKS offered for SALE by
CHARLES LOWE, New Street, Birmingham.
Wholesale and Export Depot—BARKSHVILLE HALL, BIRMINGHAM.
Illustrated London News, a splendid set, 103 vols., newly and very handsomely bound in half green morocco, full gilt, magnificent state, £25 (not half the cost of binding). Cost £170.
BOOK of HOURS, exquisite manuscript, on vellum, small 4to, a choice example, very cheap, £24.
BOOK of HOURS, an exceedingly beautiful manuscript, with numerous beautiful miniatures, red morocco, £26.
DICKENS' CHRISTMAS CAROL, first edition, with green endpapers, very fine, in original cloth, £4.
PALAEOGRAPHICAL SOCIETY, a desirable series of these beautiful works, imperial folio size, £26 15s.
BINDING, exquisite example of antique silver wire, 12mo, in fine condition, £4 10s.
IRELAND'S LIFE of NAPOLEON, with the finely coloured plates,
4 vols., blue morocco, super extra, choice state, £21.
SURGEON'S SPORTING NOVELS, including the R. & S. Hawbuck
Grange, 4 vols., first editions, original cloth, fine, £24.
CLARENDON'S REBELLION, hundreds of extra plates, 3 vols., folio, half-morocco gilt, a very desirable set, £18.
AINSWORTH'S GUY FAWKES, Old St. Paul's, St. James's, Miss's
Daughter, James the Second—a fine series, all first editions, 13 DOCTOR SYNTAX, early edition, 3 vols., very fine, in boards, uncut edges, £24 (1820).
CHARLES LOWE,
Wholesale and Retail Bookseller, Exporter, and Literary Agent,
New Street, BIRMINGHAM.
Wholesale and Export Depot—BARKSHVILLE HALL.
Telegraphic and Cable Address:—"Books, Birmingham."

UNIVERSITY of ABERDEEN.

WILSON TRAVELLING FELLOWSHIP.
The Trustees of the Wilson Fund in the University of Aberdeen will proceed to the ELECTION of a TRAVELLING FELLOW in the month of July next. Applications will be received up to 30th June, 1896. The Wilson Fellow must be a Graduate of Aberdeen University.
He is expected to prosecute some definite work of research in accordance with the intention of the founder, and the supplementary regulations of the Scottish University Commissioners.
Each Candidate is required to indicate the character of the work of research which he intends to prosecute, if elected, and to sketch out the plan of travel and study by which he proposes to carry out this work. He may submit any further information or evidence which he thinks may help the Trustees to decide as to his qualifications for carrying out the work successfully (e.g., Essays published by himself or prepared for publication).
The Fellow will be elected for a period of two years, beginning from 15th September, 1896. The value of the Fellowship will be £200 per annum, payable in advance in half-yearly instalments.
All applications to be made to Prof. W. M. RAMSAY, Old Aberdeen.
Convener of the Committee of Trustees, who will give any further information required by Candidates.
Aberdeen, 8th March, 1896.

UNIVERSITY of WALES.

THE SECOND MATRICULATION EXAMINATION will commence on TUESDAY, JUNE 8th, 1896. Particulars from the Registrar, Town Hall Chambers, Newport, Mon., from whom forms of entry can be obtained. Entries must be made not later than May 19th.

QUEEN'S COLLEGE, LONDON,

43 and 45, Harley Street, W.
PROFESSORSHIP OF GERMAN LANGUAGE and LITERATURE.
An ELECTION to this office will be made at Midsummer next.—
For particulars apply to the ASSISTANT SECRETARY before April 25th.

ST. EDWARDS'S SCHOOL, near
OXFORD.—Public School, founded 1863, to provide Education for Gentlemen's Sons. Preparation for Universities, Army, &c., on definite Church principles. Fees: £26 per annum (Board of Clergymen, £20); Day Boys, 21 guineas. Classical and Modern sides.
Scholarships, July 29th.—Rev. T. F. HOMER, M.A., Warden.

ELTHAM COLLEGE.

THE ROYAL NAVAL SCHOOL, Incorporated 1840.
THE ANNUAL EXAMINATION for OPEN ENTRANCE
SCHOLARSHIPS will be held at ELTHAM on APRIL 8, 9, and 10.
Ten Scholarships, value £40 to £20, may be awarded.—Apply to Head Master.

WINTER SEASON, 1896-7.—LAN-
TERN LECTURES and others by ERNEST RADFORD,
LL.M. Cantab., formerly Secretary of the Arts and Crafts Exhibition Society.—For 1/6 of Subjects, &c., apply to the LECTURER, care of "The Artist," 14, Parliament Street, Westminster.

THE ZOOLICAL SOCIETY'S GAR- DENS, Regent's Park, are OPEN DAILY (except Sundays) from 9 a.m. till sunset. Admission, 1s.; on Mondays, 6d.; children, 4d.
Amongst the recent additions are a young Manatee from the Amazons and a Lion presented by Rowland Ward, Esq., F.Z.S.

IMPORTANT.—PRINTING and PUBLISHING.
NEWSPAPERS, MAGAZINES, BOOKS,
&c.—KING, SEEL & RAILTON, Limited, high-class Printers and Publishers, 12, Routh Square, 4, Bolt Court, Fleet Street, E.C., have specially-built Rotary and other fast Machines for printing
illustrated or other Publications, and specially-built Machines for fast folding and covering 8, 16, 32, or 32-page Journals at one operation.
Advice and assistance given to anyone wishing to commence New Journals.
Facilities upon the premises for Editorial Offices, free. Advertising and Publishing Departments conducted.
Telephone 65121. Telegraph "Africaism, London."

THE AUTHOR'S HAIRLESS PAPER-
PAD.
(The LEADENHALL PRESS, Ltd., 80, Leadenhall Street, London, E.C.)
Contains hairless paper, over which the pen slips with perfect freedom. Sixpence each. 5s. per dozen, ruled or plain.

ESTABLISHED 1851.
BIRKBECK BANK
Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane, London.
TWO-AND-A-HALF per CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS
repayable on demand.
TWO per CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, on the minimum
monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.
STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.
For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposit and allows interest monthly on each completed £1.

BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.
HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE
FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH.

BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY.
HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND
FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.

The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post free.
FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

EQUITY AND LAW

LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY,

18, Lincoln's Inn Fields, London, W.C.

ESTABLISHED 1844.

Directors.

CHAIRMAN—JOHN M. CLABON, Esq.

DEPUTY-CHAIRMAN—Right Hon. GEORGE DENMAN.

R. J. P. BROUGHTON, Esq.
EDMUND CHURCH, Esq.
THOMAS PIX COBB, Esq.
JOHN CROFT DEVERELL, Esq.
CHAS. BAKER DIMOND, Esq.
Sir HOWARD W. ELPHINSTONE, Bart.
Right Hon. ALEX. STAVELEY HILL, D.C.L., Q.C., M.P.
JAMES CROFTS INGRAM, Esq.
ARCHIBALD HERBERT JAMES, Esq.
The Right Hon. LORD JUSTICE KAY.
CHARLES R. V. LONGBOURNE, Esq.

WILLIAM MAPLES, Esq.
EDWARD MOBERLEY, Esq.
FREDERICK PEAKE, Esq.
Sir WALTER G. F. PHILLIMORE, Bart., D.C.L., Q.C.
GEORGE THOMPSON POWELL, Esq.
The Hon. Mr. JUSTICE ROMER.
GEORGE ROOPER, Esq.
CECIL HENRY RUSSELL, Esq.
RICHARD SMITH, Esq.
H. P. BOWLING TREVANION, Esq.
Sir ARTHUR TOWNLEY WATSON, Bart., Q.C.

Premium Income - - - - - £292,033

Funds on 31st December, 1895 - - - £2,930,963

Total Amounts to which Policies for £1,000 have increased up to December 31, 1894, under Whole-Life Tables.

Age at entry.	NUMBER OF PREMIUMS PAID.
	FIVE.	TEN.	FIFTEEN.	TWENTY.	TWENTY-FIVE.	THIRTY.	THIRTY-FIVE.	FORTY.	FORTY-FIVE.	FIFTY.
20	£ s. 1,046 0	£ s. 1,156 0	£ s. 1,281 10	£ s. 1,389 0	£ s. 1,515 0	£ s. *1,669 10	£ s. *1,830 10	£ s. *2,029 0	£ s. *2,197 0	£ s. *2,373 0
30	1,048 10	1,165 0	1,301 0	1,421 10	*1,559 10	*1,725 10	*1,915 10	*2,148 10	*2,342 0	*2,570 0
40	1,054 10	1,186 0	1,338 0	1,472 10	*1,634 10	*1,828 0	*2,050 10	*2,326 0	*2,551 10	*2,814 0
45	1,058 10	1,201 10	1,365 10	*1,511 10	*1,687 0	*1,898 0	*2,143 0	*2,440 10	*2,691 10	*2,961 10
50	1,065 0	1,223 10	1,405 10	*1,567 10	*1,762 0	*1,995 10	*2,267 0	*2,596 0	*2,866 10	...
55	1,074 10	1,256 10	1,465 0	*1,650 0	*1,873 10	*2,138 10	*2,444 0	*2,815 0	...	...
60	1,088 10	1,303 10	*1,547 10	*1,765 10	*2,024 0	*2,330 0	*2,677 0	...	...	...

In the cases marked * the Bonuses, if surrendered, would be more than sufficient to extinguish ALL future Premiums, and the Policy-holders would be still entitled to share in the future profits.

Full Information will be given on application to

A. F. BURRIDGE, Actuary and Secretary.

JUST PUBLISHED, super-royal 8vo, cloth, gilt top, price 21s.

FROM NORTH POLE TO EQUATOR:

Studies of Wild Life and Scenes in many Lands.

BY THE NATURALIST-TRAVELLER,

ALFRED EDMUND BREHM,

Author of "Bird-Life," "Tierleben," &c., &c.

Translated from the German by MARGARET R. THOMSON.

Edited by J. ARTHUR THOMSON, M.A., F.R.S.E.

WITH EIGHTY-THREE ILLUSTRATIONS FROM ORIGINAL DRAWINGS.

LONDON: BLACKIE & SON, LIMITED, 50, OLD BAILEY.

THEATRES.

ADELPHI THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8, ONE OF THE BEST. Mr. William Terries and Miss Millward; Messrs. W. L. Abington, Chas. Fulton, Edward Saxe, Julian Cross, L. Delmore, H. Athol, Forde, and Harry Nicholls, &c.; Miss Edith Ostlere, Miss Kate Kearney, Miss Vane Featherston, &c.

AVENUE THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.30, a Musical Play, THE NEW BARMAID. Mr. J. L. Shine; Messrs. Harrison Brockbank, J. J. Dallas, E. Dagnall, C. Rowan, George Elliston, C. Wilford, J. Thompson; Misses Agnes Delaporte, Maggie Hunt, Maria Baker, Edith Denton, Agnes Ingreville, and Miss Lottie Collins.

CRITERION THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.30, THE SQUIRE OF DAMES. Mr. Charles Wyndham, Mr. Alfred Bishop, Mr. Bernard Gould, Mr. H. de Lange, Mr. Frank Fenton; Miss Granville, Miss Fay Davis, Miss B. Ferrar, and Miss Mary Moore.

DALY'S THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.15, AN ARTIST'S MODEL. Mesdames Marie Tempest, Juliette Neaville, Phelps, Hamer, Fraser, Cannon, Davis, Flopp, Collette, and Lottie Lind; Messrs. Haydon-Coffin, Louis Bradfield, Ryley, Bantock, Harding, Bishop, Mordy, Dixon, and Harry Monkhouse.

DRURY LANE THEATRE ROYAL.

TWICE DAILY, at 1.30 and 7.30, CINDERELLA. Mesdames Ada Blanche, Alexandra Dagmar, Les Bowman, Lily Harold, Sophie Larkin, Emily Miller, Maggie Ripley, Lilie Comyns; Messrs. Dan Leno, Herbert Campbell, Lionel Rigold, Griffiths Brothers, and the Grigolatis Aerial Troupe.

HAYMARKET THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.30, TRILBY. Mr. Tree, Mr. Lionel Brough, Mr. E. Maurice, Mr. H. V. Esmond, Mr. O. M. Hallard, Mr. Holman Clark, Mr. Gayer Mackay, Mr. Berte Thomas, Mr. H. Ross, Mr. Allan, Mr. Gerald Du Maurier; Miss Francis Ivor, Miss Rosina Filippi, and Miss Dorothea Baird.

LYCEUM THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.45, FOR THE CROWN. Preceded, at 8, by SHADES OF NIGHT. Mr. Forbes Robertson, Mr. Charles Dalton, Mr. Mackintosh, Mr. Ian Robertson, Mr. Frank Gillmore, Mr. Fisher White, Mr. J. Willes, Mr. Murray Hathorn; Miss Winifred Emery, Miss Henrietta Watson, Miss Sarah Brooke, Miss Weyburn, Mrs. Patrick Campbell.

LYRIC THEATRE.

Mr. Wilson Barrett's Season.
TO-NIGHT, at 8, THE SIGN OF THE CROSS. Mr. Wilson Barrett, Miss Maud Jeffries, and Company.

ROYALTY THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.40, THE CHILI WIDOW. Mr. Arthur Bourchier, Messrs. Elliot, Hendrie, Kinghorn, Vibart, Permain, Troode, Bromley Davenport, Shelley, Armstrong, Wood, A. Stuart, and W. Blakeley; Mesdames Irene Vanbrugh, Kate Phillips, H. Leigh, and Violet Vanbrugh. At 8, KITTY CLIVE—ACTRESS.

SAVOY THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.25, THE GRAND DUKE. Messrs. Rutland Barrington, C. Kenningham, Scott Fiske, Scott Russell, J. Hewson, and Walter Passmore; Mesdames Ilka Palmay, Florence Perry, Emmie Owen, and Rosina Brandram.

ST. JAMES'S THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8, THE PRISONER OF ZENDA. Mr. George Alexander, Messrs. Herbert Waring, W. H. Vernon, Allan Aynesworth, Laurence Cantley, W. H. Day, Vincent Stannoyd, Arthur Royston, Henry Loraine, George P. Hawtrey, Robert Loraine, George Baberoft, F. Dyal, Charles Glenney; Miss Evelyn Millard, Miss Olga Brandon, Miss Mabel Hackney, Miss Lily Hanbury.

TERRY'S THEATRE.

EVERY EVENING, at 8.45, a Light Comedy, in Three Acts, entitled JEDBURY JUNR., by Madeline Lucette Ryley. At 8, AN OLD GARDEN.

NOW READY.—Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

At all Booksellers and Libraries.

NEW NOVEL BY DORA RUSSELL.

A FATAL PAST.

By the Author of "Footprints in the Snow," "The Vicar's Governess," "Beneath the Wave," &c., &c.

SIMPSON, MARSHALL, HAMILTON, KENT & Co., Limited.

Price 1s. post free.

INDIGESTION: its Causes and Cure.

By JOHN H. CLARKE, M.D.

LONDON: JAMES EPPS & Co. (Ltd.), 170, Piccadilly, and 48, Threadneedle Street.

MESSRS. J. C. DRUMMOND & CO.,

ART REPRODUCERS,

14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C.

Are the sole representatives in Great Britain of

HERR HANFSTAENGL, of Munich,

the well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAPHY now patronised by the leading London Art Publishing Firms. A large Collection of important Plates always on view Process Blocks for the purpose of Ordinary Book Illustrations.

Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. supply the cheapest and best Processes in the market, which are specially adapted to meet the wants of Antiquarians, Archaeologists, and those engaged in the investigation and publication of Pictorial and Pictorial Records.

J. C. DRUMMOND & CO. invite attention to their

Improved Rapid Photo-Mechanical Process

For the Reproduction of Works of Art, Original MSS., Designs, Lace Manufactures, Photographs, Views, Book Illustrations, Artistic Advertisements, Catalogues, &c., &c., at a moderate cost.

Specimens and price list on Application.

Offices: 14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, LONDON

Just published, crown 8vo, illustrated, price 2s. 6d.

WILLIAM KNIBB,

Missionary in Jamaica.

A MEMOIR.

WITH

Introduction by the Rev. J. G. GREENHOUGH, M.A.

By Mrs. JOHN JAMES SMITH.

LONDON:

ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD, FURNIVAL STREET.

WM. & GEO. LAW.

COFFEE—SUGAR—TEA.

104, NEW OXFORD STREET, W.C.

BREAKFAST—SUPPER.

E P P S'S

GRATEFUL—COMFORTING.

C O C O A.

BOILING WATER OR MILK.

MACMILLAN & CO.'S NEW BOOKS

Fourth Thousand.—8vo, 30s. net.

THE LIFE of CARDINAL MAN-

NING, Archbishop of Westminster. By EDMUND SHERIDAN PURCELL. In 2 vols., with Portraits.

8vo, 10s. net.

CAMPAIGNING in SOUTH

AFRICA and EGYPT. By Major-General W. C. F. MOLYNEUX.

The TIMES.—"A bright and entertaining record of personal experiences."

Crown 8vo, 10s. 6d.

THE STATESMAN'S YEAR-

BOOK. Statistical and Historical Annual of the States of the World, for the Year 1896. Edited by J. SCOTT KELTIE, Assistant Secretary to the Royal Geographical Society. Thirty-third Annual Publication. Revised after Official Returns.

The TIMES.—"To say that the 'Statesman's Year Book' is up to date is to say nothing new, and to those who have had occasion to consult its pages in past years, no higher commendation can be given than that the 1896 Edition is fully worthy of its predecessors."

MACMILLAN'S SIX-SHILLING NOVELS.—New Volume.

THE COURTSHIP of MORRICE

BUCKLER: a Romance. By A. E. W. MASON, Author of "A Romance of Wastdale." Crown 8vo.

EVERSLEY SERIES.—New Volume.

AMERICAN DISCOURSES. By

MATTHEW ARNOLD. Globe 8vo, 6s.

GOLDEN TREASURY SERIES.—New Volume.

SIR THOMAS BROWNE'S

HYDRIOTAPHIA and the GARDEN of CYRUS. Edited by the late W. A. GREENHILL, M.D., Oxon. Pott 8vo, 2s. 6d. net.

Globe 8vo, 2s.

A FIRST SKETCH of ENGLISH

HISTORY. Part II. 1807-1899. By E. J. MATHEW, M.A., LL.B.

MACMILLAN'S ENGLISH CLASSICS.—New Volume.

Globe 8vo, 2s. 6d.

POEMS of ENGLAND. A

Selection of English Patriotic Poetry. With Notes by HERFORD E. GEORGE, M.A., and ARTHUR SIDGWICK, M.A.

MACMILLAN & CO., LIMITED, LONDON.

AUTOTYPE REPRODUCTIONS

OF FAMOUS WORKS

IN THE

NATIONAL GALLERY.

The AUTOTYPE COMPANY have pleasure in announcing the Publication of a NEW SERIES of REPRODUCTIONS of some of the CHIEF PICTURES in this COLLECTION.

Printed in rich sepia pigment these copies are not only absolutely permanent, but exhibit the latest improvement in translating the colour gradation and technical qualities of the Paintings.

Copies are sold at the usual prices, and among the subjects already published are examples of Works by—

TURNER.
GAINSBOROUGH.
CONSTABLE
CROME.
ROSSETTI.

BELLINI.
HALS GREUZE.
VALASQUEZ
FRANCIA.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY,

74, NEW OXFORD STREET,
LONDON.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S LIST.

NEW WORKS and NEW EDITIONS.

NOW READY.

A MEMOIR OF MRS. AUGUSTUS CRAVEN.

By MRS. BISHOP.

With Extracts from her Diaries and Correspondence.

A New Edition.

In one vol., crown 8vo, with Portrait, 7s. 6d.

NOW READY.

RICHARD SAVAGE.

By CHARLES WHITEHEAD.

With 18 Full-page Illustrations worked from the Original Etchings on Steel by John Leech.

A New Edition. In one vol., crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

A few copies only in demy 8vo, 14s.

JUST READY.

ETON in the FORTIES. By an Old Collegger, ARTHUR DUKE COLERIDGE. With Frontispiece. In one vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

JUST READY.

RICHARD BRINSLEY SHERIDAN: a Biography. By W. FRASER RAE. With an Introduction by Sheridan's Great Grandson, the MARQUESS OF DUFFERIN and AWA, K.P., G.C.B. With Portraits. In 2 vols., demy 8vo, 28s.

NEW NOVELS AT ALL THE LIBRARIES AND BOOKSELLERS.

JUST READY.

MISS DRUMMOND'S DILEMMA.

By R. RAMSAY.

In one vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

NOW READY.

GIFTS AND WEIRDS.

By LILY PERKS.

Author of "A Late Springtime," &c.

In one vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

NOW READY.

THE INDIAN UNCLE.

By LESLIE KRITH, Author of "Lisbeth," &c.

In one vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

NOW READY.

THE MYSTERY OF MR. BERNARD BROWN.

By E. PHILLIPS OPPENHEIM.

In one vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

"This is the best mystery story we have read for many a long month."—Daily Chronicle.

NOW READY.

THE MADONNA of a DAY.

By L. DOUGALL, Author of "The Mermaid," &c.

In one vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

"This stirring tale is strange and remarkable, dealing with only one incident, and treating that in an original and vivid style."—World.

THE NEW ISSUE OF THE NOVELS OF MRS. HENRY WOOD.

THE FIFTEENTH VOLUME,

ELSTER'S FOLLY,

IS NOW READY.

In red cloth, gold lettered on side, similar to the 3s. 6d. Edition, 2s. 6d.

In green cloth, gold lettered on back, but with a plainer binding, 2s.

To be followed at monthly intervals by the other Stories in the Series.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington Street
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

MR. T. FISHER UNWIN'S LIST.

A NEW ROMANCE,

BY the AUTHOR of "ALMAYER'S FOLLY."

An Outcast of the Islands.

By JOSEPH CONRAD.

Green cloth, gilt top, 6s.

The DAILY CHRONICLE.—"Mr. Conrad has justified the expectation roused by 'Almayer's Folly.' That was, altogether, as remarkable a first venture in fiction as we can remember. 'An Outcast of the Islands' is a work of extraordinary force and charm."

The SCOTSMAN.—"The work of a writer of singular power, and with a strong vein of imagination and originality."

The SKETCH.—"A very striking novel. There is on every page the unmistakable note of genius."

BY ROBERT BUCHANAN.

A MARRIAGE by CAPTURE: a Romance of To-day. The New Volume of "The Autonym Library." Paper, 1s. 6d.; cloth, 2s.

MR. JOSEPH PENNELL'S NEW WORK.

THE ILLUSTRATION of BOOKS: a Manual for the Use of Students. Cloth, 2s. 6d.

BY MRS. OLIPHANT.

A CHILD'S HISTORY of SCOTLAND Forming Vol. I. of "The Children's Study." Cloth, gilt top, with Photogravure Frontispiece, 2s. 6d.

NEW VOLUME OF THE STORY OF THE NATIONS.

THE WEST INDIES and the SPANISH MAIN. By JAMES RODWAY, F.L.S., Author of "In the Guiana Forest." Maps and Illustrations. Cloth, 6s.

"Well written. The reproductions of scarce and forgotten engravings are exceedingly quaint."—Speaker.

TWO ITALIAN NOVELS.

MALOMBRA; a Novel. By Antonio FOGAZZARO, Author of "Danielle Cortis." Translated by F. THOROLD DICKSON. Cloth, 6s.

SILVIO BARTHOLO, Painter: a Story of Siena. By EMMA BENTLEY. Cloth, 6s.

NEW VOLUME OF THE "CENTURY LIBRARY."

MOFF. By John Tweeddale. Illustrated. Paper, 1s. 6d.; cloth, 2s.

A RECENT "AUTONYM" VOLUME.

THE RED STAR. By L. McManus, Author of "Amabel." Paper, 1s. 6d.; cloth, 2s.

"We very cordially and confidently recommend it."—Daily Chronicle.

S. R. CROCKETT'S WORKS.

THE STICKIT MINISTER. Illustrated. 6s

THE RAIDERS. 6s.

THE LILAC SUNBONNET. 6s.

MAD SIR UGHTRED of the HILLS. Paper, 1s. 6d.; cloth, 2s.

THE PLAYACTRESS. Paper, 1s. 6d.; cloth, 2s.

Catalogues post-free on application.

LONDON:

T. FISHER UNWIN, PATERNOSTER SQUARE, E.C.

WARD & DOWNEY'S LIST.

Now ready.—By TIGHE HOPKINS.

NELL HAFFENDEN: a Novel.

By TIGHE HOPKINS, Author of "Lady Bonnie's Experiment," &c. 2 vols., crown 8vo, cloth, price 10s. net.

"A very fresh, unaffected, and agreeable story, with a pleasant, breezy tone."—Glasgow Herald.

"It is not often that one finds in latter-day fiction a girl so fresh and strong and healthy, and, at the same time, so sweet and unconventional as the heroine."—Scotsman.

Now ready.—By W. J. LOCKE.

A STUDY in SHADOWS. By W. J. LOCKE, Author of "At the Gate of Samaria," &c. 1 vol., crown 8vo, cloth extra, price 3s.

Now ready.—By SARAH TYTLER.

RACHEL LANGTON. By Sarah TYTLER, Author of "Sapphira," "Logie Town," &c. 1 vol., crown 8vo, cloth extra, price 3s.

Now ready.—By J. E. PANTON.

SUBURBAN RESIDENCES and HOW to CIRCUMVENT THEM. By Mrs. PANTON, Author of "From Kitchen to Garret," &c. With several Illustrations. 1 vol., crown 8vo, cloth, price 3s. 6d.

"Many a young bride will be grateful for the useful hints contained in this genial, unaffected, and very practical publication."—Globe.

Now ready.—By J. F. HOGAN, M.P.

THE SISTER DOMINIONS:

Through Canada to Australia by the new Imperial Highway. 1 vol., crown 8vo, cloth, price 3s. 6d.

"Deserves to be widely read both in the Colonies and the old country."—Daily Chronicle.

Third Edition, now ready.—By B. R. BELLOC.

IN a WALLED GARDEN. By Madame BESSIE RAYNER BELLOC. 1 vol., crown 8vo, art linen, price 6s.

Personal Recollections of George Eliot, Mary Howitt, Basil Montagu, Adelaide Procter, Mrs. Janssen, Lady Georgiana Fullerton, Cardinal Manning, Mrs. Booth, &c.

"A fascinating book. One of the sunniest, freshest, and in the highest sense most entertaining of volumes."—Literary World.

Now ready.—By W. CARLTON DAWK.

THE HISTORY of GODFREY

KING: a Novel. By W. CARLTON DAWK, Author of "The Emu's Head," &c. 1 vol., crown 8vo, cloth extra, price 6s.

"There is a delightful mingling of comedy with pathos, and Mr. Dawk shows that he is not the pessimist we might have believed."—Times.

"A breezy novel, single in sentiment, honest in its intentions, and generous in incident. Extremely interesting."—Star.

Now ready.—By the Hon. Mrs. ALAN BRODRICK.

THE CREED of PHILIP GLYN:

a Story. By the Hon. Mrs. ALAN BRODRICK. 1 vol., crown 8vo, limp cloth, price 1s. 6d.; paper wrapper, price 1s. (Uniform with "The Mystery of Cloombur.")

"If there is any fault with the book, it is that it is too short. The characters are admirably drawn."—Manchester Courier.

Now ready.—By K. S. MAQUOID.

HIS LAST CARD: a New Novel.

By KATHARINE S. MAQUOID, Author of "At an Old Château," &c. 1 vol., crown 8vo, cloth extra, price 6s.

"To come upon a novel like this after recent experiences is like coming out of a fever hospital into the open air."—Graphic.

Now ready.—By R. LUCAS.

FELIX DORRIEN: a Novel. By R. LUCAS. With Illustrations by the Lady Boston. 1 vol., crown 8vo, art linen, price 6s.

"The story is happily conceived and is developed with conspicuous skill."—Scotsman.

"The author, it is apparent, knows the world of politics well. The story is undeniably clever."—Dundee Courier.

Now ready.—By PAUL CUSHING.

The SHEPHERDESS of TREVA:

a Novel. By PAUL CUSHING, Author of "The Blacksmith of Voe," &c. 3 vols., crown 8vo, cloth, price 15s. net.

"Mr. Cushing has achieved a very great success in 'The Shepherdess of Treva.'"—Academy.

"There is a vigour and a vitality and a certain gusto in the work of Mr. Paul Cushing which make it attractive and exhilarating."—Spectator.

WARD & DOWNEY (LIMITED),
12, YORK BUILDINGS, ADELPHI, W.C.

SATURDAY, MARCH 21, 1896.

No. 1246, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

RECENT PHILOSOPHY.

Studies of Childhood. By James Sully, LL.D. (Longmans.)

Evolution and Effort. By Edmond Kelly. (Macmillans.)

Hedonistic Theories. By John Watson, LL.D. (Glasgow: Maclehose.)

The Metaphysical Basis of Plato's Ethics. By A. B. Cook. (Bell.)

Beiträge zur Geschichte der griechischen Philosophie und Religion. Von Paul Wendland und Otto Kern. (Williams & Norgate.)

PROF. SULLY writes of children with wide knowledge and great enthusiasm. He has brought together a mass of information on the ways and works of the very young, from the moment of birth to about the sixth year, collected by other observers, added to it very interesting notices of his own, and arranged his materials under a few comprehensive heads, interpreting the whole mass of seemingly petty details with such philosophical ardour and such warm human affection that the reader who shares his feelings will be carried with unflagging interest from the first page to the last. Apart from its appeal to the sympathies of parents and child-lovers in general, the book is full of charming stories charmingly told, and ought for this reason, if for no other, to become immediately and enduringly popular.

To the general anthropologist children are chiefly interesting from the evidence which they are supposed to contribute to the theory of evolution, particularly as regards the growth of religion and morality. But this is a point on which, I am sorry to say, Mr. Sully's volume is of little help. His facts seem to favour the view that children are born fetishists, at least in the sense of believing that all the objects around them are animated more or less with a life like their own. Unfortunately their beliefs are so interwoven with make-belief and their actions with play-acting that the difficulty of ascertaining the real state of their minds on the subject seems insuperable. And whatever their convictions may be—if, indeed, they can be said to have convictions at all—it would be very rash to take them in evidence of what is believed by primitive man. The survival of the fittest must, after all, exercise a certain restraining influence on the vagaries of savage imagination: it counts for nothing with children; they are in the most literal sense fancy-free, except in so far as they must be affected by living in an intellectual atmosphere penetrated with the rationalistic ideas of grown-up people.

Similarly with the moral question. According to Mr. Sully, "certain theologians and others" have "painted infancy in the blackest moral colours" (p. 228). His own view is considerably more favourable and, let us hope, more correct. But whichever side we take, our opinion as to the vileness or the innocence of our remote human ancestors need not be affected thereby. As Mr. Sully points out, a child's principal business is to grow—an employment not very conducive to altruistic morality. Ed. Laboulaye tells a story of a little boy who was told that as his mother had done so much for him he ought to do something for her. "Est-ce que je ne me porte pas bien?" was the prompt reply. We may not admire this self-possessed young Frenchman, but his answer showed a certain insight into the first law of infantine ethics which reminds one of Mr. Leslie Stephen's primary law, Be strong! But obviously no savage community could survive, the members of which had not attained to a rather greater capacity for self-sacrifice than the average child has yet exhibited.

One of the most amiable traits in children is their love for animals. It is well brought out by Mr. Sully, and illustrated with many new stories. I cannot agree with him, however, when he traces their feeling in this respect to the "sense of a common danger and helplessness face to face with the human 'giant,'" adding that "the more passionate attachment of the child to the animal is the outcome of the widespread instinct of helpless things to band together," and that the animals also have this feeling with regard to children (p. 249). It seems to me that Mr. Sully himself suggests a much more probable explanation in the following paragraph, when he refers to the dealings of children with their toy babies and animals as "a wonderful display of loving solicitude" having "the enduring constancy of a maternal instinct." This instinct, from which Mr. Spencer derives the sentimental element in sexual love, doubtless lies at the bottom of all human affection for animals, which, by the way, may be very strong in misanthropists like Byron and Schopenhauer, and very weak or, indeed, non-existent in such lovers of their kind as Goethe and Macaulay.

Mr. Edmond Kelly seems to be an American, a citizen of New York, and a Mugwump. American thinkers and scholars are, I believe, generally Mugwumps; but not every Mugwump is a thinker or a scholar—which, indeed, is well, for otherwise the members of a useful class would be deplorably limited. Mr. Kelly, at any rate, by his mis-spelling of well-known names in philosophical literature and his complete unfamiliarity with philosophical reasoning, proves that he is neither the one nor the other. But he knows all about the Machine and the Tammany Ring; his chapter on Municipal Misgovernment is extremely interesting, and deserves a wider circulation than it is likely to obtain when weighted with such a mass of dull fallacies as make up the earlier and more ambitious part of his book.

Now that the Germans are at last coming to their senses about the Sophists, as may be seen from the example of such writers as Dümmler, Beloch, and above all the brilliant Gomperz, it is very unfortunate that English critics should be returning to the old cry against that most meritorious class of teachers. Greek hedonism was not, as Prof. Watson would have us believe, derived from their principles, but arose within the Socratic school, as may be proved beyond all question from the Protagoras of Plato. Had the Sophists been hedonists, they would simply have been in this as in other respects the precursors of some of the best and wisest of mankind; but it seems to be in order to discredit both them and this particular form of ethics that Prof. Watson tries to make out a connexion between the two. After that I have no fault to find with his historical accuracy; and his criticism hits many blots in the various forms of hedonism reviewed, just as the same unsparring analysis if it were turned on any other ethical tradition would have a similarly destructive effect. It is unfortunate that our author, like so many others of his school, does not see his way to tackling Prof. Henry Sidgwick or Mr. Leslie Stephen.

As usual, self-realisation is set up in opposition to happiness defined as greatest pleasure and least pain. Prof. Watson is the clearest of living philosophical writers, and his championship of Green's principle has the effect of bringing out with unusual force its essential unreality. We are told that the "idea of a possible satisfaction implies the contrast of a man's actual self as he knows it at the time of the desire, and his ideal self as he conceives that it will be after the series of acts by which the desire has been carried into effect" (p. 131). I deny this absolutely. The man does not split himself into two selves—an ideal and a real; he thinks—what is a very different attitude—of the same self as with the one feeling which it is now without; and this feeling being the sole differential can alone be described as his end. In fact, this whole theory of self-realisation is a mere juggle to get rid of the difficulty common to all ethical theories, that the performance of one's duty may at any time involve the necessity of self-sacrifice. The Platonic tradition says: It is for your real interest to be moral even to the extent of giving up your life when the moral law requires it. The New Utilitarianism says: No, it is not your interest, but it is for the interest of the whole community; and if you have a well-disciplined mind, the idea of preferring your happiness to the general happiness will at the moment of decision give you greater pain than is given by the idea of obeying the law. Thus, as regards motives we return to the Cyrenaic point of view, while remaining Benthamites as regards the end.

Ethical theory occupies a very small place in Mr. Cook's little volume, which is, in fact, a very erudite, acute, and subtle investigation of the Platonic cosmology and the Platonic doctrine of Ideas as put forth in what English critics at least are now agreed in considering to be the later Dialogues. The time is past when a Cambridge tutor could say, "Sir, our business is to translate Plato, not to understand his philosophy." Mr. Cook cites Plato largely without translating him, and certainly tries hard to understand his philosophy. The difficulty is now to understand Mr. Cook, who dumps down a mass of notes without any regard to elegance or clearness of exposition. His obligations to Cambridge teaching, he tells us, are "not alight." I wish Cambridge could be got to teach her alumni some of that lucidity that seems to be a privilege of Oxford culture.

Accepting Mr. Conybeare's vindication of Philo's treatise on the Therapeutae, and profiting by the many parallel passages brought together in his edition of it, Herr Wendland shows that Philo's moralising is transcribed from Stoic or Cynic handbooks, also used by Musonius and others as a repertory of commonplaces on the vices of the age—said age being rather an abstract mark for the satire of the declaimers than a particular period of history. At the same time, the Stoic phraseology of the disputed tract furnishes a fresh argument against the theory of Lucius, that it was a fourth-century forgery; for Stoicism had then been completely ousted by Neo-Platonism. Herr Otto Kern, who has already contributed so much to the revived interest in Orphicism and the Dionysiac religion, discusses some recent inscriptions going to prove the diffusion of Osthonian cults in the Greek cities of Asia Minor.

ALFRED W. BENN.

Reminiscences of the late Sophia Elizabeth De Morgan. Edited by her Daughter, Mary A. De Morgan. (Bentley.)

IF only books of intrinsic value—books that, for any reason, the world would not willingly let die—ought to be printed, it might be difficult to justify the publication of this. But there may be those who will prize it, as even a poor portrait is prized, as a help to the recollection of a face once beloved and a memory still dear; and other readers may be willingly indulgent to its presentment of a mood and temper characteristic of many excellent though obscure persons contemporary with its author, and to the occasional record of particulars, not always important, concerning persons not obscure.

The daughter of Charles Lamb's friend lived for the first ten years of her life (1809 to 1819) in Bridge-street, Blackfriars, at the Rock Insurance Office, of which her father was actuary. He had been educated at King's School, Canterbury, and at Christ's College, Cambridge, where Paley was his tutor. He was second wrangler and Smith's prizeman in 1780, was elected fellow and tutor of Jesus College, took orders in 1783, and was presented to the small living of Madingley by Sir John Cotton. After four years' incumbency, his opinions changed. He looked on all churches as companies of the craft of Demetrius the silveramith, and he expressed these views from the University pulpit. This entailed the loss of his tutorship; but he retained his position as fellow, travelled, studied Hebrew, and continued his residence at the college. Not till 1793, on the publication of an obnoxious pamphlet, was he banished from the University. Against the sentence of the Vice-Chancellor he vainly appealed to the Court of Queen's Bench. Looking back to these events after fifty years, he declared that "the agitation in the University was great; that at Oxford on the Hampden question was nothing to it." As he never made any recantation, he continued to be an exile from Cambridge; but he retained his fellowship till his marriage, and was a member of the University till his death.

He lived in the Middle Temple, and occupied himself with literary work till his appointment as actuary in 1807.

In 1808 he married Sarah Blackburne. Her grandfather, Archdeacon Blackburne, had petitioned Parliament for a relaxation of the pledges required at ordination; and when the petition was rejected some of his clerical friends seceded from the Church and founded the first Unitarian congregation in London. So that "the liberality of William Frend's views was in no way alien to the feelings of his wife's family, although her own relations remained members of the Church he had left."

Frend had three sons and four daughters, of whom Sophia was the eldest. He directed her education in all things, from the philosophy of Locke to dancing and deportment, and was her idol and oracle.

After her marriage with Prof. De Morgan, she took an active part in the foundation of Bedford College and in the movement for promoting female suffrage. She also originated the Workhouse Visiting Association and the abortive Playground Society, and earnestly advocated the abolition of vivisection. "She took up new interests at eighty with almost the vigour and warmth of eighteen," and died, after a brief illness, in 1892.

Her Reminiscences are those of an active rather than a powerful mind. The observations they contain are taken from a prime level existence, with feelings untried by or invulnerable to any great grief or passion: a mild benevolence, a cool philanthropy; in a moral atmosphere always pure, but generally tepid, and sometimes chilly.

Historic names occur in these Reminiscences for no cogent reason, and to no particular purpose. That the Duke of Wellington nearly rode over her; that she once saw Princess Charlotte nursing a baby; that (as a little girl allowed to come in to dessert) she thought Quincy Adams "good"; that she saw the Allied Sovereigns at a review; and that Robert Hibbert gave her barley sugar, are fair samples of many of the facts recorded. We get a glimpse of Queen Caroline in an open landau going to St. Paul's to return thanks for her acquittal. The sordid vulgarity of the wretched woman's appearance is not badly hit off:

"She was either very short or very rotund, for she seemed to roll about, and, as she bowed constantly and incessantly to her loyal subjects, we fancied her feet did not touch the bottom of the carriage. Her Majesty wore a sort of Mary Queen of Scots bonnet, dipping down over the forehead, and decorated with three ostrich feathers placed like those in the Prince of Wales's plume. She was very much painted, and dressed rather showily."

There is an account of the eccentric Godfrey Higgins and his "Anacalypsis; or, the Saitic veil of Isis removed," in which he expounded his view that priests, the curse of the world, had transmitted a certain "secret system" through the clergy of all times and nations.

Mrs. de Morgan is acquainted not only with the arcana of freemasonry, but with those of the ancient mysteries. Of the latter, she says, coolly and decisively:

"My dear old friend was not aware that the secrets kept by the priests were absolutely such as could not be generally divulged without the greatest danger to health and sanity. The Psychical Research Society will perhaps discover this if they persevere in their experiments."

—a somewhat gruesome intimation.

Rubbish, well spiced with heterodoxy, seems to have had a certain attraction for this lady. She constructs, with great care, out of a Chaldean account of the Deluge a myth of the soul, and takes courage to impart her discovery to Bonomi, who "was pleased with it, reminding me that many religionists saw the same meaning in the Exodus from Egypt." She adds: "We may possibly find an interpretation of Noah's Ark and the ship Argos (sic), and the Golden Fleece may acquire an unsuspected but profound meaning."

Mrs. De Morgan occasionally hints that she enjoyed a special spiritual illumination. She understands the great spiritual truth which Rammohun Roy saw expressed in the varying beliefs of Quakers, Dissenters, and Churchmen; though he was pronounced to be a popularity-hunter because he assented to each of them. She thinks that a Jew, "dressed something like a Turk," whom she found one day at her father's gate, and who claimed to be Elias ("for by a lucky coincidence his name was Abraham Elias"), might be one of the many announcers of the Advent, "of which the signs are apparent to those who know where to look for them."

When we get to the "Hisis" of St. Pancras, who was "going to remove her wail," and meanwhile read lectures on the "Precession of the Equinoxes, Zodiacal Signs, and Eleusinian Mysteries," she seems a sort of Muse, whose inspiration flowed through many channels in those days. She was not more nonsensical than Godfrey Higgins, and quite as practical as Robert Owen, in his "gigantic attempt at a Utopia near Gray's Inn," with a large Rotunda "for lectures, concerts, balls, and exchange and mart."

"After one of the lectures there, a lady, whom I knew slightly, asked if I were going to the Rotunda on a day she named. I was not going, and I asked what was expected."

"'It's the millennium,' the speaker said. 'It's to begin next week.'"

"'How will it show itself?'"

"'There will be turnips as big as your head, and carrots as long as my arm, and grapes and peaches, and every one will have all he wants.'"

The story of the head of Cromwell (now in the possession of Mr. Wilkinson) is once again told with curious inaccuracy. It is said to have been "stuck upon Temple Bar, blown down into the street, and picked up by a soldier, who took it to Mrs. Olappole. After her death it passed on to her descendants."

Now, the head was set upon the gable of Westminster Hall, and Mrs. Olappole, who had no descendants, died before her father. Another odd blunder is made when John Landseer, Sir Edwin's father, interested in the engraved cylinders found in the neighbourhood of Babylon, Nineveh, and Persepolis (apparently styled "the Cities of the Plain"), is described as "greatly rejoiced in setting forth how Joseph's signet, hidden in Benjamin's sack, . . . was a cylinder of this kind." Landseer may, of course, have referred to Pharaoh's ring, and his hearer confused it with Joseph's divining-cup; but I cannot verify this conjecture by referring to his Sabæan Researches.

Spiritualist phenomena have their place in these recollections—the mysterious writing found on papers laid "sometimes on a vault or on a monument in St. Denis, sometimes in the experimenter's own house"; the "experiment" of whirling a small weight attached to a silken thread over an elderly gentleman's bald pate, which "was tried more than once, but seemed to lose distinctness and become confused"; the banshee Mrs. Jameson thought she heard, and the "presence" which, for more than a week after her old friend, Mr. L——'s death, haunted Miss Frend's bedroom, are all duly chronicled. The philanthropists—Lady Byron, Mrs. Fry, and Lord Shaftesbury—occupy many pages. There is an account of the Children's Friend Society, which was doing good work under high patronage, until the last particular started some Radical M.P. on a reckless course of slander, which effected the ruin of the society, and caused the death of its benevolent founder, Captain Brenton.

One association at least of that era of associations has survived—the British. Its first meeting, in September, 1836, in the Bristol Chapterhouse, is described by Frend, who remarks that, "making due allowance for the extravagant encomiums passed by the heroes upon each other, these meetings are very useful." The most significant thing to him was the circumstance that "I, a Unitarian, sitting behind a Quaker LL.D., and having on the right, left, and behind, Catholics, Protestant Churchmen, and Dissenters, should be in the Chapter of a Cathedral." The Friends were settled for some years in Stoke Newington, now a part of the "huge wen" London, but then a retired suburb, near enough to the East End to afford a happy hunting-ground for burglars. The Duke of Wellington, applied to in 1828 for more police protection, could only suggest that the inhabitants should protect themselves, "either by their own personal exertions"—it was mainly a Quaker neighbourhood—or "by subscriptions to hire watchmen and constables." His Grace begged leave to "observe to Mr. Frend that, inasmuch as the inhabitants of Stoke Newington enjoy the advantage of being near the metropolis, they cannot expect at once to enjoy the advantages of a town one hundred miles distant—viz., the comparative absence of thieves."

The Quaker colony attracted other forms of quiet heterodoxy, though their votaries held apart from each other. Frend, however, had hospitality for all. Well-to-do Radicals sulked there very cozily in a well-cushioned existence, and admirably planned the amelioration or reconstruction of society. Their many eccentric oddities found tolerance and even consideration. We are told how a Unitarian minister, in the presence of Frend's daughter (referring to the would-be Elias before mentioned), remarked: "If there is a queer fish in the world, he will find his way to Frend's house." She, thus challenged, promptly replied, "Pardon me, Mr. —, I do not remember our having had the pleasure of seeing you there." This is her one recorded repartee. There are several names mentioned of people concerning whom one is always glad to learn something; but one gets but little out of such statements as that about Blake, that he had a brown coat and uncommonly bright eyes; or about Coleridge, that a child, hearing him talk for many hours, wished he would stop. Of Mrs. Barbauld more is told than of her dress and her "front" of flaxen curls, and all that is told is pleasant. Of her brother, Dr. Aikin, nothing is said: I fear he was Charles Lamb's "aching void."

But all Lamb lovers will be grateful for the account of the end of the dear old "Heathen," George Dyer. It is odd that Mrs. De Morgan "could never find out how much or how little truth there was" in George's renowned New River misadventure. She says he walked up to his waist in the water and came into Lamb's house "like a merman"—an odd simile, and as curious a perversion of a story which has been fully told over and over again. But she has one gem of anecdote. Dyer early in life had been a Baptist minister. He was short of memory as well as of sight, and had doubtless forgotten all details of that episode. Hence Frend took occasion to excite his alarm and consternation by casually referring, as to a well-known incident, to the "time when you drowned the woman."

"George. I never drowned any woman!

"Frend. You have forgotten. (To the company) Dyer had taken the woman's hand and made her dip in the water; he then pronounced the blessing and left her there.

"George (troubled). No, no; you are joking. It could not be.

"Frend. I think the clerk or deacon or somebody got her out."

The widow of a solicitor, who owned the chambers opposite to Dyer's in Clifford's Inn, took compassion on his very forlorn condition, and, after due consultation with his friends, married him, and "made of our neglected old friend a fine-looking, well-dressed elderly man, beaming with kindness and happiness." His end was worthy and pathetic. During Frend's last illness, in 1841, George Dyer "sent up daily to inquire after him. When the messenger came back for the last time, he asked for the news, and was told he was rather better. 'I understand,' he said, 'Mr.

Frend is dead. Lay me beside him.' He then went into an adjoining room, washed his hands, returned, and quietly sat down in his armchair, as it was thought, to listen to a kind friend (Miss Matilda Betham) who came to read to him. Before beginning she looked up to her hearer, but the loving-hearted old man was dead."

Charles Lamb had united their memories in the quatrain here given:

"Friend of the friendless, friend of all mankind,
To thy wide friendships I have not been blind;
But looking at them nearly, in the end
I love thee most that thou art Dyer's Frend."

There are other ventures of memory squandered abroad in these pages: interchanges of flattery with Thomas Campbell; record of strong language from Thomas Carlyle—a good deal of it lost from the noise in the street—of his sympathy with the bereaved, all the stronger because he held that the departed were "gone we know not whither" ("It would have been useless to appeal to the Gospel," she adds); remembrances of her telling the bumps of O'Connell, and endowing him "with many saintly and heroic qualities," because she observed that his Love of Approbation was not small. These are some fragments from this feast of scraps. And if the reader's patience be sometimes tried by the writer's garrulity, or his temper irritated by her never-failing self-complacence, he will, if he be indeed a gentle reader, as he closes the book, be content to take leave in no worse spirit than the kindly rustic farewell: "One that was a woman, Sir; but, rest her soul, she's dead."

R. C. BROWNE.

The Empire of the Ptolemies. By J. P. Mahaffy. (Macmillans.)

"No history of the Ptolemies," says Prof. Mahaffy, "can claim to be final." But, if not final, a history may be opportune; and Prof. Mahaffy publishes at a time when curiosity is awakened, and when there is enough new matter collected to satisfy it, at least for the moment. He apologises for shortcomings, but he has no great reason to fear criticism. Indeed, who is there to touch his shield? He has his subject very much to himself. His opportunities of studying it have been on some sides exceptional, and ἡ τὴν οὐδέως knows as much as he does.

But the most ill-informed of general readers may judge whether there is much matter in a book, and whether its story is told with skill. Prof. Mahaffy is undoubtedly putting a great deal of new material into circulation. The Revenue Laws of Ptolemy Philadelphus have just been published by him jointly with Mr. Grenfell; and in the book before us he has worked the new and the old together, into his review of a certain stage of Egyptian history, with his usual facility and charm of touch. He complains now and again of the scantiness of his sources; but he adds a warmth of colour to the story by letting Plutarch or Polybius or Josephus speak for themselves in full quotations, and he has a great deal that is fresh to tell us, too, drawn from the new papyri—business papers of all sorts, private documents, "journals, extracts of obscure persons, bills of stewards, and lists of tax-gatherers." It is to be regretted that this vivid, unfalsified evidence is not as yet equally abundant through all the Ptolemaic history. The papyri are few and trifling for the reign of Ptolemy I. For the later of the kings they are numerous and diverse. From the generation which saw the famous Cleopatra, and which lived through the transference into the power of Augustus, we have hardly one papyrus.

Prof. Mahaffy's account of the empire of the Ptolemies, passing by the literary history (a subject fully and recently handled by Susemihl), aims at setting before the reader two things clearly—the foreign history and the domestic state of Egypt between (say) 323 and 330 B.C. It is quite possible that, thanks to the new sources alluded to above, we are to know the latter subject better than the former, and better than even the court history. Neither the papyri nor the Greek inscriptions collected elsewhere clear up for us by any means all the riddles about foreign affairs; and, as Prof. Mahaffy remarks, geographical names recur in different places and are not distinguished by our authorities. Thus, as to one papyrus which deals with an Egyptian campaign abroad, "all the place-names occurring in it are to be found not only in Syria, but in Cilicia." Moreover the Macedonian rulers had an "absurd habit of repeating the same names" in their families, and we have to discriminate as best we may Cleopatras and Ptolemies who bore no distinct names.

Looking on the Ptolemies merely as one Egyptian dynasty among others, we must ask whether their dominion was on the whole a blessing or a curse to their adopted country. Their subjects, and particularly the priests, would have given one answer at one time and another at another. What is to be the dispassionate verdict of modern history? Prof. Mahaffy at least is disinclined to go so far as Mr. A. Holm, who can see nothing good in any Ptolemy but the first. He admits that the Ptolemies, like the Pharaohs before them and Augustus after them, "regarded the land of Egypt as little more than a crown estate, to be managed with a view to the interests of the sovereign only." But they were also enlightened men, who cared for the civilisation of their kingdom, and understood that the interests of the crown cannot be secured without consulting those of the people. The evidence of the papyri goes to show that their taxation was not unduly heavy. The Ptolemies "were the ablest, the most successful, and therefore the most enduring of the Successors of Alexander."

Looking on the dynasty as a factor in the twin histories of Mediterranean politics and of Greek influence, we have to fix our attention on four things—What were its relations with Syria? What was its attitude toward the Jews? How did it behave to the Egyptian religion, with its attendant national spirit, and how to Greek religion with its very un-Egyptian spirit? On all these points the new evidence has something—often a great deal—to say, and it enables Prof. Mahaffy to outline the oscillations of policy between king and king. We can now distinguish changes of attitude, as clearly as we can see the time when Macedonian Egypt began to decline and relapse from Hellenism "into the ineradicable Egypt of the native race." Since the appearance of Prof. Mahaffy's Empire of Alexander, he has felt compelled to admit two more Ptolemies to the list (Ptolemy VI., Eupator, 182 B.C., and Ptolemy VIII., Philopator Neos, 146 B.C.), and to alter some of his dates. Changes like these are healthy signs of growth in the subject.

Time will, as Prof. Mahaffy anticipates, both add and take away. This account of an empire must, like the empire itself, become outworn. But for the present the student of ancient history and the tourist in Egypt alike owe great thanks to Prof. Mahaffy. The book, owing to the multitude of facts which it has to touch on, needed very careful revision, and in a few points the revision seems to have been perfunctory. Seleucus III. of Syria, correctly called Soter on p. 223, is in the chronological table misnamed Keraunos. The names of certain philosophic reformers are given on different pages as Ecdemos and Eudemos, Ecphantides and Demophanes: the evidence of Plutarch and Polybius shows that the correct forms are Ecdemos and either Demophanes or Megalophanes.

FRANKLIN T. RICHARDS.

Studies in Diplomacy. From the French of Count Benedetti. (Heinemann.)

A QUARTER of a century has passed since Count Benedetti published Ma Mission en Prusse. Addressing a friend in November, 1870, the Count wrote:

"Rassurez-vous, mon cher ami, le jour de la réparation viendra, il approche, et je ne le laisserai pas échapper. Il faut, comme vous le dites, que la lumière se fasse, et elle se fera. Homme de devoir avant tout, peut-être ne me suis-je pas suffisamment préoccupé de ce qu'on pensait ni de ce qu'on publiait sur la manière dont je m'acquittais de mes fonctions. Ce soin revenait à ceux dont j'exécutais les ordres, et qui auraient dû me couvrir en redressant certaines erreurs. Pourquoi s'en sont-ils abstenus?"

This passage (which is not to be found in the book under review) is as pertinent to Benedetti's studies as to his practice of diplomacy. The day of reparation or restitution seems as far off for him in 1896 as in 1870. Whether it was his own lack of skill or of scruples on the part of his antagonists, Benedetti still remains a discredited diplomatist. Lord Augustus Loftus tells an anecdote of the Count which may well be repeated here. Bismarck at that time always wore a general's uniform, and in his own house there was a table in an ante-room on which his helmet was placed. One day, after dining with the Chancellor, Count Benedetti approached this table and took up the helmet to try it on his own head. On replacing it he remarked: "Décidément il a la tête plus forte que moi." It is possible that Benedetti has not received his deserts in history—that he was overmatched (as he almost admits himself) by two unscrupulous opponents,

King William and his prime minister. But the fact remains that Benedetti is Benedetti's sole defender. In literature, an apology may reflect no discredit on him who apologises; but in practical life those who apologise rank with the unsuccessful. The world is too busy to listen to one who says he has been "injured by the iniquity of party feeling and the bad faith of the enemies of his country." Whatever injuries the last Imperial ambassador at Berlin may have unjustly sustained are so microscopic by the side of the avalanche of misfortune which overtook France, that Frenchmen cannot be blamed if they turn a deaf ear to the complaints of one whom they cannot acquit of all share in their national calamities.

Who now has a good word for Count Benedetti or the Duc de Gramont?—"dancing dogs without collars," as Bismarck called them. "They never seemed to have a master," said the Chancellor, "but stood up on their hind legs and performed their antics without authority from man alive." The average Frenchman would not dissent from this view. There are some men who, like Pontius Pilate, are doomed to bear the mark of Cain through all history. They have reached a degree of unpopularity beyond that of Julian the Apostate, who has his warm friends. If the dreadful phrase "past praying for" can be applied to aught, it can be applied to the earthly reputations of such men. "Le jour de la réparation viendra." Not, we fear, for the clever Corsican whose ill fate pitted him against the remorseless Bismarck.

These essays appeared originally in the Revue des Deux Mondes. The first deals with the Emperor William I. and Prince Bismarck. This essay is interesting, as it is written in an extremely sympathetic spirit to the Emperor William. It shows that the popular belief that Prussia owed all her success to Bismarck and Moltke is a popular fallacy; that King William was not merely the figurehead, but also a founder of the German Empire, and that history will give a place to the Emperor in the galaxy of German worthies not less high than that of the Chancellor. The author applies to William I. the words of the Florentine master—"Everyone sees what you appear to be; few know what you really are."

"These two prodigious labourers at Germany's greatness were gifted with various and mighty qualities, and one was the complement of the other. The first had prudence and, let us say it, duplicity; the second [Bismarck] daring and resolution."

Thus what the late Emperor gains in intellectual he loses in moral stature, according to the Count's measurements. It is well known that after Königgrätz a serious difference arose between the King of Prussia and his minister as to the terms of peace. Bismarck carried the day. The conqueror neither entered Vienna in triumph nor did he wrest any territory from the Emperor Francis Joseph. This moderation has had its own exceeding great reward. The close alliance between Germany and Austria of to-day is the logical result of Bismarck's victory over the rabid Jingoes of his own country thirty years ago. Count Benedetti tells us that at Versailles, in 1870, a similar difference arose between master and man. Bismarck is reported to have been in favour of annexing Alsace, "which is German land," but not Lorraine. Counsels of moderation did not prevail then as they had at Nicolsburg.

It is hardly necessary to add that these essays repay perusal. A good portrait accompanies the volume.

J. G. C. MINCHIN.

Quales Ego. By G. S. Street. (John Lane.)

THIS little book had been an impertinence if badly or only moderately well written. Some of the essays, aided by generous type and margins abundantly lavish, run to hardly six pages. One, indeed, "Before a Shrine," scarcely exceeds a meagre three. Yet what an admirable tribute to the commonplace woman they are; how many pages would the commonplace writer have slaughtered in the endeavour to achieve so notable a victory! For here, as in all of Mr. Street's inimitable work—save for one unfortunate waif whom his father must provide for in secret—we see the old adage glitteringly exemplified. Brevity is the soul of wit, and the creator of "Tubby" is a miser as to bulk, but what a spendthrift when the total value of his output is reckoned. A lonely jest of decent quality may pose, and impose, as an aristocrat, swaggering amid tens of pages of sober fatuities. So that a man gives as a background a sufficiency of dulness, he may easily earn the reputation of wit. The unthinking, heavy person who reads this book—spurred to contrariety by its prettily affected title—will probably wonder whether the author is really an "Adrian" or a blockhead. A fellow of infinite jest, Mr. Street ever leavens his quips and quiddities with delicious wisdom, to remain with the hearer and provoke a certain solemnity in his smile. At first one may doubt when he is serious and when frolicsome. Only those who realise that a jest lies in his more sombre utterances, a truth in his more farcical, can gauge the true merit of his tiny volume. Probably this means that he may not bid with hope of success for popularity. It also means, and I take it he is willing and glad to accept the inevitable, that but a handful will rank him at his real worth. For the clowns of Shakspeare, and Rigoletto too, were wiser than their auditors, and knew it. Therein was their sorrow, for few as yet have given Jack-in-the-Green his due.

To offer minute particulars of so small a book were to be discourteous and unjust. Unjust, because a casual reader of the review might conclude he had bitten the kernel of the volume, tasted its bitter sweetness. Discourteous, because the best might look a starveling severed from its natural surroundings. Some months ago in the ACADEMY I ventured to eulogise the Autobiography of a Boy. I do not pretend, I dare not hint, that my approval was worth the wage of the printer who arranged the type. On some books it is so easy to give a convincing verdict: a quotation or two deftly chosen and the thing is done. Here, as before, I do not quote at all, though I know that salvation lies in the extract. A merry writer might develop good copy out of "An Appreciation of Ouida"; a deacon find a Barnato wealth of words whereby to condemn the eulogy on Charles II. After reading both, I am willing to allow that the author of Moths has hitherto been stupidly maligned, that "to go with Grammont to Whitehall" is more profitable than listening to a sermon at St. Paul's. Mr. Street can make the worst cause appear the better; he conjures with such elegant dexterity, only the obstinate resent the trick. By all means let Ouida stand high among the immortals manufactured of to-day, Charles the Second pose as the type of king "one would like to see in England," so long as it is Mr. Street who declaims the panegyric. The jester sees further than the philosopher. To be able to laugh at it one must understand human nature passing well. And we may surmise that he who understands best loves best also.

PERCY ADDLESHAW.

NEW NOVELS.

When Leaves were Green. By Sydney Hodges. In 3 vols. (Chatto & Windus.)

Erica's Husband. By Adeline Sergeant. In 2 vols. (Hurst & Blackett.)

At the Sign of the Ostrich. By Charles James. (Chapman & Hall.)

Her Own Devices. By C. G. Compton. (Heinemann.)

A Pitiful Passion. By Ella Macmahon. (Hutchinson.)

Roland Kyan. By Walter Sweetman. (Digby, Long & Co.)

Brenda's Experiment. By Surgeon-Major H. M. Greenhow. (Jarrold.)

Little Lady Lee. By Mrs. Lovett Cameron. (White.)

BEGINNING with a certain amount of freshness and spirit, When Leaves were Green scarcely fulfils its promise. There is an almost idyllic scene at the opening, where the young artist, Glyn Beverley, is found by Blanche Venables sketching a Sussex landscape. Of course they soon fall in love with each other, both being poetically susceptible; and it seems at first as though the course of true love would for once run smooth. But, unfortunately, two persons intervene: one is Mrs. Courtenay Byng, a pretty but fast young widow, and the other is a smooth-tongued but black-hearted villain, Captain D'Eyncourt. There have been some rather shady passages in the past between these two, and at one time D'Eyncourt had been engaged for a brief space to Blanche Venables. But she had soon discovered his base character and discarded him. However, he and Mrs. Byng concoct a pretty plot between them; and as Mrs. Byng has conceived a passion for Glyn Beverley, they manage to separate the lovers, and to plunge them both into the deepest distress. The rest of the story is rather commonplace. There is a French maid who tries to turn her mistress's secrets to profit after purloining her letters, and Capt. D'Eyncourt comes into an inheritance by chicanery, which rightfully belongs to Beverley. When things are at their blackest, the villain's house of cards comes down with a crash, the estates are recovered by Beverley, and the lovers are married and live happily ever afterwards.

The last two or three works by Miss Adeline Sergeant have been stronger in character-drawing, and more notable for their talent generally, than one could have predicted at the outset of her career. Unlike many novelists, she has progressed and developed. Her Story of a Penitent Soul, for example, was a remarkable study; and now we may unhesitatingly say the same of Erica's Husband. It is in a different vein, but the versatility is welcome. We are first introduced to the rough usages and humours of a mining camp, where Erica is left fatherless under painful circumstances. The father has, however, appointed as her guardian Dick Vandeleur, a young Englishman of good family, who for private reasons has gone to the mining districts of the West. The rest of the story is occupied with a detailed description of the many trials which befall Vandeleur and his ward through the evil schemes of one Cyril Fane, who tries to force Erica to marry him, knowing that she was the heiress to great estates. Ultimately Fane is overthrown, and all his wicked machinations exposed. There is nothing, perhaps, very original in this part of the plot; but the merit of the novel lies in its delineation of character, and in its easy yet vigorous style, which makes it a pleasure to read.

The latest volume in "Chapman's Story Series," At the Sign of the Ostrich, is an almost ideal short novel. It deals with English life in the eighteenth century, and the author has admirably caught the spirit and manners of the time. The habitual frequenters of the "Ostrich" are linnéed with real skill, and the same may be said of those other characters who occupy a higher position in the social scale. Sir Robert Greville is a proud aristocrat, to the manner born, while his daughter Flora is a bewitching heroine. Field Harefield, the hero, whose father has been ruined by Sir Robert, vows a terrible vengeance against the baronet and his daughter; but his love for Flora proves too strong for him, and at the last the reader will find a pleasant surprise in store for him. It is long since we met with a novel in one volume as entertaining as this of Mr. Charles James.

We wish we could extend the same praise to the latest addition to the "Pioneer Series," Her Own Devices. But whether the fault be in us or in the book, we did not find it either very improving or very interesting. There is, it is true, a certain amount of ability in the presentation of the chief characters: Susan Stainer, an actress, and Lucien Bewick, architect and writer for the stage, whom she holds in thrall. But after a time Susan's vagaries cease to move us, and the narrative of her fascinations comes to an abrupt and inconsequent conclusion. A good many side-lights are thrown upon the modern stage in the course of this short sketch.

Miss Macmahon's new story, A Pitiful Passion, is not of so uncommon a type as the book by which she made her reputation, namely, A New Note. But it reveals some degree of power, and there are smart things in it here and there, though they give the impression of being hammered out to order. The burden of the story is a painful one; for it treats of the degradation of a young married woman through an ineradicable passion for drink. Norman Grain, a rising politician, has married her in ignorance of this vice, and we can sympathise with him in his anger at the deliberate concealment practised upon him. However, he behaves nobly, and even resists the temptation to seek a new home with Magdalen Ponsonby, a self-sacrificing woman of a high type, who loves him as deeply as he loves her. In the end, Grain perishes while heroically endeavouring to save his worthless and wretched wife from a fire; and, perhaps, on the whole, this was the only possible ending to a miserable union. Two or three characters are exceptionally well drawn—Norman, Magdalen, and Anthony Chenevix. The last-mentioned is a thoroughly good upright and downright Englishman. His friendship is of the kind that may well be described as priceless; and he is worthy of Magdalen, who existed "for the sole purpose of being good to people whom no one else would have anything to say to."

A good many social, religious, and philosophical questions are discussed in Mr. Sweetman's Irish sketch, Roland Kyan. There are also somewhat lengthy deliverances upon Home Rule, the Roman question, the temporal power of the Pope, &c. For those who like this kind of thing, of course this is the kind of thing they will like. Occasionally, something more human is sandwiched in between the author's disquisitions, and there is a touching scene at the end, where the heroine fishes her half-drowned lover out of the water. But, on the whole, the volume is pretty stiff reading; and if Mr. Sweetman had all the wisdom of Solomon, he could not make a novel palatable which dealt with such abstruse problems as Berkeley delighted in. However, in his preface, the writer hints that his story will be based rather upon intellectual than upon love-making lines, so that the merely frivolous persons who like a good, rattling novel of adventure will know what to expect.

The writer of Brenda's Experiment cannot lay claim to much literary skill, but he has written an attractive sketch of Anglo-Indian life. Brenda Mogadore is a foolish young person who has fallen in love with a Mohammedan, Ameer Ali, and implicitly trusts him, because he has promised to embrace the Christian faith. Her father and mother are likewise foolish in reposing equal confidence in Ali, although they have been solemnly warned against him by their friend, Dr. Barton, who has read his character but too accurately. The young couple marry and go out to India, where the base and treacherous nature of Ameer Ali at once begins to reveal itself. He takes a leading part in the Mutiny which nearly leads to the slaughter of the entire body of English residents at Rownpore, and endeavours to barter his own wife away to the Nawab. Fortunately, swift vengeance overtakes him, and he meets with a violent death. Brenda has apparently been cured of her affection for Mohammedans, and she now gives her hand to a gallant young English officer, who has been instrumental in saving her life.

Mrs. Lovett Cameron does not show to advantage in Little Lady Lee. The story is thin, and its burden unpleasant. A worn-out old baronet, with a disgraceful past, marries a young girl for his second wife, in order to continue the title. When she fails to bring him a son and heir he behaves brutally to her, and forces upon her the society of a Mrs. Rushton, an old flame with a past as scandalous as his own. He even builds for her a house within his own park, which his wife must see whenever she drives out. However, the baronet meets with his death in the hunting field; but his will creates another scandal, when it is discovered that he has left a large sum of money to a barmaid. Little Lady Lee comes in for some happiness at last when she marries Terence Lee, the heir to the estates, who had tried to shield her to the best of his power while his predecessor was alive. There is nothing in the story to enhance the author's reputation.

G. BARNETT SMITH.

CURRENT LITERATURE.

What I Think of South Africa, its People, and its Politics. By Stuart Cumberland. (Chapman & Hall.) The title of Mr. Cumberland's book is not inviting, still less so is a glance at its egotistical table of contents. Seventeen chapters in a row all begin with "What I think." We hope, however, readers will not be deterred by the superabundant use of the pronoun "I"; for they will find Mr. Cumberland lively and readable, and he has brought out his book at the very nick of time. His characters of the leading South African figures are drawn with skill, and are specially interesting in the present state of affairs. One naturally turns to those of Dr. Jameson and President Kruger; and these are, perhaps, the two best. Dr. Jameson's singular probity and unselfishness is shown in the following anecdote:

"As one of our most prominent South African millionaires, who has a great personal admiration for Dr. Jameson, said to me some months back: 'I never met such a man as Jameson, he doesn't care a straw for money. While those around him are making their thousands, he makes practically nothing. He won't even pick money up when it's placed before him.' To which I answered that it seemed a pity there were not more public officials in South Africa like him. 'A pity!' replied my millionaire; 'I think him a downright fool about money matters, for no one will thank him. But anyone who knows him knows what he is, and he doesn't care about anybody else.'"

Of President Kruger the author has not a good word to say. He attributes his success to low cunning, which makes him more than a match for honest and honourable men. In this view he does not stand alone; and it is to be noticed that those who cry up President Kruger the most are those who know least about South Africa. Mr. Cumberland gives a somewhat new view of Dr. Leyds, whom he pronounces the most dangerous man to British interests in the Boer camp, distrusted by Rhodes and a rival of Kruger.

"Oom Paul never seems quite to have trusted him. Leyds has always been a dark horse, whose form even the President's peculiar cunning could not make out. Leyds and Paul Kruger have quarrelled violently and often; but it has invariably ended in the astute Secretary of State having his own way. The suspicion probably rankles in the 'old man's' mind that, politically speaking, Dr. Leyds is working for his own hand. This suspicion I believe to be well founded. Time will show. It would be difficult to believe that Dr. Leyds has the cause of either the Boers or the present Boer Government really at heart. He has nothing in common with the Doppe, so dear to the unsophisticated Paul Kruger."

The last of the "What I think" chapters is on the present situation, and is much to the point. It is evident that Mr. Cumberland is an acute observer of what is going on, and knows well what he is writing about. His views, no doubt, are strong, and he has the courage of his opinions. Many may think he pushes them too far; but even if that be so, it is no reason why his book should not be read, and read with profit.

Father Archangel of Scotland, and Other Essays. By G. and R. B. Cunninghame Graham. (A. & C. Black.) These sketches were well worth preserving, alight as some of them may be. Though dealing half with the Old World and half with the New, treading the confines of Northern Africa as well as of South America and of Spain, the link of unity is never broken: we are still hearing the same Castilian speech, in contact with men of the same race. In another way Mrs. Cunninghame Graham's share of the book may be likened to Max Müller's Chips from a German Workshop, so evidently are these essays the surplus of materials prepared for the Life of Santa Teresa. The chapters on Paraguay, the Pampas, and on North-Western Africa are from Mr. Graham. The lady writes with a softer and more conciliatory pen. Mr. Graham delights in smartness and in opposition. The value of sketches like these is that they fix the conditions and habits at a certain date: they recount past changes, and predict coming ones. The Gaucho has already changed much, and he will change more if Mr. Graham's forebodings of "A Vanishing Race" come true. The Paraguay of the days before Lopez' fall seems to be utterly forgotten now. It is hardly true to say that "no other country has produced men like Rosas." The present writer has heard his life recounted again and again by those who knew him well, both friends and foes. He has seen his contemporary Cabrera, the old Carlist chief, the Tiger of the Maestrazgo. Even physically the two men were not unlike. Rosas was perhaps the greater savage of the two, but he had more humour; in ruthless cruelty they were peers; and strangely enough they both, the South American and the European Spaniard, died as English country gentlemen. Unless his friends flattered him beyond all recognition, it is too bad to rank the great landowner Urquiza with men like these. We thank the writers for having revived old memories. Even more, perhaps, than they intended are these pages an illustration of the motto, Sic transit gloria mundi.

A String of Chinese Peach-Stones. By W. Arthur Cornaby. (Charles A. Kelly.) If Mr. Cornaby's method equalled his industry, he would, with the wealth of material which he has gathered, have given us a coherent book instead of a bewildering medley. This is the more irritating, because long residence in the country, and intimate relations with the village folk—notably with one encyclopaedic Celestial—enables him to speak with authority. As it is, the reader has to grope his way through gossipy and unrelated paragraphs to get at the heart of the matter. This reached, he will find an entertaining account of life in Central China, "far from the madding crowd," along the beaten tracks, and in the Treaty Ports. A life which, with its actual needs counted on the fingers of one's hand, would be happy enough but for the rapacity of the rulers who squeeze the toilers to the uttermost "cash" (thirty of these copper coins go to a penny), and then leave them to the tender mercies of the tax collector—of "Mr. Li, who must be bribed, and of Mr. Wang, who must be feed." Some of the tales scattered through the book are strung upon the narrative of the Taiping Rebellion; but in the main they gather round one Nieh, a local teacher, whose lore brings him the repute of the sacred sages, and may secure him promotion in the Imperial service. At his feet we may sit and listen to the stories whose cosmopolitan note sounds deeper the more we compare it with that heard elsewhere. There are the legends of mortals metamorphosed into trees; the superstitions which gather round names as integral elements of a man's personality; the variants of "sympathetic magic" based on the common belief that an effect is producible by imitating it; and so forth, rendering the book a storehouse of valuable material for the folklorist. As to the illustrations, many of them are facsimiles of native pictures, or photo-lithographs of drawings in illustrated papers, thus generally harmonising with the text which they interpret. The absence of an index further impairs the value of a book upon which enough labour has been bestowed to make that withheld the more regrettable.

On Either Side of the Red Sea. With an Introduction by E. N. Buxton. (Edward Stanford.) In respect of print, paper, binding, and illustrations, this volume leaves little to be desired; but equal praise cannot honestly be bestowed upon the text. It is somewhat difficult to understand precisely why these young ladies' letters should have been given to the world. As private correspondence they were doubtless interesting to receive, and still more pleasant to write; but it must be confessed that in book form they appear trivial and jejune. To take a passage almost at random:

"At Port Said they take two or three hours coaling—a very dirty operation. . . . All the passengers landed. It is a ramshackle, wooden place run up on a flat slip of sand. We had a splendid donkey-ride all round the town. The ship started again at eight. It was delicious on deck after dinner as we went along the Suez Canal. The ships have very bright searchlights which light up the desert on either side."

And so on. To readers who know Port Said such a description is almost an insult, while to those who know it not it will probably convey no knowledge. It is somewhat superfluous to mention that the Cairo bazaars "are narrow little passages with stalls on either side," or that "the Sphinx is most extraordinary, a colossal thing cut out of living rock." Mr. Buxton's party did not, however, confine themselves to sight-seeing at Cairo and Luxor, but camped out for three and four weeks at a time in the mountainous and little-explored regions on the coasts of the Red Sea; the object being to secure specimens of the handsome little wild goat, the Ibez Sinaiticus. In the descriptions of these wanderings on comparatively untrodden paths defects of style become even more painfully apparent, as with judicious treatment this part of the book might have been full of interest. The travellers visited the porphyry mountains, where are the remains of extensive quarries worked by the Romans. Ruins of a temple and of a large workmen's town are still in existence; and "so far as we could discover," says Mr. Buxton, "the place had been visited by only four parties of travellers since its abandonment two thousand years ago." The famous convent of St. Catherine was also visited, and the magnificent country in the southern portion of the Sinaitic peninsula. It would appear that duty-calls on Oriental monks are not without drawbacks. London hostesses might rid themselves of unwelcome guests by imitating the entertainment offered at the convent of Tor. "Wine-glasses of brandy were first brought to us, with a dish of jam. We had to drink the brandy off neat, and eat a spoonful of jam each. It was disgusting." The provocation may almost excuse italics.

NOTES AND NEWS.

MR. W. E. H. LECKY's new book on Democracy and Liberty, to be published by Messrs. Longmans next Tuesday, will deal with such burning questions as—the reform of the House of Lords, Socialism in Germany, nationalities in America, Irish land, intoxicating drink, and female suffrage.

MR. WILLIAM HEINEMANN will publish on Wednesday next Brother and Sister, consisting of the letters of Ernest and Henriette Renan, with a memoir.

MESSRS. MACMILLAN & Co. will publish immediately, as a new volume of their "Golden Treasury" series, Sir Thomas Browne's Hydriothaphia and the Garden of Cyrus, edited by the late Dr. William Greenhill, of Hastings.

MESSRS. SWAN SONNENSCHN & Co. announce a new Dictionary of English Quotations, compiled by Lieut.-Col. Dalbiac, one of the directors of the firm, and M.P. for North Camberwell.

AMONG the new books which the Clarendon Press announces as in active preparation are—A Student's Pastime, by the Rev. Prof. W. W. Skeat; and a facsimile edition of O'est d'Aucassin et de Nicolette, with transcription and notes by Mr. F. W. Bourdillon.

MESSRS. CASSELL & Co. announce for publication, in the course of the spring, a fifth volume of Social England, edited by Mr. H. D. Traill, dealing with the period from the accession of George I. to the Battle of Waterloo.

MESSRS. CHATTO & WINDUS have in preparation a third series of Eighteenth-Century Vignettes, by Mr. Austin Dobson.

MESSRS. MACMILLAN & Co. have in the press a little handbook on golf, intended as a guide for beginners to the rules and customs of the game. It has been compiled by Mr. J. Norman Lookyer and Mr. W. Rutherford (hon. secretary to the St. George's Golf Club). The scheme of the book is an attempt to classify and arrange the existing laws for easy reference, with notes of any custom or unwritten law which modifies a rule. An appendix contains specimens of ancient oodes, with forms and information relating to match-play, &c.

MESSRS. WELLS GARDNER, DARTON & Co. have in the press a book entitled The Thirty-Nine Articles and the Age of the Reformation, by the Rev. E. Tyrell Green, lecturer in theology at St. David's College, Lampeter. The author's special aim has been to establish, by means of a comparison of the precise wording of the Articles, their relation to other Formularies or Confessions of Faith that were issued during the sixteenth century in various parts of Christendom. He has also made use, for the same purpose, of other writings of the English Reformers, such as the Homilies and the "Reformatio Legum." All his references will be cited in full, and in the language of the originals.

MR. ELLIOT STOCK announces, for immediate publication, The Revelation of St. John the Divine: an original translation, with critical and expository comments, by Mr. John H. Latham. The object of the author is to furnish a precise equivalent of the Greek, rather than to present a finished English rendering.

MESSRS. OLIPHANT, ANDERSON & FERRIER announce The Christ in Man, by James M. Campbell, with an introduction by Prof. Bruce, of Glasgow.

A VOLUME by Mr. H. S. Salt, entitled Percy Bysshe Shelley, Poet and Pioneer, will be published shortly by Mr. W. Reeves in London, and by Messrs. Scribner in New York. The main purpose of the book, which is partly a reprint of earlier works by the same author, is to give a rational interpretation of Shelley's life and character, and to show that he was neither an "explicit demon" nor an "ineffectual angel," but a pioneer of the most important social movements of the present day.

MR. COTSFORD DICK has made a selection from his society verses contributed to the World, which will be published next month by Mr. George Redway, under the title of The Ways of the World, in an edition limited to 500 copies.

THE Roxburghe Press will issue immediately a volume entitled Carina Songs, by Miss Amy C. Morant, a lady who is identified with the Labour and Socialist movements of the time.

THE Kalamcott Press has just ready for issue, in an edition of 300 copies, Poems Chosen from the Works of Samuel Taylor Coleridge.

MR. F. MARCHEMONT, of South Lambeth-road, proposes to re-issue that curious work, The History of the London Clubs; or, the Citizens' Pastime (1709), by the author of "The London Spy"—that is, Ned Ward—which has never been reprinted. The edition will be limited to 500 copies, with a facsimile reproduction of the original wood-blocks.

THE new edition of Olive Schreiner's Story of an African Farm, which Messrs. Hutchinson & Co. are issuing, will have for frontispiece a reproduction in photogravure of a recent portrait of the author. Over 80,000 copies of this book have now been sold.

MESSRS. TYLSTON & EDWARDS will publish immediately a cheap edition of We Three and Troddles, by R. Andom, with the original drawings in silhouette by Mr. A. Carruthers Gould.

MESSRS. ARCHIBALD, CONSTABLE & Co.—the firm of publishers whose imprint is Westminster, not London—have just moved to larger and more convenient premises at 2, Whitehall-gardens.

THE annual meeting of the Economic Association will be held on Tuesday next. In the evening there will be a dinner, at which it is hoped that Mr. Goschen, the president, may take the chair, and that M. Léon Say may be present from Paris.

At a meeting of the Jewish Historical Society, to be held this evening (Saturday) in the room of the Maccabaeans, St. James's Hall, the following papers will be read: "Moyse Hall," by the Rev. Hermann Gollancz; and "Joseph Ibn Danon of Belgrade," by Prof. D. Kaufmann.

THE annual general meeting of the Royal Literary Fund was held last week, with Sir Mountstuart E. Grant Duff in the chair. The report showed that the total receipts during 1895 were £3299. The total sum now invested amounts to £51,912, yielding an income of £1676. The total number of grants awarded in 1895 was forty-three, representing £1905, and of this amount males received £1185 and females £720. The details showed that eight grants were made to authors of historical and biographical works, two to scientific, eight to classical literature and educational authors, five to those who wrote on archaeology, topography, and travels, thirteen to novelists, and seven to miscellaneous writers. Since the inauguration of the fund in 1790, 4464 grants have been awarded, representing £123,022.

THE FORTHCOMING MAGAZINES.

A SERIES of articles by Olive Schreiner, on South Africa and the Boers, will commence in the April number of the Fortnightly Review.

THERE will appear in the April and May numbers of Good Words reminiscences of Lady Blanche Balfour, sister of Lord Salisbury, and mother of Mr. A. J. Balfour, written by Dr. Robertson, the parish minister of Whittinghame. They present a striking portrait of a remarkable and good woman, and show many of those influences under which her sons were trained.

THE April number of Blackwood's will contain the first part of a new story, entitled "Hilda Strafford," by Miss Beatrice Harraden. The scene is laid in California, where Miss Harraden is understood to have found the health and strength vainly sought for elsewhere. The same number will also contain an article on Caterina Sforza, based on Count Pasolini's great work dealing with her life and times which was lately published at Rome.

THE April issue of Chapman's Magazine will contain the first instalment of a new serial story by John Oliver Hobbes, entitled "The Herb Moon," which is to run through six or seven numbers.

THE forthcoming number of the Pall Mall Magazine will contain the following articles: "Knole and its Memories," by Lord Sackville; "Bengal Cavalry," by Sir Hugh Gough, V.C.; "Is Christian Reunion Possible?" by Lord Halifax; "Wolfe at Quebec," by Mr. Edgar Fawcett; and a photographic reproduction of a painting by Marie Bashkirschiff.

Cassell's Magazine for April will contain an article entitled "Where Mr. Chamberlain Lives," illustrated with sketches and photographs of the exterior and interior of his Birmingham house. To the same number Mr. Henniker Heaton will contribute a paper upon "Cablegrams for the Million," advocating a reduction in the present rates for submarine messages.

THE April number of the Quiver will contain the opening chapters of a new serial story, by Mr. Sydney C. Grier, entitled "An Unprotected Female."

UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS.

MR. ISRAEL GOLLANCZ, of Christ's, has been appointed by the general board of studies to be the first university lecturer in English at Cambridge. As our readers know, the endowment of this new academical post is entirely due to the perseverance and generosity of Prof. Skeat, who has not only obtained subscriptions to the amount of £1400, but has also personally guaranteed that the stipend shall reach £100 for a period of five years. Mr. Gollancz has for a long time past been engaged in teaching English at Cambridge, both for the medieval and modern languages tripos and for the Indian civil service examination. He was also the first Quain lecturer in English at University College, London; and he is at present examiner in English at London University. Of his published work, it is enough to mention his scholarly text and version of the Early English poem, The Pearl (David Nutt); and his pretty edition of Shakspeare's Plays in single volumes (Dent). Only last month he was fortunate enough to be the discoverer of a fragment of the long-lost Early English "Tale of Wade."

THE Rev. C. J. Ball, chaplain of Lincoln's Inn—whose biblical and oriental studies have hitherto obtained little recognition at his own university—will, on the afternoon of Sunday next, preach the university sermon at St. Mary's upon a subject thus quaintly prescribed:

"The application of the prophecies in Holy Scripture respecting the Messiah to our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, with an especial view to confute the arguments of Jewish commentators and to promote the conversion to Christianity of the ancient people of God."

IN Convocation at Oxford on Tuesday next, it will be proposed to confer the honorary degree of M.A. upon Don Fernando de Arteaga, teacher of Spanish at the Taylorian Institution.

MR. F. Y. EDGEWORTH's term of five years as Drummond professor of political economy at Oxford has expired; but he is eligible for reappointment.

THE Rev. Dr. E. Moore, lecturer on Dante at the Taylor Institution, was to deliver a public lecture on Friday of this week upon "Sicilian History in the Divina Commedia." Next term Dr. Moore proposes to give two lectures on "Dante as a Religious Teacher."

THE following are the subjects chosen for the Members' Prizes at Cambridge: for the English essay, "The Monroe Doctrine"; and, for the Latin essay, "Orator in iudicio Leandrum Iamson et socios eius vel accusat vel defendit."

A SUMMER meeting will be held in London in August in connexion with the London School of Economics and Political Science. The objects of the meeting are: (1) To supplement the work of the school with a short period of study during the long vacation; (2) to offer to those who live at a distance from centres of systematic study opportunities of obtaining guidance in their work; (3) to afford opportunities for informal conferences on the best means of promoting the scientific study of the subjects taught at the school. The lectures will be given and the conferences held at Toynbee Hall.

A CORRESPONDENT, who is naturally puzzled by the inconclusive voting at Cambridge on the question of degrees for women, asks whether it would not have been more appropriate if the Graces had been three in number, not two. We can only respond with a quotation from Horace:

"Segnesque nodum solvere Gratias."

ORIGINAL VERSE.

DAFFODILS.

GOLDEN chalices of gladness
Gleaming in the woodland ways,
Exorcising winter's sadness,
Pledge of promised golden days—
Hope awakes, sweet daffodils,
When ye shine upon the hills.

Sure I am some spell is hidden
In thee, flower of lowly birth—
Lifting thy glad face unbidden
O'er the yet scarce stirring earth,
Ere Spring comes—a spell to move
All that see thee, thee to love.

No! alone the pale gold raying
Round thy deep gold heart between,
Nor thy slender form's soft swaying
Midst thy bodyguard in green,
Something in thee more than this
Fills the gaze's heart with bliss.

In the tale swift Memory's bringing Does thy fascination lie,
How of old, amid their singing
Poets loved to see thee nigh,
And how they would fain rehearse
Thy delights in deathless verse?

He, in savage Devon dwelling,
Beauty loving, poet-priest,
Oft to thee quaint fancies telling—
Of thy singers not the least—
Smiled to greet thee by the way
As he duly passed to pray.

And a greater bard, once wandering
Thoughtful over vales and hills,
Sudden ceased his pensive pondering
As a host of daffodils
Flashed upon his sight a joy
Time nor change could e'er destroy.

Many another has extolled thee,
Daffodil, since earth was young,
Glories of great song enfold thee
Favoured theme of honeyed tongue!
Yet 'tis not the poet's art
Gives thee power to touch the heart.

'Tis the subtle recollection
Thou canst wake of Springs long past,
Childhood's playtime, youth's affection,
Joys foregone, with thee linked fast—
These live ever: thou art here
In the Springtide every year.

DORA CAVE.

MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS.

THE Theologisch Tijdschrift for March devotes the largest space to an article by Dr. Groenewegen on recent philosophy of religion, which is really a critical survey of Siebeck's "Lehrbuch der Religionsphilosophie." Unsuccessful as an Introduction for the beginner, the work is nevertheless full of masterly psychological and metaphysical investigation, though not well put together. In dealing with the history of religion, Siebeck appears to be less happy: history and philosophical theory are too much commingled. Dr. van Doorninch continues his series of very able "text-critical studies" on the narrative books of the Old Testament. He deals this time with the account of the intercourse between Abraham and Abimelech in Gen. xx., xxi., and with some points requiring further elucidation in the story of Samson. The latter portion deserves the attention of anthropologists; for it has to do not merely with difficulties in the text, but with primitive marriage customs, and illustrates these by references to an important Dutch work (by Snouck Hurgronje) on the people of Atjeh in Java. The third article in this number has to do with the details of a recent ecclesiastical ordinance affecting Holland. Prof. Koster revives our spirits by his frank criticism of Van Hoonacker's attempt to overthrow the widely accepted conclusion, that the temple at Jerusalem only became the single legal sanctuary in the time of Josiah; he also criticises a work by a competent pupil of Van Hoonacker (Poels) on the sanctuary of Kirjath-Jearim. This work has been already noticed favourably in the ACADEMY; and Prof. Koster, too, recognises at any rate the acuteness of this new advocate of what the critic describes as a "hopeless cause." Dr. Bakhuyzen gives a highly appreciative review of parts ii. and iii. of Gregory's Prolegomena to Tischendorf's "Novum Testamentum Græce." Dr. van Manen notices works on early Christian literature, including the Cambridge "Texts and Studies," edited by Prof. J. A. Robinson.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE ETYMOLOGY OF "THULE."

Cambridge: March 14, 1896.

In the ACADEMY for March 14, 1896, at p. 224, an explanation of Thule is offered, founded upon the Celtic houl, "sun."

It is impossible to be satisfied with this. The various attempts to explain the initial th are all farfetched and unlikely. Can nothing better be suggested? I think it can.

Assuming that it was written θεύλη in Greek, how are we to explain the θ, on the probable hypothesis that the word was of Celtic origin? It is clear to me that the only Celtic letter which could have been represented (not perhaps very happily) by a Greek θ must have been t. If so, θεύλη may have been founded on the Irish tuath-al, adj., "northern." The suffix -λη, adj.-suffix as in τυφ-λες, "blind," may well represent the corresponding adj.-suffix -al. The Celtic th would easily drop out.

The O.Irish tuath meant (1) "left"—i.e., on the left hand; and (2) north (see Windisch). The reason is obvious; de-x-ter is right-handed, as one turns to the east (cf. Deccan); so left-handed is northern.

As to Iceland, the epithet "northern" needs no further comment. Perhaps some Celtic scholar can help us out.

WALTER W. SKEAT.

THE MIDDLE TEMPLE RECORDS.

London: March 16, 1896.

Debarment of students' access to ancient quasi-public records is so uncommon that instances to the contrary should be at once made known, if only that would-be inquirers may learn where there is no access for them.

Following up some Shakesperian researches which you have occasionally permitted me to refer to in the ACADEMY, I wished to investigate the circumstances attending the production of "Twelfth Night" at the Middle Temple Hall in 1603, and applied to the Treasurer for permission. It was refused—in fact, this refusal is the second of the kind I have received from the Benchers. The affairs of the Inn are kept concealed from its members generally; and I can only state that these records are said to be calendared, and hence could be referred to quickly and easily.

I write from the standpoint of a man in the street, who can walk into the Record Office or Lambeth Palace Library, and have any MS. put before him. But to meet a possible plea of "proper security," I may say that I am F.S.A., a barrister of the Society of over eighteen years' standing, have an address in the Inn, and am author of two books upon Middle Temple Antiquities, which have been favourably received.

Moreover, the Treasurer of Gray's Inn has opened all his records to me, and I have been informed that the Treasurer of the Inner Temple might probably do the same if applied to.

W. G. THORPE.

HOW FOLK-LORE IS SPREAD.

London: March 9, 1896.

In a letter that appeared in the ACADEMY for December 21 last I referred to a paper on "Superstitions," to be found in the first volume (1818) of Seren Gomer. It is not, strictly speaking, a "paper," but a series of letters from a correspondent signing himself "Iorwerth." As I had only a few minutes at my disposal when consulting the volume, I could not verify the suspicion which some casual hints suggested to me, that the writer was none other than the "Father of Welsh Journalism" himself, the Rev. Joseph Harris, Baptist minister, and printer, proprietor, and editor of Seren

Gomer. I contented myself, therefore, with the mere statement that the paper referred to had been translated, without any acknowledgment or indication that such was the case, from No. 59 of the Connoisseur (1755), and with asking, "How many times, I wonder, has that veracious account been quoted as genuine folklore of the Swansea district?" At the very time I was asking myself that question an answer was at hand, though it was not known to me till the beginning of last month.

A little over a month ago I received the numbers of Mr. O. M. Edwards's very interesting Welsh monthly magazine, Cymru, for October and the three succeeding months. In those numbers are to be found chaps. iv. to viii. of the "Recollections and Counsels of Uncle Hugh, by Simon Llwyd, Pembrokeshire." In chap. v. (October, p. 170) Uncle Hugh is represented as saying:

"Gomer of Swansea, in days gone by, would get the better of all the spirits when he could get a fair hold of them . . . A right clever chap was Joel Harri at handling all kinds of spirits."

A footnote explains that "Gomer was known as Josi Harri in the neighbourhood of Treletert [Pembrokeshire], where he had been brought up." There is, however, not the slightest reference to the old Seren Gomer nor to the letters of "Iorwerth." The reader is allowed to suppose that Uncle Hugh had heard the tale, or rather tales, from the very lips of the Rev. Joseph Harris. Indeed, he is told so expressly. "As you know," says Uncle Hugh to the clever chronicler of his Recollections and Counsels,

"Harris came from Castell Haid in Treletert. He went from there to Swansea. I remember very well how he used to tell us the story of a visit he once paid to his Aunt Lowri at Treletert. To hear him relate his experiences on that occasion would make a horse laugh."

I venture to say that a gatherer of folk-lore, on coming across these reminiscences of Uncle Hugh, would at once pronounce them to be most valuable remains of old Pembrokeshire superstitions. And yet the whole farrago is an ingenious hoax, literally doubly-dyed: for "Simon Llwyd" has lifted it all, without acknowledgment, from Seren Gomer, and "Gomer," otherwise "Iorwerth," had transferred it from the Connoisseur, also without acknowledgment. I ought, perhaps, to state that the original essay in the Connoisseur is crammed with superstitious beliefs and observances, which the writer (Bonnell Thornton, I suppose) had culled from all quarters, and had then located in the family of a nameless "old aunt in the North." As the superstitions in the original essay are all treated very concisely, it would take a column of the ACADEMY to catalogue them, and so I will only give the leading items "conveyed" by Iorwerth, nailing a horse-shoe to the threshold; finding out a witch by laying two straws across; saying the Lord's Prayer backwards; refusing a pin to an old woman; flinging a knife at an old witch to draw blood; the devil carrying off a witch in a high wind; the ghost of an old washerwoman haunting the best bedroom; a footman "walking" until the parson lays him in the Red Sea; the howling of Towzer a sure sign of death; the hen crowing in the morning, Towzer howling, the death-watch ticking, and a bell tolling at the top of the stairs before the master's death; a hearse stopping at the door a week before the death of a dairymaid; the tallow winding-sheet pointing towards the squire of the parish when he visits the house a short time before breaking his neck in the hunting-field; the ghost of a brother (absent in the West Indies) seen in the garden by one of the girls. The Connoisseur finds his aunt, when he arrives,

"very busily employed with her two daughters in nailing a horse-shoe on the threshold of the door." And so does the Rev. Joseph Harris when he visits her fifty years afterwards! I need not go through the latter's second-hand experiences, which may best be described in Mr. Sidney Hartland's words when referring to Pennant:

"The way in which he deals with the entire account, omitting or varying some usages and inserting others, suggests that, though he unquestionably had the [Connoisseur or a reproduction of it] before him, he supplemented or varied it in accordance with information obtained elsewhere" (ACADEMY, November 18).

That the English reader may see how transplanted folk-tales thrive in Welsh soil, I quote the following "expansions":

"Another sign had been seen a short time before, and Aunt Lowri had said a great deal about it to Joel Harri. Mali had happened one night to be in the garden—it was not very late, but as it was winter time, it was rather dark—when she saw something white coming down the path, and she understood at once that it was her brother Will. She knew that her brother had been away in India for many years, but she felt that it was his ghost. She ran into the house in a terrible fright, herself looking like a ghost by this time, and then she begins to tell her mother—'Oh, mammy, mammy! I have just seen brother Will's ghost walking about the garden.'—'You are mad, girl. Will is in India,' said her mother.—'Yes, mammy dear, said Mali, 'but I have seen his ghost.' . . . The strangest part of the story was that in about nine months they received a letter telling them that poor Will had died on such and such a date, and, when they came to reckon, the time corresponded exactly with the appearance of the ghost in the garden."

I have very little doubt that most, if not all, of the superstitions which the Rev. Joseph Harris so carefully transferred from the Connoisseur to Pembrokeshire are now firmly rooted in that part of Wales. It would be easy to make fun of this little transaction; but I prefer to commend it respectfully to the attention of the Folk-lore Society and other scientific students of custom.

J. P. OWEN.

THE SIN-EATER IN WALES.

Highgarth, Gloucester: March 14, 1896.

I must plead guilty to having given Mr. Thomas some reason for charging me with changing my ground. Mr. Moggridge, it seems, did not specify the exact place where the custom of Sin-eating had been performed within recent years. He described it as a mountain valley near Llandeibie. Writing without having the Archæologia Cambrensis before me, but only notes of its contents, I referred to the scene in general terms as "at Llandeibie." Nor have I here the letter containing Mr. Rowlands's statements. But, assuming Mr. Thomas's account of them to be correct, I see nothing in them to alter my opinion. It was, at all events, some years after the event signalled by Mr. Moggridge that Mr. Rowlands came to the village of Llandeibie; and, granting that Cwmaman was where the custom was alleged to have been practised, it appears to me that Mr. Rowland's denials so many years later cannot outweigh Mr. Moggridge's affirmation. However, I am unable to carry the evidence further, and there for the present it must rest.

If I now understand Mr. Thomas's second point—that the customs of North Wales described by Pennant, Robert Jones, and Aubrey himself were not survivals of Sin-eating, but merely independent survivals of the same feast, of which the custom of Sin-eating was also a survival—he admits that the custom of Sin-eating was practised somewhere. It is, of course, extremely difficult, if not impossible, to say with certainty whether these North Welsh customs were lineally descended from that of Sin-eating, or were only variant or related forms of it, independently derived from a common original. In my view the whole evidence presented in this correspondence—not forgetting the Lancashire custom of "The ded manse dowie or Banquet of Charitie," brought to light by Mr. Owen—points to a widespread, and probably Celtic, custom of Sin-eating, gradually disappearing with the growth of civilisation, and surviving here and there in more or less complete forms, which were naturally not all precisely alike. The difference between us is, after all, no very great one, and the scientific inferences as to the meaning of the customs remain undisturbed.

Whoever the writer of the article in Blackwood's may have been, what evidence is there that Canon Silvan Evans's letters in the ACADEMY were brought to his knowledge? In any case, the article was most likely nothing more than a pot-boiler, in which, having served its office, the author had no further concern. The manners and customs of the tribe of magazine article-writers are well known. Mr. Owen gave an amusing and instructive example in his letter which appeared in the ACADEMY of December 21. Everybody who has made it his business to inquire seriously into any subject could easily add others quite as amusing and almost as instructive.

Here, so far as I am concerned, I must bring the correspondence to a close. The subject, I think, has been pretty well threshed out. In thanking the Editor of the ACADEMY for allowing the statements of fact and exchange of opinions in his columns, I may venture to express the hope that, if his correspondents have not succeeded in converting one another, they have at least provided some material not without value for the solution of the questions involved.

E. SIDNEY HARTLAND.

BARLAAM AND JOSAPHAT.

Louvain: March 18, 1896.

Allow me to add a remark to the review of Mr. Conybeare, in order to avoid any misconception of the matter. It is not Buddha himself who has been placed among the Saints of the Catholic Church and venerated as such, but an imaginary prince whose history had been fabricated out of materials taken from the life of the Indian reformer. None of the promoters of his cult has ever been aware of the coincidence or of the existence of Çakyamuni.

As to the relics, I do not believe that there exist any authentically exhibited as those of St. Josaphat. His name is almost unknown among Catholics.

C. DE HARLEZ.

"THE JOURNAL OF A SPY IN PARIS."

Paris: March 16, 1896.

Whether Raoul Hedin's Journal is a fabrication or not, I will undertake to say that he did not see a woman with an infant at her breast in a cart on the way to the guillotine. Such a spectacle, moreover, even at the height of the Terror, would not have excited howling, but a thrill of compassion.

J. G. ALGER.

APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK.

SUNDAY, March 22, 4 p.m. South Place Institute: "The Responsibilities of Empire," by Mr. Robin Allen.
7 p.m. Ethical: "Tribby," by Mrs. Gilliland Husband.
MONDAY, March 23, 8.30 p.m. Geographical: "The Waterways of English Lakeland," by Mr. John E. Marr.
TUESDAY, March 24, 3 p.m. Royal Institution: "The External Covering of Plants and Animals," XI., by Prof. C. Stewart.

5 p.m. Imperial Institute: "My Twelve Years' Stay in Cyprus," III., by Dr. Max Ohnesfalsch-Richter.
6 p.m. Economic Association: Annual Meeting.
8 p.m. Society of Arts: "The Colonies and the supply of Dairy Produce and Products of Petite Culture," by Mr. Charles B. Valentine.
8 p.m. Civil Engineers: "The Thermal Efficiency of Steam Engines," by Capt. H. Riall Sankey.
8 p.m. Toynbee Library Readers: "Women as Pioneers of Social Development," by Mr. Samuel Hales.
WEDNESDAY, March 25, 4.30 p.m. Selden Society: Annual General Meeting.
8 p.m. Society of Arts: "Our Food Supply, as affected by the Farming of the Future," by Prof. James Long.
THURSDAY, March 26, 3 p.m. Royal Institution: "Masters of Modern Thought," IV., by the Rev. Dr. W. Barry.
8 p.m. Electrical Engineers: "Telephone Exchanges and their Working," by Mr. Dane Sinclair.
8 p.m. Chemical: Anniversary Meeting.
8.30 p.m. Antiquaries.
8.30 p.m. Society of Arts: "Kashmir: its People and its Products," by Mr. Walter H. Lawrence.
FRIDAY, March 27, 8 p.m. Civil Engineers: Students' Meeting, "Closing a Dock-Entrance for Repairs," by Mr. Julian S. Wise.
9 p.m. Royal Institution: "New Researches on Liquid Air," by Prof. Dewar.
SATURDAY, March 28, 3 p.m. Royal Institution: "Light," VI., by Lord Rayleigh.
3.45 p.m. Botanic: General Fortnightly Meeting.

SCIENCE.

VON ROSTHORN'S CHINESE STUDIES.

Die Ausbreitung der Chinesischen Macht in Südwestlicher Richtung bis zum vierten Jahrhundert nach Chr. Eine Historisch-Geographische Studie. Von Arthur von Rosthorn. (Wien.)

Ku Yen-wu's Dissertation über das Lautwesen. Von Dr. A. von Rosthorn. (Wien.)

Eine Reise im Westlichen China. Von Arthur von Rosthorn. (Wien.)

On the Tea Cultivation in Western Szech'uan, and the Tea Trade with Tibetia Tachienlu. By A. De Rosthorn. (London: Luzac.)

We welcome into the field of Sinology, and among writers on Chinese subjects generally, Dr. Arthur von Rosthorn, whose course we have followed with ever increasing interest for nearly twenty years.

After some considerable study of Chinese, he went to China, in 1884, in the service of the Imperial Maritime Customs, under Sir Robert Hart, and earned for himself a good degree, not only in performing his official duties, but in the study of the language as spoken in what is called the Mandarin dialect, and in the old classical and subsequent literature of the country. Thus he laid a good foundation for practical usefulness in the former and of high scholarship in the latter.

Some of the results of his diligent labours are now before us in the publications which have led to this notice of him. They display a rare acquaintance with the history and geography of the Empire, with the pronunciation of the characters and their idiomatic use, and with the commercial opportunities that are more and more opening for the development of trade. Dr. Rosthorn is still young, but has great maturity of judgment.

J. LEGGE.

SOME MEDICAL BOOKS.

History of the Cholera Controversy. By Sir George Johnson, M.D. (J. & A. Churchill.)

Year-book of Treatment of 1896. (Cassells.)

Specific Diseases, considered with reference to the Laws of Parasitism. By J. F. Payne, M.D. (J. & A. Churchill.)

SIR GEORGE JOHNSON as a young man had the courage of unpopular opinions, and incurred much detraction and abuse, which went so far, he inhumorously reminds us, as to dub him "Castor-oil Johnson," a title which he did not bear with the equanimity of "Soapy Sam." Now he has a more commonplace title, the respect of his profession and the public, and ought to be a laughing, not a weeping, philosopher and historian. His essay is certainly of interest and value; but the personal note of attack and triumph is out of place, the more so that he is surely mistaken in his assumption that he was all right and his opponents all wrong. He was partly right and partly wrong, and so were they, and that is always so—at least, in medicine.

The Year-book of Treatment maintains its well-earned position as an annual, now a hardy annual, indispensable to medical men. As a compilation by experts of selected facts and observations, it is admirable and bewildering, for we miss references to former years and guidance to the best as well as to the latest treatment of disease. Treatment is not all empirical, sometimes it is rational and based upon theory, and we find that theory and treatment tend to vary concomitantly. For instance, Sir George Johnson and his opponents were divided in their treatment of cholera by a difference of theory. He took a cheerful view of certain natural processes and encouraged them with castor-oil; they took a gloomy view and endeavoured to check them with opium. Again, in respect of fevers, the natural man like Sir George took a cheerful view of fever, and cuddled it with fires, blankets, and hot drinks; after many years he has learnt at last that fever is to be discouraged, takes his own temperature with his own private thermometer, and of his own accord reduces it to normal with all manner of drugs and appliances; and now the doctors begin to have doubts of their former teaching and ask themselves whether, after all, fever is such an unmixed evil. This notable fact leaks out incidentally in the Year-book, but provokes neither comment nor speculation. Medicine has perfected her weapons of attack upon Nature just when the bugle signals "cease firing." It needs scarcely to be pointed out how sociology, politics, and medicine are all engaged upon similar problems, and have an intimate solidarity each with the others. Medicine alone refuses to contribute toward their solution, standing aloof incurious and uncommunicative, ever grovelling among particulars. The Year-book would be improved by but one halfpennyworth of ideas to this intolerable deal of facts.

The last work on our list, a paper from the report of St. Thomas's Hospital for 1893, is a proof that the medical profession has at least one member at once most learned and most capable of speculation. It may be described as a new Bridgewater Treatise on the beneficence of Providence in the adaptation of the world and all other forms of life to the propagation and wealth of parasites: it is a teleological disquisition from their point of view, and ends in the irresistible conviction that this is the best of all possible worlds—for parasites.

CORRESPONDENCE.

"TIDAL KING OF NATIONS."

Assuan: Feb. 18, 1896.

I believe that we have at last an explanation of the enigmatical title given to Tidal in the 14th chapter of Genesis. On the 20th of last month Mr. Pinches read a very interesting paper on the important Babylonian texts recently discovered by him which relate to Kudur-Lagamar or Chedor-Isomer, Tudkhula or Tid'al, and Eri-Aker or Arioch. They are, unfortunately, all more or less mutilated; but one of them states that Kudur-Lagamar "assembled the Ummam-Manda" or "nomad hordes" of the East when he "did evil" to the people and land of Bel. The Biblical Guyyim "nations" would be the Hebrew equivalent of the Babylonian Ummam-Manda; and in Tidal, therefore, I see a king of the nomad hordes who adjoined Elam on the north. This throws light upon a passage in the great Babylonian work on astronomy which runs as follows:

"The Umman-Manda come and rule the land; the mercy-seats of the great gods are removed; Bel goes to Elam. It is prophesied that after thirty years the vanquished (?) shall be restored, and that the great gods shall return with them."

As Kudur-Lagamar was King of Elam, we can understand why the consequence of the incursion of the Umman-Manda was that Bel should go to Elam. I may add that the texts discovered by Mr. Pinches seem to be oracles addressed to the Babylonian King Khammurabi.

A. H. SAYCE.

THE RESTORED PRONUNCIATION OF GREEK.

Liverpool: Ma 18, 1896.

Profs. Conway and Arnold, in alleging authorities for their "restored" pronunciations, give just prominence to Karl Brugmann and F. Blass. My last letter showed, however, that Blass's opinions about  $\beta$ ,  $\delta$ ,  $\gamma$  are flatly opposed to theirs. I have now to show that respecting  $\phi$ ,  $\chi$ ,  $\theta$  a similar opposition exists between them and Brugmann. The Greek  $\phi$ ,  $\chi$ ,  $\theta$  usually represent Aryan  $bh$ ,  $gh$ ,  $dh$ ; and, taking  $bh$  as our example, the sound is seen to have developed (1) from ( $b+h$ ) into ( $p+h$ ), and (2) from ( $p+h$ ) into  $f$ , the modern pronunciation. There was probably an intermediate stage, wherein ( $p+h$ ) became ( $p+f$ ), as in German pfund; but the historical traces of this stage are slight, and it must have been very transient. For the present purpose it may be neglected. The earliest Greeks undoubtedly pronounced  $\phi=(p+h)$ ,  $\chi=(k+h)$ ,  $\theta=(t+h)$ . Profs. Conway and Arnold adopt this pronunciation, and give as English equivalents the ph, kh, th, in "uphill," "backhanded," and "anthill." But the modern Greek sound of  $\phi$  is f; that of  $\theta$  is that of Eng. th in thin; that of  $\chi$  is that of German (or Scotch) ch. In phonetic phrase they are no longer "aspirated," but "spirant"; and this change is not recent, but goes back to quite ancient times. It is admitted to go back for  $\theta$  in some dialects to the critical period 500-300 B.C. But the Attic evidence of that period is not decisive; and I imagine the reason of that to be that this was precisely the period when this change was extending itself in Attica. It has surely escaped the professors' notice that Miss E. A. S. Dawes, the lady who first gained the Doctorate of Literature at London University, won it by a thesis which maintained that the evidence respecting the classical pronunciation of  $\phi$ ,  $\chi$ ,  $\theta$  is not decisively in favour of either view. This thesis, a work of 103 pages, was published a year ago (The Pronunciation of the Greek Aspirates, David Nutt), and deserves the most careful perusal. I commend it to Profs. Conway and Arnold, as a detailed proof of the complexity and uncertainty of some of the questions which they take leave to decide offhand with so light a heart. When I finished its perusal myself I was only disappointed with the extreme caution of the conclusion. It seemed to me that upon the facts related the author might safely have claimed the spirantic pronunciation as existent in Athens in the fourth century B.C.

Let me now quote Brugmann (Grundriss, pp. 365-6):

"[The aspirated pronunciations of  $\phi$ ,  $\chi$ ,  $\theta$ ] lasted on in most dialects, and certainly in Ion.-Att., unaltered into the historical period. . . . Out of these arose, in most combinations, through the intermediate stage of affricates ( $=pf$ , &c.), voiceless spirants. We are not in a position exactly to fix this change in place and time, because the written record offers no sufficiently certain points of attachment."

The spirantic movement, therefore, attacked Attica last, but it attacked it on every side. The question is, when did Attica succumb? When more probably than during that period, 500-300 B.C., when Athens became the busy centre of other Greek life?

Greek, in contrast to Sanskrit, allows frequent conjunctions of two aspirates: the combinations  $\chi\theta$ , as in  $\chi\theta\acute{\epsilon}\nu$ , and  $\phi\theta$ , as in  $\phi\theta\acute{\iota}\nu$ , are especially common. In such combinations, Profs. Conway and Arnold say:

"The aspirate is by custom written twice, but is only to be sounded once: the logical spelling would be either  $\pi\tau\acute{\iota}\nu$ ,  $\kappa\tau\acute{\epsilon}\nu$ , or  $\pi\theta\acute{\iota}\nu$ ,  $\kappa\theta\acute{\epsilon}\nu$ . . . . Examples of both these methods occur on inscriptions beside the ordinary spellings."

Is this direction based on their authorities, or is it a silent concession to the despised "tutorial" point of view? In other words, did not Profs. Conway and Arnold wish to avoid declining  $\chi\theta\acute{\epsilon}\nu$ , or conjugating  $\phi\theta\acute{\iota}\nu$ , with two aspirates, before their classes? These combinations are not really unpronounceable, and the earliest Greeks undoubtedly did pronounce them. Prof. Blass, too, in discussing this very point, expressly disavours what they state about the monuments by saying (§ 28) that

"this form of writing [i.e., the double aspirate] is, as a matter of fact, much too well established for such an explanation to hold water; the four or five exceptions on archaic or later monuments,  $\kappa\tau\acute{\iota}\tau\acute{o}\nu$ ,  $\kappa\alpha\tau\alpha\theta\acute{\iota}\mu\acute{\epsilon}\nu\eta\varsigma$ , &c., can hardly count" (Purton's translation, p. 105).

[Readers of this translation will get the right sense of the context by altering "transformed" in the previous sentence to "transferred," Ger. übertragen.]

I feel sure that these double aspirates would repay further study. Change in pronunciation, as in all other things, follows the line of greatest traction and of least resistance. The initial  $\chi\theta$  and  $\phi\theta$ , though not unpronounceable in their original aspirated values, undoubtedly placed the  $\chi$  and  $\phi$  in a position where aspirated pronunciation was peculiarly difficult and spirantic pronunciation was peculiarly tempting. It is highly probable, therefore, that this was the point in the language at which the spirantising tendency would first attack the  $\chi$  and the  $\phi$ , though without necessarily attacking the  $\theta$ . At this stage the value of initial  $\chi\theta$  would be (Ger.  $ch+t+h$ ) and that of initial  $\phi\theta$  would be ( $f+t+h$ ); and here for some time the matter might rest, although it would involve both  $\chi$  and  $\phi$  having different values in different words. It is hardly scientific to insist too closely here on the principle "one symbol, one value." A scanty alphabet, like the Greek, nearly always has duplicate values. The above theory would tend to explain a strange phonetic phenomenon in Modern Greek which hitherto has been a puzzle. The modern pronunciation of  $\chi\theta\acute{\epsilon}\nu$ ,  $\phi\theta\acute{\iota}\nu$ , and the like, is chōn, ftino, &c., differing only from the ancient pronunciation above conjectured in the dropping of the  $h$  after the  $t$ . I suggest that though  $\chi\theta$ ,  $\phi\theta$  undoubtedly became ( $ch+th$ ) and ( $f+th$ ) respectively in the polite Greek of Alexandria and Constantinople, the more ancient form survived widely in dialect, and was the direct parent of the modern pronunciation. The period at which this could easily happen was that of the Turkish domination, during which many dialectal phenomena came to the surface, exactly as they did during the Norman domination in England.

One argument which appears to weigh strongly with Prof. Blass for the aspirated pronunciation is that derived from Latin PH, CH, TH, standing for Greek  $\phi$ ,  $\chi$ ,  $\theta$ . At first sight these seem certainly intended for aspirates, but the significance of the second and third is reduced to a vanishing point when we ask ourselves what choice had they? With only the Latin alphabet at command, TH was the natural symbol for  $\theta$ , and CH for  $\chi$ , whether  $\theta$  and  $\chi$  were aspirates or spirants. With PH it was otherwise. There was the Latin f: and if the Romans refused to represent Greek  $\phi$  by Latin f, it must have been because  $\phi$  was an aspirate  $= PH = (P+H)$ . This argument would have seemed unanswerable, if Prof. Blass had not supported it (§ 28) by quotations from Quintilian, which reveal the rift in it. The first quotation relates how Cicero laughed at a Greek witness in the suit for Fundanius because he could not pronounce the first letter of that Latin name. The second describes  $\phi$ , in specific contrast to Latin f, as dulcissime spirans littera, surely no description of the explosive ( $p+h$ ). The third describes the unpleasantness of the Latin f as caused by its being puffed out between the interstices of the teeth. The Greek  $\phi$ , therefore, was a gentle labial spirant, which was not puffed out between lip and tooth, like the Latin f and ours. It must have been the bilabial f, the articulatory action of which is described by Bell as that of "blowing to cool." The voiced counterpart of this sound is well known in Germany as the common value of Ger. w in the South: i.e., the v sound, which is produced by North Germans, as by us, between lower teeth and upper lip, is produced by South Germans between the two lips.

Might I suggest without offence to the most distinguished worker in this field that the habitual acceptance of bilabial and dentilabial sounds as identical has somewhat blunted his appreciation of their real difference. For Blass's comment on the Fundanius anecdote is that there must have been a distinction between Greek  $\phi$  and Latin f more fundamental than between labial and dentilabial f. No phonetician would call that distinction slight. In the current number of the Maître Phonétique (February 15, 1896) there is the following observation from that very competent observer, A. R. G. Vianna, of Lisbon:

"Si un étranger prononce v dentilabial au lieu de v bilabial, tout espagnol en sera choqué. Si il prononce δ au lieu de v bilabial, on ne s'en apercevra pas."

Such is the immense effect, pro et contra, of what I have called the national equation.

But, setting aside these digressions of my own, I claim to have shown, as a matter of fact, that authorities do not agree, as claimed by Profs. Arnold and Conway, respecting the classical pronunciation of  $\phi$ ,  $\chi$ ,  $\theta$ ; and, in the uncertainty whether this pronunciation was aspirated or spirant, there are strong tutorial reasons for preferring the latter. These are: (1) that in that case no change from present custom is needed, except to sound  $\chi$  like ch in German; (2) that the least possible breach is thus made between the ancient and modern language; and (3) that we avoid the introduction of the three unmanageable sounds—( $p+h$ ), ( $k+h$ ), and ( $t+h$ ). Have the professors noted that many Englishmen, and most Germans, aspirate their tenues, p, k, t, more or less strongly? I have at the present time a student who persistently pronounces  $\pi$ ,  $\kappa$ ,  $\tau$  as ( $p+h$ ), ( $k+h$ ), ( $t+h$ ), exactly as the professors want him to pronounce  $\phi$ ,  $\chi$ ,  $\theta$ . To distinguish the latter effectually, we should need to aspirate them with a violence which I feel sure would lead to their summary rejection as cacophonous barbarisms by school-master and pupil alike.

R. J. LLOYD.

Erratum.—In my last letter (March 7), for "French (i.e., 'dorsal') b, hard g, and d," please read "French b, hard g and d (i.e., 'dorsal' d)."

SCIENCE NOTES.

THE total amount of subscriptions to the Huxley Memorial Fund, promised and received, now exceeds £2300, which is sufficient to provide a statue in the Natural History Museum and a medal at the Royal College of Science. Appeal is therefore made for the third object of the memorial—the furtherance of biological science, by the foundation of scholarships, lectureships, &c.; and for this purpose a considerable sum will be required. The hon. treasurer of the fund is Sir John Lubbock.

THE anniversary meeting of the Chemical Society will be held at Burlington House on Thursday, when Mr. A. G. Vernon Harcourt will deliver his presidential address, and the council and officers for the year will be elected.

THE De Morgan medal, which is given triennially by the Mathematical Society, will be awarded at the June meeting. The last recipient was Prof. Klein, of Göttingen.

THE evening discourse at the Royal Institution next Friday will be delivered by Prof. Dewar, upon "New Researches on Liquid Air."

MR. EDWIN WHEELER, of Clifton, has presented to the Natural History Department of the British Museum the results of his indefatigable labour in the production of 2449 water-colour drawings from nature of species of fungi to be found in Great Britain. For a long number of years he has devoted his leisure time to this object, producing the twelve bulky volumes just accepted by the authorities, who have sent to him a cordial letter of acknowledgment.

MESSRS. MACMILLAN & Co. will shortly publish a volume by Prof. William Ramsay on the recent discovery by himself and Lord Rayleigh of argon in atmospheric air. Some idea of the methods of extracting this gas from air, and of its properties, was given in scientific journals and in the daily press, yet these accounts can scarcely be called available for the educated man with no special knowledge of the recent developments of physics and chemistry. It has therefore been resolved to prepare such an account as appears to be much wanted, explaining where necessary in popular language the reasoning employed in drawing conclusions relative to argon. But the whole history of the discovery of the gases in air is so closely related to this recent discovery, that it would hardly have been possible to present the subject in its entirety without a preliminary sketch of the discoverers and their work. The little book therefore treats of all the progress made in this branch of chemistry by a number of men—all of them English. The volume will contain portraits of Cavendish, Boyle, Lavoisier, and other early discoverers.

MESSRS. LONGMANS & Co. have made arrangements for the publication of two laboratory manuals to meet the requirements of the Science and Art Department: Elementary Practical Chemistry, by Mr. G. S. Newth; and Elementary Practical Physics, by Mr. W. Watson—both demonstrators in the Royal College of Science.

MESSRS. W. H. ALLEN & Co. announce for immediate publication the tenth volume of their "Naturalists' Library," being British Birds, vol. ii., by Dr. A. Bowdler Sharpe, of the British Museum, the editor of the Library. Mr. W. F. Kirby's second volume on Butterflies will be ready in April.

MR. BALCHIN'S "Waterloo Reader" of Elementary Science for the fourth standard will be issued next week by Messrs. Abbott, Jones & Co. Like other volumes of the same series, it consists of home-chats about the ordinary incidents of every-day life, and aims at the formation of habits of correct thought.

PHILOLOGY NOTES.

THE March number of the Classical Review (David Nutt) contains an unusual proportion of interesting papers. Mr. G. B. Hussey, of Chicago, maintains a novel theory with regard to the incorporation of several Dialogues in Plato's Republic.

"In brief, the result of this argument is, that a Platonic Dialogue irrespective of the date of the original composition, finally had one of three forms: (1) direct dialogue—used at all periods; (2) indirect dialogue—made by recasting the direct dialogue; and (3) continuous discourse—represented by the Timaeus and part of the Laws. In his desire to unite his Dialogues into larger groups, Plato promised a tetralogy; (a) Theaetetus, Sophist, Statesman, Philosopher. Later, he took away the Philosopher, and, with the intention of calling it "Hermocrates," projected a tetralogy; (b) Republic (l.-v.), Timaeus, Critias, Hermocrates. After dropping the names of the last two and fusing them with the first, the result was (c) the Republic (l.-x.) and the Timaeus, as we have them at the present day."

Dr. A. W. Verrall is as ingenious as ever in finding a theory of the calendar in the Trachiniae of Sophocles.

"Our proposition is simply that, in respect of the chronological framework, the story represented in the Trachiniae exhibits and is founded upon a certain calendar, and certain institutions relating to the calendar, which existed when the story was first thrown into shape; and that this fact, interesting in itself as a piece of historical evidence, is not without significance, even for the reader of Sophocles, as accounting for some peculiarities of structure and expression, which were naturally accepted by the poet from his traditional authority, but would not be justifiable if we suppose them invented by him for the purpose of his play."

Prof. W. Ridgeway, a rival of Dr. Verrall in ingenuity, suggests, as explaining what led Pythagoras to the doctrine that the world was built of numbers, that he first acquired some knowledge of and interest in crystallography from his father's trade of signet-engraver, and then based upon it the study of geometry in Egypt. Hence it is that he conceived the world as built up of a series of material bodies imitating geometrical solids. Prof. J. B. Bury discusses the battle of Marathon, with the result of still further discrediting Herodotus, and of attributing to the Persians a series of strategical designs worthy of a von Moltke. Mr. Herbert Richards begins some valuable notes on the Oeconomicus of Xenophon, similar to those which he contributed to former numbers on the Republic of Plato. Mr. J. A. Adam makes a plausible emendation of a passage in Plato, Rep. x. 607 c. For  $\delta \tau \omega \nu \delta \iota \alpha \sigma \phi \omega \nu \delta \chi \lambda \omega \varsigma \kappa \rho \alpha \tau \omega \nu$ —"the crowd of philosophers overmastering Jove," he would read  $\delta \tau \omega \nu \lambda \iota \alpha \nu \sigma \phi \omega \nu \delta \chi \lambda \omega \varsigma \kappa \rho \alpha \tau \omega \nu$ —"the rabble of the unco-clever paws"—possibly a fragment from Euripides. Mr. H. W. Auden illustrates Homer's description of a lion breaking the neck of a cow by a passage from the "Badminton" volume on Big Game Shooting. Among the reviews we may specially mention those of Jowett and Campbell's edition of the Republic, by Prof. J. B. Mayor; of D'Arcey Thompson's "Glossary of Greek Birds," by W. W. Merry; and of Alfred Nutt's essay on "The Happy Other-world," in Kuno Meyer's edition of "The Voyage of Bran," by F. B. Jevons. Finally, Mr. Arthur Sidgwick sends a rendering in Greek hexameters of Browning's "Lyric Love," of which we quote the opening lines:

Ἦ φίλη, ὦ θεῖας κρείσσαν κοῦνδου μελωδεῖν,
ὦ θάμβει πύθουσ' ἀγῆς ἀπερσίον ἄσαι,
ὦ κῆρ ἀδάματον, καταναντίον ἡελίου ἀνέσθαι πτερύγεσσι μετ' οὐρανοῦ ἱερὸν ἔρκος, ὥσθι τ' ἱερά θεοῖσι χεῖαι μεγάλῃτορ' αἰδῆν.

REPORTS OF SOCIETIES.

CLIFTON SHAKESPEARE SOCIETY.—(Saturday, Feb. 22.)

ARTHUR S. WAY, Esq., president, in the chair.—In a paper on "The Poetry in Marston," Mr. Way (after quoting Prof. Saintsbury's observations about the lightning flashes of poetry to be met with in Lyly, Greene, Peele, and Marlowe, who in probably the very next passages—certainly in passages not very remote—tell us that this is all matter of chance, that they are all capable of sinking below the level of Sackville at his even conceivably worst—close to the level of Edwards) said that Marston challenges a place among this second sort of immortals by virtue of gleams of splendour, of gusts of perfume, which show of what he is capable. It is curious that these diamonds are found only in his plays. As we press on through the jungle of talk, ever and anon we light upon some lovely flower. Amid the storm of wild and whirling words by which his characters express or pump up passion, now and then break in strains which are harp-notes of another sphere. In such passages even the metrical quality of the verse seems to partake of the touch of inspiration. It flows no longer haltingly; no longer inlines docked of their true proportions, or dragging, like wounded snakes, their slow length along: the measure paces softly and stately, as the goddess of the great singer of the Aeneid. Worthy of Marlowe is the rapture of Antonio at the approach of Mellida:

"Leap, heart! she comes—
She comes! Smile heaven, and softest Southern wind
Kiss her cheek gently with perfumed breath.
She comes: creation's purity, admired,
Adored, amazing rarity,—she comes!
She comes! Her eyes dart wonder on my heart!
Mount blood; soul to my lips, taste Hebe's cup."

Now this is not merely passionate, melodious blank verse: it is lyrical blank verse. It is in this respect of the same character as Juliet's soliloquy: "Gallop space, ye fiery footed steeds," or as Tennyson's "Tears, idle tears." It is only in their highest moods that poets can thus handle—we might say transfigure—blank verse; can make it throb with passion and thrill with melody, and sing itself till we are surprised to find that we have not missed the rhyme that is wont to give the undertone of music to the deep feeling of lyrical expression. Marston's description of the dawn—

"Darkness is fled; look, infant morn hath drawn Bright silver curtains 'bout the couch of night;
And now Aurora's horse trots azure rings, Breathing fair light about the firmament"— is touched with the same splendour, though less gloriously, as Marlowe's

"The horse that guide the golden eye of heaven,
And blow the morning from their nostrils,
Making their fiery gait above the clouds";

and Shakspeare's

"What envious streaks
Do lace the severing clouds in yonder east.
Night's candles are burnt out, and jocund day Stands tiptoe on the misty mountain-tops";

or Tennyson's

"And the wild team
Which love thee, yearning for thy yoke, arise,
And shake the darkness from their loosened
manes,
And beat the twilight into flakes of fire"— which reads like a reminiscence of Marston's:

"For see, the dapple-grey coursers of the morn Beat up the light with their bright silver hooves,
And chase it through the sky."

The midnight vision of Antonio's, beginning:
"Three parts of night were swallowed in the gulf Of ravenous time," with its magnificent climax—

"The verge of Heaven
Was ringed with flames, and all the upper vault
Thick laced with flakes of fire, in midst whereof
A blazing comet shot his threatening train"— would be worthy of the days which produced the dream of Clarence, but for the deplorable anti-climax of "at which my nose straight bled." But this touch of bathos is characteristic of Shakspeare's contemporaries almost without exception. They could none of them attain to the "pride of ample pinion" which bore the supreme singer of them all sunward without flagging or faltering. The grandly terrible picture of

"Lo, thus I heave my blood-dyed hands to heaven,

Like the insatiate hell, still crying more," would, had it been discovered by a critic as a fragment, have been probably assigned, without hesitation, to Marlowe. Of "jewels five-words long that on the outstretched forefinger of all time sparkle for ever" Marston has, rather by his misfortune than his fault, bequeathed us none. For two such fair-cut gems as

"Tossing up

A grateful spirit to Omnipotence"

(where gratitude is beautifully compared to incense fumes tossed up from the altar) and

"Whose brow is wreathed with the silver crown Of clear content," deserved a better fate than the poetical oblivion that has overtaken them. In estimating a poet, we are guilty of critical treason if we take not due account of the heights to which he can soar, though his average level may be far below. For there are evidences that inspiration lifted Marston above the common throng; that, though it might be but by fitful gleams, yet there verily did shine upon him

"The light that never was on sea or land,
The consecration and the poet's dream."

ZOOLOGICAL.—(Tuesday, March 3.)

SIR W. H. FLOWER, president, in the chair.—The secretary read a report on the additions that had been made to the Society's menagerie during the month of February, 1896, and called special attention to a young Klipppringer antelope, presented by Commander Alfred Paget.—Mr. G. E. H. Barrett-Hamilton exhibited two skeletons and other bones of the Norway lemming (Myodes lemmus), obtained by Dr. H. Gadow from caves in South Portugal. This discovery had increased our knowledge of the distribution of the Norway lemming in past times. In present times the Norway lemming was, roughly speaking, only to be found in Norway and Lapland, its southern range extending to about 58½° N. lat.; but its remains had been met with in England, and in Quedlinburg in Saxony. Dr. H. Gadow gave an account of the caves in Southern Portugal in which he had procured these lemmings' bones, along with those of other animals.—Mr. Solater opened a discussion on the rules of zoological nomenclature, by reading a paper on the divergences between the rules for naming animals of the German Zoological Society and the Stricklandian Code usually followed by British naturalists. After giving some details of the plan proposed by the German Zoological Society for a new work on the Animal Kingdom, to be called Das Tierreich, and to contain an account of all the species of recent animals hitherto described (estimated to be at least 386,000 in number), Mr. Solater shortly recapitulated the rules which were intended to be used in the preparation of this important work. The main divergences from the Stricklandian Code were pointed out to be three in number: (1) The permission to use the same generic names in zoology and botany; (2) the use of "tautonyms"—that is, the same generic and specific name for a species in certain cases; and (3) the adoption of the tenth edition of the Systema Naturae, instead of the twelfth, as the commencement of binary nomenclature. The advantages of and objections to these alterations of the Stricklandian Code were discussed, and other minor points of nomenclature were touched upon, among which was the use of trinomials, which Mr. Solater approved of as designations for subspecies. A communication was read from Graf Hans von Berlepsch, expressing his regret at not being present on this occasion, and giving his opinion on the three points specially discussed. He was not disinclined to give way on the first, but maintained the necessity of the second and third alterations proposed by the German rules. After some remarks by the chairman, Mr. E. Hartert spoke in defence of the German rules, and was followed by Prof. Lankester, Mr. H. J. Elwes, Dr. Sharp, Mr. Blanford, Mr. H. O. Forbes, and Mr. Kirby, who made remarks on various points.

CAMBRIDGE ANTIQUARIAN SOCIETY.—(Wednesday, March 4.)

W. M. FAWCETT, Esq., president, in the chair.—Mr. J. Bass Mullinger, University Lecturer in History, communicated some "Notes on the Relations of Lord Bacon with the University of Cambridge." The paper was mainly devoted to pointing out the evidence which serves to show how cordial were the relations of Bacon, throughout his life, with both the University and the Town, and the remarkable manner in which these facts have been overlooked or ignored by all his biographers. Bacon seems to have always regarded Cambridge as a haven of refuge where he might spend his days in study in the event of falling in his professional career. He was both standing Counsel to the University and its representative in Parliament, as well as High Steward of the town. The University appears, in turn, to have warmly appreciated his genius. Williams, the Archbishop, admired his Essays so much that the catalogue of his books at Buckden shows him to have been the possessor of the earliest edition in French; while Joseph Mede thought a copy of the quarto English edition of 1625 the most acceptable present he could make to his relative, Sir Martin Stuteville. Dr. Collins, Provost of King's, declared, after reading the Advancement of Learning, that he felt that he must re-commence his studies anew. When Bacon died, many of the most eminent members of the University (notwithstanding the cloud under which his last years were passed) contributed Latin verses in honour of his memory and his philosophy. These were afterwards printed in a thin quarto of seventeen leaves, of which it is doubtful whether Cambridge still possesses a copy, although there is one in the British Museum. But the fact of this significant tribute has been altogether passed over by Bacon's biographers, although its existence is referred to by Bishop Monk in his Life of Duport. On the other hand, Bacon's own letters when presenting copies of his works to the University Library, together with his design of founding a lectureship in natural philosophy in the University, clearly prove his attachment to his alma mater and anxiety for her progress in knowledge.—A short discussion followed, in which Mr. Acland, Dr. Clarke, Prof. Ridgeway, and Mr. H. T. Francis took part.—The Rev. C. L. Acland exhibited and commented on "A Stone Implement recently found in Shetland." The stone is of large dimensions, its material is a beautifully mottled serpentine, and it shows structural peculiarities of a very unusual kind. Mr. Acland's remarks were illustrated by a series of choice specimens of Shetland and Orkney stone implements, lent by James W. Orrater, Esq., of Kirkwall, and forming part of his great collection of the Antiquities of the Northern Islands.—Prof. Hughes, Prof. Ridgeway, and Baron A. von Hügel took part in the discussion which followed.

FINE ART.

Renaissance Fancies and Studies: being a Sequel to "Euphorion." By Vernon Lee. (Smith, Elder & Co.)

It is, I suppose, some ten or twelve years since Euphorion appeared floating on the crest of what we may call the "Renaissance wave." That wave is nearly spent now; and its sequel was more or less the sequel to Euphorion. Some good art, and some astonishingly bad art, followed the "Renaissance wave," a great many unnecessary emotions, and a most necessary moral were called up. So with Euphorion. Most of us found it a suggestive and immature work, full of ability and the dogmas beloved of youth, equally full of penetration and the assertiveness which is never absent from early promise. One predicted, as one desired, a moderating influence to balance the impetuous oracles one found there upon such delicate themes as medieval love and fifteenth-century art. Time has done Vernon Lee and us this service; these studies are the fruit. Botticelli and Mantegna (of whom, if my memory serves, Euphorion had hard things to say) are avenged; even Fra Angelico is avenged, or beginning to be avenged. What Vernon Lee says in the opening phrases of her latest book of Cherubini's music, she might say of these three—"They struck me at that time as foolish, barbarous, almost gross; but since then I have learned to think of them . . . as of something greater." She has, in fact, "come round" to the fifteenth century; but she is still Vernon Lee, still infallible, oracular, still a good hater, still apt to superlatives. In the days of Euphorion she could not away with Botticelli; in these days she will have none of the Byzantine workers in mosaic, she dislikes Romanesque, she is angry with Abelard for having lived in the twelfth century, and for having been what his times made him. And when Vernon Lee is angry she is very angry indeed, and very incisive. Indignation is good and incisiveness is good when one has a brief; but the critic has no brief, and the point of view should count for much. It does not seem to me to count for anything in "Renaissance Fancies"; and it would be well, before a passion is torn to tatters, to remember that your devils of to-day may well be your gods of to-morrow. It is uncritical to scorn Byzantine art because it is not of the Renaissance; it is uncritical to gird at Fra Angelico because he saw heaven and did his best to utter it on earth. "Pink," moreover, is no reproach as yet. In Renaissance Fancies it is so used repeatedly. Lastly, it neither comports with good criticism nor good literature to be jocular at the expense of New Testament stories. Vernon Lee says she is growing old. It is not for me to contradict her, but I heartily hope she may grow older—old enough to be sorry for pp. 86 and 128 of this volume.

The worst of the oracular attitude is that it forbids tripping: the oracle must "keep it up." Vernon Lee trips, for an oracle, rather freely. Let her, to begin with, correct her proofs. I submit for this purpose pp. 26, 27. On p. 42, "between Constantine to Barbarossa" is an unfortunate way of putting it. On p. 86 there is talk of Cosimo "Rossetti," and in the line below a word "scuddles," which may be sound, but is at least ugly. On p. 117 she says that "the Italian Virgin, save with one or two Lombards, is never permitted to suckle." She is talking of the familiar picture-motive of the Virgine lattante, and is elaborately wrong. A note qualifies this mistake by another. "The so-called Botticelli (now given, I believe, to San Gallo) in the National Gallery" is, as she admits, one exception to her rule. I can recall four other Tuscan pictures in the same collection (one of them a very famous Filippino), and could reckon them by scores in Italy. The "so-called Botticelli," you must know, was "given" to San Gallo by a lady, who found out from the Catalogue that that architect's name was on the back of the picture, and concluded that this was the usual place for a painter's signature in the fifteenth century. One must be excused from considering this evidence final. To resume, on p. 128 we are told that "The Temptation" is "a theme rarely, if ever, treated before the sixteenth century." It is treated by Botticelli in the Sistine Chapel, and, I think, by others long before his time.

From such matters we might go on to discuss some of the critical positions taken up by Vernon Lee. Her chapter on "Imaginative Art of the Renaissance," for instance, proceeds upon a fallacy. A thing is not imaginative because you get imaginative stimulus out of it. The imaginative man needs much less than a Giottoesque fresco to set his soul travelling. Indeed, one would be inclined to say that imagination was most nourished by the work it had to do, by the need to fend for itself. Not thus will Vernon Lee avoid the truth that Italian art was not, as a whole, imaginative any more than Italian literature was. Botticelli and Mantegna, Piero di Cosimo, Signorelli—who beside? So with literature. Dante and Boccaccio, perhaps Bojardo—who else? A child will ride to heaven on a broomstick; but the broomstick does not take him. He, on the contrary, takes the broomstick. So with Vernon Lee and Italian art. The imaginative quality is what she puts there, not what she finds. There is as little to be said for her treatment of the work of the Primitives and Mosaicists. She appears to think that the value of their work lay in what they left to be done by their successors—in other words, that a work of art can be respectable because it has led to the production of works which are undoubtedly respectable. Believing this, she says on the very forefront of her book that "the poor primitive rhymes and primitive figures" (by which words I trust she does not mean the "Stabat Mater" and the Ravenna Mosaics—but sadly do fear) are signs of a teeming world. "Hence," she says, and I can only underline it—"Hence the importance, the venerableness of all those medieval beginners." Words fail: what is there to say? Apart from the staring fallacy involved in such a critical apparatus, is it really possible that Vernon Lee can hear or read the "Dies Irae" or the "O Salutaris," and think their venerableness lies in their having paved the way for Tasso? Vernon Lee says Dante; but she can hardly mean that Dante was educated upon the "Stabat Mater." To make her figure trim she must mean some Renaissance poet, just as she means Raphael when she talks of "all the Renaissance." Of course, she does not really mean any of it. The thing will not bear examination. But in the recesses of her mind there somewhere lurks a notion that Giotto is entitled to respect because Raphael came after him: which is absurd.

It is good to turn after this sorry wrangling to right wrongs to "A Seeker of Pagan Perfection," which is the best thing in the book. This is an "Imaginary Portrait," a piece of parabolic criticism in Pater's manner, and a really successful effort after creative appreciation. In work of this sort, as may have been observed, you do not give information: you let it drop. I might call it instruction by parenthesis without doing it disservice, and go on to complain that the parentheses are longer and less unconscious than Pater's. But I should still own the piece to be a good piece, with a direct aim and distinct achievement in a task of uncommon difficulty. It would not be easy to find a sunnier picture of Renaissance Rome, or a truer one of the wistful craving of the Humanists for a thing which they mainly loved for the mystery which hid it, and their pathetic dismay when, having rent the veil, they found emptiness. "A succession of boxes with nothing in the last box": that is about true of life as revealed to the Humanists. The pathos of the dream was very real; its presentment by Vernon Lee is extremely good.

One word of praise, lastly, for the sober and tender valediction of Mr. Pater, with which "Renaissance Fancies" fitly concludes. Pater's own life was that of the Renaissance in epitome. It may yet be so with Vernon Lee's. But she must temper the oracle here and there.

MAURICE HEWLETT.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE THEATRE AT ERETRIA.

Chicago: Feb. 22, 1896.

The notice in the ACADEMY of February 8 of my report on the theatre at Eretria contains an inaccuracy which, if allowed to pass uncorrected, is likely to cause still further misunderstanding of the evidence which this building furnishes toward the solution of the stage-question. Inasmuch as prominent English scholars have drawn an argument from the peculiar structure of this theatre in favour of the high Vitruvian stage, in controversy of the opinion of the American excavators, permit me briefly to restate the facts in the case.

The Eretrian theatre is distinguished from the normal Greek theatre by three structural peculiarities: (1) an orchestra sunk the full height of the proscenium below the level of the dressing-room buildings or the scena; (2) a large vaulted passage under the scena, connecting the upper surface at the rear of the scena with the orchestra; and (3) a tunnel under the orchestra, leading from a point behind the proscenium to the centre of the orchestra—a flight of steps at either end connects with the surface. Your notice confounds the vaulted passage with the tunnel.

Soon after the discovery of this theatre, Mr. Ernest Gardner urged against Dr. Dörpfeld's theory the fact that here the top of the proscenium was level with the dressing-rooms: it was absurd, he said, to suppose that buckined and padded actors were compelled to descend the steep steps at the rear of the scena, and to pass through the vaulted passage, in order to reach their station below in the orchestra. In my report I show that an easy means of descent was provided within the building, and I suggest the probable purpose of the vaulted passage. The objection of Mr. Gardner to the descent of the actors is invalid, because in any event the members of the chorus were compelled to make the descent. The elevation of the scena above the orchestra is explained by the fact that the theatre was built upon a level plain. The earth for the support of the cavea was gained by sinking the orchestra.

The tunnel under the orchestra, therefore, remains to be accounted for by the opponents of the new theory. It is probably of the fourth or third century before Christ. There can be no doubt of its purpose. A more suitable arrangement for the apparition of the Ghost of Darius in the "Persians" of Aeschylus, for example, could scarcely have been devised. Scholars have long maintained that such a tunnel must have existed in the Greek theatre, and have predicted its discovery. It has been found in four theatres since its discovery at Eretria, but unfortunately in no other place in a good state of preservation. Hoc erat in votis: our prayers have been answered.

EDWARD CAPPES.

THE SPHINX.

Bournemouth: March 14, 1896.

I enclose a cutting from the Sphinx of February 29. This paper is only a society, so the news about the finding of the headpiece may be unreliable. Should the piece have been found, and there be writing on it, something may be solved as to the date of the repairs of the Sphinx under the XXVth or XVIIIth Dynasty.

I hope some of your scientific correspondents in Egypt may throw light on this find.

J. C. ROSS, Lieut.-Colonel, Late Inspector-General of Irrigation, Egypt.

"Col. G. E. Raum, whose excavations at the Sphinx at Ghizeh we mentioned last week, has continued his digging, and on Wednesday made a most interesting find. At a depth of 14 or 15 feet below the surface he unearthed the missing cap of the Sphinx. The cap measures 4 ft. 3 in. in extreme breadth, 2 ft. 9 in. in width, and 2 ft. 2 in. on top. It is marked with the three lotos columns, underneath which is what appears to be the figure of a snake. The cap was found in the temple of the Sphinx between the fore paws and is painted red. It has an inscription, which is being deciphered by the Museum authorities. As the weather has set in so hot, Col. Raum will defer further excavations until the fall of the year, when, with the permission of the government, he hopes to make some very exhaustive diggings. His public spirit in undertaking these researches is highly praiseworthy."

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

It is now officially announced that the usual banquet at the opening of the Royal Academy will not take place this year.

THE following have been elected Associates of the Royal Scottish Academy: Mr. J. Thorburn Ross and Mr. R. Payton Reid, of Edinburgh; and Mr. Wellwood Rattray and Mr. James Paterson, of Glasgow.

M. J. JAMES TISSOT's famous series of water-colour drawings, 365 in number, illustrating "The Life of our Lord," will be on view next week at the Lemercier Gallery, New Bond-street.

A SECOND exhibition of artistic posters will be opened next week at the Royal Aquarium. As before, the collection has been arranged by Mr. Edward Bella, who has also compiled the catalogue, illustrated with several plates in colours and numerous reproductions in black and white.

DURING the whole of next week Messrs. Sotheby will be engaged in selling the second portion of the Montagu collection of coins, consisting of the Greek series. The first portion, it may be remembered, was British and Anglo-Saxon, of which the late Mr. Montagu was known to possess the finest private cabinet in existence. It will be a surprise to many to find that this second portion is only less interesting than the first. Mr. Montagu, we are told, first began to collect Greek coins in 1889, yet such was his enthusiasm, assisted by wealth and guided by knowledge, that he brought together, within little more than five years, what we now see before us—from which, be it understood, the duplicates and inferior examples have already been weeded out. The total number of lots is about 800; but there is hardly a single piece that is not valuable for its intrinsic beauty, its historic importance, or its rarity. For Mr. Montagu seems to have combined in his own person all the numismatic virtues. The dealers of Europe and Asia contributed to his collection, but he would keep nothing that was not the very best of its kind. The result may be seen in the ten autotype plates appended to the catalogue, which are simply crowded with pieces it is a pleasure to look upon. Perhaps the series from Sicily and Magna Græcia is the most beautiful. Those from Asia Minor and the islands include many great rarities. There are also excellent examples of the quasi-Greek coinage of Phœnicia, Judæa, Indo-Bactria, Egypt, and Carthage. The catalogue has evidently been compiled with that diligence and accuracy which shows it to be a labour of love.

THE report for 1895 of the Director of the National Gallery shows that during the year 16 pictures were purchased and 13 bequests and donations were made. The Gallery was visited by 472,548 persons on the public days during the year, showing a daily average attendance on such days (210 in number) of 2250. On students' days (Thursdays and Fridays) 41,515 persons were admitted, the admission fees amounting to £1037 17s. 6d., as compared with £1116 1s. 6d. received in 1894. This sum is devoted as an "appropriation in aid" of the Parliamentary vote. The total number of students' attendances was 20,359. Independently of partial studies, 887 oil-colour copies of pictures were made—namely, 374 from the works of 89 old masters and 513 from the works of 59 modern painters.

THE STAGE.

MR. HOWE, the veteran actor of legitimate drama, whose last days graced the Lyceum company, died, we are sorry to record, at Cincinnati, a week or two ago. His years were eighty and four. Before he joined the troop of the Lyceum, under its famous leader, Sir Henry Irving, Mr. Howe was for no less than forty years with the old Haymarket company. Like that interesting actor who, with even longer years than Mr. Howe, lingers robust in an extreme old age at Plymouth, he had seen Edmund Kean. Mr. Howe was not a great master of comedy or tragedy; but he was never inefficient, and as years grew his performances increased in interest. He knew everything in the old repertory; he was acquainted thoroughly with ancient and sanctioned practice; yet his ideas were not stereotyped, and, though himself the depository of invaluable secrets, he was not inaccessible to the newer lights. It is possible that Henry Howe was the only professional actor ever born of Quaker parents, and endowed with Quaker education. More than a century ago the Quakers of a particular "meeting" assembled over Benjamin West, and decided that he might be a painter; but five and sixty years since, when Howe was wanting a profession, and knew what was the one he wanted, the Quakers, we are sure, would have refused approval of his proposed career as an actor. Howe went his own way; and not so very long after he had left Acworth School—a Quaker public school in the North of England—he succeeded on reaching the boards. He never altogether threw up Quakerism—that is to say, he would certainly never have wished to dislodge all trace of it from his character. His curious steadiness, his absolute trustworthiness in every word and action, his amiable calm, and, one might say, his seriousness, were assuredly not altogether unconnected with his ancestry of "Friends." He was respected, even loved, by every one who knew him—during three generations.

LENT has affected seriously—as it is wont to do—the fortunes of several of the better pieces; and though "Jedbury Junior," with Mr. Fred Kerr and Mr. Gilbert Farquhar, and those charming comedienettes Miss Maud Millett and Miss Eva Moore, holds on its prosperous course at Terry's, "A Woman's Reason" is seen no more at the Shaftesbury—though, indeed, it disappears after a longer voyage. If the silly piece called "Gossip" comes to an end at the Comedy, no one will regret its demise. It is not the first artistic failure which its part-author has had to register. During Easter week, we believe, Mr. Henry Arthur Jones's new play comes out at the Garrick, with Mr. Willard, of course, in the principal character.

DRAMATIC recitations have never quite gone out of fashion; and what with a great actor of the elder school of the rank of Mr. Fernandez holding forth at the Palace, and Miss Florence Bourne at the St. Martin's Town Hall, and Mr. Leigh at the Steinway, there is some appearance of a revival. Mr. Leigh gives on Thursday next the last of three recitations in which, with well-prepared ability, he confines himself to Shakspeare. "Richard the Third," which he is believed to have studied with especial care, is the piece for this week. We were able to spend a portion of one evening last week in hearing Miss Florence Bourne. The range of this young artist is very noteworthy; much of the business of the light comedian, and something of the very serious actress, is known to her; and her intelligence is great. The two things which alone it was possible for us to see her do, on Friday in last week, were Mr. Ernest Warren's ingenious, but quite conventional, not to say impossible, comedietta "The Nettle," and an anonymous recitation that immediately followed it, called "Money Musk." In "The Nettle" the lady was pleasantly seconded by Mr. Manton Cathcart. "Money Musk" was quite a lesson in elocution, showing Miss Bourne to be in thorough possession of methods which, in certain of our theatres of genre, are already somewhat ridiculously discredited. Both as performer and teacher there is a place for Miss Bourne. That was made evident by even our necessarily limited acquaintance with her achievements on the occasion of Friday week.

MUSIC.

RECENT CONCERTS.

DR. JOACHIM paid his annual visit to the Crystal Palace on Saturday. On such an occasion he generally performs either the Beethoven or the Mendelssohn Concerto. This time, however, he selected one by Viotti in A minor, a work full of lovely melody, solid workmanship, and legitimate effect. The delicate and appropriate orchestration attracted special notice. It appears, however, that the real author was not Viotti, but Cherubini, a master in the art of instrumentation, who undertook to improve the score of the former composer, with whom he was on friendly terms. The Concerto was thus in many ways welcome, and it was interpreted with purity and dignity by Dr. Joachim. He afterwards played Max Bruch's attractive Romance, likewise in A minor. For both performances he received hearty applause. The programme included Grieg's characteristic Overture, "Autumn"; a dainty Intermezzo from Von Resnick's opera, "Donna Diana," already heard at one of the Mottl Concerts; and Schubert's great Symphony in C. The last named work had not been given for some time at Sydenham, and it was therefore welcome. One of the complaints raised against Schubert is that he indulged in excessive lengths. This is especially noticeable in some of his pianoforte Sonatas; but in this Symphony—what with the beauty of the themes, the characteristic developments, and the bewitching orchestration—one is scarcely conscious, during performance, of the length of time it takes. By performance, we mean a good one; with Mr. Manns and his orchestra it is always in safe hands. Mr. J. Robertson, the vocalist, was well received.

Beethoven's Rasonmoffsky Quartet in F (Op. 59, No. 1) was performed on Monday evening at the Popular Concert. The work is old—it was written ninety years ago. It has often been given by Dr. Joachim and his associates, Messrs. Ries, Gibson, and Piatti; and yet when worthily rendered, as was here the case, it always affords fresh delight. The three Rasonmoffsky Quartets represent the composer in the meridian of his skill and power; and though afterwards he may have written Quartets of deeper emotion and of more complex structure, the earlier ones exercise a more powerful sway over a large audience, for in them there is perfect balance between contents and form. Of the works of the so-called third period, this cannot always be said. Dr. Joachim played, as solo, Schumann's Fantasia in A minor (Op. 131). It was composed expressly for him in 1853, and he performed it at Düsseldorf in the same year. It is a curious work: there are moments—as, for instance, the theme in G—of great beauty and tenderness, and there are passages which enable a good performer to display virtuosity of the true kind; but some of the music is laboured or, we might say, uninspired. The Fantasia, however, claims interest, both on account of the composer who wrote it, and the artist to whom it is dedicated. The rendering on Monday was exceedingly fine, and the elaborate pianoforte accompaniment was admirably played by Mr. Bird. Schumann first wrote the accompaniment for orchestra. We doubt whether this would add much to the effect of the piece; we do not think that it has ever been played here in this, its original form. For an encore Dr. Joachim gave a transcription of one of Schumann's short pianoforte Duets. Mr. Mark Hambourg, the pianist of the evening, played as solos Chopin's Nocturne in G (Op. 37, No. 1) and a Giga con Variazioni, from a Suite in D minor by Raff. The first was decidedly disappointing. The Nocturne requires tender, poetical playing; but this Mr. Hambourg did not vouchsafe. His second solo, a set of variations "made" possibly for some particular virtuoso of Raff's day—it may have been Liszt—was brilliantly rendered. As music, the piece possesses comparatively little merit. Pianoforte music forms an important feature of the Popular Concerts' programmes; and it would be wise if pianists were always requested to choose from the very large store of good pianoforte musical literature some work more in keeping with the high character of the concerted works. The fresh, artistic singing of Mme. Bertha Moore in songs by Jensen and other composers deserves special mention.

Handel's "Judas Maccabæus" was given at the Albert Hall on Wednesday evening, under the careful direction of Dr. A. C. Mackenzie. This Oratorio, which contains attractive solos and powerful choruses, had not been heard for some time in London. The choir sang well, though the sopranos were occasionally weak in the high notes. Of the vocalists, Miss Paliiser, Mr. Iver Mackay, and Mr. Santley won chief honours. Mr. Santley, who was in good voice, was received with special enthusiasm.

J. S. SHEDLOCK.

DIGBY, LONG & CO.

SECOND EDITION NOW READY.

STRIPPED OF THE TINSEL.

A Story of Bohemia. By J. E. MUDDOCK, Author of "For God and the Czar," &amp;c. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

"The author describes some extremely interesting scenes and incidents in a very realistic manner. The story is very interesting, not unfrequently pathetic. Well planned and well rounded off with some interesting sketches of London journalistic life."—Scotsman.

NEW NOVEL BY MRS. ROBERT JOCELYN.

JUANITA CARRINGTON:

A Sporting Novel. By the Author of "Drawn Blank," &amp;c. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d. [Just out.]

SECOND EDITION NOW READY.

THE WEIRD RING OF AVIEMOOR.

By MARCUS ORDE. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

"There is plenty of movement in the story, and some of the incidents are sufficiently picturesque to make the book readable. The Spanish affair is vivid."—Standard.

GRANT ALLEN'S SUCCESSFUL BOOK.

THE DESIRE OF THE EYES.

By GRANT ALLEN, Author of "The Woman Who Did," &amp;c. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d. [Seventh Edition.]

A NEW NOVEL BY HELENA GRIMSHAW.

TRAPPED BY AVARICE.

By HELENA GRIMSHAW. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d. [Just out.]

THE BOOK OF THE HOUR.

BOER AND UITLANDER.

The True History of Late Events in South Africa. By WILLIAM F. REGAN. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d., with Portraits, Plans, &amp;c. [In rapid preparation.]

DIGBY, LONG &amp; CO., 18, BOUVERIE STREET, LONDON, E.C.

NOW READY AT ALL LIBRARIES.

NEW SENSATIONAL NOVEL BY THE AUTHOROF "WIFE OR NO WIFE,"

ENTITLED

THE HEART OF A MYSTERY.

By T. W. SPEIGHT,

Author of "The Grey Monk," "The Mysteries of Heron Dyke," "Quittance in Full," "Wife or No Wife," &amp;c.

Being Vol. XXVIII. of the "Greenback Series."

Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

AN INDIAN MARRIAGE STORY,

ENTITLED

BRENDA'S EXPERIMENT.

By Surgeon-Major H. M. GREENHOW,

Author of "The Bow of Fate," &amp;c.

(The "Unknown Authors" Series.)

Crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.

"Stirring scenes are brilliantly portrayed, and while they are in progress one almost forgets the perils of the heroine. How Brenda is rescued and her life again brightened is a very interesting episode, which the reader will have pleasure, we are sure, in finding out for himself."—Leeds Mercury.

London:

JARROLD & SONS, 10 and 11, Warwick Lane, E.C.;
And at all Booksellers, Bookstalls, &c.BERTRAM DOBELL'S PUBLICATIONS.

Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 4s. 6d. net.

HUMAN DOCUMENTS: CharacterSketches of Representative Men and Women of the Time. By ARTHUR LYNCH. Mr. Lynch is a daring man, and searches his documents with the critical eye of an expert, and I shall be surprised if his work does not become one of the much-talked-about books of the season."—Sunday Times.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 5s. 6d. net.

THE MYSTICAL HYMNS OF ORPHEUSTranslated from the Greek by THOMAS TAYLOR. "This reprint is a faithful facsimile of the second edition of the work, and is itself an elegant piece of typography."—Scotsman.

8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d. net.

IAMBlichUS ON THE MYSTERIES OFthe EGYPTIANS, CHALDEANS, AND ASSYRIANS. Translated from the Greek by THOMAS TAYLOR.
Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 4s. 6d. net.
LIKE STARS THAT FALL: a Novel of Music-Hall Life. By GEOFFREY MORTIMER. "Life and reality mark this story."—Black and White.

8vo, cloth extra, 4s. net.

GLUCK and the OPERA: a Study inMusical History. By ERNEST NEWMAN. "Gluck and the Opera" is an admirable study, not only of the great musical reformer's career and artistic work, but of the philosophy of musical drama, with more especial reference to its earlier manifestations."—Times.

BERTRAM DOBELL, 77, Charing Cross Road, W.C.

Post 8vo, strongly bound, price 7s.

CAREYS "GRADUS ad PARNASSUM,"

with the English Meanings. Revised, Corrected, and Augmented by a Member of the University of Cambridge. London: Published by the STATIONERS' COMPANY, Stationers' Hall, Ludgate Hill.

Just published, price 2s. 6d., post free.

GOUT and ITS CURE. By J. COMPTONBURNETT, M.D. "Sufferers from gout will be interested in a little book by the well-known specialist."—Land and Water.

London: JAMES EYRE &amp; CO. (LTD.), 170, Piccadilly, and 48, Threadneedle Street.

FOURTH EDITION, pp. 300, 5s.

PROTOPLASM: Physical Life and Law.

By Prof. LIONEL BEALE, F.R.S. Facts and Arguments against Mechanical Views of Life as accepted by Huxley, Herbert Spencer, Strauss, Tyndall, and many others.

MARRISON &amp; SONS, 50, Pall Mall.

NEW WORK BY DR. ALEX. MACLAREN.

Now ready, crown 8vo, cloth, price 5s., post free.

THE BEATITUDES, AND OTHER SERMONS,"Dr. Maclaren's new volume will be received with special warmth, as containing an excellent exposition of the beatitudes. Dr. Maclaren's work is always full of thought and knowledge and power, intensely evangelical, and unfailingly fresh."—British Weekly."Undiminished vigour and undimmed brilliancy."—Independent.

Uniform with the above, price 5s. each, post free.

CHRIST'S "MUSTS," and other Sermons."Dr. Maclaren is our ideal preacher."—Expository Times. "Masterly, beautiful, inspiring."—Methodist Recorder.THE UNCHANGING CHRIST, and other Sermons."The work of a master of pulpit oratory."—Freeman. "Distinguished by the finest scholarship and the most exquisite literary finish."—Christian Leader. "Few preachers combine so many elements of effective pulpit address."—Independent.THE HOLY OF HOLIES: a Series of Sermonson the 14th, 15th, and 16th Chapters of the Gospel by John. "Every sermon glows with unction, and shows intense power."—Methodist Recorder.THE WEARIED CHRIST, and other Sermons."They show the same wonderful fertility of apt and beautiful illustrations, the same exquisite use of language, and the same direct heart-searching power which we are accustomed to find in all Dr. Maclaren's works."—Christian World Pulpit.PAUL'S PRAYERS, and other Sermons."For more than a quarter of a century he has held almost an unchallenged position as the prince of pulpit orators. The back pews of Dr. Maclaren's church are in the nooks and corners of the earth."—Methodist Times.THE GOD of the AMEN, and other Sermons."Open the book wherever we may, the temptation to read on and on is very great. The volume is invaluable."—Sunday School Chronicle.

ALEXANDER &amp; SHEPHEARD, Farnival St., London, E.C.

THREE CENTURIES OF NONCONFORMITY.

NOW READY, large crown 8vo, nearly 800 pages, cloth, 6s., post free.

HISTORY

OF THE

FREE CHURCHES OF ENGLAND

FROM THE REFORMATION TO 1851.

By HERBERT S. SKEATS.

WITH A CONTINUATION TO 1891,

By CHARLES S. MIAL.

THE GUARDIAN.—"It is certainly a convenience to have the history of Dissent in England presented in a connected form, and from a Dissenter's point of view. And for these purposes we can recommend this, which gives the history in a handy and convenient form."

TIMES.—"As a complete exposition of the history of Dissent, from the Nonconformist point of view, it is no doubt certain to retain its reputation."

PALL MALL GAZETTE.—"Readers will find here in a clear and attractive form much information which cannot readily be found anywhere else."

THE LONDON QUARTERLY REVIEW.—"It is essential that Dissenters and Methodist Churchmen should know why they stand apart from the National Establishment, and this knowledge can only come through the study of the ecclesiastical history of the last 300 years. We ought to be specially grateful to Mr. Skeats and Mr. Mial for the light which they have shed upon the experiences of the Nonconformists of England."

LONDON: ALEXANDER &amp; SHEPHEARD, PUBLISHERS, 21 AND 22, FARNIVAL STREET, E.C.

JOSEPH MAZZINI.

A Memoir by E. A. V.

With TWO ESSAYS by MAZZINI—

"THOUGHTS ON DEMOCRACY"

AND

"THE DUTIES OF MAN."

"In its new form it should have thousands of new readers."—Weekly Dispatch.LONDON: ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD, 21 AND 22, FARNIVAL STREET, E.C.ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD,

PRINTERS AND PUBLISHERS,

LONSDALE BUILDINGS, 27, CHANCERY LANE.

BOOKS, PAMPHLETS, MAGAZINES,*NEWSPAPERS AND PERIODICALS,

And all General and Commercial Work.

Every description of Printing—large or small.

Printers of THE ACADEMY Newspaper.

Authors advised with as to Printing and Publishing.

Estimates and all information furnished.

Contracts entered into.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 1247.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, MARCH 28. 1896.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

MESSRS. BELL'S LIST ROYAL NAVY HANDBOOKS.

EDITED BY
COMMANDER CHARLES N. ROBINSON, R.N.
The literature of the British Empire has hitherto been lacking in any kind of comprehensive series of works treating of the various departments and matters connected with or constituting a part of the Royal Navy.
The Royal Navy Handbooks have been projected to supply this deficiency in our literature, and the series as a whole is intended to form a complete exhibition of the Fleet as it is—the genesis, growth, and government of the British Navy.

Crown 8vo, illustrated, 5s. each.

NAVAL ADMINISTRATION: the Constitution, Character, and Functions of the Board of Admiralty and of the Civil Departments it Directs. By Admiral Sir R. VESEY HAMILTON, G.C.B., late First Sea Lord of the Admiralty.
[Now ready.]
"The high merits of this handy book make it one which every member of Parliament ought to master, and that at once."—Daily Chronicle.

THE MECHANISM of MEN-of-WAR: being a Description of the Machinery to be found in Modern Fighting Ships. By Fleet-Engineer REGINALD C. OLDKNOW, R.N. [Ready March 30.]

TORPEDOES and TORPEDO-VESSELS With a Chapter on the Effects of Torpedo Warfare, by one who was present at the Yalu and at Weihswei. By Lieutenant G. E. ARMSTRONG, late R.N.

Other Volumes to follow.

Complete Prospectus, post free, on application.

NEW AND CHEAPER EDITION.—Crown 8vo, 5s.
ALPHABETS. A Handbook of Lettering, compiled for the Use of Artists, Designers, Handicraftsmen, and Students. With Complete Historical and Practical Descriptions. By EDWARD F. STRANGE. With more than 200 Illustrations.

NOW READY AT ALL LIBRARIES.

LESBIA.

A NOVEL.

By ANNA O. STEELE.

Author of "Gardenhurst," "Broken Toys," "Condoned," "Clove Pink," &c.
Crown 8vo, 6s.

"It possesses merits far surpassing those of most modern women's novels. The style is all her own, the characters are clear cut, and the dialogue is smart."—Echo.

NEW VOLUME OF THE EX-LIBRIS SERIES

Imperial 16mo, 7s. 6d. net.

BOOKBINDINGS, OLD and NEW. By Professor BRANDER MATTHEWS. With numerous Illustrations.

"A brightly written handbook on this fascinating subject."—Times.

NEW VOLUME OF HANDBOOKS OF ENGLISH LITERATURE.

Edited by Professor J. W. HALES, M.A.

Crown 8vo, 4s. 6d.

THE AGE OF DRYDEN. By Richard GARNETT, C.B., LL.D.

"Within the limits of his space Dr. Garnett surveys the several departments of literature in this period with singular comprehensiveness, broad sympathy, and fine critical sagacity."—Times.

Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

THE TRADITIONAL TEXT of the HOLY GOSPELS vindicated and Established. By the late JOHN WILLIAM BURGON, B.D., Dean of Chichester. Arranged, Completed, and Edited by EDWARD MILLER, M.A., Wykehamical Prebendary of Chichester Cathedral, Author of "A Guide to the Textual Criticism of the New Testament."

LONDON: GEORGE BELL & SONS, YORK STREET, COVENT GARDEN.

JOHN LANE'S NEW BOOKS IN BELLES LETTRES.

Just published.

RETROSPECTIVE REVIEWS. A Literary Log, 1891-1895. By RICHARD LE GALLIENNE. 2 vols., crown 8vo, purple cloth, 5s. net.

LATER LYRICS. By Thomas Bailey ALDRICH. Small fcap. 8vo, 2s. 6d. net.

THE FEASTS of AUTOLYCHUS. The Diary of a Greedy Woman. Edited by ELIZABETH ROBINS PENNELL. Fcap. 8vo (Mayfair Set), 2s. 6d. net.

AT ALL LIBRARIES, BOOKSELLERS, AND RAILWAY BOOKSTALLS.

FOUR NEW NOVELS.

THE WOOD of the BRAMBLES. By FRANK MATHEW. With Title-page and Cover Design by Patten Wilson. Crown 8vo, 4s. 6d. net.

"Bids fair to become a classic, for Frank Mathew's handling of his theme is excellent in every detail. His grip of the Irish character, its beauties, its humour, and its weaknesses shows at once intimate knowledge and artistic inspiration. Without doubt, Mr. Mathew has produced a remarkable book."—Black and White.

He has no small measure of the gifts which win and merit literary fame. It is unfair to class Mr. Mathew as the Kipling or Barrie of Ireland. He may be a family likeness to his parents and brothers, but his individuality is all his own."—Yankee Fair.

GALLOPING DICK. Being Episodes in the Life of Richard Exter, sometime Gentleman of the Road. By H. R. MARRIOTT-WATSON. With Title-page and Cover Design by Patten Wilson. Crown 8vo, 4s. 6d. net.

"A magnificent example of the picaresque novel, which is like to become the vogue once more. Dash and humour carry you from page to page, and you are not disappointed from first to last. It is a triumph of writing."—Black and White.

"It is said that good wine needs no bush: certainly 'Galloping Dick' does not stand in much need of any one's recommendation."—Literary World.

NEW VOLUME IN THE KEYNOTE SERIES.

NOBODY'S FAULT. By Netta Syrett. With Title-page and Cover Design by Aubrey Beardsley. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d. net.

"An extremely careful and clever study.... A deeply interesting story."—Daily Chronicle.

"A remarkable study, complete and concise. Proves Miss Syrett to have genuine observation and a quite unfeigned logic. It is certainly one of the most promising novels of the last few seasons."—Sun.

"Miss Syrett writes well, and her book is interesting beyond the common."—Glasgow Herald.

VOLUME I.—PIERROT'S LIBRARY.

PIERROT & a Story. By H. De Vere STACPOOLE. With Title-page, Cover Design, and End Papers designed by Aubrey Beardsley. Square 16mo, uniform with the Tauchnitz Editions, cloth, 2s. net.

"The story has an extraordinary charm, imagination, style. The descriptions of the German soldiers passing the park gates on their way to Paris, of the old corporal of the Grand Army, drunken and broken-hearted, of the gentle figure of the poor young Count, these belong to literature, and literature of a fine quality."—Academy.

BY LAURA MARHOLM HANSSON.

MODERN WOMEN. Six Psychological Sketches (Sonya Kovalevsky, George Egerton, Eleonora Duse, Amalie Skram, Marie Bashkirtseff, A. Edgren Laffon). Translated from the German by HERMOINE RAMSDEN. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. net.

"If ever there was a woman who was entitled to give us at once a sympathetic and discriminating account of what half in pity and half in derision is called the 'New Woman,' it is Madame Hansson."—Daily Telegraph.

"Here is a novelty in the way of books—a book by a woman about women. It is full of personalities of psychology as our modern jargon has it—and personalities which concern some of the most interesting women of modern Europe."—Echo.

BY G. S. STREET.

QUALES EGO. A few Remarks in Particular and at Large. Fcap. 8vo, uniform with "Miniatures and Moods" and "The Autobiography of a Boy," 3s. 6d. net.

"They are all as clever as can be in the way of bright and suggestive or allusive writing.... The literary judgments of the papers are sound, and they are always so well expressed that it is a pleasure to read them."—Scotsman.

BY KENNETH GRAHAME.—Third Edition.

THE GOLDEN AGE. Crown 8vo, with cover design by Charles Robinson, 2s. 6d. net.

"No more enjoyable interpretation of the child's mind has been accorded us since Stevenson's 'Child's Garden of Verses.'"—Mr. I. Zepewill, in Pall Mall Magazine.

"Every parent in England should read the book. He will understand his own children the better for doing so."—Weekly Sun.

THE BODLEY HEAD, VIGO STREET, LONDON, W.

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS NEW BOOKS.

LORENZO DE'MEDICI AND FLORENCE IN THE FIFTEENTH CENTURY.

By EDWARD ARMSTRONG, M.A.,

Queen's College, Oxford.

Illustrated with Full-Page Plates and Maps.

Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 5s.

Prize Edition, cloth, gilt edges, 6s.

["Heroes of the Nations" Series,

CHARLES XII. and the COLLAPSE of the SWEDISH EMPIRE, 1682-1719. By R. NISBET BAIN. Illustrated with Full-Page Plates and Maps. Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 5s. Prize Edition, cloth, gilt edges, 6s.

["Heroes of the Nations" Series,

"It is a masterly and most satisfactory production."

Liberal Budget.

"Mr. Bain's is a plain, straightforward, accurate account,..... A book marked throughout by accuracy and research."

Athenaeum.

"The book is certainly one to possess."—Publishers' Circular.

"We must leave the fascinating subject of Charles's personality to deal with his exploits, which are exceedingly well told by Mr. Bain in a biography which is at once readable and thorough."—Spectator.

THE RED REPUBLIC:

A Romance of the Time of the Commune.

By ROBERT W. CHAMBERS.

Author of "The King in Yellow," "In the Quarter," &c.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

"The scene of this story is laid in Paris during the exciting winter and spring of 1871, just after the German siege, and when the city was in the possession of the Commune."

"The best epitome of that terrible episode in the history of France that has been written from the inside, and it is also a tale of adventure, courage, villainy, violence, suffering, and love which would be hard to heat in vigour, movement, and intensity of interest."—World.

"The story is excellent.... Never has the time of the Commune been more realistically described; the story moves on rapidly and picturesquely from one historic scene to another, and there is not a dull page in the book."—Glasgow Herald.

"Mr. Chambers has succeeded where most have failed."—Daily Chronicle.

"The Red Republic" is well worth reading."—Guardian.

"If Mr. Chambers continues to show the same conscientious thoroughness in his work, we shall expect to see him in the front rank of novelists."—Manchester Guardian.

DR. IZARD. By Anna Katharine

GREEN. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 3s. 6d.

"Keeps one's attention enthralled, and leaves little room for criticism."—Literary World.

"An interesting story of mystery, with a well-sustained plot."—Pall Mall Gazette.

"Miss Green has seldom, if ever, constructed a more intricate tale."—Sun.

SKETCHES from CONCORD and

APPLEDORE. Concord Thirty Years ago—Nathaniel Hawthorne—Louisa M. Alcott—Ralph Waldo Emerson—Matthew Arnold—John Greenleaf Whittier, &c. By FRANK PRESTON STEARNS, Author of "The Life of Tintoretto," &c. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, gilt top, 7s. 6d.

The FLORENTINE PAINTERS of

the RENAISSANCE. With an Index to their Works. By BERNHARD BERENSON, Author of "Lorenzo Lotto" and "Venetian Painters." Crown 8vo, cloth extra, gilt tops, 6s.

A SCIENTIFIC DEMONSTRATION of the FUTURE LIFE: a Scientific Inquiry concerning the Powers, Attributes, and Destiny of the Soul. By THOMSON J. HUDSON, Author of "The Law of Psychic Phenomena," &c. Crown 8vo, cloth, about 7s. 6d.

[In a few days.]

24, Bedford Street, Strand, London and New York.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

	PAGE
SAINTSBURY'S HISTORY OF NINETEENTH CENTURY LITERATURE, by T. HUTCHINSON	255
LORD'S LOST POSSESSIONS OF ENGLAND, by E. PURCELL	257
BAIN'S LIFE OF HANS ANDERSEN, by F. T. MARZIALS	258
NITTI'S CATHOLIC SOCIALISM, by R. SHYMOUR LONG	259
NEW NOVELS, by F. Y. EOCLES	260
SOME COUNTRY BOOKS	261
TWO BOOKS OF HORACE	262
NOTES AND NEWS	263
THE FORTHCOMING MAGAZINES	262
UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS
ORIGINAL VERSE: "TO A FRIEND," by Miss F. PEACOCK; and "A PERFECT FRIENDSHIP," by M. W. OSITARY; TOM HUGHES; &c.	263
MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS	263
CORRESPONDENCE
"On a Pair of Gaudish Deities," by Whitley Stokes; The English Lectureship at Cambridge, by Prof. Skeat; An Addition to "The Gospel according to the Hebrews," by F. P. Badham; The Roman de la Rose, by Mark Liddell; Dante's "Matilda," by H. Krebs; The Sinner in Wales, by G. N. W. Thomas	263
APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK	265
DEBATE OF CHINA AND ISLAM, by E. H. PARKER	265
CORRESPONDENCE—
Epigraphic Discoveries in India, by Prof. Bühler; The Restored Pronunciation of Greek, by Dr. E. J. Lloyd; "Relics of the Palestinian Syriac Literature," by F. C. Burkitt and T. F. Stenning	266
SCIENCE NOTES	267
PHILOLOGY NOTES	267
REPORTS OF SOCIETIES	267
A NEW MANUAL OF GREEK ANTIQUITIES	268
EXCAVATIONS AT CONCA	269
NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY	269
STAGE NOTES	269
RECENT CONCERTS, by J. S. SNEEDLOCK	270
MUSIC NOTES	270

PERFECT SET OF TANAGRA GREEK
STATUETTES and ARCHAICS to SELL, including exquisite tiny Cupid with outspread wings—Apply HELLAS, Young's Library, Kensington.

TO BOOKBUYERS and LIBRARIANS.
—BLACKWOOD'S MAGAZINE FOR SALE, from its first opening number in 1817 to the end of 1890. 146 volumes, well bound, in good condition. What offers?—Address Ross, Granville Mansions, 19, Pennywell Road, S.W.

A GREEK TEACHER, residing at
Oxford, would be glad to ACCOMPANY TOURISTS going to Greece, for the purpose of giving them instruction in the Greek Language. High references.—Address Dr. PLATON, 106, High Street, Oxford.

TO PRINTERS, PUBLISHERS,
EDITORS.—ADVERTISER, who has held responsible positions in Printing Trade, seeks ENGAGEMENT. Thirteen years' experience. Highest testimonials.—"Advertiser," care of F. W. Sears, 108, Fleet Street.

PICTURE PRESERVATION & RESTORATION
—For advice and full particulars address C. H. MIDFORTH, Studio, 268, Devonshire Road, Honor Oak Park, S.E.

TO INVALIDS.—A LIST of MEDICAL
MEN in all parts, willing to RECEIVE RESIDENT PATIENTS, giving full particulars and terms, sent gratis. The list includes private asylums, &c.; schools also recommended.—Address Mr. G. B. BROOKER, 4, Lancaster Place, Strand, W.C.

WANTED, to PURCHASE, fine PICTURES, in OIL, by Old Masters of the Dutch, Flemish, and British schools.—DOWDESWELL, 180, New Bond Street, W.

TYPE-WRITING.—MSS. of every
description COPIED. Special attention to work requiring care. Examination Questions, Notices, &c., by DUPLICATING process. Usual terms.—Miss THOMAS, 5, Cautley Avenue, Clapham Common, S.W.

MR. GEORGE REDWAY, formerly of
York Street, Covent Garden, and late Director and Manager of Kegan Paul, Trench, Trubner & Co., Limited, begs to announce that he has RESUMED BUSINESS as a PUBLISHER on his own account, and will be glad to hear from Authors with MSS ready for publication, and to consider proposals for New Books. Address as above.

THE AUTHOR'S HAIRLESS PAPER.
PAD.
(The LEADENHALL PRESS, Ltd., 50, Leadenhall Street, London, E.C.)
Contains hairless paper, over which the pen slips with perfect freedom. Sixpence each. 6s. per dozen, ruled or plain.

LONDON LIBRARY,
ST. JAMES'S SQUARE, S.W.

PRESIDENT—LESLIE STEPHEN, Esq.
VICE-PRESIDENTS—Right Hon. W. E. GLADSTONE, the Very Rev. the DEAN of LLANDAFF, HERBERT SPENCER, Esq., Sir HENRY BARKLY, K.C.B.
TRUSTEES—Right Hon. Sir M. GRANT DUFF, Right Hon. Sir JOHN LUBBOCK, Bart., M.P., Right Hon. EARL of ROSEBURY.

The Library contains about 170,000 Volumes of Ancient and Modern Literature, in Various Languages. Subscription, £5 a year: Life-Membership, according to age. Fifteen Volumes are allowed to Country, and Ten to Town Members. Reading-Room Open from 10 to half-past 6. CATALOGUE, Fifth Edition, 2 vols., royal 8vo, price 25s.; to Members, 10s.

C. T. HAGENBROUGHT, Secretary and Librarian.

CATALOGUES

FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS

promptly supplied on moderate terms
CATALOGUES on application.
DULAU & CO., 27, SOHO SQUARE.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE,

IMPORTERS OF FOREIGN BOOKS,

14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN,
20, SOUTH FREDERICK STREET, EDINBURGH,

AND
7, BROAD STREET, OXFORD.
CATALOGUES sent free on application.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE'S

FOREIGN BOOK CIRCULAR.

SCIENTIFIC SERIES, No. 63.
A CLASSIFIED LIST OF NEW SCIENTIFIC PUBLICATIONS,
NEW PURCHASES, &c.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE, 14, Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, London;
20, South Frederick Street, Edinburgh; and 7, Broad Street, Oxford.

TH. WOHLLEBEN,

FOREIGN BOOKSELLER,

45, GREAT RUSSELL STREET
(Opposite the British Museum),
Supplies all FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS at the most moderate prices.
Catalogues on application.

On application for one stamp.
THE INTERNATIONAL BOOKMARKET.
Monthly List of the most important Publications issued by
H. GREVEL & CO.,
Importers of Foreign Books,
33, King Street, Covent Garden, W.C.

Just out, No. 70.
ALBERT JACKSON & SON'S CATALOGUE OF CHOICE, RARE, and STANDARD LIBRARY BOOKS, recently purchased, gratis and post free, 324, Great Portland Street, London, N.W.—Established nearly a Quarter of a Century.

SOTHERAN'S PRICE CURRENT OF LITERATURE No. 552, just published for March 28th, contains the usual varied selection of Ancient and Modern Books at very moderate prices.
Post free on application to H. SOTHERAN & Co., Booksellers, 140, Strand, W.C., and 37, Piccadilly, W.

AGENCY FOR AMERICAN BOOKS.
G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS, PUBLISHERS
and BOOKSELLERS, of 27 and 29 West 23rd Street, New York, and 24, BEDFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C., desire to call the attention of the READING PUBLIC to the excellent facilities presented by their Branch House in London for filling, on the most favourable terms, orders for their own STANDARD PUBLICATIONS and for ALL AMERICAN BOOKS and PERIODICALS—CATALOGUES sent on application.

IMPORTANT.—PRINTING AND PUBLISHING.
NEWSPAPERS, MAGAZINES, BOOKS,
&c.—KING, BELL & RAILTON, Limited, high-class Printers and Publishers, 12, Gough Square, 4, Bolt Court, Fleet Street, E.C., have specially-built Rotary and other fast Machines for printing illustrated or other Publications, and specially-built Machines for fast folding and covering 8, 16, 24, or 32-page Journals at one operation. Advice and assistance given to anyone wishing to commence New Journals.
Facilities upon the premises for Editorial Offices, free. Advertising and Publishing Departments conducted.
Telephone 65121. Telegraph "Africanism, London."

FOURTH EDITION, pp. 300, 5s.
PROTOPLASM: Physical Life and Law.
By Prof. LIONEL BEALE, F.R.S. Facts and Arguments against Mechanical Views of Life as accepted by Huxley, Herbert Spencer, Strauss, Tyndall, and many others.
HARRISON & SONS, 50, Pall Mall.

BREAKFAST—SUPPER.
E P P S'S
GRATEFUL—COMFORTING.
C O C C O A.
BOILING WATER OR MILK.

WM. & GEO. LAW.
COFFEE—SUGAR—TEA.
104, NEW OXFORD STREET, W.C.

UNIVERSITY of ABERDEEN.

WILSON TRAVELLING FELLOWSHIP.
The Trustees of the Wilson Fund in the University of Aberdeen will proceed to the ELECTION of a TRAVELLING FELLOW in the month of July next. Applications will be received up to 30th June, 1896. The Wilson Fellow must be a Graduate of Aberdeen University. He is expected to prosecute some definite work of research in accordance with the intention of the founder, and the supplementary regulations of the Scottish University Commissioners.
Each Candidate is required to indicate the character of the work of research which he intends to prosecute, if elected, and to sketch out the plan of travel and study by which he proposes to carry out this work. He may submit any further information or evidence which he thinks may help the Trustees to decide as to his qualifications for carrying out the work successfully (e.g., Essays published by himself or prepared for publication).
The Fellow will be elected for a period of two years, beginning from 15th September, 1896. The value of the Fellowship will be £200 per annum, payable in advance in half-yearly instalments.
All applications to be made to Prof. W. M. KANSAY, Old Aberdeen, Convener of the Committee of Trustees, who will give any further information required by Candidates.
Aberdeen, 9th March, 1896.

BIRMINGHAM SCHOOL BOARD.

The Board REQUIRES the services of an ASSISTANT MASTER for the SEVENTH STANDARD TECHNICAL and ORGANISED SCIENCE SCHOOL in BRIDGE STREET.
Candidates must be qualified to teach and earn payments in Theoretical and Practical Physics, Theoretical and Practical Inorganic Chemistry, and French.
Commencing salary £100 per annum. Maximum, £130.
Applications, with copies of testimonials, to be sent in at once to THE CLERK of the School Board, Birmingham.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE, LONDON.

The COUNCIL invite APPLICATIONS for the YATES CHAIR of ARCHAEOLOGY. The Professor's Lectures should include Greek and Roman, but exclude Egyptian Archaeology. Further information regarding the duties and emoluments of the Chair may be obtained from the SECRETARY, to whom Candidates should address their applications not later than April 15th next, together with such evidence of qualification as they may desire to submit.
J. M. HOSKINSON, M.A., Secretary.

ST. EDWARD'S SCHOOL, near
OXFORD.—Public School, founded 1883, to provide Education for Gentlemen's Sons in Preparation for Universities, Army, &c., on definite Church principles. Fees: £68 per annum (Sons of Clergymen, £80); Day Boys, 21 guineas. Classical and Modern sides. Scholarships, July 29th.—Rev. T. F. HOSKINSON, M.A., Warden.

ROYAL SOCIETY of PAINTER-ETCHERS.—ANNUAL EXHIBITION of the Society NOW OPEN at the SOCIETY'S GALLERY, No. 54, PAUL MALL EAST, from 10 till 6. Admission, 1s. A. STEWART, Secretary.

WINTER SEASON, 1896-7.—LANTERN LECTURES and others by ERNEST RAIFORD, LL.M. Cantab., formerly Secretary of the Arts and Crafts Exhibition Society. List of Subjects, &c., apply to the LECTURER, care of "The Artist," 14, Parliament Street, Westminster.

THE ZOOLOGICAL SOCIETY'S GARDENS, Regent's Park, are OPEN DAILY (except Sundays) from 9 a.m. till sunset. Admission, 1s.; on Mondays, 6d.; children, 6d. Amongst the recent additions are a young Manatee from the Amazonas and a Lion presented by Rowland Ward, Esq., F.Z.S.

TUESDAY, MARCH 31.
The Third Portion of the Stock of Mr. E. CETTI, of 88, Brooke Street, Holborn.

MR. J. C. STEVENS will SELL by AUCTION, at his GREAT ROOMS, 35, KING STREET, COVENT GARDEN, on TUESDAY NEXT, MARCH 31, at half past 12 o'clock, precisely, STANDARD and other BAROMETERS—superior Thermometers—Chemical Apparatus and Glass, &c.—Lease of the above Premises—and valuable Show-Cases and other Fixtures.
On view the day prior 12 till 4 and morning of Sale, and Catalogues had Valuable and Extensive Library of the late Rev. JOHN OWEN, Rector of East Austley, N. Devon, Author of "Evenings with the Skeptics," "Religious Aspects of Skepticism," &c., by Order of the Administrator.

MESSRS. HODGSON will SELL by AUCTION, at their ROOMS, 115, CHANCERY LANE, W.C. on TUESDAY, APRIL 14th, and Three Following Days, at 1 o'clock the above LIBRARY comprising a large collection of Books in Theology, Philology, Bibliography, and General Literature—French, German, Spanish, and Italian Renaissance Writers—Bibliotheca Patrum, 27 vols.—Martine de Durand Veteris scriptores, 9 vols.—Calvini Opera, 9 vols.—S. Hieronymi Opera, 11 vols.—Dictionaries, Lexicons and Grammars, in various Languages—Publications of the Camden Society, Chaucer Society—Notes and Queries—Encyclopaedia Britannica, 9th Edition, 25 vols.—Plus Galleries and Books of Prints and the usual Standard Works in Theology, History, Philosophy, Science and Art.

Catalogues, when ready, may be had of Messrs. BLACKFORD & SONS, Auctioneers, South Molton, N. Devon, and of Messrs. HODGSON, 115, Chancery Lane, W.C.

ESTABLISHED 1861.
BIRKBECK BANK
Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane, London.
TWO-AND-A-HALF PER CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS repayable on demand.
TWO per CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, on the minimum monthly balance, when not drawn below £100.
STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.
For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposit and allows interest monthly on each completed £1.

BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.
HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE
FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH.

BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY
HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND
FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.

The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post free.
FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

MACMILLAN & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

Fourth Thousand.—8vo, 30s. net.

The LIFE of CARDINAL MANNING, Archbishop of Westminster. By EDMUND SHERIDAN PURCELL. In 2 vols., with Portraits.

8vo, 10s. net.

CAMPAIGNING in SOUTH AFRICA and EGYPT. By Major-General W. C. F. MOLYNEUX. The TIMES.—"A bright and entertaining record of personal experiences."

MACMILLAN'S SIX-SHILLING NOVELS.
NEW VOLUME.

THE COURTSHIP of MORRICE BUCKLER: a Romance. By A. E. W. MASON, Author of "A Romance of Wastdale." Crown 8vo.

Mr. H. D. TRAILL, in the GRAPHIC of March 21, says: "A fine stirring narrative it is.....a gallant and chivalrous story cast in a period and among scenes of which I, at least, am never tired of reading."

ILLUSTRATED STANDARD NOVELS.

GRYLL GRANGE. By Thomas Love Peacock. Illustrated by F. H. TOWNSEND. With an Introduction by GEORGE SAINTS-BURY. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

16mo, 1s., cloth; 1s. 6d., Persian, each volume.

TENNYSON'S POEMS. The People's Edition. Vol. XI., THE BROOK, and other Poems. Vol. XII., IDYLLS of the KING, Part I.

EVERSLEY SERIES.
NEW VOLUME.

HISTORY of the ENGLISH PEOPLE. By J. R. GREEN, M.A. Vol. V. PURITAN ENGLAND, 1603--1644. Globe 8vo, 5s.

GOLDEN TREASURY SERIES.
NEW VOLUME.

SIR THOMAS BROWNE'S HYDRIOTAPHIA and the GARDEN of CYRUS. Edited by the late W. A. GREENHILL, M.D., Oxon. Pott 8vo, 2s. 6d. net.

Globe 8vo, 2s.

A FIRST SKETCH of ENGLISH HISTORY. Part II. 1307-1689. By E. J. MATHEW, M.A., LL.B.

Crown 8vo, 10s. 6d.

THE STATESMAN'S YEAR-BOOK. Statistical and Historical Annual of the States of the World, for the Year 1896. Edited by J. SCOTT KELTIE, Assistant Secretary to the Royal Geographical Society. Thirty-third Annual Publication. Revised after Official Returns.

The TIMES.—"To say that the 'Statesman's Year-Book' is up to date is to say nothing new, and to those who have had occasion to consult its pages in past years, no higher commendation can be given than that the 1896 Edition is fully worthy of its predecessors."

Medium 8vo, 17s. net.

TEXT-BOOK of COMPARATIVE ANATOMY.

By Dr. ARNOLD LANG, Professor of Zoology in the University of Zürich. Translated into English by HENRY M. BERNARD, M.A. Cantab., and MATILDA BERNARD. Part II. (With Part I., already published, at the same price, this completes the Invertebrates.)

LANCET.—"We may congratulate the translators on their successful revision of Professor Lang's well-known work, and may recommend it to all who wish to acquire a scientific knowledge of modern comparative anatomy."

MACMILLAN'S ENGLISH CLASSICS.
NEW VOLUME.

POEMS of ENGLAND. A Selection of English Patriotic Poetry. With Notes by HERFORD K. GEORGE, M.A., and ARTHUR SIDGWICK, M.A. Globe 8vo, 2s. 6d.

Royal 8vo, 1s. net.

A HISTORY of MANKIND. By Professor FRIEDRICH RATZEL. Translated from the Second German Edition by A. J. BUTLER, M.A. With a Preface by E. B. TYLOR, D.C.L. Part VII. (to be completed in 30 Monthly Parts). Illustrated.

CLASSICAL SERIES.

OVID.—The EIGHTH BOOK of the METAMORPHOSES of OVID (Expurgated Edition). With Introduction and Notes by CHARLES HAINES KEENE, M.A. Fcap. 8vo, 2s.

ELEMENTARY CLASSICS.

LIVY.—The HANNIBALIAN WAR. Being Selections from Books XXIII. and XXIV. of Livy. Adapted for the Use of Beginners. With Introduction, Notes, Vocabulary, &c., by EDWARD F. COLERIDGE, B.A., late of Oriel College, Oxford. Pott 8vo, 1s. 6d.

Demy 4to, 6s. net.

A SYNOPSIS of the GOSPELS in GREEK. After the Westcott and Hort Text. By the Rev. ARTHUR WRIGHT, M.A., Fellow and Tutor of Queen's College, Cambridge, Author of "The Composition of the Four Gospels."

Demy 8vo, cloth, 12s. 6d.

AN EXAMINATION of the NATURE of the STATE; a Study in Political Philosophy. By WESTEL WOODBURY WILLOUGHBY, Ph.D., Lecturer in Political Economy in the Johns Hopkins University.

Demy 8vo, 12s. 6d. net.

THE PRINCIPLES of SOCIOLOGY: an Analysis of the Phenomena of Association and of Social Organisation. By FRANKLIN HENRY GIDDINGS, M.A., Professor of Sociology in Columbia University in the City of New York.

Imperial quarto, 42s. net.

ATLAS of NERVE CELLS. By M. Allen Starr, M.D., Ph.D., with the co-operation of OLIVER S. STRONG, A.M., Ph.D., and EDWARD LEAMING, M.D., F.R.P.S. With 63 Plates and 13 Diagrams.

MACMILLAN'S MAGAZINE.

APRIL, 1896.—Price One Shilling.

CONTENTS.

- 1.—STEPHANIE DE LIANCOURT.
- 2.—THE FATHER of the BRITISH NAVY.
- 3.—A DAY on the YELLOW CLAY.
- 4.—THE STORY of a TIN MINE.
- 5.—UNFINISHED BOOKS.
- 6.—THE FORTY DAYS.
- 7.—THE WINGS of a DOVE.
- 8.—BRITISH GUIANA.

THE CENTURY MAGAZINE.

APRIL, 1896.—Illustrated.—Price 1s. 4d.

CONTENTS.—THE OLD OLYMPIC GAMES, by ALLAN MARQUAND, with Pictures by A. CASTAIGNE—SIR GEORGE TRESSADY, by Mrs. HUMPHRY WARD (continued)—LIFE of NAPOLEON BONAPARTE, by WILLIAM M. SLOANE (continued)—WHO ARE OUR BRETHREN? by WILLIAM DEAN HOWELLS—JAPANESE WAR POSTERS, by D. P. B. CONKLING, with Four Reproductions—THE DELIGHTS of ART: Coquelin as "Mascarille"; The Sick Doctor, by J. G. VIBERT, with Pictures after Paintings by the Author, &c.

The NEW VOLUME also ready, price 10s. 6d.

THE ST. NICHOLAS MAGAZINE.

APRIL.—Illustrated.—Price One Shilling.

CONTENTS.—ABOUT FLYING MACHINES, by TUDOR JENKS—TEDDY and CARROTS, by JAMES OTIS (concluded)—THE PRIZE CUP, by J. T. TROWBRIDGE (continued)—SINDBAD, SMITH & CO., by ALBERT STEARNS (continued)—THE APRIL FOOL, JINGLE, by BENJAMIN WEBSTER—STALLED at "BEAR RUN," by THOMAS HOLMES—THE OLYMPIAN GAMES, by G. T. FERRIS—THE SWORDMAKER'S SON, by WILLIAM O. STODDARD (continued)—&c.

The NEW VOLUME also ready, price 8s. 6d.

CONTENTS OF THE MAGAZINES.

MACMILLAN'S MAGAZINE.

For CONTENTS, see Messrs. MACMILLAN & CO.'S Advertisement, page 251.

THE ST. NICHOLAS MAGAZINE.

For CONTENTS, see Messrs. MACMILLAN & CO.'S Advertisement, page 251.

THE CENTURY MAGAZINE.

For CONTENTS, see Messrs. MACMILLAN & CO.'S Advertisement, page 251.

LONGMAN'S MAGAZINE.

For CONTENTS, see Messrs. LONGMANS & CO.'S Advertisement, page 253.

THE TEMPLE BAR MAGAZINE.

For CONTENTS, see Messrs. BENTLEY & SON'S Advertisement, page 254.

BLACKWOOD'S MAGAZINE.

No. 998.—APRIL, 1896.—2s. 6d.

CONTENTS:—HILDA STRAFFORD: A CALIFORNIAN STORY, by Beatrice Harraden.—A HEROINE OF THE RENAISSANCE, by Helen Zimmern.—CHURCH PARADE.—AN UNCROWNED KING: A ROMANCE OF HIGH POLITICS.—PERSONAL REMINISCENCES TOUCHING OPIUM-SMOKING.—OUR VILLAGE ELEVEN.—PHANTASIES, by Alice Mackay.—HIS TOMB.—SCHOOLBOYS AS THEY WERE.—SIR SAMUEL FERGUSON'S LIFE.—A PIECE OF PRESUMPTION, by R.S.V.P.—RECENT HOME-POLITICS IN GERMANY.

WILLIAM BLACKWOOD & SONS, EDINBURGH AND LONDON.

THE APRIL NUMBER NOW READY.

COSMOPOLIS:

An INTERNATIONAL MONTHLY REVIEW

Price 2s. 6d.—Contents.

WEIR OF HERMISTON (concluded)...	ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON.
LA PLEIADÉ .....	GEORGE WYNDHAM.
OLD LOMBARD and VENETIAN VILLAS .....	VERNON LEE.
THE REVIVAL of the OLYMPIAN GAMES .....	J. GENNADIUS.
LE CHAMPION .....	J. H. ROSEY.
LETTERS D'EXIL .....	LARSEN CARNOT.
UNE PETITE ATHÈNES au XVII <sup>e</sup> SIÈCLE .....	CHARLES YRIARTE.
LA PREFACE des JEUX OLYMPIQUES .....	BARON PIERRE DE COUBERTIN.
EQUIER der LIEBE (Schluss) .....	FERDINAND VON SAAR.
BISCHOF REINKENS und die GEGENWÄRTIGE LAGE und BEDEUTUNG des ALTKATHOLICISMUS .....	Dr. F. V. SCHULTE.
DIE MEINUNGSVERSCHIEDENHEITEN unter den VOLKSWIRTSCHAFTSLEHREN .....	LUJO BRENTANO.
DIE PHOTOGRAPHIE in NATURLICHEN FÄRBN .....	GUSTAV SKELLE.
CHRONICLES.
LITERATURE .....	EMILE FAGUET.
THE DRAMA .....	A. B. WALKLEY; JULIEN LEMAITRE; OTTO NEUMANN-HOPF.
FOREIGN AFFAIRS .....	HENRY NORMAN; F. DE PAKENESS; "IGNOTUS."

London: T. FISHER UNWIN, Paternoster Square, E.C.

THE EDUCATIONAL REVIEW.

CONTENTS—APRIL.

1. ON the QUALIFICATIONS of TEACHERS. By J. VINE MILNE, B.A.
2. A SCHEME for an EDUCATIONAL FUND. By Miss GRACE TORPIS.
3. SALARIES in SCHOOLS. By Miss G. E. HODGSON, of the Leamington High School.
4. RATIONALITY in SCIENCE TEACHING. By C. E. SINSON, F.C.S.
5. A NOTE on the CERAMICUS.
6. MODERN LANGUAGE TEACHING. By HAYLOCK DE BUCHIATTE, of the Grammar School, Bishop's Stortford.
7. THE TEACHER in the NOVELIST'S HANDS. A Review.
8. SCIENCE TEXT-BOOKS.
9. THE MONTHLY REPORT of the PRIVATE SCHOOLS' ASSOCIATION, INCORPORATED.
10. THE MONTHLY REPORT of the ASSOCIATION of ASSISTANT MISTRESSES.
11. THE MONTH.

NEW BOOKS and NEW EDITION

Price 6d.; by post, 7d.

27, CHANCERY LANE, W.C.

THE BOOKMAN.

Monthly price SIXPENCE.

CONTENTS.

NEW WRITERS. NEIL MUNRO, Author of "The Lost Pibroch." With Portrait.
NOTES from PARIS. By R. H. SHERARD.
A CURIOUS RELIC of the BROWNING FAMILY. With Illustrations.
MR. MEYNELL. By EDMUND K. CHAMBERS. With Portrait.
REVIEW of the EMPIRE of the PTOLEMIES. By Professor MCALISTER.
DR. CONAN DOYLE'S BRIGADIER GERARD.
MR. ANTHONY HOPE'S NEW BOOK.
WILLIAM BLAKE. By W. B. YATES.
DR. DALE'S EPISTLE of JAMES. By Dr. JAMES DENNEY.

London: HODDER & STOUGHTON, 27, PATERNOSTER ROW.

THE EXPOSITOR.

Edited by the Rev. W. ROBERTSON NICOLL, M.A., LL.D.
Price ONE SHILLING.

CONTENTS.

- I. REMINISCENCES of the LECTONARY COMMITTEE. By the Right Rev. CHARLES J. ELLIOTT, D.D., D.C.L., Lord Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol.
- II. THE EARLY VISITS of ST. PAUL to JERUSALEM. By the Rev. Professor W. SANDAY, D.D., Christ Church, Oxford.
- III. THE SEPTUAGINT VERSION: its Bearing on the Text and Interpretation of the Old Testament. By the Rev. Professor A. F. RICKFORD, D.D., Cambridge.
- IV. CHRISTIANS and SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS. By the late Rev. E. W. DALL, D.D., LL.D.
- V. JESUS MIRRORED in MATTHEW, MARK, and LUKE. & THE SYNAGOGUE MINISTRY. By the Rev. Professor A. B. BRUCE, D.D.
- VI. THE GREAT COMMANDMENT. By the Rev. JAMES DENNEY, D.D.

Indices to the "Expositor," Fourth Series. Price 2s.
Cloth Cases for Binding Vols., 1s. each.

London: HODDER & STOUGHTON, 27, PATERNOSTER ROW.

OLIVE SCHREINER ON SOUTH AFRICA.

SEE

THE FORTNIGHTLY REVIEW

FOR APRIL.

Which also contains Articles on

EGYPT AND ITS FRONTIER;
THE STORY of an AMATEUR REVOLUTION;
THE ITALIAN AWAKENING, BY OUIDA;
NAVAL ESTIMATES AND IMPERIAL DEFENCE;
CARDINAL MANNING: A REMINISCENCE;
RUSSIA AND BULGARIA;
&c. &c. &c.

JOHN OLIVER HOBBS'S NEW STORY,

THE HERB MOON,

Commences in

CHAPMAN'S MAGAZINE

FOR APRIL.

Price Sixpence.

Will also contain

COMPLETE STORIES by

CHARLES JAMES, SHAN F. BULLOCK, EVELYN SHARP, HALLIWELL SUTCLIFFE, FRANCES E. HUNTLEY, and BEATRICE MARSHALL.

CHAPMAN & HALL, LTD., LONDON.

Now ready, No. 8, price 1s.

THE SCIENTIFIC ROLL.

Climate Baric Condition.

To be completed in Sixteen Numbers.

Conducted by ALEXANDER RAMSAY.

Prospectuses and Subscription Forms free by post on application to the Publishers. A few of Nos. 1 to 7 still in print, price 1s. each.

London: O'DRISCOLL, LENOX & Co., Printers and Publishers, 10 and 12, Elephant Road, Elephant and Castle.

NEW STORY BY JAMES PAYN.

NOTICE.—THE CORNHILL MAGAZINE for APRIL contains the first instalment of a Story in Three Parts, entitled

THE DISAPPEARANCE OF GEORGE DRIFFELL.

By JAMES PAYN,

and the following Contributions:—CLARISSA FURIOSA. By W. E. NORRIS. Chaps. 13-16.—FLORIDA in WINTER.—THE PRINCIPLES of MISS MEHITABEL. POPULAR SONGS.—And ANIMAL TEMPER.

At all Booksellers and Newsagents.

PRICE SIXPENCE.

London:

SMITH, ELDER & CO., 15, Waterloo-place, S.W.

THE NEW REVIEW for APRIL will contain an important Article by MR. CHARLES LEONARD Chairman of the Transvaal National Union.

THE CASE for the UITLANDERS.

THE NEW REVIEW for APRIL will contain "THE CASE for the UITLANDERS," by CHARLES LEONARD.—"The Plattner Story," by H. G. WELLS.—"On an Old-Fashioned Children's Book," by F. ANSTY.—"Corot," by R. A. M. STEVENSON.—"Candour in Biography," by WILFRED WARD. And Six other Articles by well-known writers.

THE NEW REVIEW.

Edited by W. E. HENLEY. Monthly. Price 1s.

LONDON: W. HEINEMANN, 21, Bedford Street, W.C.

Now ready, price 2s. 6d.; or cloth gilt, gilt edges, 5s.

THE EASTER ANNUAL, 1896.

G. F. WATTS, R.A. By Julia Cartwright (Mrs. HENRY ADY). Being the Easter Extra Number of the "ART JOURNAL." With 2 Full-page Photographures of "Love and Life," "Fata Morgana," 2 Full-page Plates, printed in tint, of "Hope," "Ariadne," and about 60 other Illustrations, including "Love and Death," "Charity," "Ganymede," "Aspirations," "Orpheus and Eurydice," &c.

The LIFE and WORK of Sir E. BURNE-JONES, by Mrs. ADY, may be had bound with above, price 7s. 6d.

London: J. S. VINTAGE & Co., Limited, 28, Ivy Lane, E.C.

THE EXPOSITORY TIMES.

Rev. JAMES HASTINGS, M.A., Editor.

CONTENTS.—APRIL.—Price 6d.

NOTES of RECENT EXPOSITION. By THE EDITOR.
APOSTOLIC and CRITICAL TEACHING on the POSITION of the PENTATEUCH. By Rev. E. P. BOYD-SMITH, M.A.
THE INTERNATIONAL "ST. MARK." By THE EDITOR.
ARCHÆOLOGICAL COMMENTARY on the BOOK of GENESIS. By Prof. A. H. SAYCE, LL.D.
REQUESTS and REPLIES.
AT the LITERARY TABLE.
THE GREAT TEXT COMMENTARY.
THE ELDER BROTHER of the PRODIGAL SON
&c. &c.
Edinburgh: T. & T. CLARK, 38, George Street.

New Edition, pp. 324, cloth, 1s., post free.

HOMEOPATHIC FAMILY INSTRUCTOR. By Drs. R. and W. ERRE. Describes fully and prescribes for general diseases.
London: JAMES ERRE & Co. (Ltd.), 46, Threadneedle Street, and 170, Piccadilly.

THE AUTHOR'S MANUAL. By PERCY RUSSELL. With Prefatory Remarks by Mr. GLADSTONE. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d. net. (EIGHTH and CHEAPER EDITION.) With Portrait.

Mr. Russell's book is a very complete manual and guide for journalist and author. It is not a merely practical work—it is literary and appreciative of literature in its best sense. We have little else but praise for the volume.—Westminster Review.

Digby, Long & Co., 18, Boulevard Street, London, E.C.

NOW READY AT ALL LIBRARIES.
NEW SENSATIONAL NOVEL BY THE AUTHOR

OF
"WIFE OR NO WIFE," ENTITLED
THE HEART OF
A MYSTERY.

By T. W. SPEIGHT,
Author of "The Grey Monk," "The Mysteries of Heron Dyke," "Quittance in Full,"
"Wife or No Wife," &c.
Being Vol. XXVIII. of the "Greenback Series."
Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

"The story thoroughly justifies its name, it is told so defly. How the mystery is cleared up, how its solution assists in unravelling another of a more romantic nature, and how almost everything turns out so differently from earlier anticipations, is told with dexterity and ingenuity."
Scotsman.
"An excellent example of the romance which Wilkie Collins knew so well how to write. The plot is well managed, the characters clearly defined."—Yorkshire Post.

NOW READY.
HARUM SCARUM.

By ESMÉ STUART,
Author of "A Brave Fight," "Cast Ashore," "Miss Fenwick."
Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

London:
JARROLD & SONS, 10 and 11, Warwick Lane, E.C.;
And at all Booksellers, Bookstalls, &c.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY.

Recent Issues of Permanent Autotype Reproductions.

THE NATIONAL GALLERY, LONDON.
A completely New Series of the Chief Works in this Collection. Each print measures about 18 by 15 inches, and is sold separately, price 12s.

VELASQUEZ and MURILLO.
A Selection of the Works of these Painters, included in the Spanish Exhibition at the New Gallery. The same size and price as the above.

ALBERT DÜRER.
A Series of Autotype Facsimiles of the Finest Proofs of this Master's Work in the Department of Prints and Drawings, British Museum. The copies are in all cases of the exact size of the original copperplates.

Now Published for the First Time in Autotype.
WORKS by DANTE GABRIEL ROSSETTI,
Sir EDWARD BURNE-JONES, and ALBERT MOORE
Including the "Blessed Damsel," "Proserpine,"
"The Lamp of Memory," "Venus's Looking Glass,"
"Wine of Circe," &c., &c.

NOW READY.
THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY'S FINE-ART
CATALOGUE, of 184 pages, and REVISED ILLU-STRATED SUPPLEMENT, containing 86 Miniature
Reproductions of Selected Autotypes, price, post-free,
One Shilling.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY,
74, NEW OXFORD STREET,
LONDON, W.O.

NOW READY.—Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.
At all Booksellers and Libraries.
NEW NOVEL BY DORA RUSSELL.

A FATAL PAST.
By the Author of "Footprints in the Snow," "The Vicar's Governance," "Beneath the Wave," &c., &c.

SIMPSON, MARSHALL, HAMILTON, KEPT & Co., Limited.

SWAN SONNENSCHNEIN & CO.

Mr. Leslie Stephen's New Book.
SOCIAL RIGHTS and DUTIES. By LESLIE STEPHEN, M.A. 2 vols., crown 8vo, 5s.

Vol. I.—Aims of Ethical Societies—Science and Politics—The Sphere of Political Economy—Morality of Competition—Social Equality—Ethics and the Struggle for Existence.
Vol. II.—Hereditary—Punishment—Luxury—The Duties of Authors—
The Vanity of Philosophising—Forgotten Benefactors.

CONFESSION and ABSOLUTION in the LATIN CHURCH. By HENRY CHARLES LEA, LL.D.
Pages xii. + 321, large 8vo, 15s.

Chap. I. Primitive Christianity—2. Discipline—3. Public Penance—4. Reconciliation—5. The Heretics—6. The Pardon of Sin—7. The Power of the Keys—8. Confession—9. Enforced Confession—10.
Jurisdiction—11. Reserved Cases—12. The Confession—13. The Seal of Confession—14. Absolution.

PARTS of the PACIFIC. Illustrated by the Author and from Photographs. 8vo, 10s. 6d. "We have not had a book in our hands for many a day in which we had marked so many passages for quotation. Plenty of adventures by land and field are to be found in this delightful book."—Daily Chronicle. "A really entertaining travel book. Its author modestly calls himself 'A Peripatetic Parson.' His wandering habits have not, however, robbed him of a most excellent gift of humour. The book is as informing as it is entertaining."—York Post. "We have not lately read a book of travels more lively and entertaining."—Manchester Guardian.

HISTORY of the PARIS COMMUNE of 1871. By THOMAS MARSH. With 2 Maps. 8vo, 7s. 6d.
"Mr. Marsh is a careful historian, and there are but few faults to be found with his book."—Athenaeum. "He has told the story with possessing vividness."—Daily Telegraph. "The first volume that has appeared in English in the form of a grave chronicle, collected from all the best available sources, comparing conflicting accounts and examining into the causes of things."—Spectator. "A very full, interesting, and accurate account."—Daily Chronicle. "Has been done with great care; thoroughly trustworthy."—Glasgow Herald.
"Powerful and decidedly interesting. A trustworthy history of the struggle."—Literary World.

WITH PREFACE BY PROFESSOR MAX MÜLLER
TWO QUEENS (Marie Antoinette of FRANCE, and CAROLINE MATHILDE of Denmark) A Historical Novel. From the Memoirs of BARON SIMOLIN. 12mo, 1s. 6d.

ALLOTMENTS and SMALL HOLD-INGS. By J. L. GREEN, Author of "The Rural Industries of England." Illustrated. I. Allotments—II. Small Holdings—
III. Unemployed on the Land. 2s. 6d.
"A thoroughly lucid, practical, and valuable."—Glasgow Herald.

SWAN SONNENSCHNEIN & CO., LTD., LONDON.

MESSRS. J. C. DRUMMOND & CO.,
ART REPRODUCERS,

14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C.
Are the sole representatives in Great Britain of HARR HANSTAMANN, of Munich, the well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAPHY now patronised by the leading London Art Publishing Firms. A large Collection of Important Plates always on hand.

Process Blocks for the purpose of Ordinary Book Illustrations.

Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. supply the cheapest and best Processes in the market, which are specially adapted to meet the wants of Antiquarians, Archaeologists, and those engaged in the investigation and publication of Parochial and Diocesan Records.

J. C. DRUMMOND & CO. invite attention to their

Improved Rapid Photo-Mechanical Process
For the Reproduction of Works of Art, Original MSS., Designs, Landscape Manufactures, Photographs, Views, Book Illustrations,
Artistic Advertisements, Catalogues, &c., &c., at a moderate cost.
Specimens and price list on Application.

Offices: 14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, LONDON

NEW WORK BY DR. ALEX. MACLAREN.

Now ready, crown 8vo, cloth, price 5s., post free.
THE BEATITUDES, AND OTHER SERMONS,

"Dr. MacLaren's new volume will be received with special warmth, as containing an excellent exposition of the beatitudes. Dr. MacLaren's work is always full of thought and knowledge and power, intensely evangelical, and unfailingly fresh."—British Weekly.

Uniform with the above, price 5s. each, post free.

CHRIST'S "MUSTS" and other Sermons.
"Dr. MacLaren is our ideal preacher."—Expository Times.

THE UNCHANGING CHRIST, and other Sermons.
"The work of a master of pulpit oratory."—Freeman.

THE HOLY of HOLIES: a Series of Sermons on the 14th, 15th, and 16th Chapters of the Gospel by John.
"Every sermon glows with unctious, and shows intense power."—Methodist Recorder.

THE GOD of the AMEN, and other Sermons.
"Open the book wherever we may, the temptation to read on and on is very great. The volume is invaluable."—Sunday School Chronicle.

ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD, Farnival St., London, E.C.

MESSRS. LONGMANS & CO.'S

LIST.

New Book by Mr. Lecky.
DEMOCRACY and LIBERTY.

BY WILLIAM EDWARD HARTPOLE LECKY.
2 vols., 8vo, 36s.

New Book by Sir Edwin Arnold.
EAST AND WEST.

ESSAYS by Sir EDWIN ARNOLD, K.C.I.E., C.S.I.
With 41 Illustrations by R. T. Pritchett.
8vo, 18s.

New Novel by H. Rider Haggard.
HEART OF THE WORLD.

By H. RIDER HAGGARD,
Author of "She," "Allan Quatermain," &c.
With 16 Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 6s.

NEW NOVEL BY MRS. OLIPHANT.
OLD MR. TREDGOLD. By Mrs.
OLIPHANT. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"The reader's attention is never allowed to flag."
Daily Telegraph.
"Mrs. Oliphant's keen and gentle humour.....does good service in mellowing a story which essentially is a remorseless study of some of the harsher aspects of human character and life."—Glasgow Herald.

BATTLEMENT and TOWER: a Romance of the Civil War. By OWEN RHOSCOMYLL, Author of "The Jewel of Ynys Galon." With Frontispiece by R. Canton Woodville. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"This is a stirring romance.....The taking of Conway, and the terrible struggles connected therewith, form the central point of interest, and an account of the battle of Naseby, a picture of Charles's position after his surrender to the Scots, with other familiar scenes from history, are also included.....The half-dozen principal characters in the tale stand out with lifelike distinctness.
The tone of the book is manly and healthy."
Sheffield Independent.

AMONG the FREAKS. By W. L.
ALDEN. With 55 Illustrations by J. F. Sullivan and Florence K. Upton. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

"This book is full of fun from beginning to end. Any reader who can laugh is sure to enjoy it."—Scotsman.

FEAR. By Angelo Mosso. Translated from the Fifth Edition of the Italian by E. LOUGH and F. KIESOW. With 8 Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

"* This book deals with much more than is conveyed by the title. It is, in fact, a series of essays on the expression of the emotions, dealing more especially with the painful emotions.
Although the subject is treated in a measure scientifically, i.e., physiologically, the book is not intended solely for the scientific public."

THE GLACIERS of the ALPS: being a Narrative of Excursions and Ascents. An Account of the Origin and Phenomena of Glaciers, and an Exposition of the Physical Principles to which they are related. By JOHN TYNDALL, F.R.S. New Edition.
With 61 Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 6s. 6d. net.

Now ready, price Sixpence.

LONGMAN'S MAGAZINE

APRIL.

OLD MR. TREDGOLD. By Mrs. OLIPHANT. Chapters
XII.—XLIV.

THOS. GENT, PRINTER. By AUSTIN DOBSON.

A WINTER'S DAY in MID FOREST. By FRED WHITMAN.

A SIMPLE ANNAL. By R. PARSONS.

OUR FIRST HOME COVERTS. By HORACE HUTCHINSON.

FLOTSAM. By HENRY STON MERRIMAN. Chapters
XIII.—XVI.

AT the SIGN of the SHIP. By ANDREW LANG.

LONGMANS, GREEN & CO.,

LONDON, NEW YORK, AND BOMBAY.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S LIST.

Now ready, price One Shilling.

THE TEMPLE BAR MAGAZINE.

CONTENTS FOR APRIL, 1896.

- I. LIMITATIONS. Chaps. IV.-VI.
- II. THE QUEEN of the DESERT.
- III. THE STRANGE PREACHER.
- IV. A QUIET RUBBER.
- V. PUBLICANS and SINNERS.
- VI. WORDSWORTH'S QUANTOCK POEMS.
- VII. A DULDLITCH ANGEL.
- VIII. THE LAND of NOD.
- IX. LANTY RIORDAN'S RED LIGHT.
- X. A SHEPHERD'S FOXHUNT.
- XI. JOURNEYMAN SMUGGLERS.
- XII. SILENCE OWEN. DIED 1891.
- XIII. HENRY PURCELL.
- XIV. THE LAST DECADE. 1895.

NOW READY.

A MEMOIR OF MRS. AUGUSTUS CRAVEN.

By MRS. BISHOP.

With Extracts from her Diaries and Correspondence.

A New Edition.

In one vol., crown 8vo, with Portrait, 7s. 6d.

"A beautiful literary portrait of a fascinating woman." Tablet.

THE ETCHINGS OF JOHN LEECH.

RICHARD SAVAGE.

By CHARLES WHITEHEAD.

With 18 Full-page Illustrations worked from the Original Etchings on Steel by John Leech.

A New Edition. Now Ready. In one vol., crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

A few copies only in demy 8vo, 14s.

NOW READY.

OUTDOOR LIFE in ENGLAND.

By ARTHUR T. FISHER, Major, late 21st Hussars; Author of "Through Stable and Saddle Room," "Rod and River." In one vol., demy 8vo, 14s.

NOW READY.

THE LOST POSSESSIONS of

ENGLAND: Tangier, Minorca, Cuba, Manila, Corsica, Buenos Ayres, Java, the Ionian Islands, &c. By WALTER FREWEN LORD, Barrister-at-Law. In one vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

NEW NOVELS AT ALL THE LIBRARIES AND BOOKSELLERS.

NOW READY.

MISS DRUMMOND'S DILEMMA.

By R. RAMSEY.

In one vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

NOW READY.

GIFTS AND WEIRDS.

By LILY PERKS,

Author of "A Late Springtime," &c.

In one vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

"An agreeable and pleasantly written story."—Scotsman.

NOW READY.

THE INDIAN UNCLE.

By THE AUTHOR OF "THE CHILCOTES," &c.

By LESLIE KEITH, Author of "Lisbeth," &c.

In one vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

"A novel of healthy sentiment and of a quiet, well-sustained interest that makes it always enjoyable." Scotsman.

NOW READY.

THE MYSTERY OF MR. BERNARD BROWN.

By E. PHILLIPS OPPENHEIM.

In one vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

"This is the best mystery story we have read for many a long month."—Daily Chronicle.

"A real good mystery."—World.

NOW READY.

THE MADONNA of a DAY.

By L. DOUGALL, Author of "The Mermaid," &c.

In one vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

"This stirring tale is strange and remarkable, dealing with only one incident, and treating that in an original and vivid style."—World.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington Street
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

WORKS BY W. H. MALLOCK.

NOW READY.

Classes and Masses ; Or, Wealth, Wages, and Welfare in the United Kingdom.

A Handbook of Social Facts for Political Thinkers and Speakers.

Crown 8vo, cloth, Illustrated, price 3s. 6d.

NINTH THOUSAND.

Labour and the Popular Welfare.

Crown 8vo, paper covers, price 1s.;

Cloth, price 1s. 6d.

NOW READY.

Strikes and Social Problems.

By J. SHIELD NICHOLSON, M.A., D.Sc.,

Professor of Political Economy in the University
of Edinburgh.

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 3s. 6d.

NOW READY.

Christianity and History

By ADOLF HARNACK.

Translated, with the Author's sanction,

By THOMAS BAILEY SAUNDERS,

With an Introductory Note.

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 1s. 6d. net.

NOW READY.

Father Archangel of Scotland,

And Other Essays.

By R. B. CUNNINGHAME GRAHAM,

Author of "Notes on the District of Menteith"

AND

GABRIELA CUNNINGHAME GRAHAM,

Author of "Santa Teresa, her Life and Times."

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 4s. 6d.

NOW READY.

Oh, What a Plague is Love!

By KATHARINE TYNAN,

Author of "An Isle in the Water."

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 3s. 6d.

NOW READY.

Gobelin Grange.

By HAMILTON DRUMMOND.

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 6s.

NOW READY.

A Question of Degree.

By CAROLINE FOTHERGILL,

Author of "The Comedy of Cecilia."

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 3s. 6d.

GEORGE ALLEN'S NEW BOOKS.

BY JOHN RUSKIN.

FORS CLAVIGERA :

LETTERS to the LABOURERS and WORKMEN of GREAT BRITAIN.

A New Cheap Edition, in 4 vols., with all the Illustrations. Vol. I., containing Letters I. to XXIV. Crown 8vo, 530 pages, with Index, cloth, 6s.; roan, gilt edges,
8s. 6d. [Ready April 1.]

LETTERS TO THE CLERGY

on the LORD'S PRAYER and the CHURCH. Edited by the Rev. F. A. MALLESON, with Additional Letters by Mr. RUSKIN. Third Edition, crown 8vo, 5s.

[Nearly ready.]

The last edition, published in 1883, has long been out of print.

OLD FRENCH ROMANCES.

Done into English by WILLIAM MORRIS. With an Introduction by JOSEPH JACOBS.

King Coustans the Emperor. The Friendship of Amis and Amle. King Florus and the Fair Jehane. Story of Over Sea. Crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, 4s. 6d. net.

This only form in which these French Romances have hitherto appeared is that of the limited edition in three volumes, issued recently by William Morris from his "Kelmscott Press."

BY EDWARD BERDOE, M.B.C.S.,

Author of "The Browning Cyclopaedia," &c.

BROWNING AND THE CHRISTIAN FAITH.

On the Evidences of Christianity from Browning's Point of View. Crown 8vo, cloth, 5s., 256 pages.

[Just out.]

"A thoughtful and valuable essay, based in the main upon a sympathetic and faithful interpretation of the poet's message."—Scotsman.

By the REV. ALEXANDER ROBERTSON, D.D.
(OF VENICE).

THROUGH THE DOLOMITES, from VENICE to TOBLACH. A Practical, Historical, and Descriptive Guide-Book.

With 40 Full-page Illustrations reproduced from Pictures by W. Logsdail, H. G. Keaseby, and from Photographs, with a Map of the District. Also an Appendix giving Tables of Railway and Diligence Stations, Times, Fares, &c., Carriage Tariffs, Charges for Guides, Hotels, &c. Small crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

[Nearly ready.]

This is intended to be a supplementary volume to Mr.
Hare's "Cities of Northern Italy," and is the only guide of the kind dealing with the great highway through that beautiful mountain district, which is becoming more and more the resort of travellers.

"AS OTHERS SEE US."

A Series of Volumes giving Impressions of England and of English Life by various Continental Authors.
Crown 8vo, cloth, 5s. each.

I.

THE ENGLAND OF TO-DAY.

From the Portuguese of OLIVEIRA MARTINS. Translated by C. J. WILLDEY. 340 pages.

[Ready immediately.]

II.

ACROSS THE CHANNEL.

From the French of GABRIEL MOUREY ("Gil Blas").
OTHER VOLUMES TO FOLLOW.

SPENSER'S "FAERIE QUEENE."

With over 90 Full-page Illustrations, besides 150 Headings and Tailpieces by WALTER CRANE.

A limited Edition on Arnold's Hand-made Paper, large post 4to, in NINETEEN Monthly Parts, price 10s. 6d. net each Part.
No odd Parts supplied separately.

The Text (which has been collated from Four Editions, including that of 1590) is Edited by THOMAS J. WISE.

BOOKS I to IV., price £1 11s. 6d. each;
cloth, £1 14s. each

PART XIII., with 4 Full-page Designs, 5
Canto Headings, and 4 Tailpieces. [Nearly ready.]

Ruskin House, Charing Cross Road,
London.

A. & C. BLACK, SOHO SQUARE, LONDON.

SATURDAY, MARCH 28, 1896.

No. 1247, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

A History of Nineteenth-Century Literature.
By George Saintsbury, Professor of Rhetoric and English Literature in the University of Edinburgh. (Macmillans.)

FULLY six if not seven years have passed since there appeared, in the shape of a somewhat slight survey of Eighteenth-Century Literature from the pen of Mr. Edmund Gosse, the last foregoing instalment of Messrs. Macmillan's projected "History of English Literature in Four Volumes"; and now that the fourth and final volume, covering the years 1780-1895 A.D., is at length in our hands, we are surprised and, if the truth must be spoken, disappointed to find on the title-page, not the distinguished name which the publishers' advertisement had prepared us to find there, but that of Prof. Saintsbury, already, by his excellent History of Elizabethan Literature, worthily connected with this undertaking; while, furthermore, we observe that Mr. Stopford Brooke's promised volume—the first of the proposed series—on Early English Literature has of late quite disappeared from the firm's occasional announcement-lists. These delays, and the change in the personnel of the contributors, would seem to indicate a certain degree of impracticableness in the scheme set on foot by Messrs. Macmillan. However that may be, sure at least it is that Mr. Gosse's book, whether owing to the narrowness of the scale imposed upon him, or from some other cause not so readily assignable, can hardly be looked upon as anything more than a sample of average literary craftsmanship; while, notwithstanding that it affords abundant evidence of its author's wide knowledge of letters and really rare faculty of appreciation, there is no denying that, if judged simply by its merits as a History of Literature, the volume under our immediate notice leaves not a little to be desired.

We do not now refer merely, or even mainly, to the absence (whether through oversight or deliberate rejection) of several more or less familiar names from Prof. Saintsbury's muster-roll; for these omissions, though, perhaps, inconveniently numerous, are yet individually of no great importance. Moreover, critics who may be disposed to find fault on the score of omission will find their objections anticipated, and to some extent discounted in the Preface, where Prof. Saintsbury observes:

"If some exclusions (not due to mere oversight) appear arbitrary or unjust, I would urge that this is not a Dictionary of Authors, nor a Catalogue of Books, but a History of Literature; and that to mention everybody is as impossible as to say everything. . . . Some [of the writers excluded] are really neiges d'antan; some baffle the historian in miniature by being rebels to brief and exact characterisation; some, nay many, are simply crowded out."

To this one might fairly rejoin that the awkwardness involved in such omissions could in some measure have been obviated by the simple device of appending to each chapter a short date-list of the more considerable authors to whom it had been found impossible to devote so much as a brief sentence of the text. Where, however, the book really does lie open to the charge of inadequacy is, as we have said, not on the score of its exclusions or pretermissions, but rather in respect of the specific method of treatment applied by the author to those writers, and, in particular, to those poets, whom he has seen fit to include. This method would seem to have its origin in the view held by Prof. Saintsbury regarding the true nature of the constituents of literature proper. Contrasting these with the characteristics of science, he observes (p. 459):

"Mathematics give us the example—perhaps the only example—of pure science, of what all science would be if it could, and of what it approaches, ever more nearly, as far as it can. It is needless to say that the perfect presentation of mathematics is in pure symbols, divested of all form and colour, of all personal tincture and bias. And it should be equally superfluous to add that it is in form and colour, in suggestion of sound rather than in precise expression and sense, in personal bias and personal tincture, that not merely the attraction but the very essence of literature consists."

"Applied" literature (e.g., theology, philosophy, popular science), he elsewhere observes, is "that in which the matter is of superior importance to the form"; and, conversely, pure or absolute literature is, of course, that in which the form is of superior importance to the matter. Thus it will be seen that Prof. Saintsbury altogether dissents from the doctrine which, in the famous Preface to the first edition of his Poems (1853) Matthew Arnold advanced on this point, namely, that in poetry "all depends upon the subject," and that—to quote our author's own words (p. 286)—

"the fault of most modern poetry and of nearly all modern criticism is that the poets strive to produce, and the critics expect to receive, not an elaborately planned and adjusted treatment of a great subject, but touches or bursts of more or less beautiful thought and writing."

In fact, so far as it tends to exalt the subject-matter of poetry above its form or manner, the principle put forward by Matthew Arnold constitutes, in the eyes of Prof. Saintsbury, a critical heresy of the most pernicious type: and a heresy as seductive as it is pernicious, if we may judge from the many angry references, oblique and direct, to it in these pages, by means of which, as it would seem, Prof. Saintsbury has felt the necessity of reinforcing his wavering orthodoxy against its dangerous fascinations.

Non nostrum tantas componere lites. Far be it from an obscure criticaster to dogmatise, with blind presumption, upon a matter over which two authorities of widely acknowledged eminence are at issue. Indeed, the question is not only enormously difficult, but distinctly hazardous withal for a feeble mediocrity, albeit with never so good intentions, to meddle in.

"'Tis dangerous when the baser nature comes Within the pass and fell incensed points
Of mighty opposites."

Something, however, we will adventure to say, with the object of elucidating, since we may not pretend to decide, the point in dispute. The form, manner, or style of poetry, then—by which is meant the garb of melodious and imaginative language in which the native poet instinctively clothes his subject—may in this sense, at least, be truly described as of paramount importance: that, lacking it, the poet's message, even though it wear a metrical shape, is yet essentially unpoetic. In other words, the faculty of free musical expression is the one indispensable prerequisite to the composition of poetry: in such wise that, if this sole gift of spontaneous song be withheld, the writer, no matter how vast his erudition, how delicate his impressibility, and how deft his knack of smooth versification, must needs fall short of attaining that unique, ineffable, divinely harmonious embodiment of his thought, to which alone the name of poetry may justly be allowed.

But if the importance be so vast that thus belongs to the form or style of poetry, what are we to say regarding that which attaches to its subject? A great singer, who thought and wrote profoundly upon the origin and processes of his art, has defined the Poet as one who possesses (among other endowments, such as "an exquisite sensibility to harmony of numbers, together with the power of producing it") the faculty of conjuring up in himself passions which are indeed far from being the same as those produced by real events, yet may fairly be described as "pleasing and delightful shadows" of those passions.* Under the influence of the creative impulse, the poet calls up before his mind (as yet tranquil and undisturbed) some passion or emotion such as is common to all mankind, which passion he contemplates till, by a species of reaction, the tranquillity gradually disappears, and an ideal emotion, kindred to that which was at the outset the subject of contemplation, is gradually produced, and does itself actually exist in the mind. In this mood poetic composition begins and is carried on: the language (harmonious and imaginative, as a poet's should be) being naturally and inevitably suggested to the composer by his feelings, which, by a kind of voluntary make-believe, he endeavours to identify as closely as possible with those proper to one actually under the influence of the particular passion originally called to mind. Thus, the poet's language or style is properly an emanation of his train of thought under the stress of an ideal or recollected emotion; and will by right differ from that uttered by men under the actual pressure of the same emotion only in so far as its main object—the communication of pleasure—differs from that of ordinary speech; namely, the communication, for practical ends, of our thoughts, feelings, and volitions.

* The language of this paragraph is mainly Wordsworth's.

Poetic style, then—and this is the point whereat we have been aiming, and whereto we would now bespeak the reader's earnest attention—poetic form, manner or style, is, rightly understood, the spontaneous outcome, the free and natural efflux of the poet's train of thought or feeling; or (to borrow once more from the philosophic singer already quoted) it is less the dress than the incarnation of his thought.

"The poet's subject, if judiciously chosen, will naturally, and upon fit occasion, lead him to passions the language of which, if selected truly and judiciously, must necessarily be dignified and variegated, and alive with metaphors and figures. There will thus be no necessity for the poet to interweave any foreign splendour of his own with that which the passion naturally suggests—an incongruous proceeding calculated to shock the intelligent reader."

Unless, then, there go before a proportionate excitation of passionate thought or feeling in the poet, there can by no possibility be, on his part, any genuine poetic utterance. If the vehicle employed for the conveyance of the subject be unduly ornate—if we light upon a trivial feeling, a commonplace reflection, a trite and jejune sentiment, clad in language of exquisite harmony and brilliant colour, then we may assure ourselves: here, at least, is not true poetry, but its counterfeit; not native art, but only artifice. And, on the other hand, wherever we meet with f-reaching and luminous thought, or emotions lofty and glowing, incarnated in language correspondingly grave and transpicuous, or ardent and sublime—wherever (to steal a phrase from Matthew Arnold) we meet with "the successful balance of profound sincerity of subject with profound sincerity of execution"—there, and there alone, we may rest satisfied, is reached the highest watermark, the supreme and ultimate triumph, of poetic achievement.

And if this be so—if the style of the poet be, in truth, neither more nor less than the naked and unadorned embodiment of his thought or subject—then it follows that they are widely astray indeed who would endeavour to put asunder—nay, to set in sharp mutual contrast and opposition—the two several but interdependent elements of poetry called indifferently style and substance, form and subject, manner and matter.

Such is, however, unfortunately just what Prof. Saintsbury in the course of this book over and over again endeavours to do. He seems to share Mr. Swinburne's conviction that "where imagination and harmony are perceptible in the highest degree, there, even though they should be unaccompanied and unsupported by any other great quality whatever—even though the ethical or critical faculty should be conspicuous by its absence—there, and only there, is the best and highest poetry" (Miscellaneous: "Wordsworth and Byron," p. 69). "There is only one principle (he writes, p. 52) on which the valuation of poetic genius can properly proceed; and this is the question, 'Is the poet rich in essentially poetical moments of the highest power and kind?' And by poetical moments I mean those instances of expression which, no matter what their subject, their intention, or their context may be, cause instantaneously in the fit reader a poetical impression of the intensest and most moving quality."

And again, in reference to "the half-doubting religiosity" which so many have found an obstacle to their enjoyment of In Memoriam, he observes: "But here, again, the manner, as always with real poets, carries off, dissolves, annihilates the special matter for poetical readers." Now, assuming for the nonce the soundness of this maxim—a matter open, as we have seen, to the very gravest question—we may yet be permitted to doubt whether the critical method which Prof. Saintsbury has deduced from it can be applied to a literary handbook like that now before us with satisfactory results. Surely something more than a mere series of personal impressions, with here and there a criticism of some verbal grace or metrical tour de force, may be fairly demanded from the historian of nineteenth-century verse. "The history of English literature," writes Mr. Stopford Brooke, "is the story of what great English men and women thought and felt, and then wrote down in good prose and beautiful poetry." Wholly to omit, therefore, or to touch as lightly as possible on their thoughts and feelings, and to dilate at length upon the language they employed to record these, seems a somewhat preposterous method of telling that story. Yet this is, for the most part, what Prof. Saintsbury has actually done. Only in a very few cases—Burns, for example, and Tennyson, and one or two more—has he dealt with anything like adequate fulness upon the subjects with which the poet's thoughts and pen were occupied; while in the great majority of instances he has deemed it sufficient to give us an appreciation—often, it is true, as in the case of D. G. Rossetti, delicate, impartial and elaborate—of the poet's style. The result of this unfortunate course is that the long array of poets (and, let us add, prose writers, for to them also the observation equally applies) whose works are here passed in review, stand out far too much as isolated individuals, instead of appearing in their proper relationships, as the members of an intellectual family of many generations bound together by common duties, hopes, and aspirations, and transmitting from each to other the ever-growing spiritual heritage, of which they are the guardians and depositaries on behalf of mankind. More especially do the earlier chapters, on (1) the eighth and ninth decades of the eighteenth century, and (2) the era of the New Poetry, appear to have suffered from the adoption of this mode of treatment: the account given by the author of the later stages through which Poetry was conducted from Popian artifice and restraint to the glorious liberty of Truth and Nature, and of the shares severally taken in the work of her emancipation by Cowper, Crabbe, and Burns, and later on by Wordsworth, Coleridge, and Scott, being, to our mind, sadly meagre and inadequate.

It is, moreover, a matter for regret that we should occasionally find in these pages indications of careless or over-hasty production, such as are under all circumstances damaging to the authority of a critic, but are especially disastrous, both to it and to his book, when this happens to be, as in the present instance, a popular survey or "mind-map" of literature. Is it that having recently been made a member of the Scotch professoriate, Mr. Saintsbury is bent upon demonstrating the wisdom of his appointment by a display of that spirited indifference to strict accuracy of detail which is by some believed to be the differentia of the species? We know not; but this at least we can vouch for, that—as he himself says of De Quincey—at times "his facts are not exactly a fact." This haziness of statement—in truth, it amounts to something more than that—now and then bears hard upon some luckless individual, as, e.g., the late Robert Plumer Ward, whom Prof. Saintsbury, not content with omitting his name from the chapter on "The New Fiction," actually robs of his novel Tremaine, which the Professor here assigns to the pen of a contemporary writer, T. H. Lister. A far more serious, indeed a cruel, mis-statement occurs on p. 61, where the author speaks of "Kubla Khan, which Coleridge says he wrote in 1797, but of which no mortal ever heard till 1816." Coleridge has, as it is, quite enough to answer for on the score of mishandling dates: the charge here insinuated against him is, we are happy to say, absolutely groundless, and has clearly been engendered between our author's prejudice and his ignorance. Perdita Robinson, who died December 28, 1800, unmistakably refers to Kubla Khan in her lines to "To S. T. Coleridge, Esq.":

"I'll mark thy 'sunny dome,' and view
Thy 'caves of ice,' thy 'fields of dew.'"

But for a crowning example of "words without knowledge," we must turn to Prof. Saintsbury's account of Wordsworth. He actually informs us that Wordsworth married his cousin, that he travelled in Germany with Coleridge, that his "first volume of poems" was published in 1793, that the Guide to the Lakes appeared in 1834 (it was published in 1810), and that "even adorers" have allowed all the poet's greatest work to be included in the Lyrical Ballads of 1800 and the Poems in Two Volumes of 1807. This last pronouncement is only to be beaten by Mr. John Morley's remark upon the "Ode Composed on an Evening of Extraordinary Splendour and Beauty," that it is "the one exception [!] to the critical dictum that all Wordsworth's good work was done in the decade between 1798 and 1808." One wonders what "the adorers" of whom Prof. Saintsbury speaks would make of "Laodamia" and "Dion"; of "Yarrow Visited" and "Yarrow Re-visited"; of the "Odes to Lycoris," "The Primrose of the Rock," "To May," and "The Wishing-Gate"; of "Departing Summer hath assumed," "The Minstrels played their Christmas Tune," "Ethereal Minstrel, Pilgrim of the Sky," and the group of exquisite "Evening Voluntaries"; and, lastly, of a score or more of sonnets, including some of the poet's most crystalline workmanship and loftiest reaches of spiritual passion. But against such random generalising remonstrance and argument are alike thrown away: it is perfectly simple, highly effective, and demands but the exercise of a little self-confidence; and it is therefore sure to be always, though with more or less caution, practised by the critics, and accepted, quite beyond the bounds of reason or prudence, by the general public.

Dr. Johnson, we are told, looked upon himself as "a good-humoured fellow"; and Prof. Saintsbury prides himself upon his absolute impartiality, and boasts himself the possessor of a conscience void of offence alike towards authors and the reading public. This artless self-criticism serves, of course, but to lend an added piquancy to those occasional displays of prejudice which most persons, we fancy, will have little trouble in detecting in this book. Too often Prof. Saintsbury's prepossessions result in simple dulness; at times their effect is amusing; once, at least, unhappily, it is revolting. His estimate of George Eliot's novels provokes a smile, while seriously impairing his general authority as a critic; but the tone of his references to certain circumstances of her life cannot fail to produce, in every manly mind at least, indignation and disgust. Prof. Saintsbury quotes, as "a memorable sentence whereon a great sermon might be preached," the saying of Henry Kingsley's Lord Welter: "There are some things a fellow can't do." One of the things (he may depend upon it) Lord Welter never could have done is to pursue with sly detraction and covert sneer the memory of a dead woman of great intellect, and of a noble and generous, if not always and absolutely unerring, spirit.

T. HUTCHINSON.

The Lost Possessions of England: Essays in Imperial History. By Walter Frewen Lord. (Bentley.)

WHAT is an Empire? No one knows. Quot imperia tot sententias. Each State which has assumed the purple, from the Holy Roman to the unholy Haytian Empire, modifies the definition to suit its own convenience. Austria, Germany, Russia, even Turkey, cling on more or less avowedly to the skirts of the Hadrians and Constantines of old. But beyond these shadowy, if respectable, claims what test will serve? A vast, compact, populous territory? Such is the American Union. Remoteness and variety of foreign possessions? Then, are Holland, Portugal, and Spain empires still? Conquest, or absorption, of previously distinct races and states? Herein Spain, Italy, the British Isles, and Switzerland are not far behind Austro-Hungary. Or is it the form of government? No Church without a bishop—no Empire without an emperor? But, then, what is an emperor? Surely popular instinct would define him as a despot of the first rank—mild and benevolent if you like, but always more or less of the despot. The first Napoleon was an emperor; the third tried to be; Soulouque was a genuine black Nero, though his Haytian empire was a travesty. In Europe the Caesars are extinct, for both the Czar and the Sultan are Asiatic phenomena: our titular emperors are all sore let and hindered in their imperial omnipotence by fractious parliaments and irreverent journalists. Clearly degrees of despotism are not the test. The French Empire survives, and grows under the name of Republic: Ireland would never be imperialist, even under the iron rule of an "uncrowned king."

So when we English speak of our Empire, we are applying an indefinite, ambiguous term in a sense wholly peculiar, individual, and novel. Etymologically the word is apt enough; historically its suggestions are fallacious and misleading. We use it till a better can be invented, and when will that be? "British Possessions," the term favoured by Mr. Lord, is peculiarly infelicitous, because it is not the dominium but the imperium which is claimed by our central government. "British colonies" is no doubt a good, sounding, Latin phrase, and still better is our native term, "Her Majesty's Plantations"; but, then, many of our possessions never were, and for climatic reasons never can be, colonies at all, and many which were and are colonies were not British, but Spanish, Portuguese, French, or Dutch. So an Empire we must call it—this perfectly novel and unprecedented power which a seafaring nation has unconsciously, instinctively, often clumsily, extended to the ends of the earth. We do but borrow the name from Rome, to whom alone in the roll of history it rightfully belongs. For other empires, ancient and modern, were but more or less short-lived agglomerations of conquered countries held together by force or superior civilisation. The Romans first raised the occupation and government of their conquests to a practical art; they failed in perpetuating their ideal because the Roman aristocracy which was to devote itself exclusively to the profession of government, became degenerate and unequal to the task. Yet the system long survived from the very boldness and originality of its conception. Call them robbers, murderers, tyrants—so they were; but when they governed well, as surely they often did, it was not because they were philanthropists or saints, but because they liked it—because they felt it a pleasure and a pride and a duty to govern well: because, in short, they were artists in government. And herein lies the true analogy between the two great empires, Roman and British. Other resemblances are more or less superficial, while the contrasts are numerous. For one thing, the invention of the compass lies between them. True, Rome did send out isolated feelers at first; but its inevitable object was the conquest of the whole Mediterranean coasts, and that achieved, it expanded its frontiers, but always in a ring-fence. It was thus forced to include some unprofitable territories and peoples; the loss of a single member was the signal for the disintegration of the whole body; a stupefying centralisation alone could cope with the administration of so vast a region. Not so the English. Wandering round the world they planted little settlements on any shore they fancied, occupying a new island or a desert continent, seizing a Spanish town, storming a French fortress—Europe knowing little, nor caring much, about their doings. Some of these possessions they neglected, some they carelessly handed over as make-weights in various European treaties, some they strengthened as sentry posts and houses of call, some they nursed into rich colonies, some they allowed to grow up of themselves into populous states. Each had its own separate history; and, luckily, each was administered, or not administered, separately and on its own merits. For a continuous colonial policy, or a centralised colonial system, we have hitherto never attempted. The Roman Empire was formed by the gradual expansion of a circle of conquest which had Rome for its centre; the British sprang up sporadically in a hundred centres, widely separated and far remote. A policy deliberately formed and steadily pursued inspired the whole course of Roman aggression; the British Empire was, and has hardly yet ceased to be, experimental. Herein lies its profound contrast to the Roman model; its novelty, its perfect originality, its apparent weakness, its real strength and promise. England could afford to neglect, to abandon, to surrender, to exchange these outlying members, to keep them in reserve lazily ripening till the time came for using them, to start a hundred fresh beginnings instead of rounding off what she had begun, always with some vague hope but rarely any definite designs for the future. Always experiment, or rather the collection of materials for future experiment. And thus did the British Empire grow up. Over the result we crow with pride; our enemies sigh with envy. But if once we look back on our achievements in the light of our opportunities, we may blush for the Empire that might have been, that fate thrust into our hands and that we wantonly let slip.

Into these wider reflections Mr. Lord's "Essays in Imperial History" cannot fail to lead every reader; for behind each episode of our colonial history there looms the problem of Empire—what, how, why it was: its past, its present, and its future. Of the book we shall say little in detail; it affords too many temptations to comment and quotation. A few remarks seem open to objection. Surely it is a mere legend that slaves' backs were used in Java as ledgers on which to brand the revenue accounts (p. 238); the parodied letter of Byng (p. 124) is an error of taste; the note (p. 165) on the present Cuban war is carelessly misleading. But all the same it is an excellent little book, and one to be commended and recommended; for it is singularly opportune and useful. The history of our dealings with certain possessions—Dunkirk and Minorca, for instance—is so scattered about and so involved in other events that few can retain it as a continuous thread. Only by some such separate treatment can we estimate properly the comparative folly of each surrender, even of that astounding triumph of diplomacy, the exchange of Cuba and the Philippines for Minorca at the Peace of Paris. Moreover, the narrative is well executed; always concise, clear pointed, and embellished by many lively sallies, curious details and well-chosen scraps of biography. Mr. Lord, under the advice of the late Sir John Seeley, has selected nine of our lost possessions for special treatment. The most important of all, New England, he omits for sentimental reasons. Others he briefly touches on in his Introduction. Had he given a full summary of each with dates, or even arranged them in tabular form, we feel that the book would have been more useful and final, though doubtless harder reading. Less didactic it would hardly have been, though Seeley thought otherwise. Surely the cumulative effect would have been stronger; surely our five cessions of Guadeloupe and three of Martinique were worth more dwelling on; and had Mr. Lord written a month later, he would hardly have dismissed our latest surrender on the ground that "the destiny of the Transvaal is fairly obvious."

He has no mercy for folio traditions. Thus he positively defends—to our surprise and delight—the "political crime" of Charles II. in selling for a fancy price Dunkirk, that stupid acquisition of Cromwell, where, as was aptly said, "we lay as a Mouse between the cat's Paws." The Protector's reputation as a statesman was saved by his premature death; for, in truth, his foreign policy was not in advance but a little behind the times. Whether he meditated some such vast schemes as Gustavus or Charles XII. or Napoleon, or whether he merely clung on to the old delusion that the honour and interests of England required her to hold some possessions on the Continent, his policy was equally shortsighted. In a learned introduction to his edition of the Journal of Joachim Hane, Mr. Firth has recently collected all that is to be known about the secret missions of Sexby, Stoupe, and Hane to the Huguenots and Frondeurs between 1651 and 1654. In these obscure negotiations, Oleron, Arcachon, or a port on the Gironde are suggested as the price of English support. A better opening soon appeared, and in 1658 Cromwell occupied Dunkirk with the applause of his gaping subjects. What disgrace and humiliation it brought to Britain is grimly told by Mr. Lord: he spares us nothing. But he never does. Thus, it is cruel to remind us—who have been dragooned into complacency over our Ionian and other magnanimous cessions—that from 1850 till we bundled out in 1864 we put up with the brazen impudence of the Ionian parliament, which, among other insults, insisted every session, after the speech from the throne, on having a priest in to purify the chamber from the pollution of the Queen's representative. Even Mr. Gladstone, it seems, had to put up with disinfection.

In his Preface the author points six morals from his tale—all very true, very grave, and very urgent. But the lesson which includes them all, which inspires every page of the book, is that one which England has ever been slow to learn, never slower than now—the need of foresight. What British enterprise and courage has done, British statesmen have delighted to undo. And why? Because amid their party squabbles and bureaucratic peddling they never sat down to think. Because they were not philosophers. Because to look a decade ahead, an age, a century, seemed to them visionary and unprofessional; and the few who dared to do so—Chatham, Beaconsfield, and one other still with us—they laughed down as mountebanks. Because they would not pause to desecrate—neither Elizabeth, nor Cromwell, nor Walpole, nor Pitt, nor Canning—as they might have desecrated, the natural destiny of their race to a cosmopolitan maritime empire. That grand conception they would not grasp, steeped as they were in the conservative prejudices of European diplomacy. It has never been realised; probably it never will be. We are too late. Yet it might have been, but for the statesmen. If only some Chatham or Hastings had succeeded James I. Once started and authorised, the Imperial impulse would have marched of itself. The people would have followed gladly—nay, we know what great things they did without, or in spite of, their timid leaders. The wealth and energy wasted on civil strife and continental struggles would have been concentrated on the achievement of an overpowering maritime supremacy, and the ideal British Empire would have been built up. And to what purpose? What would be its aims, its policy, its advantage to the Mother Country and to the world? Surely not visions of boundless conquests, of new continents too unweildy to govern, of wholesale robbery of Spanish and Dutch colonies, of vast streams of wealth flowing home from our remote possessions to enrich and corrupt the capitalists of Great Britain. No, our obvious policy was to plant all over the world, not dépôts of rum and missionaries, but centres of British influence, everywhere to rule and teach the art of ruling as we are doing in India to-day, and, avoiding the error of the Romans in imposing everywhere their own civilisation, to hasten the development of the native civilisation of each of our conquests. Such an Empire would have been invulnerable because so elastic. It would have brought peace, wealth, and happiness to the darkest places of the earth; it would have paid its way; it would have given us a commanding voice in the councils of Europe. Such an Empire the instinct of our great captains and humble adventurers was ever groping after. But the politicians would not have it so. It is a dreary story, but Mr. Lord has made the best of it.

E. PURCELL.

Hans Christian Andersen: a Biography. By R. Nisbet Bain. (Lawrence & Bullen.)

In these days of biography it is, perhaps, a matter for surprise that Andersen had not ere this found an English biographer. As Mr. Bain says,

"he is the one foreign author whom we can never regard as an alien, since, from long familiarity and association, we have come to look upon him as one of ourselves. His stories have been the delight of our children for three generations, and their popularity among us increases rather than diminishes as time goes on; scarcely a year passes without bringing with it a new edition or translation of the incomparable 'Fairy Tales.'"

How, then, are we to account for the fact that twenty years have passed since Andersen was laid in his grave, and that only now, tardily as it were, comes an English life of the man whose stories are in England like household words?

The reason I take to be that Andersen's autobiography has stopped the way. So early as 1846 Mary Howitt—in her own small way, by the by, a real poet—translated the first instalment of his Reminiscences. Then came later instalments, one of great importance carrying down the narrative to 1855, and another to 1867. Of this last Mr. Bain makes no mention in his Introduction; and of the Story of my Life, published in 1855, he says that "it has never been translated into English." But here there is something that needs more explanation than I can give, inasmuch as I am writing away from London, and without access to the Danish volume of 1855; for there is before me an English version of the Story of my Life, published by Messrs. Sampson Low, Son, & Marston, and bearing the date of 1871, which certainly carries the autobiography to 1855, with a break at that date, and beyond that again to 1867, and corresponds, paragraph for paragraph apparently, with the Selbstbiographie, also before me, given in the German edition of Andersen's works published at Straßburg in 1881. However, be the facts what they may—and I am far from wishing to impugn the statements of so accomplished a bibliographer as Mr. Bain—this at least is clear, that, from a date antecedent to the great Danish writer's death, the British public have been in possession of his own account of his own life, and that any would-be biographer might naturally therefore hesitate to place himself, as it were, at a disadvantage.

Mistakenly so, no doubt, as Mr. Bain has shown. Though the Story of my Life—I am speaking here of the English version before me—is a charming book, characteristic to a degree, full of Andersen's childlike optimism, his dainty fancy, his bright and graceful humour—qualities that did not in his case exclude a certain shrewdness—yet it is a book that stands, like many another autobiography—Rousseau's Confessions, for example—in need of verification and control. Mr. Bain quotes "Edward Collin, Andersen's oldest and most intimate friend," to the effect that the "story" is a "production of daily shifting moods"; and Mr. Bain adds, on his own account, "certainly a more misleading book can scarcely be imagined." So he retells the story soberly, carefully, critically, perhaps with a little less than full fellow-feeling for the wayward, daemonic, half-irrational, half-inspired, element in Andersen's character, but certainly with great fulness of knowledge, not only as regards the facts of Andersen's own life, and the books by him and about him, but also as regards Danish literature generally. Here Andersen's portrait is placed, as one may say—and it gains thereby—in its right national frame.

An interesting figure beyond all doubt: a most interesting figure. Mr. Bain has had an admirable subject. Andersen himself was fond of regarding his own life as a fairy tale; and, in good sooth, we may so regard it too. There was the good fairy who presided at his birth in the little humble cobbler's oot at Odense. She gave him genius, genius alone of all the gifts in her casket; but what a gift it was! With it education even became superfluous, poverty could not depress. He made his way against all disadvantages, his way not to wealth, but to something better and higher—to a life, however clouded occasionally by critics, of bright, sunny intellectual enjoyment among his peers at home and abroad, to a fame that may rightly be called world-wide, and to that affectionate place in the heart of his readers, which even great intellectual power does not by any means always secure. He was neither a supreme poet nor a great novelist, still less an even adequate dramatist. But he was an exquisite weaver of fairy and other stories, bringing to his loom the threads of a delicate and almost iridescent fancy. What children will like in the way of literature it is very difficult for the grown-up judge to say. I lately saw a statement that R. L. Stevenson's poems, professedly recording the experience of childhood, are rather calculated to please the adult reader; and yet I am acquainted with two little critics, aged respectively six and eight, who are very fond of those poems, and know several of them by heart. And so, apart from experience, one might perhaps have thought Andersen's tales too fraught with inner meaning—the bright fabric of them too soberly “shot” with life's sadder lore—to please the child's taste for a simple story. But against experience who can argue? Children do love these tales. As Mr. Bain says, three generations have delighted in them—finding, it may be, an added charm in the very depth, felt dimly rather than understood, an attraction in the inner and mysterious meaning. To live for ever in the hearts of the little ones—is not that indeed fame? FRANK T. MARZIALS.

Catholic Socialism. By Francesco S. Nitti, Professor of Political Economy at Naples. Translated by Mary Mackintosh, with an Introduction by D. G. Ritchie. (Sonnenschein.)

MACAULAY noted long ago that marvellous faculty of adaptability so often displayed by the Roman Catholic Church, in virtue of which it has been enabled to enlist in its service many enthusiasms which might otherwise have been hostile. The truth of this remark has seldom been more strikingly illustrated than by the attempts made in so many countries of late years to capture the great Socialist movement, which in many of its forms has assumed an attitude so violently opposed to Catholicism, and, in fact, to religion in general.

The story of this remarkable episode of our day, so far as it has developed itself to the present date, has found a worthy chronicler in Prof. Nitti. The scope of his work is, indeed, somewhat wider than its title would indicate; for while treating most fully of the social movements within the Catholic Church, the author has by no means confined himself exclusively to these. It would, indeed, be difficult to obtain from any quarter a more comprehensive survey of the social problem in the chief civilised nations of the world than is furnished in the present volume. It is to be feared that there are few, if any, in this country who have so accurate a knowledge of the existing circumstances of Italy as Prof. Nitti shows of those of England.

The author commences by a brief review of the social conflicts of antiquity, in reference to which he is perhaps rather too peremptory in affirming the entire absence of anything like Socialistic ideas in the modern sense. Many will think that he commits an equal or greater error in the opposite direction when treating of the economic doctrines of early Christianity. It would certainly seem that he overstates the extent to which communistic views may be traced in the New Testament, and such statements as the following are far too unqualified:

“We are bound to admit that Christianity was a vast economic revolution more than anything else. The first Christians did not seek to acquire wealth; like Christ, they sought to annihilate it . . . The early Fathers of the Church, faithful to the teachings of Christ, professed thoroughly communistic theories. They lived among communistic surroundings.”

It can only be pronounced an extravagant paradox, of a kind which it is fair to say that Prof. Nitti does not elsewhere indulge in, when we are told:

“We may, consequently, and without any fear of exaggeration, affirm that most of the great schisms and conflicts by which the Catholic Church has been torn were simply economical conflicts.”

The most valuable part of the book, however, is that which deals with the various religious-social movements of the present day. The author's standpoint would seem to be that of an Italian Catholic of the Liberal school, opposed to papal infallibility, but dreading more the aggressive spirit of irreligion rampant in so many continental countries, and looking to the Church as the only power capable of solving the social question. The general fairness and impartiality of his attitude are worthy of all praise. Considerably the largest amount of space is devoted to Germany, as the country in which Socialism has unquestionably assumed the greatest proportions of recent years. The growth of the Social Democratic party during the last quarter of a century is truly astonishing. In 1871 they polled 100,000 votes all over the country, and returned a single member. In 1893 their strength had risen to two millions, and they returned no less than forty-five representatives. “This astounding progress has inspired the Social Democrats with a boundless faith in their own strength, and in the future which they believe awaits them.” These facts might furnish some food for reflection to those in this country who are congratulating themselves on the utter insignificance of the newly organised Socialist party, which could only command 5,000 votes. They might remember, if we consider the difference in the franchise of the two countries, that the English Socialists are certainly quite as strong in numbers as their German congeners were to start with, and it would be rash to pronounce it utterly impossible that the former may grow at the rate the latter have done.

While inflexibly hostile to the Social Democrats, many of the leaders of German Catholicism have found it necessary to put forward an advanced social programme in order to retain the allegiance of the artisan section of their communion. The founder of this movement was Ketteler, the late Archbishop of Mayence, of whom Prof. Nitti gives an interesting account. His view was pushed still further by Moufang, one of the canons of his cathedral, who represented the city in the Reichstag for many years. The present parliamentary leader of the Catholic Socialists is Canon Hitze, whose economic views are of a pronounced collectivist nature. He “never for a moment hesitates in following out his theories to their extreme consequences; he is a convinced Socialist, and considers that Socialism, understood in a large and Christian sense, is the future towards which our modern society is tending.”

In Austria, though revolutionary Socialism is by no means so strong as in Germany, the Catholic social movement has assumed scarcely inferior dimensions. Here it has been largely mingled with the anti-semitic agitation, which our author truly observes is just as much economical as religious in its basis.

Passing on to France, the mother country of European Socialism, we notice even here the same tendency. The leader of the Catholic Socialists in that country is Count Albert de Mun, whose career has been one of the most remarkable in modern French politics; and even those who most disagree with his views cannot fail to recognise in him an honesty and unselfishness of purpose which stand out in bright relief against the general low tone of public morality.

“The French Catholic Socialists have, for a good number of years, had a well defined programme, and all strive towards the same end and under the same colours. With the exception of a few points touching on religious matters, the programme of De Mun and his collaborators is identical with that of the most advanced Socialists.”

In his concluding chapter, Prof. Nitti treats of “The Papacy and the Social Question.” He considers the fact that the present Pope has allowed leading Catholic ecclesiastics in various countries to identify themselves with the new movement to be in itself an indication that “between the principles of the Church and those of pacific evolutionary Socialism there is no absolutely open contradiction.”

These words may be said to express the general keynote of the book, which may again be commended to all earnest students.

R. SEYMOUR LONG.

NEW NOVELS.

Confession. By Elizabeth E. Evans. (Sonnenschein.)

Up in Arms. By Margery Hollis. In 3 vols. (Bentley.)

A Woman Intervenes. By Robert Barr. (Chatto & Windus.)

Joe Ford. By Sydney Newton. (Fisher Unwin.)

Roger Vanbrugh's Wife. By Adeline Sergeant. (Hutchinson.)

The Life of Nancy. By Sarah Orme Jewett. (Longmans.)

A Self-Denying Ordinance. By M. Hamilton. (Heinemann.)

The History of Godfrey Kings. By W. Carlton Dawe. (Ward & Downey.)

A Philanthropist at Large. By G. W. Appleton. (Downey.)

THE fascinating clergyman whose presence breeds rivalry among the ewes of his flock is a common case in novels. Confession is a distinct variation on this theme. The Rev. David Stearns, more or less openly courted by most of the marriageable women of Bloomfield (Vermont), chooses Lucy Allen, a local Dorcas. She answers his proposal by confessing the unsuspected secret of a misfortune which happened to her as a schoolgirl. David Stearns is tempted to a counter-confession: a similar, but graver secret has long been the subject of bitter remorse to him, but from excellent motives he decides to remain silent. He marries Lucy Allen; and they are very happy until the malice of a disappointed rival to the Rector's affections finds its opportunity in the discovery of his wife's early fault, which this person supposes to be still concealed from him. The shock of finding her old transgression known kills Lucy Stearns; and in his despair her husband, rather inexplicably perhaps, reproaches himself with not having confessed to her his own secret. He gives up his living and returns to his old profession of medicine. While they are burying Lucy Stearns, a protégée of hers, a village girl who had been suspected a few years before of drowning an illegitimate child, throws herself into the river. So inexorable is Mrs. Evans in illustrating what seems to be her serious conviction, that in this world, at least, all faults are punished, whether repented of or no. Doctrine apart, her book is an interesting one, clearly and carefully, if rather unsympathetically written, and showing humour and dexterity in the development of its minor incidents and secondary characters.

In Up in Arms, a bride, who has suddenly discovered that she has been married for her money, rebels and secedes. A number of complications enable the author to delay her submission until the end of a third volume, and even at intervals to make it appear rather doubtful, thanks to an amorous cousin who threatens to become troublesome, but is happily disposed of at last, and to other devices. The plot involves sketches of society at a small seaside place, where the heroine takes refuge, but where her husband happens to have property; and though Miss Hollis has used material exceedingly well-worn, she has contrived to make her old ladies, their scandal and tea-fights and garden-parties, diverting enough. Noel, the heroine, is a graceful creation; and the conversion of Sir Piers Fordham from a cold fortune-hunter into a loving husband is managed with discretion and probability.

Love, finance, and American journalism are the motives of Mr. Barr's new novel, which tells how two penniless young men, having secured the option of a mica-mine somewhere in Canada, endeavoured to float it on the London market; how they were duped by a partner, and how the daughter of a millionaire came to their rescue. She married one of the two friends; the other married a young woman connected with the New York Argus, who at the beginning of the story had turned his credulity to professional account in a most shameless manner. A Woman Intervenes is undeniably exciting: it is full of shrewd observation, and it contains one original character (Miss Jennie Brewster), and one very dramatic incident.

Joe Ford is the story of an elaborate hoax devised by an eccentric baronet who has a weakness for moral experiments. The plot is most ingenious and astonishing; but the author's grammar is deplorable, and most of his characters singularly lifeless. Leslie Keith, a young man brought up by his rich cousin without any moral education, is, perhaps, an exception. But the story is one which must be read for its plot, or not at all; and on that condition will no doubt be a success.

All who revere the traditions of old-fashioned melodrama will be delighted with Roger Vanbrugh's Wife, in which Miss Sergeant has been careful to combine the elements desirable to ensure success in this kind. An impeccable heroine, whose "birth is wrapt up in mystery"; a really complete villain, a blackhearted Frenchman with small, evil eyes and a sardonic smile; and a Polish Anarchist who bore before marriage the remarkably Polish name of Venetia Zavertal, are the most striking members of an exhaustive collection of traditional types. Miss Sergeant's vocabulary is traditional too, and her catastrophe a most satisfactory one by all the rules, since it includes two marriages and an exemplary horse-whipping. This is a story which will make middle-aged people feel young again.

It is not often that a book of short stories contains anything so excellent as the best of those included in the same volume with The Life of Nancy. Miss Jewett's tales have obviously received the form in which they were first conceived, and which suits them perfectly: they are not long stories boiled down, nor yet meaningless, ejaculatory episodes, but complete and adequate records—"specimen days" in people's lives, sympathetic sketches of New England manners, lifelike and charming medallions. Nothing better, perhaps, in this way has been done for a long time than the little story called "A War Debt," in which a Bostonian visits a ruined Southern home to restore an heirloom stolen in the Civil War; or that other, in which a widow carries flowers to the graves of her three husbands, sums up the merits of each, and is tortured by doubts as to which deserves the special honour of "the only rose." And the portraits of the old Longport shipmasters in "All my sad Captains" are not to be easily forgotten. There is one drawback to this book—that it is not all written in one language. Miss Jewett's own style is so careful and pleasing that the dialect which most of her personages speak jars disagreeably, and a harmonious impression is sacrificed to an extremely false (though all but universal) notion of realism.

If A Self-Denying Ordinance is Mr. M. Hamilton's first book, he is to be congratulated upon it; for it is a fine and mature performance. Sir Nicholas Osborne, a young man of small means and extravagant habits, who has cheated at baccarat and retired from the Guards in consequence, falls in love, while living on his Ulster property, with Joanna Conway, the daughter of a country attorney and his Puritan wife. They are engaged; and Joanna, at first indifferent and only anxious for a less monotonous life than that of Ballylone, soon becomes deeply attached to Sir Nicholas. They both go to stay at his married sister's, in England, and there Sir Nicholas comes under the sway of an old flame—a married woman, Lady Florence Delacque. He is weak and she is vain. They elope, and Joanna returns broken-hearted to her parents. A year later the two delinquents are living together at Ballylone, to the scandal of the neighbourhood; for there is a child, and Mr. Delacque will not make things easier by proceedings in the Divorce Court. Condemned to poverty and isolation, they soon tire of each other, and at last Lady Florence is reduced to seek comfort in anaesthetics. Joanna cannot altogether avoid her old lover: she meets him and talks with him, hoping vainly that she may be of use, as a friend, to a man whom she trusts no more, but still loves. Things go from bad to worse with Sir Nicholas, till at last his brother-in-law, Lord Meredyth, interferes, and offers to make Lady Florence an allowance if she will go abroad, and to pay Sir Nicholas's debts if he will emigrate and work for his living. When he meets Joanna to say good-bye, she offers to go with him as his wife. Against everyone's advice, they are married; and the story ends with the gloomy prospect of a sacrifice destined to be vain; for Joanna has no illusions about the character of the man for whom she is wrecking her life. This story is told with great reticence, with insight and pathos, in a manner which is at once impersonal and sympathetic. Mr. Hamilton is a master of dialogue, and his studies of character are very conscientious, even where, as in much that relates to Lady Meredyth's society, he inclines to exaggeration. It would have been well if there were fewer paragraphs on every page. But this book has vigour and interest enough to excuse many faults.

The History of Godfrey Kings seems to have been suggested by hazy recollections of Tom Jones, David Copperfield, and Japhet in Search of a Father. If that is any recommendation, so much the better; for, considered as a work of imagination, it has neither common probability nor sublime extravagance in its favour, and is, to tell the truth, a very dull, slovenly, and exasperating book.

A Philanthropist at Large is a broad farce, in which nothing and no one is serious from beginning to end. Tommy Tipkins, an amiable drunkard, who becomes the agent of an American "philanthropist," has adventures ridiculous enough to make him a pleasant travelling companion on some of our Southern lines.

F. Y. EOOLES.

SOME COUNTRY BOOKS.

Moorland Idylls. By Grant Allen. (Chatto & Windus.) Mr. Grant Allen is nothing if he is not an evolutionist. Each of the thirty-three short essays in this volume crystallises round an evolutionary dogma. They are full of local colour, very suggestive to a naturalist and lightened by touches of humour, which, however, is occasionally flippant. The reader cannot but acknowledge their charm, slight as they are; but he is confronted in each, when most enjoying the sweet Surrey landscapes which Mr. Allen paints so well, with the evolutionary creed. Every difficulty in nature is solved by the two potent laws of the survival of the fittest and the effect of environment. Who would recognise the nightjar as "a stranded nocturnal bird of early type, with very few modern improvements and additions"? Why does the rabbit possess a white undertail? To act, says the author, as a danger-signal to its companions: when it runs and shows its white tail, they must take warning and flee also. The spontaneously sown Scotch fir would almost certainly have perished, if browsed down perpetually by cattle before it could have acquired "some thirty rings of annual growth just below the level of the soil" in its attempt to reach three inches of upright growth. These principles are applied to the shrike, to thrushes, adders, frogs, orchises—everything. The fancifulness of this mode of reasoning may be seen in the author's remarks on the green woodpecker:

"He is not wholly devoid of those external adornments which are the result of generations of æsthetic preference"; "his ground-tone of green, indeed, serves, no doubt, a mainly protective function by enabling him to escape notice among the leaves of the woodland"; and more to the same effect. But Mr. Grant Allen's great master is equally emphatic against this view:

"If green woodpeckers alone had existed, and we did not know that there were many black and pied kinds, I dare say that we should have thought the green colour was a beautiful adaptation to conceal this tree-frequenting bird from its enemies; and, consequently, that it was a character of importance, and had been acquired through natural selection; as it is, the colour is probably in chief part due to sexual selection."—Origin of Species, p. 158, ed. vi., 1872.

Barring the obtrusive philosophy, these essays are light and pleasant reading.

By Tangled Paths. By H. Mead Briggs. (Frederick Warne.) The sweet home scenery of Surrey has found a sympathetic chronicler in Mr. Briggs. Trees, birds, flowers, woods, and fields—all appeal to his love of beauty, and he describes them so graphically that his readers find themselves sharing his pleasure. Who that has rambled over Leith Hill and through the contiguous deep lanes would not welcome the infectious note of appreciative admiration which is here struck? It is not given to everyone to recall his sensations in walking through the tangled country lanes with the same vigour as does Mr. Briggs. These essays first saw the light in the Kentish Gazette, and many will be glad to possess them in book form. The nightingale is evidently the author's favourite, but he can read the dark character of the crow as faithfully as the lovelorn moods of the Attic bird. A pleasant chapter describes the old-world streets of Folkestone. It is little to be wondered at that he falls into a general mistake in supposing that the barn-owl is only a nocturnal bird. We have often seen it flying along the hedgerows on dull, dark days. When the author diverges into social science—the existence of so many poor, or the masculine habits of the modern woman—he does not drop his plummet very deep; and yet many old-fashioned folk would agree in his views that women "disgrace their sex by smoking, wearing man's costume, playing football, and indulging in man's pastimes." As a book of the country for the country, Mr. Briggs's little volume will give much pleasure.

Chats about British Birds. By J. W. Tutt. (Gill.) Among the many books treating of birds and flowers which have been written of late years—country books, as they may distinctively be called—this unpretending little volume may be mentioned with approval. The author gives a chapter to each group of British birds, describes their characteristics, and illustrates some of the leading members of each. A few of these woodcuts are extremely bad—as, for instance, those of the supposed wagtail feeding the young cuckoo; the magpie, which is hard and coarse; the young quails; and the hawfinch, which is exceptionally unlike. This is a pity, as most of the other illustrations do illustrate the text. When Mr. Tutt writes plainly and without straining at eloquence, his style is sufficiently pleasant to lure on his readers. Occasionally he diverges, and then the effect is startling. The whole of the concluding chapter is an instance of this tendency. Perhaps one sample will suffice. It describes birds as "resplendent visions, with tongue dipping into Flora's choicest treasures, whose flowery cups of gorgeous hues fade before the glowing brilliance of the tiny feathered creature that hovers over the bright-hued tankard quaffing the nectarial draught, sometimes charm us."

It would not be fair, however, to conclude without commending the rest of the book. Only, why does Mr. Tutt say that the great black woodpecker "occasionally visits our country"? No undoubted British specimen has ever been obtained.

All Round Cycling. (Walter Scott.) This little volume may conveniently be mentioned here; for it will probably accompany not a few holiday-makers into the country this coming Easter. It consists of a collection of papers by different writers on topics connected closely with cycling. For example, Sir Benjamin Richardson writes—as, indeed, he has written before—on "Cycling and Health," and also describes a model cycling tour through England; Mr. G. Lacy Hillier writes on the modern machine and on racing; while Miss Evelyn Everett Green—a familiar name on Christmas books—treats of cycling for ladies. The book is excellently printed, but there are no illustrations.

TWO BOOKS ON HORACE.

Horace: Odes, Book II. With Introduction and Notes by James Gow. (Cambridge: University Press.) The Master of Nottingham High School is a practical and successful teacher, and knows the art of compression. His introduction, consisting of thirty short pages, combines with a good résumé of Horace's life short essays on the chronology of the Odes, on the characteristics of his poetry and of his Latinity, on his metres, on the order of the Odes, on the text, and on his imitations of Greek poets. This is eminently the kind of information which is best put in a compact form, and Dr. Gow has done it exceedingly well. We notice (p. xvi., ll. 7, 8) what we think a slip in the style: "Horace . . . knew and loved and admired Vergil by far the best." Can we admire a man the best? It is a sort of zeugma which might be avoided by substituting "most" for "best," though even then the reference to "knew" is awkward. The notes are serviceable and good. It is not easy to say anything very fresh about these familiar Odes. We are glad to see Dr. Gow leaning to Kiessling's view of Cæcænenias (Ode i. 38), that it should be Nemias—there being a temple to the personified dirge-goddess by the Viminal Gate. The first note of all should be omitted: the government of motum by tractas is just one of those things which a learner should be left to find out. In Ode xv., l. 3, the note on Lucrino seems rather too indefinite, geographically. On Ode xviii., l. 30, we think Dr. Gow makes a good case for taking destinata with fine, not (as Orelli, Wickham, and Kiessling) with aula understood.

The Odes (Books III. and IV.), Epodes, and Carmen Saeculare of Horace. Translated into English Verse by J. Howard Deazeley. (Henry Frowde.) This second instalment of Mr. Deazeley's translations of Horace's lyrical work seems to us an improvement on the first. The sense of poetry is everywhere; the diction of poetry seldom fails him; but the neat Horatian touch which we meet so often in Conington's or Mr. Rutherford Clark's version is by no means so frequent here. Here is a favourable specimen, the version of a famous passage (Epode xvi. ll. 35; Hæc et quæ poterunt—48; pæde), pp. 90, 91:

"So bound by this, or any oath that sweet return denies,
A whole community let us arise
To go, or such as scorn the herd by ignorance oppress:
Let hopeless craven cling to ill-starred rest.
But you, whose hearts are brave, forbear in woman's mood to grieve;
The Tuscan coast behind you fly to leave.
For us the world-encircling Ocean waits; a land that smiles
With plenty seek we, and those blessed isles
Where fields that know no ploughshare's touch
Still yield their yearly grain,
And vines still blossom that unpruned remain;
Where olive-bough puts forth the buds whose promise ne'er is wrecked,
Where trees by their own dusky figs are decked:
From hollow holm flows honey and from mountain's lofty crown
The gentle streams with sounding step leap down."

The effect of the original metre is cleverly caught in the main, but the sixth line seems to us hopelessly entangled English, in point of order. Similarly, in the very interesting attempt to render the Alcaic metre, in Ode iii. 1, by two decasyllabic, one hexasyllabic, and one octosyllabic line, there is a crude flaw, an unnatural division of two words by the metre (p. 2):

"Our fishes feel the water's narrowed flow,
Where seaward piles are thrust and builders throw Down rubble with a band
Of workmen, as their lord of land Grows weary."

Who, in reading this as an English poem, would not start at the break between the italicised words? Who would recognise that "of land" was meant to be governed by "weary"? On pp. 7, 8, the last two lines of st. 5, and the first two of st. 6, rhyme together, and so damage the cadence. On pp. 5, 6 we find a complex ambiguity:

"Provided that o'er Paris' grave
And Priam's cattle trample and the whelps they breed
Wild beasts therein concol unharmed, in pride
The Capitol may bide,
And Rome give laws to conquered Mæd."

Here (l. 2) the Alexandrine spoils the metre, the want of punctuation makes the cattle belong to Priam and breed whelps! In Ode iv. of bk. iii. it is impossible to read the third line of the fifth stanza into the requisite six syllables. In Ep. 17 (p. 94) is there any authority for "Protumeius"? In Ode i. of bk. iv. (p. 46) we doubt if "per aquas volubiles" = "o'er the rolling main." Orelli, no doubt, speaks rather ambiguously; but a reference to Ep. 2 of bk. i., l. 43, will suggest that it = "rushing streams"; and the context, "per gramina Martii Campi," indicates that the probable meaning is "the rolling Tiber." Still, Mr. Deazeley is undoubtedly among the better soldiers of the army of Horatian translators.

NOTES AND NEWS.

THE late Dr. W. C. Williamson, professor of botany at Owens College, Manchester, whose collection of specimens has just been purchased by the British Museum, left behind him an autobiography, which Mr. George Redway is about to publish under the title of Reminiscences of a Yorkshire Naturalist.

MESSRS. MACMILLAN & Co. announce for immediate publication a Life of Henry Callaway, first Bishop of Kaffraria, written by Miss Marian S. Benham, with some editorial assistance from her father, Canon Benham. The book will be illustrated with maps and portraits.

MR. JOHN MURRAY's announcements include The Japanese Alps: an account of climbing and exploration in the unfamiliar mountain ranges of Central Japan, by the Rev. Walter Weston, late British chaplain at Kobe, with a map and illustrations.

MESSRS. SEELEY & Co. have in the press a new book, entitled Animals at Work and Play: their Emotions and Activities, by Mr. C. J. Cornish, whose "Life at the Zoo" was so favourably received by the public two years ago; also a new historical story by Mrs. Marshall, the time of which is the Jacobite rising in 1715.

THE Rev. H. W. Clarke will shortly publish, with Messrs. Swan Sonnenschein & Co., a History of the Church of Wales, in which he seeks to present a fair statement of the historical facts, collected from authentic sources, with respect to the origin and progress of the Ancient British Church and its ultimate fusion with the Church of England; and also a sketch of its history through the Norman, Tudor, and Hanoverian periods, down to the present time.

WITH the delivery of an address by Mr. C. W. Leadbeater on "The Theosophical View," the Humanitarian League's course of lectures on "The Rights of Men and the Rights of Animals" was brought to a close on Tuesday evening, March 17, at the London Memorial Hall. The six addresses, which have shown a remarkable consensus of opinion on the principles of humanitarianism, among speakers otherwise representative of widely divergent schools of thought, will be shortly published as a volume by Messrs. George Bell & Sons.

PROF. FRIS, of Christiania, has written a Sketch of Petschenga Monastery, in Russian Lapland, drawn from historical sources and traditions. A translation of the work, by Miss Hill Repp, is announced for immediate publication by Mr. Elliot Stock.

MR. PAGET TOYNBEE has completed for the Clarendon Press a new edition of Brachet's Historical French Grammar. The work has been to a great extent rewritten and considerably enlarged, the principal additions being in the domain of phonetics. In its present shape the book will form a companion volume to Mr. Toynbee's Specimens of Old French, recently issued from the same press.

MR. HEINEMANN will publish this week a novel of adventure, by Mr. H. G. Wells, entitled The Island of Dr. Moreau, with a frontispiece by Mr. G. R. Aylmer. The main theme is supplied by certain grotesque and horrible possibilities of science, the treatment of which throws light on an abiding controversy between a noble profession and a section of the public.

MR. T. FISHER UNWIN announces for immediate publication a second collection of stories of the South Sea Islands, by Mr. Louis Becke, to be called The Ebbing of the Tide; and also The Statement of Stella Maberly, which will be anonymous.

MESSRS. HUTCHINSON & Co. will publish immediately a new novel by Mrs. Henry Reeves (Helen Mathers), to be entitled The Son of Hagar.

MESSRS. OLIPHANT, ANDERSON, & FERRIER will publish next week a volume of Caithness sketches, entitled A Canny Countryside, by Mr. John Horne.

THE same publishers announce a little book by the Rev. Norman Walker, under the title of The Scottish Churches: On what Basis can they be Re-united?

MR. JOHN MILNE, late of Wilsons & Milne, Paternoster-row, has resumed publishing at Amberley House, Norfolk-street, Strand. It is his intention to issue works of a popular kind, and he is now making up a list of original books of sport, travel, biography, adventure, fiction, and other light forms of literature.

ON Monday next, Messrs. Sotheby will be selling the library of Anthony Rich (author of The Illustrated Companion to the Latin Dictionary), which was bequeathed by him to Prof. Huxley.

THE following are the lecture arrangements at the Royal Institution after Easter: Prof. James Sully, three lectures on "Child-Study and Education"; Prof. C. Vernon Boys, three lectures on "Ripples in Air and on Water"; Prof. T. G. Bonney, two lectures on "The Building and Sculpture of Western Europe" (the Tyndall Lectures); Prof. Dewar, three lectures on "Recent Chemical Progress"; Mr. W. Gowland, three lectures on "The Art of Working Metals in Japan"; Dr. Robert Munro, two lectures on "Lake Dwellings"; Prof. W. B. Richmond, three lectures on "The Vault of the Sistine Chapel"; Mr. F. Corder, curator of the Royal Academy of Music, three lectures on "Three Emotional Composers—Berlioz, Wagner, Liszt (with musical illustrations)"; Mr. E. A. Wallis Budge, of the British Museum, two lectures on "The Moral and Religious Literature of Ancient Egypt." The Friday evening meetings will be resumed on April 17, when a discourse will be given by M. G. Lippmann, on "Colour Photography"; succeeding discourses will probably be given by Prof. G. V. Poore, Colonel H. Watkin, Prof. Silvanus P. Thompson, Prof. J. A. Ewing, Prof. J. A. Fleming, and other gentlemen.

THE FORTHCOMING MAGAZINES.

THE forthcoming number of the Asiatic Quarterly Review will contain no less than six contributions on the Anglo-French convention about Siam, by (among others) Sir Harry Prendergast, General Macmahon, and Baron Textor de Ravisi. There will also be articles on "The Protected Malay States," by Mr. W. A. Pickering; "The Financial Position of India," by Mr. A. K. Connell; "The Problem of the Races in South Africa," by Lieut.-Col. H. Elsdale; and "Kafiristan," by the editor (Dr. Leitner). Under Orientalia Prof. Edward Montet, of Geneva, submits a quarterly report on Semitic studies and orientalism.

To the forthcoming number of Cosmopolis M. Yriarte will contribute an article on "A Little Athens of the Sixteenth Century," and Baron Pierre de Caubertin will write on "The Olympian Games." Among the German contributions will be a "Requiem der Liebe," by Ferdinand von Saar, and a characteristic paper by Lujo Brentano.

LORD FARRER, who has just returned from Egypt, will contribute to the National Review for April an article on "Egypt and England."

THE April number of the Antiquary will contain an illustrated article on "Badges and Devices" by Mr. Clive Holland; and a Diary of a Journey from Scotland to London in 1796.

MR. ROBERT BUCHANAN announces a new magazine, to be both edited and published by himself at 36, Gerard-street, Shaftesbury-avenue. It is intended for "men, women, and critics," and will contain contributions by known and unknown writers.

THE weekly periodical hitherto called the Technical World and Science and Art will henceforth bear the title of Education: Secondary and Technical.

UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS.

THE Senatus of Edinburgh University has resolved to confer honorary degrees upon the following (among others): the degree of D.D. upon Canon Gore and the Rev. William Miller (principal of the Christian College, Madras); and the degree of LL.D. upon Prof. E. Van Beneden of Liège, Dr. Luigi Bodio (director of statistics to the Italian Government), Mr. P. Hume Brown (the biographer of George Buchanan and John Knox), Sir Charles Elliott (late Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal), Emeritus Professor David Masson, Sir J. Russell Reynolds (president of the Royal College of Physicians), Mr. J. A. Stewart (editor of the Nicomachean Ethics), and Dr. Francis A. Walker (president of the Massachusetts College of Technology).

PROF. KELVIN's jubilee as professor of natural philosophy at Glasgow is to be celebrated in June by both the university and the municipality, and also by an exhibition of mechanical, electrical, and scientific apparatus illustrating his genius as an inventor.

THE vacancy in the Hebdomadal Council at Oxford has been filled by the election of Prof. Lock, who received 110 votes, against 108 given to Prof. Dacey.

DEAN WICKHAM and Prof. W. J. Courthope have been elected to honorary fellowships at New College, Oxford—the first, we fancy, to receive this distinction.

ON Wednesday, March 11, Prof. Robinson Ellis read, as a public lecture, in the hall of Corpus Christi, selected passages of his prose translation of the hexameter Latin poem, "Aetna."

EARLY in Easter term, M. Jean Réville, professor of ecclesiastical history in the École des Hautes Études, will deliver two public lectures on the foundation of the Hibbert Trust at Manchester College, Oxford, on "The Beginnings of the Roman Episcopate."

It seems worthy of notice that no essay was sent in this year for the Arnold prize at Oxford.

PROF. VICTOR SPIERS, of King's College, London, has received the title of Officier de l'Instruction Publique, with the violet rosette, which is the highest distinction in the gift of the Educational Minister in France. Prof. Spiers was already Officier d'Académie, in recognition of his services to French literature as a teacher and of his books on French educational subjects.

At a meeting of the University Court of Edinburgh, held last week, a report of a committee was adopted, to the effect that it is not desirable to abolish restriction as to sex in competitions for open bursaries, but that all scholarships or fellowships founded prior to August, 1864, and within the power of the Court, shall be open to competition without restriction as to sex. The Court also approved of a report finding that woman students are not eligible for prizes founded prior to August, 1864, and that patrons have not the right to present women to bursaries founded prior to that year.

MR. ERNEST FOXWELL—brother of Prof. H. S. Foxwell, and himself known as a student of railway economics—has been appointed to the chair of political economy and finance in the Imperial University of Tokio.

It is stated that the Pope, acting on the advice of the Propaganda, has granted to Maynooth College the authority to confer degrees in theology and philosophy.

MM. ROTHSCHILD have presented 20,000 francs (£800) to the University of Paris, to provide travelling scholarships for students of history.

At the beginning of the present year there were 16,606 students at the Russian universities, divided as follows: Moscow 3888, St. Petersburg 2625, Kiev 2244, Helsingfors (Finland) 1875, Dorpat 1654, Warsaw 1335, Kharkov 1200, Kazan 825, Odessa 555, and Tomsk 405.

ORIGINAL VERSE.

TO A FRIEND.

"Thy Friend am I,
And so will Dye."

—Old Poem engraved on a Ring.

HERE is sixpence; take it,
With an old world vow.
Surely friends are faithful
Unto death, e'en now.
Long ago this poem,
Graven on a ring,
Was true friendship's offering;
Now to you I bring
Just a silver sixpence,
But the words are there;
Hang it on your bangle
'Mid so much that's fair.
It will then remind you,
Of the years now past;
And that in the future,
Friendship true will last.

FLORENCE PEACOCK.

A PERFECT FRIENDSHIP.

"Thy Friend am I,
And so will Dye."

—Old Ring Poem.

FRIEND, who art of all friends the nearest,
Friend, who art of all friends the dearest,
These words were graven upon a ring,
They are the faith that to you I bring.

Friendship and truth are for all time given,
I hold you, friend, as the gift of Heaven;
Life is a shadow that passeth away,
Love and faith will for all time stay.

There is naught in the world that can come between
The absolute trust of two friends I ween;
No power on earth that can loosen their hands,
E'en death himself cannot break those bands.

Friend, who art for all time the nearest,
Friend, who art now and for ever the dearest,
Well you know that the words speak true.
This is the faith I have given to you.

"Thy Friend am I
And so will Dye."

M. W.

OBITUARY.

"TOM" HUGHES.

ALMOST everybody who can read English must have been affected on hearing of the death of one whose official style was His Honour Judge Hughes, Q.C., but whom his friends and the world agreed to call Tom Hughes. That he was universally known by an abbreviation of his Christian name attests the hold he had won upon the public heart. Though he expressly repudiated (in a later preface) the assumption that he was to be identified with his own school-boy hero, yet the general verdict that found autobiography in his great book cannot be altogether wrong. An author who writes so realistically and with such enthusiasm is not the best judge of how much is fiction and how much truth.

It is worthy of note that Tom Brown's School-days was published sixteen years after he had left Rugby, and when he had long been under the influence of F. D. Maurice and Charles Kingsley. The type of boy there represented is not that which we naturally associate with Arnold, so much as with the later ideal of "muscular Christianity." But it is well to remember that the Rugby of Dr. Arnold not only produced poets, scholars and divines, statesmen and judges, but also such men as William Cotton Oswald (the blameless African hunter) and Hodson of Hodson's Horse.

Another interesting fact about Tom Brown's School-days is that it was published by the firm of Macmillans before they had moved from Cambridge to London; and that it was the first of their books to win a really great success. Again, Tom Brown at Oxford was one of the earliest serials that appeared in the newly founded Macmillan's Magazine. Somewhat later the author was chosen to write the biography of Daniel Macmillan; and now he has survived Alexander by but a few months. So far as we know, he never published with any other firm, his latest book being the Vacation Rambles of last winter.

We have also to record the death of Isabel Lady Burton, who sank her own individuality in that of her husband, Sir Richard. While he was alive, she accompanied him (whenever possible) in his travels, and ministered to all his needs. After his death, she devoted herself to his memory by writing his biography and republishing his books.

MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS.

THE March number of the Economic Journal (Macmillans) maintains the character of this publication for scientific severity. It opens with a paper by Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Webb on "The Methods of Collective Bargaining," by which apparently is meant the process of settling trade disputes between bodies of workmen on the one hand and bodies of employers on the other. Prof. F. S. Nittis discusses at length "The Food and Labour Power of Nations," with special reference to his own experience of the labouring population at Naples. Mr. J. Bonar prints an unpublished letter of Ricardo on the currency, written circa 1810, when the Bank Act was still suspended, supporting the well-known views of Lord Liverpool. Mr. C. Booth replies to some criticisms on his book with reference to the effect of out-door relief upon pauperism. While admitting that there may be some general relation between the two, he maintains that there is no persistent connexion. Among the minor notes we must be content to draw attention to a further communication from Mr. F. C. Harrison on the circulation of the rupee. A census of the coinage taken in June 1895, just two years after the closing of the mints, shows that the circulation was still continuing to expand. But this does not prevent Mr. Harrison from adhering to his opinion, that the ultimate result of the measure must be to contract the circulation, and thus improve the value of the rupee.

CORRESPONDENCE.

ON A PAIR OF GAULISH DEITIES.

London: March 19, 1896.

On a Gallo-Roman altar recently found at Sarrebourg are the figures of a god with a mallet, accompanied by a female divinity. The god is named Sucellus, the goddess Nautovella. The former name has long been known (see Rhys's Hibbert Lectures, pp. 54, 55, where its dative sg. is spelt Succello, Succello, Succello), and Prof. Strachan has explained it as a compound of the laudatory prefix su- (=Ir. su-, so-, W. hy-, Skr. su-) and cello-s, cognate with the Irish fo-chelim, "I care for," and the Welsh go-gelu, "to shelter, to protect." Non-Celtic cognates are Lat. colere and perhaps Skr. cārati. Sucellos would thus be the Gaulish equivalent of Αλκάρδος.

The etymology and meaning of Nautovella are still more transparent. This name is a compound of nauto- (or rather nauti-) and veltā. Here nauto (or nauti) is = Goth. nauths, Eng. need, Pruss. nauti; and veltā is a derivative of the root vel, "to turn," whence Welsh chwel, chwyl "verio," Ir. sel, bel (= vel) in des-sel, tuath-bil. The name would thus resemble in meaning the Latin Averruncus, and the Greek ἀπορρηκτός (an epithet of Apollo) and ἀλκίκατος (an epithet of Herakles and Hermes). If, as I conjecture, the original form of Nauto-veltā was Nauti-veltā, the change, in the first element of a compound, of an i-stem to an o-stem is paralleled by Caesar's Epo-rédo-ris = the Epo-rédi-ris of the inscriptions, where rédi is represented by the Irish i-stem rédi. Such changes occur also in Old-Slavonic, and are doubtless due to analogy. See Brugmann's Grundriss, ii. 27, 80.

The above etymology of Nauto-veltā was arrived at independently by Prof. Strachan and by myself.

WHITLEY STOKES.

THE ENGLISH LECTURESHIP AT CAMBRIDGE.

Cambridge: March 21, 1896.

Please kindly correct your statement (ACADEMY, March 21, 1896, p. 240) that I have "personally guaranteed that the stipend [of this lectureship] shall reach £100 for a period of five years." This would imply that I am giving a large sum.

My guarantee is that the stipend shall reach £50 a year for that period; and, of course, it ought to do so permanently.

To secure the permanence of this very humble stipend, the sum of £400 was (only a little while ago) required. I then offered the sum of £200, in the hopes of raising the other £200 from such residents here as had not hitherto contributed.

To this offer the response has been a contribution of £40. I now appeal to the whole English-speaking community to provide the remaining £160. It does not seem a large sum to expect from the lovers of English literature among the many millions who profess to regard it highly. Contributions may be sent to Rev. Professor Skeat, 2, Salisbury-villas, Cambridge.

WALTER W. SKEAT.

AN ADDITION TO "THE GOSPEL ACCORDING TO THE HEBREWS."

Jersey: March 18, 1896.

"When the Lord had given His linen cloth to the servant of the High Priest, He went to James and appeared to him"—so commences a fragment of the Gospel according to the Hebrews; and we are left wondering what can have gone before. Doubtless, as Hilgenfeld points out, the High Priest's servant was one of the guardians of the sepulchre. But why should this particular guardian have been singled out from the rest? What peculiar significance would the linen cloth have had for him? And are no traces of this remarkable appearance to be found elsewhere? It appears to me that an answer to these questions is provided for us in the Pilate-Joseph-Nicodemus group of Apocrypha—viz., the Acta Pilati, Narratio Josephi, Anaphora Pilati, Vindicta Salvatoris.

Let us see how the case between these documents and the Gospel according to the Hebrews stands generally. (1) The Acta Pilati certainly received considerable additions, if not its present shape, just about the time Jerome had brought the Gospel according to the Hebrews into prominence; and the effect produced by Jerome's translation of that Gospel may probably be traced in the pretence which the Acta editor puts forward of a Hebrew original. (2) The Acta contains two phrases,—half Syriac, half Hebrew—of which the Gospel according to the Hebrews appears to be the likeliest source—"Hosanna barrama" and "Baddach [sic] aphkid ruchi"; and it is practically certain (see Jerome's Epistle to Damasus) that the Gospel according to the Hebrews contained the former. (3) There appears to be a connexion between the statement in the Gospel according to the Hebrews, that at Christ's death the lintel of the Temple was broken, and that made in the Anaphora and the Narratio, that "the sanctuary was rent, and the pinnacle of the Temple fell."

And now let us see what the Acta tells us about Christ's first appearance after His resurrection. It is clearly stated that the first appearance was to Joseph of Arimathea. On Easter morning, a moment after midnight, in a flash of lightning Christ appears to Joseph in the prison-house where the Jews have immured him. In order to convince Joseph of the Resurrection, Christ transports him to the sepulchre, and shows him the linen cloth which he had himself provided. And looking at the Acta more closely we find that, in an alternative and probably older form—partly preserved for us in the Vindicta Salvatoris (Anglo-Saxon version)—there was no need to transport

Joseph to the sepulchre, for he was at the sepulchre already:

"I know that they took Him down," states Joseph, "and laid Him in the tomb which I had cut out; and I was one of those who guarded the tomb; and I stooped down, and thought that I should see Him."

Here, then, is the clue to the strange introductory sentence, "When the Lord had given His linen cloth to the servant of the High Priest." To the servant of the High Priest, merely as one of the guardians of the sepulchre, the giving or showing of the linen cloth would be meaningless; but, as given or shown to the man who had entombed and shrouded Christ, the linen cloth would be full of meaning. The High Priest's servant in the Gospel according to the Hebrews may or may not have been an Arimathean and named Joseph, but it appears certain that there he performed Joseph of Arimathea's functions.

Now that we have got thus far, we can see a step further. In the Gospel according to the Hebrews, there certainly cannot have been two applications to Pilate about Christ's sepulchre as in our St. Matthew, for the High Priest's servant cannot have been differentiated from the Jewish authorities in the same manner as the canonical Arimathean. Indeed, it appears likely that no application at all was mentioned, for that of the Jewish authorities in Matt. xxvii. is entirely due to Pilate's donation of the Body to a disciple. If application there was, it probably would have been merely that the Body might not remain exposed after sunset, especially "because it was the Preparation." Cf. Acts xiii. 29:

"When they had fulfilled all things that were written of Him, they took Him down from the Cross (v. r., 'asked of Pilate that they might take Him down') and laid Him in a tomb."

At first sight this peculiarity of the Hebrew Evangelist in identifying the action of the entomber with that of the guardians may appear to be of slight importance; but the case alters when we consider the matter more attentively. Notice the awkwardness and inconvenience of the double closure of the sepulchre in Matt. xxvii. 60, 66. For when the guardians arrive it is twenty-four hours too late; they cannot roll a great stone to the door, for Joseph has anticipated them; and all that can be done is to seal a sepulchre, which, for any proof to the contrary, may be already empty. We are left, then, to choose between two explanations of the Hebrew Evangelist's peculiarity. In proceeding as he did, either he deliberately rectified an obvious blemish in the canonical narrative (perhaps taking Pilate's remark, "Ye have a guard," as though Pilate had meant "Ye have a guard there already"); or else—and this seems more probable in view of the independence shown otherwise—we must suppose that he followed a separate line of tradition, in which there was no donation of the Body, and the watch, if not instituted by Jewish authority without reference to Pilate, was kept merely in the ordinary course of events after an execution. By the way, it may be added as a curious coincidence that in the Gospel of Peter, too, the guardians begin their watch on Friday; and though Joseph appears there in his canonical character not to be included among them, yet they and Joseph together take down the Body and roll the great stone into position together.

One more peculiarity of the Hebrew Evangelist is to be noted, and then our outline of his guard narrative will be nearly complete. Whatever may be its relationship to the canonical narrative, clearly its purpose is very different. The chief guardian is represented as a Jew, and therefore capable of giving credible testimony to Jews; moreover, he is represented as pious and trustworthy, not to be suborned; for it is impossible to imagine any frustration of Christ's purpose in appearing. Thus our author produces out of the guard episode, quite neutralised in the canonical Matthew, an effective piece of evidence for his countrymen; and one may instructively compare and contrast his procedure with that of the anti-Judaic author of the Gospel of Peter, who, proceeding in an opposite direction, acquits the guardians (Romans) of the disgrace of a bribe and perjury, makes them testify to Pilate as to what they have seen, and forces them afterwards to remain silent in obedience to legitimate orders.

F. P. BADHAM.

THE ROMAN DE LA ROSE.

Oxford: March 14, 1896.

In the opening lines of the M.E. version of de Lorris' and Jehan de Meung's Roman de la Rose, the translation of paage in de Lorris'

"Ou vintiesme an de mon age,
Ou point qu'Amors prend la paage
Des jones gens," &c., cannot but strike the reader as awkward and unpoetic. The verses are:

"Within my twenty yere of age,
Whan that Love taketh his courage
Of yonge folk," &c.

(Chaucer, ed. Skeat, i. p. 94, vv. 21-23.)

But it is probably to William Thynne, who is sole authority for the text at this point, and not to the translator, that we owe what is evidently a corruption of a rendering at once accurate and rhythmical. For courage is here certainly a mistake for "carriage," the proper translation of O.F. puage (= L. Lat. pedaticum), which means "toll," "tax." The word occurs several times in Chaucer; and in the Boece, i. pr. 4, l. 52, where Chaucer is sticking pretty close to Jehan de Meung's Boethius, carriages corresponds to the pages of the French version. The New English Dictionary records a Northern form, carage, occurring in the fifteenth century. It seems quite probable that Thynne, who evidently printed from a more or less Northern MS., had such a form before him, and mistook it for courage, making up for the lost syllable by the insertion of a "that" after "Whan." In whatever way the mistake may have arisen, we can feel sure that the verses were originally something like:

"Within my twenty yere of age,
Whan Love tak'th his cariage
Of yonge folk," &c.

("Love" and "yonge" are, of course, dissyllabic.)

MARK LIDDELL.

DANTE'S "MATELDA."

Oxford: March 21, 1896.

The history of the religious revival due to the German Mystics of the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries has sustained a serious loss by the death, on January 30, of Wilhelm Preger, author of a Geschichte der Deutschen Mystik—his lifework of thirty years, but unfinished. The attention of English Dante-students may deserve to be drawn to one of his minor works, a monograph on Dante's "Matelda." It appeared, in 1893, in the Papers of the Historical Section of the Munich Academy of Sciences (pp. 185-240), and has not been reprinted separately—a mode of publication which rather limited its circulation. This essay was a new attempt at an interpretation of that mysterious figure which has puzzled at all times the sagacity of Dante commentators: namely, Matelda, who takes Virgil's place to lead Dante through the early Paradise, before the face of Beatrice. Preger endeavoured to identify Matelda with an older contemporary of Dante, the saintly Sister Mechtild of Magdeburg, a poetess and prophetess who was inspired by holy feelings to compose a vision, in six books, in Low-German, called "The Flowing Light of Deity." A Latin version of this, the work of an intimate friend of Mechtild, which bears the title "Lux Divinitatis Fluens," was found by Preger at Basel in a MS. of the fourteenth century, and is partly edited by him as an appendix to his paper.

H. KREBS.

THE SIN-EATER IN WALES.

New College, Bathbourne: March 21, 1896.

I should not offer any remarks on Mr. Hartland's last letter, if it were not that he has admitted the importance of my point, that no direct evidence was produced in reply to Canon Silvan Evans's challenge, and at the same time misunderstood my statement that the Blackwood writer took up the challenge. He was actually one of the correspondents in the ACADEMY; so, of course, Mr. Hartland's remarks have no bearing on the point at issue. If most articles are potboilers, and of no further concern to the writers, this was certainly not the case on the occasion under discussion.

I base my suggestion that some at least of the customs are independent survivals partly on the fact that we find in some cases all the guests expected to partake.

N. W. THOMAS.

APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK.

SUNDAY, March 29, 3.45 p.m. South Place Institute: "Mozart," by Miss Annie C. Muirhead.

MONDAY, March 30, 8 p.m. Aristotelian: "The a priori in Geometry," by the Hon. Bertrand A. W. Russell.

8 p.m. Royal Institute of British Architects.

TUESDAY, March 31, 8 p.m. Civil Engineers: "The Tappin Harbour Works," by Dr. E. L. Corthell.

8 p.m. Colonial Institute: "British Rule in Malaya," by Mr. F. A. Swettenham.

8.30 p.m. Anthropological.

WEDNESDAY, April 1, 4 p.m. Archaeological Institute: "The Monastic Buildings of the Benedictine Abbey of St. Peter at Gloucester," by Mr. W. H. St. John Hope.

8 p.m. Elisabethan: "The Realm of Titania," by Mr. Frank Payne.

THURSDAY, April 2, 8 p.m. Linnean: "Monograph of the Genus Alisma (Lour)," by Mr. C. H. Wright; "African Algae," by Messrs. W. and G. S. West.

SCIENCE.

CHINA AND ISLAM.

Origine de l'Islamisme en Chine: deux légendes musulmanes chinoises; pèlerinages de Ma Fou-tch'ou. Par M. Gabriel Devéria. (Paris: Imprimerie Nationale.)

M. DEVÉRIA belongs to the sound school of investigators. He has never been of those who have sought to identify the Accadian script with the Chinese characters, the Persian Sun-God with the mythical Chinese emperors, the Sanskrit songs with the Odes of the Shi-King. There is still an immense amount of quackery mixed up with our struggling Chinese lore; and the efforts of several generations will be required to sweep away the speculative rubbish accumulated by the quidnuncs, before we shall be able to present a clear basis of solid fact for the inspection of the many-headed public. All M. Devéria's work in this field has been conscientious and respectable to the highest degree; and, moreover, he has the incalculable advantage in Paris of an Ecole and an Imprimerie to bring out his work for him free of cost and in presentable form, whereas in England it is almost impossible, so low have Chinese studies fallen, to find a society willing to do them this small reverence. Of course an exception must be made in favour of the assistance lent by the University of Oxford in the case of Dr. Legge's magnificent work.

The Chinese have a natural genius for history; even their modern newspapers participate in this characteristic, being much more scrupulous than their European rivals in distinguishing hard fact from elastic rumour. We have already seen how the Chinese have proved themselves to be almost the sole reliable authorities upon the subject of the early Turks; they are equally precise and satisfactory when they come to deal with the Arabs, and therefore we cannot do better than give a sketch of the how and the wherefore upon M. Devéria's own lines.

The Chinese first heard through the Persians of the compatriots of Mahomet. Persia itself by that name they first mention in 461 A.D., between which date and 509 A.D. several Persian embassies were sent to the Tungusic Tartars then ruling as Emperors of North China. Previous to this the Chinese had only known of Persia as Arsak (by which they meant the Parthian Arsakides). The Persian author Ferdousi mentions embassies from the "Khan of China" in 530 A.D., as is recorded by Deguignes.

The history of the Chinese T'ang dynasty tells us that in 628 A.D. the Persians tried to throw off the yoke of the Western Turks, and that the Arabs (called Taxi or Tazik by the Chinese) killed Yezdedgerd III. in 651 A.D. or 652 A.D. somewhere near Merv. Yezdedgerd's son, Pirouz (whom the Chinese call Pi-lu-sz), sought the assistance of China, which empire was now once more under purely native rule.

In accordance with the policy usually pursued by the Chinese, Pirouz was transformed into a Chinese governor or proconsul, and was sent back to rule the Persian "province" with his administrative seat at what is identified as the city of Zaranj (Tsih-ling or Tsat-lang). Many other interesting details are given; but it is more to our purpose to pass on at once to the year 713, when a Taxi ambassador arrived in China, and stoutly refused to demean his master by kowtowing to the Emperor. The master in question was probably the General Qotaybah, then commanding the armies of Walid I. in Transoxiana. Another envoy, named Soliman, arrived in 726, and a third in 756. In 757 the Arabs lent military assistance to the Chinese against certain rebels; they followed, in coming, the line of what may be called the present Mahometan rebellion in north-west China, and doubtless the so-called Dungans or Mahometan Chinese of Kan Suh, who often have still a very Jewish appearance, carry this old Arab blood in their veins. At about the same date the Arabs, Karluks, Tibetans, and Kirghiz entered into a sort of understanding for mutual protection against the rising power of the Ouigours. Meanwhile the first named had for a long period been established as traders in Canton, having found their way thither by sea early in the seventh century; and in the year 758 the Chinese tell us that they conspired with the Persians to pillage and burn that opulent city. While this was going on, the Taxi and Ouigour envoys were disputing for precedence at the Chinese Court: we are told the same thing of the Turk and Western Turk ambassadors. In 801 we find the Abbassides (Black-clothes Taxi) assisting the Chinese against the Tibetans. In these southern wars the early Siamese were deeply interested, for they had not yet left the modern province of Yün Nan, and were as yet totally unknown in the Menam Valley: their country was then called Luk-tai, or Nan-chao, chao meaning "principality" in Siamese.

It is remarkable that the Chinese include the Arabs under the general designation lu, which M. Devéria very properly considers to mean in effect "bearded foreigners." The Chinese do not seem anywhere to define the word; but it always occurs in such a way as to exclude Japanese, Tibetans, Burmese, Annamese, and the smooth-faced savage tribes of China. On the other hand, while it invariably applies most positively to Hindus, Persians, and what may be generally styled the Bokhariot races, it seems to be rather more doubtful and equivocal in its application to nomad Tartars, Coreans, and Arabs coming from the south. Another very interesting point which M. Devéria discusses is the confusion introduced by the Chinese into the use of the term Hwui-hwui, as applied first to a branch of the Ouigours, or Hwui-heh, and then, on account of the conversion of the Ouigours to Islam, to Mahometans generally. In China hwui-hwui or hwui-tsz is still the popular term applied to all Mahometans, Chinese or other. Like the analogous expression "Frank," which in the Nepalese word piling works its way round to mean "English," and in its form "Feringhi" practically means "Christian," it defies all attempts to apply definite dates to its various shades of meaning; but M. Devéria seems to regard 1124 A.D. as the first instance of its use in the new sense.

Early in the tenth century we find the Taxi sending a mission to the Cathayans, whose first powerful ruler, Apaoki, was then encamped near the old Turkish capitals on the Orkhon. A century later a marriage alliance was arranged between a Cathayan princess and the son of the Caliph (? Kadir-billah, then under the tutelage of the Buyids of Transoxiana). But the native Chinese or Man-tsz dynasty of Sung (Marco Polo's Manzi) still reigned in the south, and innumerable political and commercial missions of Arabs are mentioned in the annals of Canton and Zaitun (Ts'üan-chow). In this connexion we ought to mention here the invaluable researches of Dr. Bretschneider, "On the Knowledge possessed by the Ancient Chinese of the Arabs," which throw considerable light upon this interesting subject. Dr. Bretschneider, though making no claim to Chinese scholarship himself, may be fairly placed at the head of the positive historical school: the excellent Russian translations of Chinese historians are available to him, as, unfortunately, they are not to the majority of English and French students; and, besides, Dr. Bretschneider's methods are so scrupulous, industrious, and prudent, that he very rarely makes a mistake when he accepts the work of other translators. He and M. Devéria between them have done perhaps as much as any others for the sound interpretation, free from all rash speculation, of the Chinese annals.

In addition to the purely historical accounts of the Tazi which the Chinese give us, and of which the above is only the most meagre of outlines, there are not lacking a number of fanciful accounts, written by Chinese Mussulmans, of the origin of their religion in China. M. Devéria gives these at length, but the space at our disposal will not permit of our examining them here. His work under review is, however, deserving of very close study; and it is our intention, so soon as we can find time, to test every line of it by reference, where possible, to the original authorities, so that the fact of our now merely alluding casually to this part of it by no means indicates any intention to treat it with neglect.

The trilingual inscription on the tomb of Hadji Mahmoud at Canton (1749) is well worthy of notice. M. Devéria gives us a phototype of it, the Arabic, Persian, and Chinese each being perfectly legible.

Lastly comes a French translation of the travels of a Chinese Mussulman named Ma Fou-tch'ou, who visited the Mahometan states of the West in 1841-1848. He wrote his account in Arabic; but M. Devéria translates from the Chinese version published by his disciple Ma An-li, who has had the unusual good sense to preserve the original Arabic letters, alongside of the abortive Chinese sounds, in all cases where proper names are given. Ma Fou-tch'ou travelled by way of Xieng-hong or Toh'e-li, a petty principality still ruled by a Chinese named Lo, under the nominal suzerainty of France: thence he worked his way down to Ava and Rangoon, whence he took ship to Calcutta, and from that travelled by way of Ceylon, Aden, and Mokha, over the Mahometan world generally, Turkey, Egypt, &c. On his return to Yün Nan, his reputation as a pilgrim, of course, procured for him unusual consideration, besides the title of Hadji given to all those who have visited the Kaaba. In 1855 the Mussulman rebellion broke out, and Ma Fou-tch'ou became one of the leading spirits of it under the name of Ma-Té-hing. After the re-conquest of Yün Nan by the Chinese, he was summarily decapitated on May 25, 1874. A full account of these events is given in M. Emile Rocher's Rébellion musulmane au Yunnan, in which Ma Fou-tch'ou is usually described by his popular name of the "Old Baba." The chief value of Ma Fou-tch'ou's account of his travels, and of Mahometan matters generally, is that it forms a link between the earliest Chinese accounts of the Tazi and the Mussulmans of to-day, and shows us how one connected whole may be woven out of what, taken separately, often appear to be unconnected scraps of semi-mythical warp and semi-historical woof. We have by no means come to the end yet. As the Chinese literature comes to be ransacked by such competent investigators as M. Devéria, so may we hope that all our difficulties will gradually disappear, and that we shall be able to trace historically and with certainty both the political movements between east and west, and the motives for those movements.

E. H. PARKER.

CORRESPONDENCE.

EPIGRAPHIC DISCOVERIES IN INDIA.

Vienna: March 12, 1896.

In the report of his tour in Swät, Dr. Waddell mentioned a Kharoshthi inscription, which he felt inclined to ascribe to the time of Asoka. Of late he has sent me paper impressions and a very good photograph of the document, which have enabled me to decipher it completely. It now appears that it records the dedication of a pukaruni—i.e., a pushkarini, "a small tank or cistern," constructed by Thäi—i.e., probably Thäira or Shäivira, Nora, the son of Dati, "for the worship of all serpents" (sapa), in the year 113, and in the bright half of the month Brävana. The letters agree very closely with those of the Taxila copperplate, dated in the year 78 of the great king Moga, whom Cunningham identified with the king Mauos or Moa of the ancient barbaric coins. Hence it may be inferred that the era of the new inscription is the same as that of the plate of Patika, the son of Liaka Kusuluka, and that its time is not far distant from the beginning of the first century A.D.

Dr. Führer sends the unwelcome news that further excavations round the Asoka pillar at Nigliva have failed to bring to light any new inscriptions. But he has been fortunate enough to secure another land-grant, issued by King Harsha, the patron of Bāna and Hiwen Tsang. The new grant, which has been found at Banakhera, near Shähjähānpur, agrees almost literally with that on the Madhuban copperplate, published in vol. i. of the Epigraphia Indica, and conveys a village in the Ahicchatra (Ramnagar) district to two Brahmins, a Rigvedi, named Välacandra, and a Sāmavedi, named Bhadrasvāmin. It is dated in the year 22 of the Harsha era, or in 628-9 A.D., and possesses a considerable palaeographical interest, being one of the finest specimens of engraving on copper. The very carefully incised letters of the body of the grant are of the type of those of the Aphad Prasasti and of other somewhat later inscriptions. The sign-manual, evahasto mama mahārājādhirāja-śrī-Harshasya, shows the fanciful so-called shell-characters. The vowel i of the syllable dhi consists of more than a dozen separate strokes, and the preceding a of seven strokes. The second figure of the date is the ordinary Devanāgarī decimal 2, the first the old letter-numeral for 20. King Harsha's own verses occur also in this grant; and he asserts in this document that he was not a Buddhist, but "a Sivite, compassionate towards all creatures like S'iva."

G. BÜHLER.

THE RESTORED PRONUNCIATION OF GREEK.

Liverpool: March 14, 1896.

There remains still one disputed consonant, and it is the most difficult of all—viz., ζ. It is now admitted on all hands that ζ was never at any time homogeneous with ξ and ψ; ξ is (k+s) ψ is (p+s), but ζ is in no case (t+s). It has always, from first to last, been composed of d and z, save that in Modern Greek and in some ancient instances the d element entirely disappeared. As to the classical period, the dispute is whether ζ was (z+d) or (d+z). Prof. Blass argues very ably and learnedly in favour of the former view, and Profs. Conway and Arnold promulgate this among their "practically certain" pronunciations. But the great authority of G. Curtius is quite on the other side; Brugmann only makes ζ "probably" = (z+d) (Grundriss, p. 365); and I think Prof. Blass himself would say that the time for dogmatic certainty has not yet come. I have studied his argument carefully, and will now state why I find it unconvincing. In the great majority of cases ζ represents an Idg. dy or gy. I here use y, like Profs. Conway and Arnold, in a strictly consonantal value. The sounds meant by dy, gy are the palatalised d and g of Eng. "endure," "argue." Now, though normal d and g do not readily interchange, the palatalised d and g readily both pass into (d+z sibilant). We have before our eyes this change in the process which joins Lat. diurnalis to It. giornale and Eng. "journal," or Lat. religio, to Eng. "religion." Whether the Idg. dy, gy, passed first, like the Lat. di, gi, into (d+zh), which is equivalent to our Eng. j, or passed straight into (d+z) is matter for curiosity rather than for dispute; the former stage has left no clear historical traces. We start, therefore, from a ζ which was (d+z), but we find evidence at various times and places that this (d+z) had changed to (z+d). The question is whether this change had passed upon Attica in the classical period. Let us consider the phonetic nature of this change. No phonetic change takes place per saltum; and when Brugmann (Grundriss, p. 365) cites in this connexion the change in Old Bulgarian from dy to (zh+d) or Blass demonstrates (§ 31) the same change in Old Slovenian, the chief thing proved is that the evidence handed down to us leaves a gap in the phonetic history of those languages. Even the change from (d+z) to (z+d) may not be quite so simple as it looks. The grammatical labels it "metathesis," and thinks he has explained it, when in fact he has only given it a name. The thing to be explained is the interchanged position not of two letters, but of two sounds, denoting a very remarkable alteration in some fixed habits of human speech. Let it be remembered that, in any combination of d and z, the d is simply a stoppage of the z—a stoppage forcibly released when the d comes first, and forcibly applied when the d comes second; and if a given community began changing this stoppage from the first position to the second, it is certain that there would be a long period of oscillation and uncertainty; for a change so radical as this has an immense weight of habit to overcome, and could not gain a rapid success, even if it did succeed eventually. There would also be compromises, some speakers putting the stoppage neither before nor after the z, but in the middle. This fugitive stage seems to me to be the true explanation of the spellings Βυζαντιος, Βεζαντιος, Βυζαντιος, Βυζαντιος, Βυζαντιος, Βυζαντιος, Βυζαντιος, and the like: I take it that here σζ stands for zdz.

The most weighty arguments of Prof. Blass are, of course, those which, if sustained, would carry the (z+d) pronunciation back to Homer, or further. There are a few words like δζερ, otherwise δερ, where Idg. comparison shows that the original succession was (z+d), not (d+z). But these words are a mere handful compared to those where ζ, coming from Idg. dy, must have been (d+z), and it seems to me that they were simply assimilated by the latter. The reader unlearned in phonetics may compare the tendency in English children to assimilate (s+k) to (k+s) in such words as "biscuit," "whiskers," "basket." Other forms arose later, such as Ἀθήναι, &c., and were assimilated as they came in, making Ἀθήναι and the like. The derivation of the prefix da- from α- (= zda-) is also unconvincing: they seem rather to be both derived from dia-. So, likewise, is the inference that δακνυθες and Ζέλαια, because they do not give length to a preceding short vowel, must have been pronounced Δακνυθες and Δέλαια in Homer. In that case, the modern name Zante could never have existed. The more feasible explanation is that ζ = (d+z), is a very light combination of consonants, the z simply representing the inevitable explosion of the d. But this explanation is inapplicable to ζ = (z+d), for then the d still remains to be exploded afterwards. At the introduction of writing the symbol ζ was taken from the Phoenician alphabet, in which its value was z or dz, certainly never zd. Prof. Blass shows that in several foreign names the combination (z+d) or (sh+d) was transliterated by ζ; but it is noteworthy that there was a hesitation between ζ and σδ, e.g., Ἀσπιδόζης and Ἀσπιδόσδον, Ἀζωρος and Ἀρδός, Ἀρταυδός and Ἀρταυδόςδης. Of these, Ἀζωρος has a strong appearance of the "popular etymology," so frequently indulged in foreign names; and in the others the hesitation between representing a foreign (z+d) by ζ (= d+z) or by σδ (= s+d) was natural in this dilemma, inevitable as it was to a Greek. It is a little perilous to build strong phonetic conclusions on the spelling of foreign names, and still more on euphemisms like δ νδς. What phonetic conclusions could possibly be drawn in English from "be jabers" or "by Gosh"? Prof. Blass is scrupulously fair in adducing the evidence on both sides. I am only forced to differ from him as to the weight and bearing of the several items. He brings into full view the unbroken tradition of ζ = (d+z) in Italy from the colonisation of Magna Graecia until now. To me this seems quite fatal to a Homeric or pre-historic ζ = (z+d). He also notes that Modern Greek ζ is z. But this z cannot possibly be descended from ζ = (z+d). Compare his own argument about δακνυθες: the course of change must in that case have been from z to Δ; and Δ is now pronounced dh (= Eng. th in "the"). Prof. Blass gives many indisputable evidences of ζ becoming (z+d), or something like it; but it is certain that this change never became demotic, otherwise the later history of ζ must have been quite different. The (z+d) value must be admitted, however, to be solidly established in Lesbos before the Attic classical period; it is then seen struggling with the inherited (d+z) in Attic and neighbouring inscriptions; and it is at last found as the fashionable pronunciation of the Hellenist grammarians. But Hellenic Greek was not based entirely upon Attic; it took up other elements from various quarters (see Winer, passim), and the moment we try to carry back this Hellenistic tradition to real Athenians, such as Archinus and Aristotle, it utterly breaks down. The grammarians agree in saying that ζ is made up of σ and δ; they name them in this order, while for ξ they say that it is made up of κ and σ; and for ψ, of κ and σ. But Archinus, the reformer of spelling under Eukleides (Archon, 403 B.C.), is satisfactorily attested to have described these three letters without indicating any such difference in the order of the sounds. To him, therefore, ζ = (δ+σ) = (d+z). Aristotle's evidence also (Metaph. 1093 A, 20) certainly indicates no variation in the position of the sibilant as between ζ and the other two; while that reading of the passage which seems to be the clearest in sense conveys also the meaning that the σ comes second (ἐπιφύεται τὸ σ). The Lesbians, too, when they substituted σδ for ζ, evidently did so to indicate something different from the normal Greek pronunciation of ζ; for they possessed the symbol ζ, and the cases wherein they used it show that they attached to it the ordinary value (d+z). It occurs, for example, in κέρσα for κέρδια, a new development of dy into (d+z), which had not yet had time to undergo the fate of Idg. dy in Lesbian. If the alphabetic value of ζ was (d+z) in Lesbos, the very place where the sound of ζ was being changed to σδ = (z+d), it seems certain that its contemporary value must have been consistently (d+z) elsewhere. Confusion occurs later; but reviewing the whole evidence, I cannot help believing that the change from (d+z) to (z+d) was one of those movements which, in a wide domain like that of Greek, arise locally and sporadically, and, after gaining a certain partial success, are pushed back again and reversed by the larger movement of the language. There is really no evidence that (z+d) was ever the prevailing value of ζ in Attica, nor, indeed, anywhere else except (1) in Aeolic, (2) in the Hellenistic schools, and (3) possibly and temporarily in some Doric districts. My opinion is therefore that a "restored" ζ ought to be (d+z) not (z+d).

R. J. LLOYD.

"RELICS OF THE PALESTINIAN SYRIAC LITERATURE."

Cambridge } March 26, 1896.
Wadham College, Oxford }

Perhaps you will allow us to correct a somewhat serious mistake, for which we are jointly responsible, in the recently edited Relics of the Palestinian Syriac Literature (Anecdota Oxoniensia), p. 32. The verses of Kings, which are stated in the Anecdota to be found only in the Lucianic Recension, are, as a matter of fact, found in the Vatican text of the LXX. at another point (3 Kings ii. 35k-36), and the text there corresponds yet more closely to the Palestinian version. We are indebted for the correction to the Rev. A. E. Brooke, of King's College, Cambridge, one of the editors of the Larger Cambridge LXX.

F. C. BURKITT.
T. F. STENNING.

SCIENCE NOTES.

THE next volume of Cassell's "Century Science" series will be Sir Humphry Davy, by Dr. T. E. Thorpe, principal chemist of the government laboratories.

MR. GEORGE REDWAY is about to issue a new edition of Dr. William Gregory's work on Animal Magnetism.

THE March number of the Geographical Journal (Stanford) contains another instalment of Mr. W. L. Solater's papers on "The Geography of Mammals," dealing with the Ethiopian region—that is to say, the whole African continent south of the tropic of Capricorn. Following Wallace, four sub-regions are distinguished, of which the Malagasy, or Madagascar and its adjacent islands, might fairly claim the rank of an independent region. The Saharan region crosses the Red Sea, to include the southern portion of the peninsula of Arabia. The West African sub-region consists of the great equatorial forest that forms the basins of the Niger, Congo, &c., reaching to the great lakes. The Cape sub-region, which Wallace confined to the extreme south, has now been proved to extend northwards as far as Mount Kilimanjaro. Mr. Solater hints that recent additions to our knowledge of the fauna of Somaliland may possibly entitle it to be classed as a fifth sub-region. The chief characteristics of the mammalia of Africa generally are the great predominance of antelopes; the exclusive presence of the hippopotamus and the giraffe; and the entire absence of bears and deer. Finally, Mr. Solater discusses the evidence of palaeontology, which seems to show that the isolation of Africa from Europe dates from early Pliocene times, when the Saharan desert was covered by sea. The paper is illustrated with a large coloured map.

PHILOLOGY NOTES.

THE well-known Basque scholar, M. W. T. van Eys, has just published (Geneva and Bale: Georg) Proverbes Basques-Espagnols: Refranes y Sentencias comunes en Bascuence, declaradas en Romance. Rééditées d'après l'unicum de 1596 conservé à la Bibliothèque de Darmstadt. There are only some half dozen works in Basque older than this, and some of the verbal forms are exceptional in the Guipuzcoan dialect. The words of each proverb are correspondingly numbered both in the Basque and in the Spanish translation—a great help to a young student. The book is a small quarto pamphlet of over sixty pages unnumbered. It is excellently printed and got up, and forms the most valuable addition to Basque literature since the printing of D'Urte's translation of Genesis in the "Anecdota Oxoniensia." M. van Eys has earned the gratitude of all Basques and Bascophiles.

MR. E. T. DODGSON has published (Madrid: Fortanet) as a separate pamphlet his Inscriptions Basques, Heuskarazko Sributloak, which lately appeared in the Boletín of the Real Academia de la Historia. The impression is limited to 100 copies.

REPORTS OF SOCIETIES.

VIKING CLUB—(Friday, February 28.)

G. M. ATKINSON, Esq., vice-president, in the chair.—Mr. Albany F. Major, hon. sec. read a paper on "Seafaring and Sea-fighting in Saga-Time." Beginning with a brief sketch of the little that can be gleaned as to navigation in the North in pre-historic times, he pointed out that, with the solitary exception of the Veneti, whom Caesar describes, all the references in classical writers would lead us to believe that prior to the beginning of the Christian era the dwellers on the Baltic and North Sea had little knowledge of the art, though in less than 300 years after they appear as skilled and venturesome seamen. This would agree with their tradition that their ancestors were an inland people who only reached the northern coasts of Europe during the last century B.C. Turning, then, to the historical ground of the Sagas, the lecturer briefly described the ships of war and trading vessels of the Norsemen, quoting passages to illustrate the difference between them and the gear they ordinarily carried, their ships' boats, figure-heads, masts, sails, rudders—which were hung on the right side and thus gave it its name of "starboard," i.e., "steer-board" side, &c. The operation of baling was described from Grettir's Saga, which distinguishes the "baling by tubs," in use at the time of the events in the Saga, from the "daels"-baling, which had superseded it by the time the Saga was written down, and may have indicated a form of pump. Ships were moored by anchors and cables, several being sometimes used in stormy weather, or when lying off the coast by land-ropes, and in the latter case their open waists were tented in at night, while they carried gangways for convenience in going ashore. All cooking was done on shore, and the crew slept between the oar-benches, though the chief men on board had their separate berths. All ships were built very flat and could easily be hauled ashore, and boat-houses are constantly mentioned. The longships, or warships, were built specially for rowing, yet they seem to have used sails whenever it was possible, resorting to their oars only in calm weather and on smooth water. Though seamen as a rule hugged the coast, yet they were not afraid to venture on the open sea out of sight of land and to sail by night, though in unknown waters they preferred to lie-to at night. The most venturesome voyages were those to Iceland, Greenland, and Vinland, on the coast of North America, of which there are minute descriptions. Boating and fishing played a very large part in daily life and are frequently described, even voyages lasting several days being undertaken in small six-oared boats. The Sagas throw some light on the interesting question of the seamanship of the Norsemen; for, besides the general evidence to be drawn from the dangers they faced at sea, there are descriptions of skilful manoeuvres to deceive an enemy as to their rate of sailing, and many passages which seem to show that, at least as early as the beginning of the tenth century, they were able to sail by and beat up against the wind. Indeed, in a very interesting passage of the Heimskringla a discussion is described between the seamen of a fleet, as to whether with the wind then blowing it was possible to weather a certain point. The date of this is about 1025 A.D. The lecturer, after commenting on this passage, quoted the opinion of Mr. Dixon Kemp, the well-known writer on yachting, that the interpretation placed upon it was intelligible, but that in Mr. Kemp's opinion, if any knowledge existed of sailing even seven points from the wind at such an early date the art was subsequently lost till the fifteenth century or later. The lecturer considered that the early existence of this art was clear from the Saga records, and that possibly the position of the rudder may have given the craft of the time an advantage.—Owing to the lateness of the hour the second section of the paper, "Sea-fighting," was postponed till a future occasion.—Mr. W. F. Kirby asked whether there was any record in the Sagas of an arrangement for throwing down beams on an enemy's ship, such as occurs in the ballad of Sir Andrew Barton in Percy's Reliques. So far as he knew that was the only recorded instance of such a mode of warfare, and it was a question whether it was suggested by earlier practice or was wholly original.—Mr. E. H. Beverstock said he was sorry that the lecturer had not commenced earlier, so that fuller details could be given on the various points introduced. With regard to bailing he had been struck by a passage in his old favourite, Frittirofs Saga—the wonderful description of a storm at sea, where Frittirof asks Asmund: "Why dost not sing, Asmund?"

"I will," says Asmund.

'Here was it rough round the mast
When the sea fell on the ship;
I with eight men had to work on board—
Easier was it to carry
A meal to women in their room
Than to bale Ellida on the high wave.'

But no details of the process are there given. Perhaps, if Mr. Major had been able to conclude his paper, he would have given some of the names of famous ships, such as Skidbladnir, the wonderful construction of the dwarves. As the Lay of Grímnir has it—

"Yggdrasill aah is of all trees most excellent
And of all ships Skidbladnir—of the Æsir, Odin—
Of horses Sleipnir," &c.

There was also Naglfar, the ship of doom, to be built of dead men's nails—whence the nails of dead men should always be cut close—mentioned in the Volunga:

"Naglfar is loosed;
That ship fares from the East;
Come with Muspell's people o'er the sea;
And Loki steers."

In Hroif Krakes Saga the dragon ship Grimmunt surpassed all other ships, as much as Hroif surpassed all other kings of the North. Odin was equally the patron of navigation and military enterprise, and one of the kennings for him was "God of Cargoes." Like Völundr, the famous smith and sword-forged, there was a great ship-builder of old, one Thorstein Völundr. Sir George Dasent's Norsemen in Iceland has some very forcible remarks on the opening up of new sea routes by the Vikings. Grimur Thomsen in his valuable criticism, translated by Prof. G. Stephens, says:

"So fresh are the colours, that we see clearly before us the old Viking, as he stands at the stern of his dragon ship boldly steering where he believes destiny calls him. Dasent has mastered the very inmost life of the Northern spirit."

—Mr. F. T. Norris took exception to the remarks of the lecturer as to the earliest notices we have of navigation in the North of Europe. We had a record of the voyages to the Baltic of Pytheas, a Greek of Marseilles, two or three hundred years B.C. Isaac Taylor thought that a trading port of Greeks might have been established there, from whom the northern nations learned the road across Europe by the Volga, which led to their invasions of the South. If Pytheas were in the Baltic, at least they might have learned from him some of the arts of navigation 200 years before the time mentioned—if, indeed, a people like the Norse, whose cradle-land, so to speak, was the ocean, needed to be taught anything of it. He was doubtful as to the reference to Tacitus; for, as far as his recollection went, that writer did mention sails as used by Northern nations. With regard to the myth of a maritime people coming from the neighbourhood of the Black Sea to the Baltic, he himself inclined to the view of those who thought that the stream of migration had set the other way—from North to South—and that the Asian origin of the Scandinavian nations was indeed a myth. The Romans, at any rate, who were never good sailors, and themselves trusted to rowing in preference to sailing, were not likely to have been the teachers of the Baltic tribes. So late as Germanicus' invasion of Germany, it is reported that the Romans had to make use of German or Batavian seamen to guide them to the Elbe. As for the origin of the Veneti, the Latin V would probably represent a Teutonic B or F: and if the i were, as in other cases, a euphonic addition, the name would come near to the "Fionna" of the Irish Sagas, a people generally allowed to have been of Teutonic origin: Dr. Jon Stefánsson said that, in reply to the lecturer's question as to the origin of the Veneti in Gaul, it might be observed that in the Sagas a people with a very similar name was found dwelling on the southern shores of the Baltic—namely, the Vindir, Vends or Wends. Philologically the two forms Veneti and Vindir might be regarded as identical, but, of course, he was not prepared to say the same of the two peoples. But the point was worth investigating.—The chairman said that he had made a pilgrimage to Flensborg, to see the ship found in the Nydam moss, South Jutland, and had also studied models of the Gokstad ship. The former was a magnificent relic of the early iron age in Denmark, and was most marvellously constructed. It is 77 ft. long and 10 ft. 10 in. broad. Built of eleven oak planks, it had no keel. The bottom plank formed the keel. When the planks were cut out of the solid timber, projections were left on each, and holes bored through them; a bast rope tied the planks to the ribs. The ship is clinker built. The planks are fastened together with iron nails, having washers inside. There was no evidence of any ornamental carving on the stern. If there had been any, it had since perished or been lost. The only heads he had seen in Norway, used as the figure-heads of ships formerly were, are the horse heads which decorate the gable beams of some of the old timber churches, as at Hitterdal. He might remark that skin boats still survive in the Welsh coracle and in fishing boats used on the west coast of Ireland. Any one who had been yachting would appreciate the force of the lecturer's remarks on the distinction between a "yard" and a "boom" in the story of the king who was swept overboard.—Mr. Major in reply said that, in answer to Mr. Kirby's question, he should have mentioned, had he had time to finish his paper, that the Long Serpent at the battle of Svoldr was only won by the device of flinging huge beams on her deck to make her heel over. This resembled Sir Andrew Barton's device, though the immediate object of the manoeuvre differed in the two cases; but, so far as he knew, it was an isolated incident in sea-fighting of the time. He feared Mr. Beverstock would find his paper rather deficient in the famous ships and so forth recorded in the Sagas, as his object had been to study the knowledge and methods of seafaring and the seamanship and tactics of the time, rather than to collect the vast store of details, however interesting, in the Sagas which did not directly elucidate the subject. With regard to Mr. Norris's criticisms he might remark that they begged the question at issue, and were founded on hypothesis for the most part. His argument was that, judging from the evidence obtainable, it seemed doubtful if the forefathers of the Scandinavian nations reached the Baltic long before the Christian era, or had much skill in navigation when the Romans first encountered them. The fact of Pytheas' voyages two or three hundred years before proved nothing, if the people in question were not dwelling on the Baltic at the time; and there was reason to suppose on other grounds that they were not originally a maritime race, but came from inland and were a race of horsemen in earlier years. A quotation from Tacitus, bearing out Mr. Norris's recollections of that author, would be interesting, but certainly he describes the Sueones as using no sails, but oars alone. But it was impossible at such a late hour to argue fully the points here raised.

FINE ART.

A NEW MANUAL OF GREEK ANTIQUITIES.

A Manual of Greek Antiquities. By P. Gardner and F. B. Jevons. (Griffin.)

THE thousands of Scotch and English students who have owed their early teaching in Roman customs and institutions to that excellent old manual Ramsay's Roman Antiquities will welcome the appearance of a companion volume to it, and it is no small praise of the new-comer to say that it is quite worthy of a place beside Prof. W. Ramsay's work. The two volumes are, very naturally, not conceived on exactly the same plan. The new one may be described as more philosophic than the old, as assigning causes and looking for effects where Ramsay was content to lay down the facts. But in saying this we must neither convey an impression against Ramsay's book—one of the most useful of its kind which we know—nor yet imply that the opposite method is without its drawbacks. That method may easily pass into argument—it does so in Mr. Jevons's chapter on theatre buildings—and argument is not quite in place in a manual, which should rather be a storehouse of what is certainly known. Thus, where the present volume is most useful to teachers, whose ideas it will clear and fix, it will be least useful to students; and, conversely, students will get most from the pages which are driest to the teacher. But this only amounts to saying that there is a great deal in the volume for both classes of readers. It is, in fact, an excellent piece of work. It is far more than a popularisation of the many excellent special works which it mentions, being redeemed from any such risk by its freshness and thoughtfulness, as well as by its clever arrangement. There has been hitherto, we believe, no English handbook of the subject, as opposed to dictionaries. We say "of the subject" for convenience; but really it deals with subjects, and many of them too.

To glance down the table of contents is a useful reminder that an understanding of Greek affairs as scholars of the calibre of Messrs. Gardner and Jevons understand them is itself an education in a great many things of first-rate importance. Prof. Gardner's account of the influence of physical geography upon Greek character and history will give the reader ideas which he must needs transfer to the history of Britain or the future of Australia; his study of Greek mythology is a worthy introduction to the philosophy of religion; and Mr. Jevons, when he takes to pieces for us the government machine of Athens, adds much sound reflection on its practical working. We must now be content to show how the authors have divided their matter, and to note one or two points under some of their headings. Mr. Gardner leads off with a book on "The Surroundings of Greek Life": that is, the land, the cities, the houses, and the dress. Enough is perhaps said about the topography of Athens, although there is no full chapter on the subject, like the chapter on Rome (now re-written by Lanciani) in Ramsay's book. We miss more a full account of Greek agriculture, something like that chapter on Italian agriculture which

Ramsay added to the first draft of his Antiquities. Little good comes of arguing racial questions; so we will not say more than that one theory of Prof. Gardner is given perhaps too confidently: "It is likely that the true Aryan Greeks [in Greece] were always a comparatively small, though dominant, caste." If this is laid down at all, it needs more supporting than it gets in these pages. The one argument for it which we can find is a circular one (p. 212), and the theory itself clashes with Mr. Jevons's remark on p. 661, that the serfs of Greek states "were as much Greeks as their lords." The next two books deal with Religion and Mythology and with Cultus. Mr. Gardner traces with suitable and not excessive illustration the borrowed elements in Greek mythology, and also the national or native ones, namely: (1) Totemism, (2) Ancestor Worship, (3) Naturalism. The Homeric pantheon and the pantheon of historic times have a chapter each. As to the former, it reads oddly that Athena "appears altogether as a disembodied spirit," when we remember the chariot which creaked under her weight. Very important are the lessons that Greek mythology was unorganised and inconsistent, that poetry and art aided largely in its evolution, that there were superhuman beings of many grades, and that their grades or positions were never finally fixed; while the chapters on Sacrifice (partly following Robertson Smith), Oracles, and Mysteries are careful and cautious statements of the present condition of knowledge and opinion. (On p. 167, for Pausanias read Pleistoanax.) Bk. IV., on the Course of Life, covers a great deal of useful ground (education, travelling, burial, position of women); but we miss the old-fashioned tables of weights, measures, and money-values (the Greek measure medimnus, though explained on p. 446, is not in the index). Bk. V. is on Commerce. With Bk. VI. we come to Mr. Jevons's share of the work, and enter upon Constitutional and Legal Antiquities. Mr. Jevons rates the position of the Homeric king lower than has generally been done. "The monarch in Homer has no power which the Gerontes do not also possess." But Mr. Jevons's view would look all the better without the doubtful argument that "in war the army fights according to tribes and phratries, not under the command of the monarch." Whatever the arrangement really was, Homer—our only authority—plainly shows it to us introduced as a novelty at the end of the ten years' siege of Troy. The account of Sparta is a clever one, combining our scattered information and illuminating it by the aid of comparative politics; but there is a certain want of clearness about the elections of senators and of ephors (pp. 418, 420, 425-6); and we are not so sure as Mr. Jevons is about Sparta having a "continuous and well-considered foreign policy." There are one or two well-known passages in Thucydides, at least, which should give him pause. The chapter on the constitutional history of Athens is, of course, richer and fuller than could have been the case before the discovery of Aristotle's Ἀθ. Πόλ. Pp. 444, 446 seem to postulate the existence before Solon of the Athenian coinage whose existence Prof. Gardner denies (p. 399). A number of excellent chapters follow, on the single parts of the constitution of Athens and on her finance and legal system. The last-mentioned subject is treated with remarkable skill, and makes an interesting instead of a dull piece of reading; while the study of the law is put upon the only possible solid basis by free quotation of the texts. The review of the relations of Greek states to each other finds room for the rudiments of international law, colonies, and empires. Book VII. deals with slavery. (On p. 616 for Thrace read Thessaly.) Book VIII. weaves together what is known of Greek armies and navies into a very readable whole, and makes an ingenious attempt to solve the old puzzle of the trireme. It cannot, however, be maintained that "it was probably the Athenians who first discovered that the ship itself might be used as a weapon of attack," unless we are prepared to throw over the account of the manoeuvres of Dionysius in Hdt. vi., 45. The last book is upon the theatre. Mr. Jevons finds the origin of the drama rather in facts which folk-lore and anthropology supply than in the traditional literary account; and we have little doubt that he is right. His description of the buildings, scenery, actors, and costumes is clear and practical; but we cannot quite reconcile his dates for the festivals of Dionysius with Mr. Gardner's chapter on the Attic Calendar.

EXCAVATIONS AT CONCA.

A CORRESPONDENT writes from Rome:

"Very interesting excavations are now being made by the Italian Government in the neighbourhood of Conca in Latium, which is thought to be the site of the ancient Satrium. A temple was discovered, perhaps the famous one of Mater Matuta, which was rebuilt several times. It is easy to recognise the foundations of a primitive building, of which the date is unknown, of a great Tuscan cella, and of a magnificent peripteral temple of the sixth century B.C., in subsequent times transformed into a dipteral temple.

"The antiquities are chiefly decorative terracottas, some of them very beautiful and of Greek manufacture (antefixa, frequently of the pediments, and two fine heads), and the contents of a votive stipes or favissa, consisting principally of buckles and Italic as well as Greek vases. All these objects are not earlier than the seventh century, and come down not later than the fourth, the time of the destruction of Satrium.

"In this neighbourhood have also been discovered tombs of the three types common in Central Italy: a pozzo, a fosja, a camera. The contents are similar to those usually found in the cemeteries of Lower Etruria, except that they are richer in amber."

[We may add that, at a recent meeting of the Académie des Inscriptions, a report on these excavations was read from M. Graillet, a former member of the French School at Rome, who appears to have undertaken them, from January 17 to February 18, at the cost of Count Tyakewicz.—ED. ACADEMY.]

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

THE exhibitions to open next week include the Royal Society of British Artists, in Suffolk-street; the thirty-second annual spring exhibition of cabinet pictures by British and foreign artists, at Mr. Thomas McLean's Gallery, in the Haymarket; and a collection of pictures of Kensington Gardens, &c., by Mr. Horace van Ruith, at the Clifford Gallery, also in the Haymarket.

THE sixteenth annual Easter exhibition at St. Jude's Schools, Whitechapel, will be formally opened with an address by Lord Herschell on Tuesday next, at 4 p.m. Special features of this year's exhibition will be the series of pictures by Sir E. Burne-Jones, entitled "St. George and the Dragon," Lord Leighton's "Michael Angelo," Sir J. E. Millais's portrait of Mr. Gladstone, and Mr. W. S. Wyllie's "Work-a-day England." There will also be samples of Messrs. Watts, Herkomer, Orchardson, Briton Riviere, Stacy Marks, Leader, Alfred Parsons, &c. The exhibition will remain open until April 19, the hours being from 10 a.m. to 10 p.m., Sundays included. No charge is made for admission. Last year the exhibition was visited by 62,500 persons.

At the meeting of the Archaeological Institute, to be held on Wednesday next, Mr. H. St. John Hope will read a paper on "The Benedictine Abbey of St. Peter at Gloucester."

THE new illustrated edition of the late R. L. Stevenson's Picturesque Notes on Edinburgh, which Messrs. Seeley & Co. announced for publication last autumn, is now ready, and will be issued to the public next week. The illustrations, which include etchings and photogravure plates, as well as many vignettes in the text, are all quite new, having been made specially for the book by Mr. T. Hamilton Crawford, of the Royal Scottish Water Colour Society.

THE next number of the Portfolio, to be published on April 15, will deal with the well-known American artist, Mr. John La Farge, of whose works there was an exhibition held in Paris in the summer of last year. The illustrations are taken largely from Mr. La Farge's designs for stained glass and other decorative work, and also from his sketches in the South Sea Islands.

THE well-known and old-established business of fine art publishers in Pall Mall East has been transferred, as from January 1, 1895, to a company incorporated under the title of Henry Graves & Co., Ltd. The capital is £80,000, composed of £30,000 ordinary shares, all of which will be held by Mr. Algernon Graves, who will still manage the business, £30,000 5 per cent. debentures of £50 each, and £20,000 6 per cent. preference shares. Assets of the estimated value of over £70,000 will be handed over to the company as security for the debenture holders, for whom the Duke of Wellington, Sir Robert Rawlinson, and Mr. Martin Colnaghi have consented to act as trustees.

MESSRS. J. S. VIRTUE & Co., the publishers of the Art Journal, issue an appeal with the April number for subscriptions to a special fund for the benefit of artists' orphan children. It is proposed that the fund shall be administered by the benefit branch of the Artists' Annuity Fund—a chartered association which dates from 1810, and of which the Marquis of Lothian is now president. The subscriptions asked for are limited to one guinea.

MR. HUBERT HERKOMER has been elected a foreign associate of the Académie des Beaux-Arts, in the room of the late Lord Leighton.

THE STAGE.

STATISTICS of the receipts at playhouse doors are not exactly the conclusive evidence of the merits of theatrical productions which (when paraded by managers) they are sometimes supposed to be; but when they are not adduced in proof of the last triumph of the effulgent Mr. This or the brilliant success of the gifted Miss That, they may be at least interesting. The French Almanach des Spectacles for the year 1895, which has just now been published, affords some significant details, and deals with opera as well as drama. The biggest takings at any kind of theatrical performance during 1895 in France were realised at a performance of "Tannhäuser"—thus showing the extraordinary hold of Wagner upon French or cosmopolitan audiences. The receipts for that single night were rather over £900. At the Châtelet on one night, during the run of "Don Quixote," the receipts reached £420. At the Théâtre Français—which, though a fairly large house, is yet, of course, far smaller than either Opéra or Châtelet—the highest receipts of a night reached the sum of £340. And what obtained this amount? Neither the old repertory, nor the much-vaunted modern problem drama, but the admirable comedy—a “problem drama,” if you like, of the true sort—“L’Ami des Femmes,” by the younger and greater Dumas—the true master of the French theatre.

One of the best organised companies now on tour is—writes a correspondent—beyond doubt, that of Miss Muriel Wylford, which has been playing this week at Liverpool the immensely popular and smart comedy “The Passport” and the pathetic little “Farm by the Sea”—Mr. Wedmore’s adaptation of a poem by Theuriet. Miss Wylford’s performance of the heroine of the shorter piece combines in singular excellence tenderness and power. The impersonation is a thing to see, and it will be seen in several of the most important places in the provinces between now and the early summer. In “The Passport” Miss Wylford’s comedy is as sparkling and rippling as in the other piece her pathos is deep; and the company supports her well in both productions. For the amusing piece, which is the pièce de résistance of the evening, it is especially adapted. Mr. Sinclair’s high spirits and masculine method are invaluable; the dry comedy of Mr. George Brandram—“Brandram, of gifted father, gifted son,” if we may vary the phrase Milton addressed to Skinner—and the aplomb of Mr. Carew are all eminently serviceable; while the ladies of the company, from the representative of Mrs. Coleman to that of the soubrette, have all of them either talent or distinguished beauty, and some of them have both.

THE hundredth performance of the military drama “One of the Best” will take place at the Adelphi Theatre next Tuesday.

MUSIC.

RECENT CONCERTS.

THE second Philharmonic Concert, on March 19, opened with Dvorák’s Symphony in G, a work first heard at the same society, and under the composer’s direction, on May 24, 1890. The freshness of the thematic material, the skill displayed in its development, and the clear and picturesque orchestration—all combine to render the music highly attractive. Schumann and Brahms in their best Symphonies have, it is true, shown greater breadth and nobility, but comparison between these two masters and Dvorák is scarcely fair. Schumann in writing his Rhenish Symphony was inspired by sacred thoughts; Brahms in his first three Symphonies seems at times to be unfolding to us the deeds of heroes or the stern decrees of fate. In Beethoven’s Pastoral Symphony principally the feelings aroused by country life are depicted. But Dvorák seems to be illustrating the scenes themselves—writing, in fact, programme music. Beethoven rose above his programme; Dvorák keeps well within the one which he traced out for himself, and which, unfortunately, he has not revealed. Although there is much of interest in all four movements of the Symphony, two are specially attractive: the Adagio, for its romantic charm, and the Finale, for its humour ever fresh, also for its striking contrasts. The work was magnificently performed; and at the close the composer received enthusiastic applause. The programme included “Five Biblical Songs,” sung by Mme. Katherine Fisk. These songs, some of a dramatic, others of a lyrical character, are interesting; yet, so far as we can judge from a first hearing, they will not rank among Dvorák’s best productions. In his “Stabat Mater,” as in these songs, there was a large intusion of national element, but it was kept under stronger control. A new Concerto for violoncello, also by Dvorák, was performed by Mr. Leo Stern in an earnest, if not always in a masterful manner. To offer an opinion off-hand of a new work is always more or less hazardous: in the case of this Concerto the circumstances render judgment doubly difficult, for it came after one of the composer’s finest works, and, further, at the end of an inordinately long programme. For the moment we will only say that the music is characteristic; that the Adagio appears to us the finest of the three movements; and the Finale, with its quantity of material and consequent length, the least satisfactory section of the work.

It was unfortunate that Mr. Henschel’s last concert should have taken place the same evening at St. James’s Hall. The programme, including Beethoven’s Choral Symphony and the Pianoforte Concerto in E flat interpreted by Mr. L. Borwick, attracted a crowded house; and the performances, from all accounts, appear to have given great satisfaction. The E flat Concerto was also played at the Philharmonic Concert by Herr Sauer, but his rendering of the work lacked calm and dignity.

A Humoresque, “Till Eulenspiegels lustige Streiche” (Op. 28), by Richard Strauss, formed a special feature of the Crystal Palace programme on Saturday. Of the composer little is known in the country. Some seasons ago two movements from a symphonic work of his were given at a Richter Concert: they were certainly clever, but showed in too strong a manner the influence of Wagner. Herr Strauss lives at Munich, where during the long illness of Herr Levi he has proved an able deputy as conductor at the opera. The full score of the Humoresque bears the date May 6, 1895, so that no time has been lost in bringing it over to this country. It may be said that the merry pranks of Till Eulenspiegel, the hero of the old German story-book, do not form a subject of sufficient dignity for the art of music. Haydn and Mozart, however, were not above musical jokes; while Berlioz, the great French composer, like Balzac, the great novelist, tempted his successors to indulge in realism to an undue extent. The lengths to which programme music should go cannot be discussed here. Of Strauss’ work we have merely to say that it is one of the cleverest of its kind ever written; that it is intensely humorous; and that, in spite of the extraordinary nature of the programme—which, by the way, has only been obtained indirectly from the composer—the music has great charm and freshness. The Humoresque is, in fact, a programme piece of first rank, and the orchestration little short of a marvel. The work was magnificently interpreted; and at the close, in answer to the applause, Mr. Manns declared that in the course of forty years no other work had ever given him such trouble in rehearsing.

The Popular Concert on Monday evening was highly enjoyable. Beethoven’s Quintet in C (Op. 29) has long been, and long will be, a favourite; and at these concerts it is specially associated with Dr. Joachim, who was leader on this occasion. The programme included a Sonata in G minor for pianoforte and violin (Op. 5) by Robert Kahn, a composer, now in his thirtieth year, who has received much encouragement from Brahms, Rheinberger, and other eminent contemporaries. The work displays mature thought and skill in writing. Of the three movements of which it is composed, the first is the strongest. As a specimen of modern German chamber-music it is of interest, yet the individuality displayed is scarcely strong enough to gain for it more than passing notice. It was well interpreted by Mlle. Ilona Eibenschütz and Dr.

Joachim. The former also played in a skilful and earnest manner some short solos by Brahms. Miss Boye, the vocalist, by her refined and intelligent singing of various short songs, including a characteristic one by Miss Mary Carmichael, achieved a well-deserved success.

Bach’s Passion Music (according to St. John) was performed by the Bach Choir at Queen’s Hall, on Tuesday evening. The grandeur of the Matthew Passion has thrown this work somewhat into the shade. As a whole, the St. John Passion may be inferior: there is nothing in it, for instance, equal to the opening and closing choruses for double choir of the former. It has, notwithstanding, moments of supreme interest, and the work is well worthy of its author. The solo vocalists were Miss Fillunger and Miss Hilda Wilson, Messrs. C. Bakkes, Bispham and Andrew Black. Of these five, the gentlemen were by far the most satisfactory. Mr. Bakkes, who came expressly from Germany to take the rôle of the Evangelist, sang with quiet yet dramatic effect, and his enunciation of the words was singularly clear; his voice is of alto, rather than tenor quality. Mr. Bispham, in the part of the Saviour, was both tender and dignified. The choir sang well. Dr. Stanford conducted. J. S. SHEDLOCK.

MUSIC NOTES.

THE programmes for the Wagner Festival concerts at Queen’s Hall, under the direction of Herr Felix Mottl, have just been issued. At the first concert (April 28) Mr. Eugen d’Albert will be the pianist, and will perform Beethoven’s pianoforte Concerto in E flat. The second (May 14) will be devoted to excerpts from the “Nibelungen,” and to the whole of Act 1 from “Die Walküre.” Frau Mottl, Herr Gerhäuser, and Herr Nebe, an ensemble from Karlsruhe, will take part in the latter. The third and last (June 11) will also be a Nibelungen night.

ON Sunday next, at the South Place Institute, a lecture will be given in the afternoon on “Mozart,” by Miss Annie C. Muirhead, with both vocal and instrumental illustrations; and the concert in the evening—the last of the present season—will be entirely devoted to the works of Mozart.

AGENCIES.

London Agents, Messrs. W. H. SMITH & SON, 186, Strand.

Copies of the ACADEMY can be obtained every Saturday Morning in EDINBURGH of Mr. MENZIES; in DUBLIN of Messrs. EASON & SON, 40, Sackville-street; in MANCHESTER of Mr. J. HEYWOOD. Ten days after date of publication, in NEW YORK, of Messrs. G. P. PUTNAM’S SONS.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTIONS

TO
THE ACADEMY.
(PAYABLE IN ADVANCE.)

	YEARLY.	HALF-YEARLY.	QUARTERLY.
	£ s. d.	£ s. d.	£ s. d.
If obtained of a Newsvendor or at a Railway Station	0 18 0	0 9 6	0 3 8
Including Postage to any part of the United Kingdom.	0 18 2	0 7 7	0 3 10
Including Postage to any part of France, Germany, India, China, &c.	0 17 4	0 8 8	0 4 4

THE ACADEMY:

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

VOL. XLVIII. was commenced January 4th, 1896.

Terms of annual subscription, 15s. 2d.; foreign, 17s. 4d.

Edited by J. S. COTTON.

Among the Contributors to THE ACADEMY are:

- |                       |                          |                            |                          |                           |
|-----------------------|--------------------------|----------------------------|--------------------------|---------------------------|
| Acton, Lord           | Drummond, Rev. R. B.     | Houghton, Rev. W.          | Murray, A. S.            | Simcox, Miss Edith        |
| Addleshaw, Percy      | Dryden, Sir Henry        | Howorth, Sir H. H.         | Murray, George           | Simpson, W.               |
| Aitken, G. A.         | Duff, E. Gordon          | Hugher, Reginald           | Murray, Dr. J. A. H.     | Skeat, Prof. W. W.        |
| Alexander, Prof. S.   | Duffield, W. B.          | Hunter, Sir W. W.          | Napier, Prof. A. S.      | Smith, G. Barnett         |
| Allen, Grant          | Dunlop, R.               | Hutchinson, T.             | Nettleship, J. T.        | Smith, Miss L. Toulmin    |
| Allen, J. B.          | Earle, Prof. J.          | Ingram, Prof. J. K.        | Neubauer, Dr. A.         | Snell, F. J.              |
| Arnold, Sir Arthur    | Eccles, F. Y.            | Jacob, Col. G. A.          | Newcomen, G.             | Sommer, H. Oskar          |
| Axon, W. E. A.        | Edgeworth, Prof. F. Y.   | Jacobs, Joseph             | Nicholson, Cecil         | Sonnenschein, Prof. E. A. |
| Badham, F. P.         | Edinburgh, The Bishop of | Jevons, F. B.              | Nicholson, Dr. E.        | Steele, R.                |
| Ball, Rev. C. J.      | Ellis, Prof. Robinson    | Johnson, Lionel            | Nicholson, E. B.         | Stein, Prof. A.           |
| Balzani, Count Ugo    | Elton, C. I.             | Johnson, R. Brimley        | O'Grady, Standish H.     | Stephens, Prof. Morse     |
| Barnett, P. A.        | Elton, Oliver            | Jolly, Prof. J.            | Oman, C. W. C.           | Stevenson, W. H.          |
| Bayne, Rev. Ronald    | Ely, Talfourd            | Keane, Prof. A. H.         | Parker, E. H.            | Stewart, J. A.            |
| Bavnes, Herbert       | Evans, Arthur            | Keeling, Mrs. E. D'Esterre | Patterson, Arthur J.     | Stokes, Whitley           |
| Bell, H. T. Mackenzie | Field, Michael           | Keene, H. G.               | Paul, C. Kegan           | Strong, Prof. S. Arthur   |
| Benn, A. W.           | Firth, C. H.             | Kingsford, C. L.           | Peacock, E.              | Sully, Prof. James        |
| Bennett, A. W.        | Fisher, W. E. Garrett    | Kirkup, T.                 | Pearson, Prof. Karl      | Sweet, H.                 |
| Bezold, Prof. C.      | Fita, Padre F.           | Kroeker, Mrs. Freiligrath  | Pelham, Prof. H. F.      | Symons, Arthur            |
| Blind, Karl           | Fitch, J. G.             | Lang, Andrew               | Peterson, Prof.          | Tattersall, Hiram         |
| Bradley, Henry        | Fortnum, C. Drury E.     | Lanckester, Prof. E. Ray   | Phillips, Claude         | Taylor, Canon Isaac       |
| Bradley, J. W.        | Fowler, Rev. T.          | Leach, A. F.               | Pinker, J. B.            | Temple, Capt. R. C.       |
| Brown, H. F.          | Fowler, Rev. J. T.       | Lee, R. W.                 | Pollard, A. W.           | Temple, G. T.             |
| Brown, R. Jun.        | Frazer, J. G.            | Lee, S. L.                 | Postgate, Prof. J. P.    | Thompson, Sir E. Maunde   |
| Browne, E. G.         | Freshfield, Douglas W.   | Lee, Vernon                | Powell, Prof. York       | Toynbee, Paget            |
| Browne, J. W.         | Friedländer, Dr. M.      | Le Gallienne, R.           | Raine, Canon             | Tozer, Rev. H. F.         |
| Browne, R. C.         | Furnivall, Dr. F. J.     | Legge, Prof. J.            | Ramsay, Prof. W. M.      | Tucker, R.                |
| Bühler, Prof. G.      | Gaidoz, H.               | Lewis, Prof. W. J.         | Rannic, D. W.            | Twiss, Sir Travers        |
| Bywater, Prof.        | Gairdner, J.             | Lindsey, W. M.             | Rashdall, Rev. H.        | Tyler, Thomas             |
| Caine, Hall           | Gale, Norman             | Little, J. Stanley         | Reid, J. S.              | Tylor, Prof. E. B.        |
| Campbell, Prof. Lewis | Gardiner, S. R.          | Lodge, Prof. O.            | Rhys, Ernest             | Vambéry, Prof. A.         |
| Canton, W.            | Gardiner, Mrs. S. R.     | Long, R. Seymour           | Rhys, Prof. John         | Villari, Linda            |
| Capes, Rev. W. W.     | Gardner, Prof. Percy     | Lyall, C. J.               | Rhys-Davids, Prof. T. W. | Vinson, Prof. Julien      |
| Cheetham, Archdeacon  | Garrod, H. B.            | Lyster, T. W.              | Richards, F. T.          | Wallace, Prof. W.         |
| Cheyne, Prof. T. K.   | Gonner, Prof. E. C. K.   | Macaulay, G. C.            | Richards, H. P.          | Wallace, W.               |
| Church, Prof. A. H.   | Grant Duff, Sir Mount-   | Macdonell, Prof. A. A.     | Richter, Dr. J.-P.       | Warren, Rev. F. E.        |
| Clodd, Edward         | stuart E.                | Mackay, J. S.              | Rinder, Frank            | Waters, E. Chester        |
| Clouston, W. A.       | Grant, Col. F.           | Mahaffy, Prof. J. P.       | Robertson, Prof. Edmund  | Watkins, Rev. M. G.       |
| Collins, J. C.        | Gregory, Caspar René     | Mann, J. S.                | Robertson, Rev. Eric     | Watson, Prof. Foster      |
| Conway, Sir W. Martin | Grey, William E.         | Margoliouth, Prof. D. S.   | Robinson, Rev. C. J.     | Watson, William           |
| Conybeare, F. C.      | Groome, F. H.            | Markham, Clements R.       | Roby, H. J.              | Watts, Theodore           |
| Cotterell, G.         | Hamilton, J. A.          | Markheim, W.               | Rolleston, T. W.         | Wayte, Rev. W. W.         |
| Cotton, H. J. S.      | Hardy, W. J.             | Martin, C. Trice           | Rudler, F. W.            | Weale, W. H. James        |
| Courtney, W. P.       | Harrington, H. B.        | Marzials, F. T.            | Rye, Walter              | Webster, Rev. Wentworth   |
| Darmesteter, Madame   | Hartland, E. Sidney      | Mayhew, Rev. A. L.         | Ryland, F.               | Wedmore, Frederick        |
| Davidson, John        | Haverfield, F.           | Merk, Rev. C.              | Saintsbury, Prof. G.     | Welby, Miss Francis A.    |
| De Vere, Aubrey       | Hawkins, F.              | Merry, G. R.               | Salmon, Prof. G.         | West, Dr. E. W.           |
| Dickins, F. V.        | Herford, Prof. C. H.     | Minchin, J. G. C.          | Salmoné, Prof. H. A.     | Westlake, Prof. John      |
| Doble, C. E.          | Hessels, J. H.           | Minchin, James Innes       | Sanday, Prof. W.         | Whale, George             |
| Dobson, Austin        | Hewlett, H. G.           | Monkhouse, Cosmo           | Sandys, Dr. J. E.        | Wharton, E. R.            |
| Dodgson, Campbell     | Hewlett, Maurice         | Moore, Rev. Dr. E.         | Sargent, Rev. H.         | Wheeler, Stephen          |
| Dore, J. R.           | Hicks, Canon             | Morfill, W. R.             | Sayce, Prof. A. H.       | Wickham, W.               |
| Douglas, Prof. R. K.  | Hill, S. McCalmont       | Morris, Judge O'Connor     | Sayle, C.                | Wicksteed, Rev. P. H.     |
| Dowden, Prof. E.      | Hodgetta, E. A. Brayley  | Morshead, E. D. A.         | Sharp, William           | Wilkins, Prof. A. S.      |
| Doyle, J. A.          | Hodgkins, Dr. T.         | Muir, Dr. Thomas           | Shedlock, J. S.          | Wilson, C. E.             |
| Driver, Prof. S. R.   | Hodgson, Shadworth H     | Müller, Prof. F. Max       | Simcox, G. A.            | Wilson, H. F.             |

PUBLISHED AT THE OFFICE, 27, CHANCERY LANE, W.C.

To be had at all Railway Stations, and of all News-vendors in Town and Country.

NEW BOOKS TO BUY

A MAN and a WOMAN. Faith- fully presented by STANLEY WATERLOO. Cloth, 3s. 6d. net.

[Vol. I. The Waterloo Series.]

The ATHENÆUM says (March 21): "This is a notable book," and VANITY FAIR speaks of "its extraordinary human interest, its humour and pathos, its passion and beauty."

The DAILY NEWS describes it as "a rhapsody of love and of conjugal comradeship, tender, delicate, and passionate."

"The book ends amid the unwilling tears of the reader, who is angrily conscious that it is a false sentiment which makes him wet-eyed."—Daily Chronicle.

A HUSBAND'S ORDEAL; or,

the Confessions of Gerald Brownson, late of Coora Coora, Queensland. By PERCY RUSSELL. Cloth, 3s. 6d. net.
[Vol. II. The Waterloo Series.]

"Originality of idea marks 'A Husband's Ordeal.' The story once begun is certain to be read, and the excitement is sustained from start to finish."—Black and White.

A BRIDE'S EXPERIMENT: a

Story of Australian Bush Life. By CHARLES J. MANSFORD, Author of "Shafts from an Eastern Quiver." Cloth, 3s. 6d. net.

WHITEHALL REVIEW.—"A painfully realistic picture of the worst side of Australian bush life.....is not pleasant reading, but it cannot be denied that the work, though coarse, is powerful, and can scarcely fail to be widely perused."

THE LURE of FAME. By

CLIVE HOLLAND, Author of "My Japanese Wife." Cloth, 3s. 6d. net.

Just published in London and New York.

IN SCARLET and SILK; or,

Recollections of Hunting and Steeplechase Riding. By FOX RUSSELL. With 3 Drawings in Colour by Finch Mason. Cloth, 5s. net.

BLACK and WHITE.—"The best sporting book published for many a day."

SPORTSMAN.—"Racy of the soil, a work to take up again and again."

SPORTING TIMES.—"One which a sportsman should hasten to possess himself of."

SPORTING LIFE.—"Fox Russell is most practical in all he says."

GLASGOW HERALD.—"The stay-at-home or armchair reader will find it exhilarating reading equally with the regular hunting man."

SCOTSMAN.—"A lively, desultory, racy book of recollections."

HOW to WRITE FICTION, especially the Art of Short Story Writing. A Practical Study of Technique. Second Edition. Cloth, 3s. 6d. net.

"You seem to me to work with a power of vigorous analysis and a method clearly thought out. You both teach and suggest."—Prof. EDWARD DOWDEN to the Author.

"There is good sense in this book, and those who could write good fiction without it, may learn how to write a little better by its aid."—Bookman.

NEW SPORTING STORIES.

By G. G. Cloth, 3s. 6d. net.

The DAILY TELEGRAPH says: "G. G. is a benefactor to his species."

MANCHESTER GUARDIAN speaks of "his lightning character sketches, his rich vein of humour, his quaint smiles."

BROAD ARROW.—"An exceptional book of sporting stories."

"G. G. is not only a close observer of human nature, but a born story teller."—Booker (March 6).

THE SOLDIER in BATTLE;

or, Life in the Ranks of the Army of the Potomac. By FRANK WILKESON, a Survivor of Grant's Last Campaign. Cloth, 2s. 6d. net.

TIMES (March 19).—"We have seldom met with a more vivid account of the realities of war."

GLASGOW HERALD.—"A very vivid and very gruesome narrative."

WHITEHALL REVIEW.—"A remarkable little volume.....one cannot help shuddering when reading the horrid details."

NEFFIELD INDEPENDENT.—"The third line of interest is its vivid picturing of battles as seen by the private soldier.....it is a gruesome picture of insensate strife, and it is not a mere piece of fine writing like some similar books recently published, but a record of facts."

GEORGE REDWAY, HART STREET, BLOOMSBURY.

ELLIOT STOCK'S
NEW PUBLICATIONS.

CHEAP and UNIFORM EDITION of AUGUSTINE BIRRELL'S WORKS.

Price 2s. 6d. each.

OBITER DICTA

(Second Series).

IS NOW READY.

"There is not a dull page in the book. It has now been before the reading public for some years, and the present cheap, handy, and nicely got up edition should still further enhance its deserved popularity."—Aberdeen Journal.

"Every one reads them with pleasure, whether he agrees with the sentiments or otherwise. They make a very neat little volume."—Liverpool Mercury.

Uniform with the above. Recently issued in the Cheap Edition.

Essays About Men, Women, and Books,

AND

Obiter Dicta (First Series.)

COMPLETION OF DR. AUBREY'S HISTORY OF ENGLAND.

Now ready in 3 vols., crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d. each. The volumes are sold separately.

The Rise and Growth of the English Nation;

With Special Reference to Epochs and Crises. A History of and for the People.

By W. H. S. AUBREY, LL.D.

"Conceived in a popular spirit, yet with strict regard to the modern standards. The title is fully borne out. No want of colour in the descriptions."—Daily News.

"Readers will find especially useful the collection of facts on social development."—Athenæum.

"Dr. Aubrey has supplied a want. His method is undoubtedly the right one."—Full Mail Gazette.

"Lively enough and accurate enough."—National Observer.

Now ready, in crown 8vo, cloth, price 5s.

Industrial Day-Dreams:
Studies in Industrial Ethics and Economics.

By SAMUEL E. KEEBLE.

NEW NOVEL.

In crown 8vo, handsomely bound in cloth, price 6s.

Runic Rocks:

A North Sea Idyl.

By WILHELM JENSEN.

Translated by MARIANNE E. SUCKLING, with a Preface by Professor G. FIELDER.

"A book written to show the noble work which one sympathetic soul can accomplish."—Globe.

"English readers are under a deep obligation to Miss Suckling for this delightful translation."—Manchester Courier.

"Jensen's writing always possesses great charm, and we find it markedly here."—Guardian.

NEW VOLUME OF VERSE.

In crown 8vo, handsomely bound, price 4s. 6d.

Meetings and Partings.

With other Verses and Translations.

By E. C. RICKETTS (CORNELIA WALLACE), Author of "Flowers & Phantasies," and "Mountain Monarchs."

ELLIOT STOCK, 62, PATERNOSTER ROW,
LONDON, E.C.

DAVID NUTT,
270 & 271, STRAND.

LATEST PUBLICATIONS.

THE TARGUM of ONKELOS to GENESIS. A critical inquiry into the value of the text exhibited by the Yemen MSS., compared with that of the European recension, together with some specimen chapters of the Oriental text. By H. BARNSTEIN, Ph.D. Demy 8vo, 100 pp., 3s. 6d. net.

THE TREATISE of PLUTARCH DE CUPIDITATE DIVITIARUM. Critically Edited by W. R. PATON. 8vo (xvi-14 pp.), sewed, 1s. net.
*.* Advocates a new classification of Plutarch MSS.

ODYSSEUS in PHAEOAIA. By J. W. MACKAIL. Small 4to, printed by Constable, on hand-made paper, stiff wrapper, 1s. net.

*.* A new Version, in "Omar Khayyam" metre, of "Odyssey VI."

EMERSON (P. H.). Tales from Welsh Wales. Cheap edition. 12mo (304 pp.) paper wrapper, 2s.

BIBLIOTHEQUE DE CARABAS. Vol. X: BARLAAM and JOSAPHAT. English Lives of Buddha. Edited and induced by JOSEPH JACOBS. With Frontispiece by H. Ryland, and Introductory Verses by I. ZANGWILL. Crown 8vo, cxxvii-66 pages, vellum, 6s. 6d. net.

*.* In the Introduction Mr. Joseph Jacobs describes fully the transmission of the Barlaam literature from India westwards throughout Europe, and deals incidentally with the question of the relations between Buddhism and Christianity. The reprinted Texts comprise the earliest and latest English forms of the legend.

JEWISH IDEALS, and other Essays.

By JOSEPH JACOBS. Demy 8vo, xi-343 pages, cloth, 6s. net.

Contents:—JEWISH IDEALS—THE GOD OF ISRAEL: A History—MONOTHEISM: A Protest against the Criticism—BROWNING'S THEOLOGY—THE TAU, THE ONLY, and the COMPLETE SOLUTION of the JEWISH QUESTION—JAHUDA HALAVI, POET and PILGRIM—JEWISH DISRUPTION of FOLK-TALE, THE LONDON JEWRY, 1200 (with Map)—LITTLE ST. HUGH of LINCOLN (Researches in History, ARCHAEOLOGY, and LEGEND)—AAKON, SON of the Devil—JEWISH HISTORY: its Aims and Methods.

"A charming book. . . . It is, as it so happens, an admirable and effective reply to the 'Quarterly Review.'" Jewish Chronicle.

GRIMM LIBRARY.—No. IV.: THE

VOYAGE of BRAN, SON of FEBAL, to the LAND of the LIVING. An old Irish saga. Now first Edited with Translation, Notes, and a Glossary, by KUNO MEYER. With an Essay upon the Irish Vision of the Happy Otherworld and the Celtic Doctrine of Rebirth, by ALFRED NUTT. Section I. The Happy Otherworld. Crown 8vo, xviii-333 pages, cloth, uncut, 10s. 6d. net.

ZEITSCHRIFT für CELTISCHE

PHILOLOGIE. Edited by KUNO MEYER and C. L. STERN. 8vo, 176 pp., sewed, 6s. net.

*.* The Zeitschrift is published in Germany by Th. Niemeyer, of Halle, in England by D. Nutt, from whom, and from all Booksellers, it may be obtained. Among the Contents of Vol. I. are:—W. Stokes, A Celtic Leechbook; J. Strachan, The Milan Glosses; H. Gaidos, La Cosmologie Celtique; P. O. Kermode, A Welsh Inscription in the Isle of Man; J. Rhys, Guriat; W. Stokes, Culminin's Poem on the Saints of Ireland; H. Zimmer, Beiträge zur Erklärung irischer Sagentexte; K. Meyer, The Deaths of Aillil and Connall Cernach; D. O'Foharta, The White Hound of the Mountain, &c.

In the Press for early issue.

THE JEWISH SCRIPTURES. The

Books of the Old Testament in the light of their origin and history. By A. M. FISKE. Crown 8vo, 390 pp., cloth.

*.* Extract from Preface: "The purpose of this volume is to present the history and literature of the ancient Hebrews, as contained in the Old Testament, in a clear, concise, and candid way, accepting the benefit of the light revealed by modern research and learning."

THE JEWISH STATE. An attempt at a Modern Solution of the Jewish Question. Translated from the German of Dr. THEODOR HERZL, by S. d'AVIGDOR. Demy 8vo, upwards of 100 pages, sewed.

Pleads for the reconstruction of an independent Jewish State. This pamphlet has created wide interest, and commanded a large sale in Austria and Germany.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 1248.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, APRIL 4, 1896.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

MR. T. FISHER UNWIN'S LIST.

WITH INTRODUCTORY LETTER BY W. E. LECKY.

A LIFE SPENT for IRELAND: Leaves from the Diary of W. J. O'NEILL DAUNT. With Portrait. Cloth, 21s. [April 7.]

THE COURTSIPS of QUEEN ELIZABETH: a History of the Various Negotiations for her Marriage. By MARTIN A. S. HUME, F.R.H.S., Editor of "The Calendar of Spanish State Papers of Elizabeth." With Portraits. Cloth, 12s. [April 7.]

SECOND AND REVISED EDITION.

PUBLIC SPEAKING and DEBATE: a Manual for Advocates and Agitators. By GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, Author of "Sixty Years of an Agitator's Life," &c. Cloth, 3s. 6d. [April 10.]

NEW WHEELS in OLD RUTS: an Account of a Pilgrimage to Canterbury via the Ancient Pilgrims' Way. By HENRY PARR. With 50 Pen and Ink Sketches by F. W. R. ADAMS. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d. [April 10.]

Three New Novels at 6s. each.

1. AN OUTCAST of the ISLANDS. By Joseph Conrad.
"A work of extraordinary force and charm."—Daily Chronicle.
"A very striking novel.....There is on every page the unmistakable note of genius."—Sketch.
2. CLARA HOPGOOD. By Mark Rutherford.
3. THE EBBING of the TIDE: South Sea Stories. By Louis
BECKE.

Three New Novels at 3s. 6d. each.

1. THE STATEMENT of STELLA MABERLY. By Herself.
2. PAUL HEINSIUS: a Study from Life. By Cora Lyster.
3. GINETTE'S HAPPINESS. By "Gyp." Translated by Ralph DEROCHER. [April 7.]

New Volume of the Half-Crown Series.

THE HONOUR of the FLAG, and other Stories. By Clark
RUSSELL. Cloth.

New Volume of "The Autonym Library."

CHRONICLES from the LIFE of an EMINENT FOSSIL.
By W. DUTTON BURRARD. Paper, 1s. 6d.; cloth, 2s.

New Volume of "The Story of the Nations."

THE WEST INDIES, and the SPANISH MAIN. By James RODWAY. Maps and Illustrations. Cloth, 5s.
"Well written.....The reproduction of scarce and forgotten engravings are exceedingly quaint."
—Speaker.

THE YELLOW LIBRARY.

A Bijou Series printed on yellow paper (6½ by 3½ inches), 1s., paper; 2s., cloth.

Vol. I. now ready.

SIMON RYAN, the Peterite.

By Rev. AUG. JESSOPP, D.D.

Vol. II. on April 7.

MARSINA.

By HAROLD FREDERIC.

NOW READY.

WEIR OF HERMISTON.

By ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON. Six Chapters of Mr. Stevenson's posthumous story may now be had in the First Volume of COSMOPOLIS. This Volume also contains no less than 61 Contributions written by SIR CHARLES DILKE, HENRY JAMES, EDMUND GOSSE, PAUL BOURGET, ANATOLE FRANCE, EDOUARD ROD, GEORGES BRANDÈS, FRANCISQUE SARCEY, PROF. ERICH SCHMIDT, PROF. TREDOR MOMMSEN, FRIEDRICH SPIELHAGEN, HENRI HILFENHOF, ERNST VON WILDENBRUCH, T. H. S. ESCOTT, CHARLES WHIBLEY, HENRY NORMAN MLLR. BLAZE DE BURY, GEORGE MOORE, PAUL MARGUERITE, LÉON TOLSTOI, JULES SIMON, A. CHUQUET, HUGUES LE ROUX, EUGÈNE MUNTZ, FERDINAND VON SAAR, TREDOR BARTE, EDOUARD ENGEL, LEO ARONS, WILLIAM ARCHER, MME. DARMESTETER (Mary F. Robinson), J. GENNADIUS, "GYP," GUSTAVE DARRONNET, GABRIEL MONOD, PETER ROSENGER, LUDWIG VON BAR, KARL FRENZEL, JULIUS WELLAUNEN, KARL MENZ, ANTON SCHONNACH. And Literary, Dramatic, and Political Chronicles Written by ANDREW LANG, EMILE FAGUET, DR. ALTON BETTELHEIM, A. B. WALKLEY, JULES LEMAITRE, OTTO NEUMANN-HOFER, HENRY NORMAN, F. DE PRESSENSE, and "IGNOTUS."

In 1 vol., size 10in. by 7in., containing 344 pages of matter, tastefully bound in buckram, gilt lettered, 7s. 6d.

APRIL NUMBER NOW READY.

COSMOPOLIS:

AN INTERNATIONAL
MONTHLY REVIEW.

Price 2s. 6d.

Contents.

WEIR of HERMISTON (concluded)...	ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON.
LA PLEIADE .....	GEORGE WYNDHAM.
OLD LOMBARD and VENETIAN VILLAS.....	VERNON INCE.
THE REVIVAL of the OLYMPIAN GAMES.....	J. GENNADIUS.
LE CHAMPION .....	J. H. ROSS.
LETTERS d'EXIL.....	LAZARE CARNOT.
UNE PETITE ATHÈNES au XVIIe SIÈCLE .....	CHARLES YRIARTE.
LA PREFACE des JEUX OLYM- PIQUES .....	BARON PIERRE DE COURBETIN.
REQUIEM der LIEBE (Schluss) ....	FERDINAND VON SAAR.
BISCHOF REINKENS und die GEGENWÄRTIGE LAGE und BEDEUTUNG des ALTKATHOLI- CISMUS .....	DR. F. V. SCHULTZ.
DIE MEINUNGSVERSCHIEDEN- HEITEN unter den VOLKSWIRT- SCHAFTSLEHREN .....	LEO BRENTANO.
DIE PHOTOGRAPHIE in NATUR- LICHEN FARBEN .....	GUSTAV SELLE.
CHRONICLES.
LITERATURE.....	EMILE FAGUET.
THE DRAMA .....	A. B. WALKLEY; JULES LEMAITRE; OTTO NEUMANN HOFER.
FOREIGN AFFAIRS .....	HENRY NORMAN; F. DE PRESSENSE; "IGNOTUS."

Catalogues post free on application.

LONDON: T. FISHER UNWIN, PATERNOSTER SQUARE, E.C.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

	PAGE
WOMAN UNDER MONASTICISM, by the Rev. WENTWORTH WEBSTER . . . . .	277
SOME VOLUMES OF VERSE, by NORMAN GALE . . . . .	278
THE CURIOSITIES OF IMPRECUNIONITY, by G. NEWCOMEN . . . . .	279
ST. PATRICK'S PURGATORY, by Miss E. D'ESTERRE-KERLING . . . . .	280
NEW NOVELS, by J. STANLEY LITTLE . . . . .	281
SOME FOREIGN BOOKS . . . . .	282
NOTES AND NEWS . . . . .	283
UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS . . . . .	284
ORIGINAL VERSE: "TO CHRISTINA ROSSINI," by MICHAEL FIELD . . . . .	284
MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS . . . . .	284
CORRESPONDENCE—
The "Prensa" Anglo , by Prof. Skout; The Facsimile of the Lausannan Aeschylus , by Prof. Lewis Campbell; Genesis xiv. , by G. A. Stincox; On a Pair of Gaudish Deities , by Salomon Reinach . . . . .	285
APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK . . . . .	285
ONIONS' EDITION OF NONIUS, by S. G. OWEN . . . . .	285
CORRESPONDENCE—
The Restored Pronunciation of Greek , by Dr. R. J. Lloyd . . . . .	286
SCIENCE NOTES . . . . .	287
PHILOLOGY NOTES . . . . .	287
REPORTS OF SOCIETIES . . . . .	288
ART BOOKS . . . . .	288
LETTER FROM EGYPT, by Prof. SAYCE . . . . .	289
THE NATIONAL PORTRAIT GALLERY . . . . .	290
THE PARTHENON INSCRIPTION . . . . .	290
NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY . . . . .	290
STAGE NOTES . . . . .	291
RECENT CONCERTS, by J. S. SHEDLOCK . . . . .	291

PERFECT SET OF TANAGRA GREEK
STATUETTES AND ARCHAIKS TO SELL, including exquisite tiny Cupid with outspread wings.—Apply HALLAS, Young's Library, Kensington.

A GREEK TEACHER, residing at
Oxford, would be glad to ACCOMPANY TOURISTS going to Greece, for the purpose of giving them instruction in the Greek Language. High references.—Address Dr. PLATON, 103, High Street, Oxford.

DUGDALE'S MONASTICON, complete edition, with Illustrations, 1849, 8 vols., half-bound, excellent condition, £30.—Ballade, LORD BATEMAN, earliest edition, complete, £2.—Advertiser, Salt Library, Stafford.

TO PRINTERS, PUBLISHERS, EDITORS—ADVERTISER who has held responsible positions in Printing Trade, seeks ENGAGEMENT, Thirteen years' experience. Highest testimonials.—"Advertiser," care of F. W. Sears, 106, Fleet Street.

PICTURE PRESERVATION & RESTORATION
—For advice and full particulars address C. H. MIDFORTH, Studio, 208, Devonshire Road, Honor Oak Park, S.E.

TO INVALIDS.—A LIST OF MEDICAL
MEN in all parts, willing to RECEIVE RESIDENT PATIENTS, giving full particulars and terms, sent gratis. The list includes private asylums, &c.; schools also recommended.—Address Mr. G. B. BROOKER, 4, Lancaster Place, Strand, W.C.

WANTED, TO PURCHASE, fine PIC-
TURES, in OIL, by Old Masters of the Dutch, Flemish, and British schools.—Downsall, 160, New Bond Street, W.

TYPE-WRITING.—MSS. of every
description COPIED. Special attention to work requiring care. Examination Questions, Notices, &c., by DUPLICATION process. Usual terms.—Miss THOMAS, 8, Caulley Avenue, Clapham Common, S.W.

MR. GEORGE REDWAY, formerly of
York Street, Covent Garden, and late Director and Manager of Kegan Paul, Trench, Trubner & Co., Limited, begs to announce that he has RESUMED BUSINESS as a PUBLISHER on his own account, and will be glad to hear from Authors with MSS. ready for publication, and to consider proposals for New Books. Address as above.

THE AUTHOR'S HAIRLESS PAPER.
PAID.
(The LEADENHALL PRESS, Ltd., 50, Leadenhall Street, London, E.C.)
Contains hairless paper, over which the pen slips with perfect freedom. Sixpence each. 6s. per dozen, ruled or plain.

FIRST EDITIONS of MODERN
AUTHORS, including DICKENS, Thackeray, Lever, Alcock, &c.; Books illustrated by G. and R. Cruikshank, Philp, Rowlandson, Leech, &c. The largest and choicest Collection offered for Sale in the World. Catalogues issued and sent post free on application. Books Bought.—WALTER T. BRIDGES, 27, New Oxford Street, London, W.C.

WINTER SEASON, 1896-7.—LAN-
TERN LECTURES and others by ERNEST RADFORD LL.M. Cantab., formerly Secretary of the Arts and Crafts Exhibition Society.—For List of Subjects, &c., apply to the Lecturers, care of "The Artist," 14, Parliament Street, Westminster.

THE ZOOLOGICAL SOCIETY'S GAR-
DENS, Regent's Park, are OPEN DAILY (except Sundays) from 9 a.m. till sunset. Admission, 1s.; on Mondays, 6d.; children, 6d. Amongst the recent additions are a young Manatee from the Amazons and a Lion presented by Rowland Ward, Esq., F.Z.S.

PRIFYSGOL CYMRU. UNIVERSITY OF WALES.

The UNIVERSITY COURT is about to proceed to the ELECTION of EXTERNAL EXAMINERS in the following Departments for the year 1896:—

GREEK LANGUAGE and LITERATURE.
LATIN LANGUAGE and LITERATURE.
ENGLISH LANGUAGE and LITERATURE.
WELSH LANGUAGE and LITERATURE.
FRENCH LANGUAGE and LITERATURE.
GERMAN LANGUAGE and LITERATURE.
HEBREW LANGUAGE and LITERATURE.
HISTORY.
PHILOSOPHY.
MATHEMATICS.
PHYSICS.
CHEMISTRY.
BOTANY.
ZOOLOGY.

Candidates must send in their names to the REGISTRAR, with any attestation of their qualifications they may think desirable, on or before WEDNESDAY, APRIL 16th.

Information in regard to the work and stipends of Examiners may be obtained on application to IVON JAMES, Registrar, Town Hall Chambers, Newport, Mon., March 11th, 1896.

UNIVERSITY of ABERDEEN.

WILSON TRAVELLING FELLOWSHIP.

The Trustees of the Wilson Fund in the University of Aberdeen will proceed to the ELECTION of a TRAVELLING FELLOW in the month of July next. Applications will be received up to 30th June, 1896. The Wilson Fellow must be a Graduate of Aberdeen University. He is expected to prosecute some definite work of research in accordance with the intention of the founder, and the supplementary regulations of the Scottish University Commissioners.

Each Candidate is required to indicate the character of the work of research which he intends to prosecute, if elected, and to sketch out the plan of travel and study by which he proposes to carry out this work. He may submit any further information or evidence which he thinks may help the Trustees to decide as to his qualifications for carrying out the work successfully (e.g., Essays published by himself or prepared for publication).

The Fellow will be elected for a period of two years, beginning from 15th September, 1896. The value of the Fellowship will be £200 per annum, payable in advance in half-yearly instalments. All applications to be made to Prof. W. M. KEMPT, Old Aberdeen, Convener of the Committee of Trustees, who will give any further information required by Candidates. Aberdeen, 9th March, 1896.

BIRMINGHAM SCHOOL BOARD.

The Board REQUIRES the services of an ASSISTANT MASTER for the SEVENTH STANDARD TECHNICAL and ORGANISED SCIENCE SCHOOL in BRIDGE STREET.

Candidates must be qualified to teach and earn payments in Theoretical and Practical Physics, Theoretical and Practical Inorganic Chemistry, and French.

Commencing salary £100 per annum. Maximum, £130. Applications, with copies of testimonials, to be sent in at once to THE CLERK of the School Board, Birmingham.

ST. BARTHOLOMEW'S HOSPITAL and COLLEGE.

ENTRANCE SCHOLARSHIPS AND EXHIBITIONS.

An EXAMINATION will be held on SEPTEMBER 23, 1896, and succeeding days, for the awarding of the following:—

1. A SCHOLARSHIP of £75 for One Year to the best Candidate in Chemistry and Physics who is under Twenty-five years of age.
2. A SCHOLARSHIP of £75 for One Year to the best Candidate in Biology (Animal and Vegetable) and Physiology who is under Twenty-five years of age.

Candidates for these Two Scholarships must not have entered to the Medical or Surgical Practice of any London Medical School.

3. A SCHOLARSHIP of £150 and the Preliminary Scientific Exhibition of £50 each, tenable for one year, in Physics, Chemistry, Vegetable Biology, and Animal Biology. Candidates for these must be under Twenty years of age, and must not have entered to the Medical or Surgical Practice at any Medical School.
4. A JEFFERSON EXHIBITION of £21 for One Year in Latin and Mathematics, with any one of the Languages—Greek, French, and German (United Books as in Matriculation of Univ. of London, June, 1895). Candidates must not have entered at any Medical School.

The successful Candidates in all cases will be required to enter to the full course at St. Bartholomew's Hospital in the October succeeding the Examination. For full particulars apply to Dr. T. W. SHORS, Warden of the College, St. Bartholomew's Hospital, E.C.

THE GLASGOW ATHENÆUM (LIMITED).

FRENCH MASTERSHIP.

The Directors invite applications for the above appointment, vacant by the death of M. Emile Barbier. Emolument about £35 for Session of Nine Months. Particulars as to the duties may be obtained from the SECRETARY, with whom applications and testimonials are to be lodged not later than April 15, 1896.

St. George's Place, Glasgow. JAMES LAUDER, Secretary.

BRITISH MUSEUM.—THREE DEMONSTRATIONS in the ROMAN, ETRUSCAN, and ANGLO-ROMAN ROOMS will be given by MISS C. MILES (late of Rome), at 3 p.m. on WEDNESDAY, APRIL 8th, 1896, and 22nd. Terms: 6s. the Course; 2s. Single Lesson.—Apply, by letter, to 11, Avonmore Gardens, West Kensington, W.

ROYAL LITERARY FUND.

The EARL OF GREVE, President of the Corporation, will preside at the 100th ANNIVERSARY DINNER of the ROYAL LITERARY FUND to be held at the WHITEHALL ROOMS, HOTEL METROPOLE, S.W., on WEDNESDAY, May 8th, at 7.30 p.m. precisely.

The LORD BISHOP of PETERBOROUGH will respond for the Toast of "Literature."

The Anniversary Committee will be glad of early replies from those gentlemen who have been invited to act as Stewards.

7, Adelphi Terrace, W.C.

ST. EDWARD'S SCHOOL, near OXFORD.

—Public School, founded 1883, to provide Education for Gentlemen's Sons in Preparation for Universities, Army, &c., on definite Church principles. Fees: £98 per annum (Sons of Clergymen, £60); Day Boys, 21 guineas. Classical and Modern sides. Scholarships, July 20th.—Rev. T. F. HUNSON, M.A., Warden.

THEATRES.

ADELPHI THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8, ONE OF THE BEST. Mr. William Terriss and Miss Millward; Messrs. W. L. Abingdon, Chas. Fulton, Edward Saxe, Julian Cross, L. Delorme, H. Athol, Forde, and Harry Nicholls, &c.; Miss Edith Oatlers, Miss Kate Kearney, Miss Vane Featherston, &c.

AVENUE THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.15, a Musical Play, THE NEW BARMAID. Mr. J. L. Shine; Messrs. Harrison Brockbank, J. J. Dallas, Fitzroy Morgan, E. Dagnall, C. Rowan, C. Wilford, J. Thompson; Misses Jennie Rogers, Maggie Hunt, Maria Baker, Edith Denton, Ethel Gain, Agnes Ingreville, and Miss Lottie Collins.

COURT THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 9, MRS. PONDERBURY. Messrs. Charles Hawtrey, Eric Lewis, Brandon Thomas, W. Wyse, Willis Searle, Wm. F. Hawtrey, Aubrey Fitzgerald; Mesdames Lottie Vonne, Violet Lyster, Evelyn Harrison, and Mrs. John Wood. Preceded at 8, by A HIGHLAND LEGACY. Messrs. Brandon Thomas, E. W. Tarver, Miss Florence Haydon, &c.

GAIETY THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8, THE SHOP GIRL. Messrs. Seymour Hicks, Colin Coop, W. J. Manning, Willie Warde, George Mudie, Robert Nainby, F. Stayton, L. Mackinder, and Arthur Williams; Misses Katie Seymour, Maria Davis, E. Spiller, Kate Adams, Grace Palotta, M. Rossell, Florence Lloyd, M. Stantley, K. Yuddal, and Ethel Haydon.

GLOBE THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 9, CHARLEY'S AUNT. Messrs. F. Newton-Lindo, W. Everard, Sydney Paxton, Farmer, C. Thornbury, and Reeves-Smith; Misses Ada Branson, Emmie Merrick, Kate Graves, A. L. Aumonier, R. Kildare, and Mabel Lane. At 8, THE JOURNEY'S END.

GRAND THEATRE, ISLINGTON.

NIGHTLY, at 7.30, the celebrated ARTHUR ROUSHEY OPERA COMPANY.—SATURDAY, THE BOHEMIAN GIRL.

LYCEUM THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.45, FOR THE CROWN. Preceded, at 8, by SHADES OF NIGHT. Mr. Forbes Robertson, Mr. Charles Dalton, Mr. Mackintosh, Mr. Ian Robertson, Mr. Frank Gillmore, Mr. Fisher White, Mr. J. Willes, Mr. Murray Hathorn; Miss Winifred Emory, Miss Henrietta Watson, Miss Sarah Brooke, Miss Weyburn, Mrs. Patrick Campbell.

LYRIC THEATRE.

Mr. Wilson Barrett's Season.
TO-DAY, at 2.30 and 8.15, THE SIGN OF THE CROSS. Mr. Wilson Barrett, Miss Maud Jeffries, and Company.

OLYMPIC THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 7.45, TRUE BLUE; or, Aloft and Ashore. Messrs. A. Bucklaw, W. Rignold, E. O'Neill, C. Wibrow, J. A. Bentham, A. E. Raynor, F. De Lara, J. Wildcomb, J. F. Cornish, Teesdale, Brennan, Bertram, Calhoun, Everard Taylor, &c.; Mrs. Raleigh, Misses Laura Graves, M. Huntley, M. Bates, E. Rutland, and K. Phillips.

OPERA COMIQUE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.15, SHAMUS O'BRIEN. Messrs. Denis O'Sullivan, William Stephens, Joseph O'Mara, C. Magrath, F. Fisher; Misses Kirkby Lunn, Maggie Davies.

ST. JAMES'S THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8, THE PRISONER OF ZENDA. Mr. George Alexander, Messrs. Herbert Waring, W. H. Vernon, Allan Ayneworth, Laurence Cantley, W. H. Day, Vincent Sternroyd, Arthur Royston, Henry Loraine, George P. Hawtrey, George Bancroft, Charles Glenney; Miss Evelyn Millard, Miss Olga Brandon, Miss Mabel Hackney, Miss Lily Hanbury.

SAVOY THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.25, THE GRAND DUKE. Messrs. Rutland Barrington, C. Kenningham, Scott Fiske, Scott Russell, J. Hewson, and Walter Passmore; Mesdames Ilka Palmay, Florence Perry, Emmie Owen, and Rosina Brandram.

TERRY'S THEATRE.

TO-DAY, at 3 and 8.45, JEDBURY JUNR. Messrs. F. Kerr, John Beauchamp, Arthur Playfair, Gilbert Farquhar, J. L. Mackay, G. E. Bellamy, A. L. Robinson, E. Beecher; Mesdames Eva Moore, Emily Cross, Elsie Chester, and Maude Millett. At 8, Miss Nellie Ganthony in her new Sketch, OUTWARD BOUND.

PALACE.

THIS EVENING, at 7.45, ALICE ATHERTON, JAMES FERNANDEZ, Mlle. DEBAGY, May Evans, A. H. Graham, Louise Baudet, Cliff Ryland, Spink and Spink, H. Woodville, Clemart, ROBB HARWOOD, The Gerettes, Mlle. Arnoldi, G. W. Hunter, Les Minstrels Parisiens, and the NEW SERIES of TABLEAUX VIVANTS.

OLYMPIA.

GRAND SPORTING and MILITARY SHOW, at 2 and 8 p.m. CYCLING under N.C.U. Rules. Military Tournament. Animated Pictures. Full Band of H.M. Scots Guards; Riviere's Celebrated Orchestra, and the Olympia Orchestral Band. General Manager, Sir Augustus Harris.

CATALOGUES
FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS
 promptly supplied on moderate terms
 CATALOGUES on application.
 DULAU & CO., 37, SOHO SQUARE.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE,
IMPORTERS OF FOREIGN BOOKS,
 14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN,
 20, SOUTH FREDERICK STREET, EDINBURGH,
 AND
 7, BROAD STREET, OXFORD.
 CATALOGUES post free on application.

TH. WOHLLEBEN,
FOREIGN BOOKSELLER
 45, GREAT RUSSELL STREET
 (Opposite the British Museum),
 Supplies all FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS at the most
 moderate prices.
 Catalogues on application.

On application for one stamp.
THE INTERNATIONAL BOOKMARKET.
 Monthly List of the most important Publications issued by
H. GREVEL & CO.,
 Importers of Foreign Books,
 33, King Street, Covent Garden, W.C.

Just out, No. 70.
ALBERT JACKSON & SON'S CATA-
LOGUE OF CHOICE, RARE, and STANDARD LIBRARY
BOOKS, recently purchased, gratis and post free, 224, Great Portland
 Street, London, W.
 N.B.—Established nearly a Quarter of a Century.

AGENCY FOR AMERICAN BOOKS.
G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS, PUBLISHERS
 and BOOKSELLERS, of 27 and 29 West 23rd Street, New York, and 24, BEDFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C., desire to call the attention of the READING PUBLIC to the excellent facilities presented by their Branch House in London for filling, on the most favourable terms, orders for their own STANDARD PUBLICA-TIONS and for ALL AMERICAN BOOKS and PERIODICALS—
 CATALOGUES sent on application.

IMPORTANT.—PRINTING AND PUBLISHING.
NEWSPAPERS, MAGAZINES, BOOKS,
 &c.—KING, SELL & RAILTON, Limited, high-class Printers
 and Publishers, 12, Gough Square, 4, Bolt Court, Fleet Street, E.C.,
 have specially-built Rotary and other fast Machines for printing
 illustrated or other Publications, and specially-built Machines for fast folding and covering 8, 16, 24, or 32-page Journals at one operation.
 Advice and assistance given to anyone wishing to commence New Journals.
 Facilities upon the premises for Editorial Offices, free. Advertising and Publishing Departments conducted.
 Telephone 55121. Telegraph "Africanism, London."

ESTABLISHED 1851.
BIRKBECK BANK
 Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane, London.
TWO-AND-A-HALF per CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS
 repayable on demand
TWO per CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, on the minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.
STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.
 For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposit and allows interest monthly on each completed £1.

BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.
HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE
 FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH.

BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY
HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND
 FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.

The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post free.
 FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

BREAKFAST—SUPPER.
E P P S'S
GRATEFUL—COMFORTING.
C O C O A.
 BOILING WATER OR MILK.

WM. & GEO. LAW.
COFFEE—SUGAR—TEA.

104, NEW OXFORD STREET, W.C.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY

*Invite the attention of Artists
 and others to their*

PERMANENT PROCESSES OF PHOTOGRAPHIC REPRODUCTION,
 combining great range of tone effect with accurate
 monochrome representation and artistic expression.

THE AUTOTYPE SOLAR OR
 CARBON PROCESS

for the reproduction in permanent pigments of oil paintings, drawings, in water-colour, pencil, crayon,
 Indian ink, &c.

AUTO-GRAVURE.

The Autotype Company's Process of Photographic
 Engraving on Copper, yielding results resembling mezzotint engravings.

The Company has successfully reproduced several important works by this process, including Portraits
 by Sir J. E. Millais, P.R.A., J. Pettie, R.A., W. W.
 Oulless, R.A., F. Holl, R.A., The Hon. Jno. Collier, Sir
 G. Reid, P.R.S.A.; also examples of Gainsborough,
 Turner, Constable, Schmalz, Douglas, Draper, &c., &c.

THE AUTOTYPE MECHANICAL
 PROCESS (Sawyer's Collotype)

for Book Illustrations of the highest class. Adopted by the Trustees of the British Museum, many of the Learned Societies, and the leading Publishers.

Examples of work may be seen, and terms and prices obtained at

THE AUTOTYPE FINE ART GALLERY,
 74, NEW OXFORD STREET,
 LONDON.

THE AUTHOR'S MANUAL. By PERCY
 RUSSELL. With Prefatory Remarks by Mr. GLADSTONE.
 Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d. net. (EIGHTH and CHEAPER EDITION.)
 With Portrait.

"Mr. Russell's book is a very complete manual and guide for journalist and author. It is not a merely practical work—it is literary and appreciative of literature in its best sense... We have little else but praise for the volume."—Westminster Review.

DIEBLY, LANE & CO., 18, BOUVERIE STREET, LONDON, E.C.

THREE CENTURIES OF NONCONFORMITY.

NOW READY, large crown 8vo, nearly 800 pages, cloth, 6s., post free.

HISTORY
 OF THE

FREE CHURCHES OF ENGLAND

FROM THE REFORMATION TO 1851.

By HERBERT S. SKEATS.

WITH A CONTINUATION TO 1891,

By CHARLES S. MIALL.

THE GUARDIAN.—"It is certainly a convenience to have the history of Dissent in England presented in a connected form, and from a Dissenter's point of view. And for these purposes we can recommend this, which gives the history in a handy and convenient form."

TIMES.—"As a complete exposition of the history of Dissent, from the Nonconformist point of view, it is no doubt certain to retain its reputation."

PALL MALL GAZETTE—"Readers will find here in a clear and attractive form much information which cannot readily be found anywhere else."

THE LONDON QUARTERLY REVIEW.—"It is essential that Dissenters and Methodist Churchmen should know why they stand apart from the National Establishment, and this knowledge can only come through the study of the ecclesiastical history of the last 300 years. . . . We ought to be specially grateful to Mr. Skeats and Mr. Miall for the light which they have shed upon the experiences of the Nonconformists of England."

LONDON: ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD, PUBLISHERS,
 21 & 22, FURNIVAL STREET, E.C.

NOW READY,
THE NEW REVIEW for APRIL, which contains an important Article by MR. CHARLES LEONARD,
Chairman of the Transvaal National Union.

THE CASE FOR THE UITLANDERS.

THE NEW REVIEW for APRIL contains "THE CASE for the UITLANDERS," by
CHARLES LEONARD.—"The Plattner Story," by H. G. WELLS.—"On an Old-Fashioned Children's Book,"
 by F. ANSTY.—"Corot," by R. A. M. STEVENSON.—
 "Candour in Biography," by WILFRID WARD. And Six other Articles by well-known writers.

THE NEW REVIEW.

Edited by W. E. HENLEY. Monthly. Price 1s.

LONDON: WM. HEINEMANN, 21, Bedford Street, W.C.

NOW READY.—Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.
 At all Booksellers and Libraries.

NEW NOVEL BY DORA RUSSELL.
A FATAL PAST.

By the Author of "Footprints in the Snow," "The Vicar's Governess," "Beneath the Wave," &c., &c.

SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, HAMILTON, KENT & Co., Limited.

MESSRS. J. C. DRUMMOND & CO.,
ART REPRODUCERS,

14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C.
 Are the sole representatives in Great Britain of HERR HANFSTAENGL, of Munich.

the well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAVURE now patronised by the leading London Art Publishing Firms. A large Collection of Important Plates always on view

Process Blocks for the purpose of Ordinary Book Illustrations.

Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. supply the cheapest and best Processes in the market, which are specially adapted to meet the wants of Antiquarians, Archaeologists, and those engaged in the investigation and publication of Parochial and Diocesan Records.

J. C. DRUMMOND & CO. invite attention to their
Improved Rapid Photo-Mechanical Process

for the reproduction of Works of Art, Original MSS., Designs,
 Lace Manufactures, Photographs, Views, Book Illustrations,
 Artistic Advertisements, Catalogues, &c., &c., at a moderate cost.
 Specimens and price list on Application.

14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, LONDON.

STANDARD WORKS

PUBLISHED BY

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON.*THE HISTORY of ROME. By

THEODOR MOMMSEN. Translated by Professor DICKSON, D.D., LL.D. A New and Cheaper Edition. Revised. In 5 vols., crown 8vo, 37s. 6d. Each volume separately, 7s. 6d.

THE ROMAN PROVINCES. Being

the History of Rome from Cæsar to Diocletian. By Professor MOMMSEN. Translated by Professor DICKSON, D.D., LL.D. In 2 vols., 8vo, Maps, 36s.

THE HISTORY of ANTIQUITY.

From the German of Professor MAX DÜNKER. By EVELYN ABBOTT, M.A., LL.D. 6 vols., demy 8vo. Each volume can be obtained separately, 21s.

THE HISTORY of the RISE and

PROGRESS of the ENGLISH CONSTITUTION. By Sir EDWARD CREASY, late Chief Justice of Ceylon. Fourteenth Edition. Crown 8vo, 6s.

THE FIFTEEN DECISIVE BATTLES

of the WORLD. By Sir EDWARD CREASY. Library Edition, in demy 8vo, 7s. 6d.; Popular Edition, in crown 8vo, red cloth, 2s.; canvas cloth, 1s. 4d.

THE LIVES of the ARCHBISHOPS of CANTERBURY. By WALTER FARQUHAR HOOK, late Dean of Winchester. ST. AUGUSTINE to JUKON. 13 vols., demy 8vo, 42s. Each separately (with the exception of VI. and VII.), 15s. The New Series begins with Vol. VI. Vol. XII. is the Index. Vols. III. and IV. reprinting.

THE NAVAL HISTORY of GREAT

BRITAIN. By WILLIAM JAMES. In 6 vols., crown 8vo, with numerous Portraits on Steel, 42s.

THE HISTORY of the FRENCH

REVOLUTION. (1789-1800.) By LOUIS ADOLPHE THIERS. Translated by FREDERICK SHOBRELL. New Edition. With 50 Illustrations on Steel. In 5 vols., demy 8vo, 45s.

MEMOIRS of NAPOLEON BONA-

PARTE. By FAUVELT de BOURBONNE, Private Secretary to the Emperor. Edited by Colonel PHIPPS. 4 vols., crown 8vo, with Illustrations, 36s.

THE COURT and FAMILY of NAPO-

LEON. By LAURE JUNOT, Duchesse d'Abrantès. A New and Revised Edition, with Additional Notes, and an Explanatory List of the Titles of the persons mentioned in the work. 4 vols., crown 8vo, 36s.

The LETTERS of HORACE WALPOLE

Fourth Earl of Orford. Edited by PETER CUNNINGHAM, F.S.A. In 9 vols., demy 8vo, with Portraits, 25 6s.

THE LIFE of JOHN CHURCHILL,

DUKE of MARLBOROUGH, to the ACCESSION of QUEEN ANNE. By Field-Marshal VISCOUNT WOLSELEY, K.P. Fourth Edition. 2 vols., demy 8vo, with Portraits and Plans, 32s.

THE LIFE of LORD PALMERSTON.

By the Hon. EVELYN ASHLEY, M.P. In 2 vols., crown 8vo, with Frontispiece to each volume, 12s.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington Street
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.CASSELL & COMPANY'S ANNOUNCEMENTS.*THE NEW STORY BY Q.

Now ready, price 3s. 6d.

IA, by Q, by Author of "Deadman's Rock,"
"Wandering Heath," &c."IA," a Cornish tale, will rank as one of the strongest of Q's short stories."—Full Mail Gazette.

Ready shortly, price 10s. 6d.

A DIARY of the HOME RULE PARLIAMENT.

By HENRY W. LUCY.

1892-1895

The great feature of this Work is that it mirrors the Home Rule Parliament with singular faithfulness and graphic power. Mr. Lucy's unique knowledge of the House of Commons and its Members, together with his deep insight and instantaneous grasp, have enabled him to transcribe the impressions of the time with extraordinary freshness and vigour.

Now ready, complete in 1 handsome Volume, bevelled cloth, gilt edges, price 9s.

THE QUEEN'S LONDON.

Containing nearly 400 Exquisite Views of London and its Environs.

"A fascinating collection of photographs."—The Times.

Now ready, Volume I., price 9s.

BATTLES OF THE NINETEENTH CENTURY.

DESCRIBED BY

ARCHIBALD FORBES, G. A. HENTY, Major ARTHUR GRIFFITHS, and other well-known Writers.

With a Chronological List of the more important Battles of the Century, and about 370 Illustrations and 85 Plans.

NEW NOVEL BY A. E. WICKHAM.

Now ready, price 6s.

LOVEDAY:

A Tale of a Stirring Time.

By A. E. WICKHAM, Author of "Two Women," &amp;c.

With 8 Full-page Illustrations by J. Göllich.

"A very fresh and dainty story is 'Loveday,' original, dramatic, well-conceived, and well-executed. The task of discovery can be but a delightful one, for the book abounds in pathos and quaint humour, and the author can portray a dramatic situation with no mean skill."—National Observer.POPULAR EDITION OF MR. SALA'S AUTOBIOGRAPHY.

NOTICE.—A CHEAP EDITION, Unabridged, in 1 Volume, price 7s. 6d., has just been published of

LIFE AND ADVENTURES OF GEORGE AUGUSTUS SALA.

By HIMSELF.

"Mr. Sala has fulfilled his purpose with inimitable skill, admirable tact, and exemplary completeness."—Daily Telegraph.CASSELL & COMPANY, LIMITED, LUDGATE HILL, LONDON; PARIS AND MELBOURNE.

NOW READY AT ALL LIBRARIES.

The Heart of a Mystery.

By T. W. SPEIGHT, Author of "The Mysteries of Heron Dyke," "Quittance in Full," "The Grey Monk," "Wife or No Wife," &amp;c. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

"The story thoroughly justifies its name, it is told so deftly. How the mystery is cleared up, how its solution assists in unravelling another of a more romantic nature, and how almost everything turns out so differently from earlier anticipations, is told with dexterity and ingenuity."—Scotsman.Harum Scarum.

By ESMÉ STUART, Author of "A Brave Fight," "Cast Ashore," "Miss Fenwick." Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

Lindsay's Girl.

By Mrs. HERBERT MARTIN, Author of "Britomart," "Her Début," "Bonnie Leslie," "A Country Mouse," "Cast Adrift," &amp;c. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

Ruth Farmer.

By AGNES MARCHBANK. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

Brenda's Experiment:

An Indian Marriage Story.

By Surgeon-Major H. M. GREENHOW, Author of "The Bow of Fate." Crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.

"Stirring scenes are brilliantly portrayed, and while they are in progress one almost forgets the perils of the heroine. How Brenda is rescued and her life again brightened is a very interesting episode, which the reader will have pleasure, we are sure, in finding out for himself."—Leeds Mercury.

London:

JARROLD & SONS, 10 and 11, Warwick Lane, E.C.;
At all Libraries, and of the Booksellers.NEW WORK BY DR. ALEX. MACLAREN.

Now ready, crown 8vo, cloth, price 5s., post free.

THE BEATITUDES,
AND OTHER SERMONS,"Dr. Maclaren's new volume will be received with special warmth, as containing an excellent exposition of the beatitudes. Dr. Maclaren's work is always full of thought and knowledge and power, intensely evangelical, and un-faillingly fresh."—British Weekly."Undiminished vigour and undimmed brilliancy."—Independent.

Uniform with the above, price 5s. each, post free.

CHRIST'S "MUSTS," and other Sermons.
"Dr. Maclaren is our ideal preacher."—Expository Times.
"Masterly, beautiful, inspiring."—Methodist Recorder.THE UNCHANGING CHRIST, and otherSermons.
"The work of a master of pulpit oratory."—Freeman.
"Distinguished by the finest scholarship and the most exquisite literary finish."—Christian Leader.
"Few preachers combine so many elements of effective pulpit address."—Independent.THE HOLY of HOLIES: a Series of Sermons on the 14th, 15th, and 16th Chapters of the Gospel by John.

"Every sermon glows with unction, and shows intense power."—Methodist Recorder.THE WEARIED CHRIST, and otherSermons.
"They show the same wonderful fertility of apt and beautiful illustrations, the same exquisite use of language, and the same direct heart-searching power which we are accustomed to find in all Dr. Maclaren's works."—Christian World Pulpit.PAUL'S PRAYERS, and other Sermons."For more than a quarter of a century he has held almost an unchallenged position as the prince of pulpit orators.... The back pews of Dr. Maclaren's church are in the nooks and corners of the earth."—Methodist Times.THE GOD of the AMEN, and otherSermons.
"Open the book wherever we may, the temptation to read on and on is very great. The volume is invaluable."—Sunday School Chronicle.

ALEXANDER &amp; SHEPHERD, Farringdon St., London, E.C.

SATURDAY, APRIL 4, 1896.

No. 1248, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

Woman under Monasticism. Chapters on Saint-love and Convent Life between A.D. 500 and A.D. 1500. By Lina Eckenstein. (Cambridge: University Press.)

THIS is a book which any one might be proud of having written. It is an example of what is becoming almost a new school in literature, the work of University women of the present day. We have here no unworthy attempt to emulate the thoroughness of research, the impartial critical judgment, the scholarship of the best historical writers of the modern school. Miss Eckenstein has consulted the authorities, has read far and wide. She knows nearly all the books which have appeared on her subject in England and in Germany. She is equally at home in classical, mediæval, and ecclesiastical Latin, and thus is able to read the writings of the nuns themselves and the documents connected with the monasteries. She has, perhaps, taken her work a little too seriously; she has neglected side-lights a little too much; she has kept too fixedly to her own point of view, that of the woman of the new learning of the last quarter of the nineteenth century. Hence, though her industry is worthy of all praise, though many will be grateful for the information and the facts here brought together, yet the work will, we fear, never be popular with the multitude, however much it may be valued and enjoyed by professed students.

The standpoint which Miss Eckenstein has taken has this disadvantage—whatever may be its counterbalancing advantages—that she looks at her subject too much from the outside: she never really gets within it, or sees the life of a nun as it must have appeared to a member of the community itself. She tells, and tells well, of its products, of its results, the books and learning it produced, the art needlework, the education. We have biographies, excellent though necessarily brief, of the chief abbesses and prioresses of the convents. We see how the type changes from the semi-barbaric scions of Frankish royalty, whose Christianity seems but as the snow on a volcano of wildest passion, then the genuine desire for learning awakened among British and Anglo-Saxon nuns, spreading on the Continent through the Carolingian era, until it culminates in the nun Hrosvith of Gandersheim. We have the convent as a school of education, especially for women of the higher classes; then later on, as the possessions of the monastery increase, there is full scope for the powers of the capable, managing woman, as abbess, as farmer and land-owner, able to hold her own with lawyers and men of business, nay, sometimes against statesmen, or even against royalty itself. Then the arts and handicrafts of the convent are depicted, and the causes of their decline are sketched out; and so the story goes on until the eve of dissolution approaches, a process which Miss Eckenstein shows to have begun before the time of the Reformation. The injustice which the nuns met with, especially in England, is denounced from the recent works of Dom Gasquet and others; but perhaps the narrative of greatest interest of this period is that of the two convents at Nuremberg, and the noble stand made by the Abbess Charitas Pirckheimer. These two burgher convents, one of Dominican, the other of Franciscan nuns, represent almost the highest point of religious conventual mystic life. It is a pity that Franz Jostes' Meister Eckhart (see the ACADEMY, March 7) should have been published after, instead of before, Miss Eckenstein had drawn her pleasing portrait—a companion picture might be so easily composed from its pages.

On some portions of Miss Eckenstein's work I must make some reserves. There is much truth in what she says, that Christianity in many cases absorbed earlier beliefs, that the Christian saint in some instances succeeded to, or replaced, a heathen god or goddess, whose attributes were assumed. This I believe—I could add many instances to those here given; but while fully allowing for these and similar facts, I do not see that Miss Eckenstein brings forward the least evidence to prove her theory, that later conventual corruption arose from the nunnery being the historical representative of the communities of "loose" women, or of the priestesses of Pagan goddesses, and that these foul acts were a reversion to an original type. If there have been occasional aberrations of this kind among the "illuminatae" or "possessed," we should attribute them either to simple viciousness or to hysteria, rather than to any historical descent from Pagan sensual rites. I cannot recall anything which bears out this contention. On p. 185 we read "of the system of mutual responsibility called feudalism." The term "mutual responsibility" is far more applicable to some of the systems which feudalism supplanted than to feudalism itself. So, too, the legal position of women over a great part of Europe was impaired instead of being improved by the introduction of feudalism. In the House community a woman might be the elected head—her position and rights in the house were at least equal to those of a man; so in the districts where absolute primogeniture, male or female, prevailed, there the introduction of feudal male primogeniture was distinctly adverse to woman's position as daughter, wife, or widow. Miss Eckenstein also passes over the evils of feudal wardship, protested against even in Magna Charta: these were surely a great incentive to the adoption of a conventual life. The comparative security or insecurity of the times had much to do with the attraction of monastic life at a given period. Nearly all the books written in monasteries in the fourteenth century bear the reflex of this feeling. The monastery is a relief from and a contrast to the turbulence of the world outside, and the peace found there excited the longing for the greater peace and security of heaven. Another point which our author somewhat exaggerates is the social standing of nuns in the early period. It can hardly be true of Hrosvith, that "the fact of her entering a nunnery is proof of her gentle birth" (p. 161). Granted that abbess, prioress, canoness, and superiors were often of noble, not unfrequently even of royal birth, yet the bulk of the monastery cannot have belonged exclusively to these classes. Naturally we hear more of the rulers than of the ruled. The standpoint of Miss Eckenstein, looking at religion from the outside, though it may in some way aid impartiality, is not a help towards a real insight into the conventual life. We meet with expressions such as "the representatives of the Church," "the representatives of the Established Church," used in opposition to monastic life, in a way which is startling to those who remember that in those ages monasticism was considered the highest type of the Church's life. This want of inner sympathy hinders any living picture being given either of a nun's avocations or of her aspirations. All that relates to the outward form of these is depicted and catalogued; but we do not get at the inner feeling. Take, for instance, what is said of writing, or rather calligraphy. The results, the MSS., the illuminations, are well described; but we have nothing to show the intense pride and pleasure that writing was then to the convent artist: how she loved and admired her own handiwork. The loving regard towards the art expressed by Paulinus of Perigueux was not peculiar to himself, when he speaks of the monastic rule

"Exercere artem prohibet. conceditur unum scribendi studium, quod mentem oculosque manusque occupet atque uno teneat simul omnia puncto, aspectum visu, cor sensibus, ordine dextram."
(De vita Martini li. 120.)

Such feelings of delight must have been still more intense in the case of artistic needlework and embroidery by nuns. So too with learning and scholastic ability. Miss Eckenstein does full justice to this on its literary side; but she misses the glow of religious feeling, the enraptured enthusiasm, the ecstatic worship, the fervid aspirations which are sometimes found in conventual life. Tennyson's "St. Agnes' Eve" is not merely an ideal, or impossible poetic fancy. What depth of loving emotion, what rapture has ever surpassed that of the hymns "Jesu, dulcis memoria," "Jesu, rex admirabilis," "Jesu, decus Angelorum," long attributed to St. Bernard, now assigned to a Benedictine abbess of the fourteenth century? These hymns may represent the highest point attained by religious ecstasy, as the writings of the Nuremberg nuns represent the highest point of intellectual religious mysticism; but many would have power to feel and to cherish, and to love, and to make their own, that which the few alone had the power to express.

Moreover, there was a pleasurable, even a trivial side to conventual life that would bring contentment, if not more, to many. This is scarcely mentioned. The life of a nun, even when she had not the highest aspirations, was not necessarily a gloomy life, or an embittered existence; there were many enjoyments in it. The Church festivals and feasts were real festivals and feasts to them, even to the senses. Dancing, often semi-religious, the puerilia solemnia spoken of, the half-dramatic services, the making of acrostics, and centos of verse, these and numerous other less intellectual recreations were at least as much a solace to life as the games of "patience," &c. are to unoccupied women now. If, as Sir Walter Scott sings:

"A Christmas gambol oft could cheer
The poor man's heart through half the year."
(Marmion, Intro. Canto vi.)

what must such festivals, and the preparation for them, have been to the inmates of a convent? The nun was often right proud of her skill in simples, of her garden of medicinal herbs. Pride in the linen closet, pride in the laundry, in the poultry yard would give honest satisfaction to duller natures. We have no room to pursue this further. Of course, there is another side to this picture. Where the demons of jealousy, of feminine spite and narrowness, of ennui, the cheerless round of devotional services to those who could not enter into the spirit of them, when worldliness did not yield to godliness, and the nun yearned for the pleasures of the world which she had left with regret or on compulsion, where the love of self-torture, of undue self-sacrifice, of exaggerated asceticism had its hold as it has on many a woman even in ordinary life, where worse spirits entered in and dwelt there, and the nun became "possessed," there the convent must have been almost a hell upon earth. Corruptio optimi pessima. But such cases were rare. Even though she failed, the true nun felt her vocation to be above that of all others. All secular vocations were imperfect, hers was the only perfect one. Others had to follow Christ's commands, she the Counsels of Perfection.

Our authoress has been unfortunate in having taken up the more difficult part of her task first. It is much harder to draw a picture of conventual life in England and Germany, where the life has been interrupted and the traditions almost lost, than in the South of Europe, where there is a continuous succession and an unbroken tradition. The very success of a monastic institution brings with it the almost certainty of failure, when they who had renounced all property become rich, they whose mission was only to serve have servants of their own. This and more than this is true; and yet the standpoint from which monasticism is regarded only as a thing of the past is, we are persuaded, a mistaken one. There are more nuns now than ever: more religious orders of women have been founded in the nineteenth century than in any equal period before. Perchance, the enthusiasm for humanity may have a larger place in these foundations than in the older ones, where enthusiasm for God was the almost exclusive aim. And, perhaps, as more and more women enter into professional and educational life, and their competition increases the intensity of the struggle for life, the old longings to escape this struggle, the old needs for some kind of monastic life may again arise, and these communities may re-appear in slightly changed forms.

I have freely pointed out where I think Miss Eckenstein has not done justice to herself; she has not paid sufficient attention to the graces of style, she has read almost too much about her subject without having sufficiently studied it from the life. Yet all students will receive her work with gratitude; it is a book that should have its place in all ecclesiastical libraries; it will be valued by the historian; but it will hardly be popular, as it might easily have been made—a book to be found in the boudoir or on the reading table of every woman who would take an interest in the lives of her sisters in the past. The writer has deliberately chosen a less numerous audience.

WENTWORTH WEBSTER.

SOME VOLUMES OF VERSE.

Leviors Plectro. By Alfred Cochrane. (Longmans.)

Sung by Six. By S. K. Cowan, J. H. Cousins, W. M. Knox, L. J. McQuilland, W. T. Anderson, and J. J. Pender. (Belfast: Aickin.)

The Hermit. A Legend. By Prince Ilia Chavchavadze. Translated from the Georgian by Marjory Wardrop. (Bernard Quaritch.)

Day-dreams. By Alfred Gurney. (Longmans.)

Post-mortem, and Other Poems. By Reginald A. Beckett. (Rixon & Arnold.)

WHATEVER may be the conditions of mercy in the year eighteen hundred and ninety-six, we do not propose to question; but, to our thinking, it is sufficiently manifest that the quality of versical fun is strained to a dangerous degree. Rhymers with a true claim upon our merriment are rarer than argon. The lovers of labels would have us believe that we are possessed of modern Wordsworths, Matthew Arnolds, Belgian Shakespeares, and American Rossettis; but even their courageous christening stops short of pointing out to us the Praed or the Calverley of to-day. If we ask, where are the lyrical exponents of side-splitting jocosity, faithful echo make, for us her customary response. Before going any farther we may remark that, while deploring the absence of a topmost wag, we run the risk of overlooking the efforts of those who come nearest to that gay humour which we grieve to see in a state of decline, if not collapse. If our own good sense cannot rescue us from the error of subscribing to a vicious generality, surely Leviors Plectro, Mr. Alfred Cochrane's latest gift of light verse, is well adapted to save us from a sweeping condemnation, as well as to plant in us the seed of hope. Not many months have passed since the author of Leviors Plectro gave us opportunities for pleasure by means of a perusal of another little volume, devoted, as this one is, to the expression of a merry spirit. To us it seems that Mr. Cochrane's aptitude for neatly turning into verse whatever strikes his fancy as suitable food for fun grows more and more marked, while every stanza in the book now before us proves that he is able to control his prankish moods. A close examination of all these poems has failed to detect any signs of laxity or vulgarity. Mr. Cochrane is a gentleman first and a wit afterwards, a condition which is too often reversed by such weak characters as are willing to lose their self-respect for the sake of marrying mirth and uncleanness—a horrible union.

With so lavish a hand has Mr. Cochrane inserted plums for extraction by the Jack Horners of the reading public, that it is a baffling matter to decide what proofs of his bounty to prefer before others. After many regrets for neglected examples of sparkling oddity, we quote the two first stanzas from "The Minor Poet's Apology":

"Could I but deem myself inspired,
Or owner of a fancy fired
By sparks, unwittingly acquired
From Heliconian flame,
The Muse, whoever she might be,
Who had, with motives hard to see,
Incautiously ignited me,
Would justly share the blame.

"Had I occasion to suspect,
Or with complacence to reflect,
That I were destined to erect
A work outlasting Time;
If this were to the public known,
I might perhaps be left alone,
As one with reasons of his own,
For bursting into rhyme."

Mr. Cochrane spares a few moments for cricket and golf. No past, present, or future singer of the national game ever did or ever will beat "The Enthusiast's Love-Song." The reason is not hard to seek.

Not many weeks ago, while concerned with an oblong book which came to us full of the warbling of half-a-dozen poets, we expressed a fear that the example set by Mr. Barlow and his five comrades would soon cause imitators to spring up. The volume before us is a very rapid confirmation, so much so that it may possibly have an origin wholly independent of its predecessor, though in these paragraphing days an author's intention is often bartered for half-a-crown by an injudicious acquaintance. Truth to tell, we are not at all exhilarated by these bands of singers; and we may say, without resorting to excessive severity, that neither the first nor the second collection of rhymers has justified its gregarious character. If we were compelled to make a choice, we should throw in our lot with Mr. Barlow's array rather than with Mr. Cowan's. It may be brutally candid, but we are really obliged to give it as our opinion that very few valuable qualities have been used for the outpouring of the songs in Sung by Six. Full of hope, full of patience, full of the knowledge that unkind motives are often imputed to versifiers who review versifiers, we have searched this volume for lovely verses, or lines, or ideas, even though these last may have failed to secure treatment fitting their native worth.

All our hunting has been in vain. We have drawn six covers, only to prove each one of them blank. This does not mean that Sung by Six is wholly devoid of prettiness, good intentions, and facile echoes; but six singers should combine for dignified results, not for unimportant ejaculations in metre. We cannot help wondering what the editor has been about. Why did he not request Mr. McQuilland to regret his absence from Bohemia in better verses than these?

"Then the outbursts of laughter Homeric,
When each free-lance of palette and pen,
Would discourse with the grace of a Garrick,
And the wit was a king among men!"

"Lost land of Bohemia, we mourn you,
Deepend and desire and deplore;
Though the pride of the Philistine scorn you,
Lotos-land, what a glamour you bore!"

Again, why did he not speak seriously to Mr. Anderson about his heavy compounds? How could he admit the last stanza of "The Last Waltz Together"?

"So, Sweet, when your heart on mine reposes,
I shall never question Fate as to whether
'Twere best that our lives had died with the roses, Looked soul to soul in our last waltz together."

We own to curiosity with regard to his reason for printing this:

"Adieux are all damp with the dew,
The butterfly rises in price;
The sick moon shines in parallel lines,
And gets geometrically nice.
The tears of the weeping willows
Start off by a fast express;
The night-birds call, and leave their cards,
And everything's in a mess—
As the shady twilight deepens."

If the above stanza, is not enough to turn the milk of human kindness sour, what is? We yield to nobody in our enjoyment of good nonsensical verses; but when Mr. Knox endeavours to palm off such stuff upon us, we feel it our right to protest with warmth. If the six gentlemen under review decide to band together again for the purpose of submitting their songs to public notice, we hope with heartiness that by being stern critics of themselves they will relieve us from the unpleasant task of meeting them with severity.

The Hermit could not well be simpler. It tells the tale of a recluse who lived in the mountains satisfied to watch the sun rise and set, and to wait inactive for the coming of death. Although Miss Wardrop does not appear to have learned from the noble author whether into his relation of this legend he has woven a symbolic meaning, she assumes, and with good reason, that the hermit is intended to represent Medievalism. One day the lonely man was visited by a belated shepherdess, who was full of the activities, the joys, and the eager thirst of life. She stands, as we may well imagine, for the Renaissance, which reached Georgia long after it had invaded the West. In the presence of this bright shepherdess, the hermit felt moved to renounce his dull round, to go out into the midst of his fellow creatures, and ache and smile with them; for after her coming one of two things was imperative: either he must emerge from his retirement, or else die. The old state was impossible. Prince Chavohavadze, the poet, novelist, and editor, has told his slight story in an admirable manner, without extravagant rhetoric and without tiresome digressions. As we are totally ignorant of even the Georgian alphabet, we are not prepared to pass judgment upon Miss Wardrop's translation; but as these twenty-eight stanzas read remarkably well, we are encouraged to infer excellence in her rendering of the original. Particularly welcome is her brief preface, for by it we are enabled to get a bird's-eye view of a remarkable personality.

A few paragraphs farther back we were lamenting that good books of humorous verse were rare in the extreme. But if the jocose muse is nowadays chary of excellence, it must be granted that her sacred sister is by no means bountiful, a fact which does not encourage a reviewer when he picks up a collection of devout poems; for nothing is more peculiarly irritating than goody-goody verse which is absolutely devoid of poetical fibre. The book now before us, Day-dreams by name, is, for the most part, a collection of pieces breathing such virtues as are proper to their spirit. It was not without trepidation that we took up the Rev. Alfred Gurney's contribution to song, for can it be accounted a marvel if a burnt child dreads the fire? Too often and too heavily have we suffered from would-be wags as well as from utterly uninspired writers of hymns. On the present occasion, however, we live under lucky stars, for both Mr. Coochrane and Mr. Gurney have done much to restore us to a feeling of confidence. It is evident that the author of Day-dreams is not bounded on one side by the font, on the other by the pulpit. He would, indeed, be a man of dull vision who could not perceive that Mr. Gurney is able to rise superior to narrow rulings. He has the open heart, the wide-spreading charity of one content to regulate his life by the Sermon on the Mount; and in his songs he makes his mental attitude clear to all but the blind. In all of these poems the genial priest is apparent, if, indeed, it is no fallacy that a man may be judged from his work. As an example of worthy simplicity we quote "The Music of Ash Wednesday":

"Winter days are sad and dark,
All the world seems withering;
Yet the Spring is coming. Hark!
Birds begin to sing.

"Sunset scarcely brings a blush—
Scarce a smile the dawn of day;
Still the Spring is coming. Hush!
Men and women pray.

"Once again wide open stand
Portals of another Lent;
Let us enter, hand in hand,
With a fixed intent

"Very simply to accept
Whate'er His Hands dispense,
Who, a sinless Mourner, wept
Tears of penitence.

"To His Cross again we turn;
Love threat her chalice fills,
Till her weeping eyes discern
Daybreak on the hills.

"Hush! the spirit-voices pray;
Hark! the spirit-voices sing;
Nearer draws our Easter Day—
God's eternal Spring."

Mr. Gurney is far from being a remarkable poet; but he has something to say, and he knows how to present it. We feel sure that his object will have been attained if by a single verse he may happen to convey comfort to a sorrowful heart. Of this success we believe him to be certain.

We cannot bring this article to a close without making a few remarks upon Post-mortem, a book which bears many signs of an impulsive and poetical nature. Scattered here and there throughout its pages are verses deserving of a warm welcome, and it is much to be regretted that a writer of Mr. Beckett's stamp should have allowed so large a share of prose to mingle with his poetry. If Post-mortem is Mr. Beckett's first attempt to win the public ear, as we suspect it to be, we shall not fail to be on the watch for his second volume. We detect a rather violent spirit in the poem which gives the book its title, though the author would probably prefer us to describe him as moved by generous heat. Without stopping to discuss phrases, we may remark that Mr. Beckett will best help his cause by fighting shy of excess. Dignity soon suffers when exaggeration gets loose.

NORMAN GALE.

The Curiosities of Impecuniosity. By H. G. Somerville. (Bentley.)

In those portions of this volume where the pen has followed the work of the scissors, there are so many unpardonable faults of construction that, with the most excellent material, the author has not succeeded in producing a good book.

Yet how very interesting is the theme? The poverty of great men! Why use the word impecuniosity?—"An ill phrase! A vile phrase!" There is a romance, a certain dignity even in "poverty." Many have overcome it; many more have been overcome of it—dying unhonoured and unknown. Some it has disciplined into virtue, others it has goaded into crime. But the records of this warfare are always interesting. The same subtle charm lingers around the memories of brave Johnson in his poor threadbare coat, and of weak Chatterton subdued by adversity in the very bloom of youth.

The book opens with a portion of one of Lamb's essays, wherein he tells of his own poverty modestly and tenderly, with a touch of such lightness and delicacy that it suggests to one's mind the quiet tones and quaint traceries of the old china he loved to collect. Elia's cousin Bridget makes the following reflections:

"Then, do you remember our pleasant walks to Enfield and Potters Bar and Waltham, when we had a holiday—holidays and all other fun are gone, now we are rich—and the little hand-basket in which I used to deposit our day's fare of savoury cold lamb and salad—and how you would pry about at noontide for some decent house where we might go in and produce our store, only paying for the ale you must call for, and speculate upon the looks of the landlady, and whether she was likely to allow us a table-cloth, and wish for such another honest hostess as Isaac Walton has described many a time on the banks of the Lea when he went a-fishing, and sometimes they would prove obliging enough, and sometimes they would look grudgingly upon us; but we had cheerful looks still for one another, and would eat our plain fare savourily, scarcely grudging Piscator his Trout Hall. Now, when we go out a day's pleasuring, which is seldom, moreover, we ride part of the way, and go into a fine inn, and order the best of dinners, never debating the expense, which, after all, never has half the relish of those chance country snaps where we were at the mercy of uncertain usage and a precarious welcome."

Mr. Somerville would alter the aphorism of Samuel Smiles, "Nothing sharpens a man's wits like poverty," by substituting for "poverty" "impecuniosity," because to his mind the former term expresses chronic, the latter temporary, want. A little reflection will show that there is neither warrant nor necessity for such a distinction; for, while a man's faculties remain unimpaired, his poverty can never be said to be permanent; while, on the other hand, no impecuniosity at all worthy of mention can with certainty be spoken of as temporary.

The book treats of the impecuniosities of authors, of painters, of actors, and other public characters—a wide field, which must necessarily have involved no slight research.

In the chapter entitled "Impecuniosities of the Great," the story is told of Erskine's first opportunity of making a great speech, and how he had risen to the occasion. When asked afterwards how he had done it, he replied: "I fancied I could feel my little children plucking at my robe and saying: 'Now, father, is the time to get us bread!'"

Franklin wandered homeless through the streets of Philadelphia, munching a great roll of bread; a young girl, standing at her door, saw him and laughed, thinking what a ridiculous figure he cut. Afterwards that girl became his wife. His first experiments in electricity were ridiculed by the wise-acs of the day. "The people asked: 'Of what use is it?' To which he replied: 'What is the use of a child? It may become a man some day.'"

It was, I have heard, a proud boast of Sir Humphry Davy that his greatest discovery was the discovery of Michael Faraday. It was through the kind offices of the former that the latter obtained a post in the laboratory of the Royal Institution. The early life of Faraday was a hard struggle. By reducing, for many days, his humble meals to still humbler dimensions, he had been able to purchase a long coveted electrical machine for 4s. 6d. This machine he used in experiments which led to some of his great discoveries.

One could hardly expect that the subject of impecuniosity could be touched upon without a mention being made of its Irish victims, or votaries, or probationers—for the subject is capable of being considered in many aspects. The most beautiful Gunnings were at one time in great financial difficulties. The story of the Gunning sisters has been so often told, that the writer is not to be blamed for condensing it as much as possible; but in this endeavour the following nonsensical statement has been produced: "She died in October, 1760, of consumption, the result of artificial aids to beauty, which in her case were utterly unnecessary."

The following fact is recorded of Loder, a celebrated musical composer:

"One evening when leaving his lodgings with a friend named Jay, for the purpose of enjoying a quiet little dinner at Simpson's, he received an ominous tap on the shoulder from one of those individuals whose attentions are not appetising, since without you can settle the little amount, they require your immediate attention."

For a specimen of English as it ought not to be written the above is almost perfect. The italics are my own, and the reader may determine what happened to Jay.

An interesting volume might some day be written upon "Ouriosities of English." It is, of course, unworthy of a critic's calling to notice mere slips of grammar which may creep into the best work, but it is a different matter when they are to be found on almost every page. But when an author takes upon himself to correct a line written by another, and the effect is mere redundancy, it is almost one's bounden duty to comment upon it. John Stow, the antiquary, was so poor in his latter years that he petitioned James the First for a licence to collect alms for himself, which petition was granted by letters patent.

"The terms in which this permit was set forth ('to ask, gather, and take alms of all our loving subjects') were scarcely correct; that is to say, 'to ask, gather, and take alms of all our loving subjects who will give,' would have been more complete.

It would be well for our literature if the fine shades of meaning in words were as well known now as in the days of James the First.

The want of language sufficiently well chosen to express accurately the ideas of the writer, may have led me to misinterpret the drift of the following judgment upon Thackeray:—

"Therefore a degree of hardness and cruelty in the rigid and virtuous superiority of this great writer, who, happily born in a more refined and purer time, so magnifies the vices of the unfortunate dead, in order to lessen the pity and respect which their greatness won for them."

To charge the most kind and sympathetic of modern writers with hardness and cruelty is so preposterous that there is no necessity to do more than quote it. But granted, for the sake of argument, that he was hard and cruel, what earthly object could he have had in warring against the dead: in deliberately attempting to lessen the "pity and respect which their greatness won for them." The most charitable thing to suppose is that Thackeray's censor had some other ideas in his mind than those he has succeeded in conveying to an ordinary reader. Did Thackeray ever deny "that there was any lack of goodwill or kindness towards men of genius in this country, or that they often failed to meet with generous and helping hands in the time of their necessity?" He never made such an absurd statement. On the contrary, he says, in his lecture on Goldsmith:

"Nobody knows, and I daresay Goldsmith's buoyant temper kept no account of all the pains which he endured during the early period of his literary career. Should any man of letters in our day have to bear up against such, heaven grant he may come out of the period of misfortune with such a pure heart as that which Goldsmith obstinately bore in his breast. The insults which he had to submit to are shocking to hear of—alandar, contumely, vulgar satire, brutal malignity perverting his commonest motives and actions; he had his share of these, and one's anger is roused at reading of them, as it is at seeing a woman insulted or a child assaulted, at the notion that a creature so very gentle and weak and full of love should have had to suffer so."

Thackeray honoured so much the profession of letters that he thought it derogatory for its members to cant and cry in the market-place about the great world's ingratitude. He knew that there was no royal road to fame—that success can be won only after much toil and tribulation. The public he recognised to be often slow, blundering, and stupid; but never intentionally unjust. Very often those who have not succeeded, and who go abroad proclaiming their fancied wrongs, are like the man in Hood's clever picture who went about the house crying, "I smell fire!" while the tassel of his own night-cap was smouldering.

GEORGE NEWCOMEN.

St. Patrick's Purgatory, Lough Derg. By the Rev. Dr. Canon O'Connor, P.P., of the Diocese of Ologher. (Dublin: James Duffy.)

It is with a feeling one part pleasure and three parts pain that an Irishwoman reads the interesting book which Canon O'Connor has compiled in connexion with the legend in which Dante found material for a superb poem and Calderon material for an exquisite play. Delighting as it is to know that, before Dante had penned a line of his Divine Comedy, there was current in Ireland, whence it had gone out into all lauds, the story of one to whom had been granted a vision of purgatory and hell and heaven, it is most saddening to reflect that this marvellous tradition should have had to travel from Ireland to Italy and to Spain to find poets able and willing to show by their treatment of it that, in literature as in life, love can transmute to form and dignity. It must remain a subject of regret with Irishmen of whatever religion that the most notable among Ireland's own writers on the subject of St. Patrick's purgatory—the richly gifted William Carleton—should have made of it merely matter for mirth. The laughing philosopher is, under certain conditions, a person not to be despised; but when he runs the rig upon his country's altars, he is guilty of the profanation of ill-taste, to give to his crime the gentlest name which can be applied to it.

Canon O'Connor gives in his book an English version of the St. Patrick's purgatory story, as contained in that famous medieval compilation known as "The Golden Legend." This story forms part of chap. ix. of the Canon's book, and will be read with joy, if only for the matchless phrase which is employed in the description of the pilgrim in hell, agonised to the point of speechlessness — "he expressed the name of Jesus in his heart."

To Canon O'Connor's style it is impossible to accord high praise. To be quite truthful concerning it, it is dry as biscuit. A typical sentence is this: "At length, per varios casus, we reached the anxiously sought hill." A blunder—it is not easy to find a blunder in this book—is hailed with pleased surprise. Here is one: "A numerous colony of rabbits . . . as they skip about in every direction contribute not a little 'to lend enchantment to the scene.'" The learned writer of St. Patrick's Purgatory is here under the impression that he is quoting Campbell; but that is a mistake. He uses words which are not to be found in Campbell or in any other poet. He is fond of quoting from poets; and one who, like the present writer, welcomes the sight of prose interspersed with poetry, will not disapprove of this trait in him.

A word must be said of the ecclesiastical bias of this book. That a Romish Churchman wrote it is a fact not obtruded upon every page, but it is obtruded upon pages containing phrasing such as this: "The arch impostor, Mahomet"—"Hallam, a very prejudiced writer"—"the so-called Reformation of the sixteenth century." That there is not more of this sort of thing is attributable to the fact that the writer is an Irishman, to which fact also is attributable the circumstance that we come upon a sentence such as this: "Through the air rustled an indescribable harmony, as if all the fishes in the lake were chanting in chorus their matin melody." It is not usual for fishes to chant, but this sentence is not quoted as a specimen of the usual. It is a specimen of the occasional, as it is to be met with in Irish work. There are people whom it will offend, and there are others—I wish to rank myself with these others—whom it will gladden to their hearts' Irish innermost.

The book is supplied with a preface, and he who reads the preface and the book will note that the Bishop of Clogher and the Canon of Clogher are not entirely at one in regard to the signs of the times.

"In these days of awakened fervour," writes the Bishop in his preface, "when the pilgrim spirit has been so amazingly revived in the Church, and when so many annually leave Ireland, journeying to far-off shrines, to Lourdes, Paray-de-Monial, La Salette, and others, we deem it not unreasonable to remind such persons that there exists within the boundaries of this diocese a sanctuary no less venerable and holy, and of greater antiquity and celebrity, a sanctuary which is not only one of the proudest glories of this diocese, but one of the brightest of the religious institutions of Ireland."

"In an age of scepticism and unbelief," writes the Canon in his book, "it is refreshing to turn aside from the busy paths of the world, in order to contemplate the sanctuaries of religion and the holy shrines of pilgrimage, round which are encircled the most sacred associations and the most venerable traditions."

This difference of opinion among doctors is portentous. Meanwhile the book, regarded merely as a contribution to literature, is full of information of the most valuable description, and information not always to be procured easily elsewhere. "What are sermon-crosses?" is a question that was asked lately. "I do not know," was the answer. "Look in Chambers." Chambers was consulted in vain. Canon O'Connor will not be consulted in vain. What sermon-crosses are is one of the many things told in his book, which should be furnished with an alphabetical index, should be bound more in keeping with its quiet and learned character, should not contain American spelling (vide "centered," on p. 86), and, to sum up, should be on the bookshelf of every loving student of Ireland's history and traditions.

* Italics mine, here and in the next paragraph.

ELSA D'ESTERRE-KEELING.

NEW NOVELS.

The Years that the Locust hath Eaten. By Annie E. Holdsworth. (Heinemann.)

The Lost Stradivarius. By J. Meade Falkner. (Blackwoods.)

White Sand. The Story of a Dreamer and his Dream. By M. E. Balfour. (Fisher Unwin.)

A Man's Foo. By E. H. Strain. In 3 vols. (Ward Lock & Bowden.)

On the Verge of Two Worlds. By G. L. Banbury. (Tower Publishing Co.)

In a Hollow of the Hills. By Bret Harte. (Chapman & Hall.)

The Expedition of Captain Flick. By Fergus Hume. (Jarrold.)

Valdar, the Oft Born. By George Griffith. (C. Arthur Pearson.)

MISS ANNIE E. HOLDSWORTH has written a story of conspicuous merit. Its pathos has the true ring about it; its characters are real; its subject-matter has been derived from life. It tells the story of struggling persons belonging to the artistic professions who live at Regent's-buildings near the Euston-road. They are poor and shabby; the good things of this world are not theirs, but their hearts are of gold. The heroine, Priscilla Momerie, is a beautiful girl, possessing undeveloped powers akin to genius. She is mated to a selfish, vain creature, who thinks himself a genius. He dreams all day of the work he is going to give to the world; but he does nothing. He can talk though, and talk brilliantly, and he manages to impress the outside world in his favour. There is one, however, Stephen Malden, a young painter, who sees through the fraud, and estimates this bombast at its true worth. He pities and loves the girl-wife, but honourably keeps his own counsel. Priscilla has real literary ability, though her husband ignores it, and permits her to scrub, pot-boil, and kill herself to provide the bare necessities of life. Gertrude Tennant, a young girl singer, has also a keen perception of the true state of the case as regards Momerie and his wife. She loves Malden; and, before Priscilla's beauty and suffering came between them, he had loved her. Gertrude is too large and also too moral to take advantage of Priscilla. She loves the unhappy wife, and forgives her for having unwittingly stepped between her and the man who could have made her happy. In course of time Priscilla knows that she is to have the solace which alone can make recompense to a woman unsatisfactorily mated. She increases her exertions that she may be able to support the child, and that it may not suffer vicariously. She tries to keep bright and happy, hoping that her baby may be blessed with a merry heart. But it is of no avail; the child is born weak and sickly, and Momerie resents its birth. Priscilla adores it, and for her sake Malden also loves it. Soon the husband's constitutional weakness ends in paralysis. His slothful nature induces him to accept the affliction complacently: he can now see his wife toil and slave free from reproach. Morally he becomes the murderer of his own child. The way of this is told admirably. Indeed, the story throughout is an excellent piece of narrative, and its characterisation is distinctly above the average. Miss Holdsworth is original and capable, and she has written a notable novel.

If Mr. J. Meade Falkner can sustain the high standard he has reached in The Lost Stradivarius, he is certain to take a high place among modern romancists. But it is true to say, of what is presumably his first attempt, that it suffers from the common fault of inexperienced story-tellers. It is unduly drawn out, and drags very much toward the end. Nevertheless Mr. Falkner's effort does not fall short of achievement. He writes with distinction; and his style is that of a man who instinctively, and also through the rigorous training he has imposed upon himself, knows that the greatest works of art result from repressing the creative faculty rather than from allowing it full play. Sir John Maltravers chances to discover in his rooms a lost Stradivarius which many years before had belonged to an evil man named Adrian Hope. The discovery is fraught with fatal consequences. The spirit of Hope enters into, or at all events controls, his own, with the result that his nature is perverted. The idea in itself is, of course, too hackneyed to be fanciful; but everything depends, in such themes, upon the treatment; and it is upon his treatment we must cordially congratulate Mr. Meade Falkner.

Miss Balfour's delineation of the light woman of society as personified in Sylvia Carpenter is distinctly to be commended. She has painted the type to the life, though obviously in these days she had no difficulty in procuring abundance of models. Sylvia is as unstable and shiftless as white sand; she has mistaken her métier, which is clearly not for the home. Presently, out of sheer good-nature, rather than from deliberate vice, one of the men with whom she flirts consents to run away with her. The "poor devil" is to be pitied almost as much as the husband, who ultimately, also out of sheer good-nature, takes her back. He is a strong man, generous and philosophic; and he feels that this pretty, weak, pleasure-loving little woman needs his protection. All this is exceedingly well done. Adam Carpenter's magnanimity has its counterpart in Claire Kent-Craven's, who, loving a man, to her knowledge and by his own confession incapable of fidelity, marries him that she may, in some measure, protect him from himself. The largeness and wholesomeness of this book would make it acceptable; its author has, however, vivacity, directness, and she marshals her characters and presents her incidents skilfully. There are, too, some excellent and dramatically conceived scenes in the book.

The author of A Man's Foes, presumably a lady, relates, with spirit and with no small measure of literary skill, the story of the hardships and privations endured by the citizens of Derry during the memorable siege of 1689. The book is full of adventure; and sometimes the incidents it narrates are set forth naturally and convincingly. The heroic service performed for Captain Hamilton by his devoted wife, whereby that officer's life is saved, is among these effective incidents. The condition of Derry during the siege is brought before us with great vividness, and picturesque effect is not secured at the expense of fidelity to fact. The story deserves to achieve that heaven of good books—a cheap edition.

Mr. Lethbridge Banbury's romance is not lacking in interest: in fact, as a tale of adventure, it is distinctly successful. The hero has run away to sea, and by accident finds himself one of the crew of a slaver which, starting from Gravesend, takes him far up the Sierra Leone river to the slave factory of Don Cesar D'Astonias Hernandez. Here he saves the life of Don Cesar's daughter, Mercedes. He loves the fair Señorita; but his suit is not approved by the father, who, hoping that he will be destroyed, sends him with presents to the chief of the Fulah nation. Here he strikes up a strong friendship with Garunah, the Fodi of Ba'fodi; the two men become "blood brothers," going through the ceremony of mixing their blood. Then follows a series of stirring adventures—battles, alligator fights, and all manner of blood-curdling business. This is not said to the disparagement of the book, which is well written and interesting. By the way, Don Cesar administers an exceedingly adroit blow at British inconsistency in the matter of the slave trade at the time (1809), which the hero finds it difficult to answer.

Mr. Bret Harte's romance is really beginning to pall upon us, though we are sorry to say it. In A Hollow of the Hills starts well enough, but it disappoints expectation. No doubt this is largely due to the fact that, on seeing Mr. Bret Harte's name on the title-page, our expectations ran high. In brief, this tale is another Bret Harte and water. Nevertheless, we would rather drink Bret Harte diluted than many other fictional beverages in their unsophisticated purity.

Mr. Fergus Hume's latest story is "excellent fooling" of its kind; but he makes extravagant demands upon the credulity of the reader, especially in these days, when the School Board has made all of us so unconsciously well-informed.

Hence we are forced to ask ourselves, against our will, where and what is the island whereon Mr. Hume audaciously plants his colony of blacks ruled over by a Greek dynasty descended from Hesperus, a refugee from the island of Oytherea. Hesperus had taken with him a statue of Venus by Praxiteles. A certain Captain Flick gets wind of this statue and thinks he would like to possess it. He does not get the statue after all, but his party almost lose a beautiful young woman, Bertha Greenville, who was with them. The kings of the island have been in the habit of abstracting a Greek woman from the island of Oytherea to keep the strain of their blood pure, and poor Bertha nearly has to do duty for the Greek maiden who does not chance to be forthcoming.

Impossible in another way, for it is avowedly romance, Mr. George Griffiths's Valdar, the Oft Born, is scarcely equal to his Outlaws of the Air. Nevertheless, he has presented his tale of Valdar, re-incarnated in various ages and various guises, skilfully and attractively. After the fall of the Tower of Babel, which he saw, he passes some two thousand undisturbed years sleeping in the Assyrian desert. He is with the Phoenicians, with Solomon, Cleopatra, and Caesar, and is witness of the Crucifixion. Then he is a Crusader, and, indeed, he manages to turn up at most occasions of supreme importance, Trafalgar and Waterloo included. While Valdar is constantly re-born, so he meets a woman who is all in all to him at every stage of his career; but whether she is supposed to be the same woman or a soul showing its various facets in its effort to reflect the light, does not quite appear. Cleopatra is scarcely to be associated with the pure woman whom he meets at the beginning, and whom he marries at the end. The romance is full of engaging qualities and may be recommended.

JAMES STANLEY LITTLE.

SOME FOREIGN BOOKS.

Contes Populaires des Bassoutos. Par E. Jacottet. (Paris: Leroux.) In Basutoland there is a French Protestant Mission. M. Jacottet, a member of this mission, has collected here the stories which either he or his friends have taken down from the lips of the Basutos themselves. He has contented himself with the useful task of translation, and has added very little of his own. A busy life has not given M. Jacottet, so he tells us, time to lay up stores of folk-lore of other countries. "In the matter of folk-lore I know little of any but that of the Basutos and of the people who, either geographically or ethnographically, are akin to them." The modesty of M. Jacottet is only equalled by his complete command of his special subject. We are in complete accord with M. Jacottet when he says that the French Basutoland Mission, founded in 1833 by MM. Casali and Arbusset, is an institution which reflects honour on France, and deserves to be better known in France than it is. He regards Christianity as the only force that can save aboriginal races from extinction by European civilisation. "What God did in the sixth and seventh centuries for the barbarous peoples of Europe, that He is doing to-day for the tribes of Africa." The predominant impression conveyed by these tales is the unhappiness of the savage life. The powers of nature are terrible enough, but the powers of imagination are even worse. Imaginary animals prowl around ready day and night to snatch away a wife or child. Storms are at the beck and call even of so small an animal as the hare. In some ways the first story—"Le Petit Lièvre"—is the most interesting in the book. There is a singular resemblance to the German story of Reynard the fox. In both we find the deification of the weak and the conquest of strength by craft. But there is a still more curious resemblance to Esop's fable of the ass in the lion's skin. The hare, clothed in a lion's skin, visits a village of hyenas. "How shall we escape this terrible animal?" exclaim his hosts, and for a season they have a bad time of it. Their guest says to each in turn, "Sit in the boiling pot," and the hyena thus commanded by the king of beasts obeys and is killed. A young hyena at length discovers who it is that has been decimating his village; but even then, when the hare bounds from the lion's skin and runs for his life, his presence of mind saves him. The same moral, that wit and not brute strength is the sovereign lord of all creation, is found in the other animal stories. There is no trace of a Good Spirit or of the life to come in these stories, but there are abundant proofs that the Basutos have a moral code and endeavour to keep it. Masito asks his sister to marry him; but she rejects his offers with scorn, and prefers a lingering and cruel death to yielding to his desires. Family affection is well illustrated by this tale, as the daughter is ultimately saved by the devotion of her parents. Cannibalism has existed in South Africa; M. Jacottet still knows an old man who was a cannibal in his youth. To the native chief Mosheah belongs the credit of abolishing this practice; and the Basutos must themselves be ashamed of it, as in their tales the cannibals speak Zulu, not Sesuto. Modisa-oa-Dipodi is the Basuto Cinderella. She, too, has her cruel sisters, and is saved from death and famine by a prince, in her case at first invisible. Among the traits that strike one most in these tales is the respect that Basutos have for property. Modisa flying from her cruel parents sees abundant food rising before her, but at first she will not touch the dishes for fear that those to whom they belong will kill her. We hope M. Jacottet will give us another volume on the customs of the race whose folk-lore he has preserved with so loving a hand in the present work.

"PUBLICATIONS DE LA FONDATION LOREN."—Studier over Lönssystemets Historia i England. By Gustav F. Steffen. First Part. Orsakerna till de Sekulära Variationerna i Engelska lönarbetarens lefnadsstandards före 1760. (Stockholm.) This study of Mr. Steffen on the secular variations in the standard of living of the English wage-earner up to 1760 well deserves to reach a larger public than the Swedish tongue can provide. Dividing his subject into four periods—(i.) 1280-1350, rise of the wage system; (ii.) 1350-1540, break-up of feudalism and flourishing of the guild system; (iii.) 1540-1660, decay of guild system, further development of state regulation of the standards of life of the wage-earners, great rise in prices; (iv.) 1660-1760, improvement in the condition of wage-earners during the preparatory stages of the modern factory system, rise of trade unionism—Mr. Steffen proceeds to consider the main economic phenomena relating to the wage-earners' standard of life and its protection up to the advent of modern industrialism and the régime of free contract (so-called). He considers that the standard of life among the wage-earners was low between 1540 and 1660, and from this he dates the "origin of English poverty." He holds that after 1660 the purchasing power of wages rose among town workpeople and in manufacture, but remained almost stationary among agricultural labourers. He defines and discusses in appendices the terms "standard of life" and "marginal utility," examines the connexion between wants, income, price, and demand, and notices the opinions expressed authoritatively on the normal and minimum daily consumption of the wage-earner. A number of clear and careful tables enable the reader to get at a glance a mass of pertinent information; and one would like to see the diagram of money-wages and food-prices reproduced in every English history for upper classes of schools, as a graphic purview of the general condition of the country from century to century. Mr. Steffen is well read in the abundant literature bearing upon these matters, and writes clearly, and with a brevity that his German fellow-economists do not willingly practise. He should continue his researches down to the present day, and publish the whole in English as one volume as soon as may be. His book will be handy and useful as a convenient epitome of a large and intricate subject.

MESSRS. HACHETTE ET CIE. have just issued a thoroughly revised, and in great part rewritten, edition of the well-known Dictionnaire Universel des Sciences, des Lettres, et des Arts, originally compiled by M. Bouillet. The editors are M. J. Tannery for the scientific, and M. E. Faguet for the literary portion of the work; and the list of contributors comprises more than thirty names, some of which we recognise as of European reputation, while in other cases the competence of the writers may be presumed from the official positions which they occupy. The number of pages (1734) is slightly less than in the edition of 1884, but the actual quantity of matter contained in the volume is considerably larger. The information has been carefully brought up to date: for example, there is an article on Argon—in the supplement, of course, as the early part of the book must have been printed long before the new element was discovered. The philosophical articles, and also those on prehistoric archaeology, deserve special mention for their lucidity and skilful condensation. A weak point of the work is the etymology of words (flûte, for instance, is said to be derived from fistula!); and some of the articles relating to English subjects are inaccurate. "Guinée" is explained as "monnaie d'or très-usitée en Angleterre, et qui, avant 1816, équivalait à 21 shillings, mais qui aujourd'hui n'en vaut que 20." The article "Club" is curiously misleading with regard to the English use of the word. Under "Tempérance" there is a notice of the spread of "temperance societies" in England and America; but the writer is evidently unaware that nearly all these societies interpret "temperance" as meaning total abstinence from alcoholic drinks. Under "Sténographie" certain English systems of shorthand are mentioned, but that of Pitman, the most widely used of all, is ignored. These, however, are trivial blemishes in a work which, as a whole, is marvellously accurate.

M. E. DUCRÉ, the sub-librarian of the city of Bayonne, has lately published another volume of his "Histoire Maritime de Bayonne," under the title, Les Corsaires sous l'Ancien Régime. (Hourquet: Bayonne.) The period covered is from 1500 to 1789. The maritime importance of Bayonne declined for a time after the expulsion of the English; but the discovery of America and the value of the Newfoundland cod-fishery soon revived its commerce. If the Basques were not the discoverers of Newfoundland, they were among the first to profit by the fishery: as early as 1520 we hear of their ships, returning from Newfoundland laden with cod, being captured by Spanish corsairs. We learn from this volume how barbarous and ruthless was the right of private warfare at sea, which continued long after it had been done away with on land. The gains of privateering were an element of commercial speculation in every seaport, large or small, from St. Malo to Bilbao. Up to about 1744 the losses and captures between English and Basques were pretty evenly balanced. After that date the English had the superiority. In 1758 three thousand privateer seamen from Bayonne and St. Jean de Luz were lying in English prisons, mostly in the south-western ports. M. Ducré writes chiefly from unpublished materials, French and Spanish. Several Spanish documents are now first printed in the Appendix. The work is of first importance for the history of privateering, and of the flibustiers, and should be in the hands of all interested in the subject.

WE have received the second year's issue of the Giornale Dantesco (Olschki), edited by G. L. Passerini, consisting of nearly 600 pages of large octavo. It contains a very complete record of the current bibliography, and it is a record which shows no tendency to decrease in bulk. This volume, like the last, has the great advantage of exceptionally good indices, which add, it need hardly be said, very largely to the value of a work of this kind. Certain of the articles, it must be admitted, are of but slight value. Some Italians seem to think, so long as they write diffusely and fluently anything around and about Dante, that it is worth while to publish it. There is also a tendency to expend ingenuity (and it must be granted that some is required) in devising new interpretations of well-worn passages. These are naturally apt to be fanciful or paradoxical. Their publication involves refutations, rejoinders, and much controversy, which, though it might form the subject of an evening's discussion for the meeting of a Dante Society, is not always worth putting upon permanent record. It may be gathered from what we have said that the volume might be considerably diminished in bulk without losing much in value. Still, the appearance among its contributors of such well-known names as those of Fiammazzo, Prompt, Ronchetti, Agnelli, and many others, is a sufficient guarantee that articles will be found of real interest and importance.

WE must be content merely to acknowledge the receipt of the following:

Louis XV. et le Renversement des Alliances: Préliminaires de la Guerre de Sept Ans, 1754-1746, par Richard Waddington (Paris: Firmin-Didot); a translation into French, by MM. Lespès, Pasquet, and Pierre Péret, of Prof. Alfred Stern's Life of Mirabeau, revised by the author and with a new preface, 2 vols. (Paris: Emile Bouillon); Œuvres de Julien Havet, 1853-1893, tome i., "Questions Mérovingiennes"; tome ii., "Opuscules Divers" (Paris: Leroux); Pages d'Histoire, dedicated to M. Pierre Vaucher by some of his former pupils, on the occasion of the thirtieth year of his professoriate—dealing mainly with Swiss subjects, with a bibliography of M. Vaucher's own writings at the end (Geneva: Georg); Virgilio nel Medio Evo, per Domenico Comparetti, 2 vols.—a second and considerably enlarged edition of the work of which an English translation was recently published (Florence: Bernardo Seeber); an edition of the Annals of Tacitus, by MM. Léopold Constans and Paul Girbal, 2 vols. (Paris: Delagrave); Mousorgski, par Pierre D'Alheim (Paris: Société du Mercure de France); Serta Harteliana, a collection of papers, chiefly on classical subjects, dedicated by his pupils to Prof. Wilhelm von Hartel, of Vienna, on the thirtieth anniversary of his doctorate (London: Williams & Norgate); &c.

NOTES AND NEWS.

MR. JOHN MURRAY announces a Memoir and Correspondence of the late Sir John Drummond Hay, well-known as British minister at the court of Morocco, edited by his daughter, Mrs. Brooks, with portrait and illustrations.

THE Clarendon Press will publish, early in the spring season, two volumes of Johnsoniana, edited by Dr. G. Birkbeck Hill.

MESSRS. MACMILLAN & Co. have in the press, for early publication, a volume by Baron Ferdinand de Rothschild, to be entitled Personal Characteristics from French History. It will be illustrated with seventeen photogravure portraits.

THE same publishers announce, as the two first volumes of their new series of "Foreign Statesmen," uniform with the now almost completed series of "Twelve English Statesmen," Philip Augustus, by the Rev. W. H. Hutton, of St. John's College, Oxford, who wrote The Marquess Wellesley for "The Rulers of India"; and Richelieu, by Prof. Richard Lodge, of Glasgow.

MESSRS. LONGMANS & Co. have in the press a volume of addresses by Canon Barnett, warden of Toynbee Hall, to be entitled The Service of God. The aim of the author is to show the close relation which exists between religion and philanthropy, especially in the modern developments of both.

MESSRS. A. & C. BLACK will publish shortly The Great Didactic of John Amos Comenius, now for the first time Englished, by Mr. M. W. Keatinge, with biographical and historical introductions.

MESSRS. HOUGHTON, MIFFLIN & Co. are preparing for publication next autumn a new "Riverside" edition of the works of Harriet Beecher Stowe, with bibliographical introductions, notes, portraits, and facsimiles of title-pages. There will probably be, in all, sixteen duodecimo volumes. For a large-paper edition, Mrs. Stowe has already written her firm and handsome autograph.

FREDERICK A. STOKES Company—a New York firm, who have opened a London branch in Cecil-court—will issue an edition in this country of an American book on The Laureates of England, from Ben Jonson to Wordsworth, with selections from their poetry and portraits. Mr. Kenyon West contributes an introduction on the origin and significance of the office.

MR. HEINEMANN will publish a new edition of Southey's Life of Nelson, edited by Mr. David Hannay, who will confine himself to making only the necessary additions and corrections, chiefly regarding the story of Lady Hamilton. He will also give brief notices of the officers mentioned, and an estimate of Nelson's own qualities as a commander in naval warfare.

MESSRS. SWAN SONNENSCHN & Co. announce Britain's Glory: a Sketch of the British Navy, by Mr. W. Clarke Hall, with illustrations by Mr. Gribble.

MR. GEORGE HAVEN PUTNAM has written a continuation of his book on Authors and their Public in Ancient Times, covering the mediæval period and coming down to the close of the seventeenth century. It will be in two octavo volumes, of which the first may be expected immediately. The same author-publisher has also revised for press a second edition of The Question of Copyright, in which the record of legislation will be carried down to January, 1896.

MESSRS. HUTCHINSON & Co. will publish immediately a story entitled A Widow on Wheels, by Miss Ada L. Harris.

MR. WILLIAM ANDREWS, of Hull, has nearly ready for publication a volume entitled The Lawyer in History, Literature, and Humour, which will contain much curious and out-of-the-way information.

MR. ELLIOT STOOK will publish very shortly The Conditions of Working Women and the Factory Act, by Miss Banchnette.

MESSRS. W. B. WHITTINGHAM & Co. announce a new edition of Sermonic Fancy Work, a volume of entertaining pages on nursery rhymes, by the Rev. J. P. Ritchie.

THE tenth volume of the publications of the Selden Society, to be issued for 1896, will consist of Select Cases in Chancery, commencing with the time of Richard II., to which the earliest rolls in the Public Record Office belong. It is intended that this shall be followed in 1897 by a second volume of Select Pleas in the Court of Admiralty. Last year, we may mention, the society brought out no less than three volumes, and this year one has already appeared; so that now all arrears have been made up.

A MOVEMENT is on foot with the object of presenting Mr. George K. Fortescue, the late superintendent of the reading room at the British Museum, with an illuminated address from those enjoying the privilege of a reader's ticket, as an expression of their appreciation of the ability and courtesy with which he has performed his duties during the past eleven years, and also of the important service he has rendered to students by the compilation of the "Subject Catalogue." Dr. Samuel R. Gardiner is chairman and treasurer of the committee, and Dr. Samuel Kinns (182, Haverstock-hill, N.W.), hon. secretary. It is proposed that the subscriptions should be limited to 2s. 6d.

AT the meeting of the Anglo-Russian Literary Society, to be held at the Imperial Institute on Tuesday next, M. A. Owsianki, of Vladivostok, will read a paper on "Eastern Siberia," dealing mainly with its trade. This is the last of a series of papers preliminary to one on Siberia promised by Captain Joseph Wiggins.

AT a meeting of the Toynbee Library Readers' Union, to be held on Tuesday next, Mr. Israel Abrahams, editor of the Jewish Quarterly, will read a paper entitled "The Defence of Optimism."

THE New York Nation gives some interesting details about "the literary output of 1895, as footed up in the Publishers' Weekly," which throw light upon the working of the copyright law. It appears that there were 3396 books by American authors manufactured in the United States, as compared with 847 books by English and other foreign authors; while 1226 books were imported, in sheets or bound. But, if we consider novels alone, the proportions are reversed—of novels, American authors produced only 287, in contrast with 589 by foreign authors that were manufactured in the States, and 238 that were imported.

AT a recent sale in the suburbs, a copy of Sir Harris Nicholas's edition of The Complete Angler (1836), which had been extra-illustrated with about 5000 engravings, photographs, letters, &c., fetched no less than £126. At the same sale, a collection of water-colour drawings, prints, &c., to illustrate the history and antiquities of Norfolk, was purchased by Mr. Walter Rye for £60.

THE library of the late John Owen, rector of East Anstey, Devon, and author of Evenings with the Skeptics, &c., will be sold on April 14 and three following days by Messrs. Hodgson, at their rooms in Chancery-lane. It comprises a good collection of the works of the Fathers of the Church, also French, German, Spanish and Italian Renaissance writers, Fine Galleries, books of prints, and publications of learned societies; in addition to the usual standard works on theology, history, science and art. It is particularly rich in philology and bibliography.

UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS.

WE understand that Mr. C. E. Wilson, assistant librarian at the Royal Academy of Arts, is a candidate for the vacant chair of Persian at University College, London. Mr. Wilson has been devoted to the study of modern oriental languages for the last twenty-five years, his earliest teachers having been Jules Mohl and Nicolas de Khanikoff. From 1883 to 1888 he was university teacher of Persian at Cambridge. He has published a translation of the Baháristán of Jámí (which was reviewed by Sir Richard Burton in the ACADEMY), and has also prepared critical editions (with translation) of Attár's Iláhi Námah and of several of the works of Nizámí.

THE Provost of Oriel has been re-elected chairman of the board of studies for English language and literature at Oxford.

THE Fitzwilliam Museum at Cambridge has recently acquired a magnificent Book of Hours, of English work (circa 1300), under peculiar circumstances. The Museum has for some time possessed two leaves; but the remainder of the volume belonged to Mr. William Morris. In consideration of being allowed to retain the book, with the two leaves formerly detached, during his lifetime, Mr. Morris has generously consented to accept a sum much below the value of the MS.

A FREE public lecture will be given at University College on Wednesday next, April 8, at 3 p.m., by Prof. Flinders Petrie, on "Seven Temples at Thebes and the Israelite War."

A COURSE of six lectures on the Newmarch foundation will be delivered at University College next term by Mr. L. L. Price, of Oriel College, Oxford, on Wednesdays at 4 p.m., beginning on April 29. The general title of the course is "The Place of Statistics in Economical Study"; and the lecturer proposes to deal, from the statistical point of view, with such subjects as the essay of Malthus on population, the investigations on Jevons on prices, the controversy between free trade and protection, and socialism. The lectures are free to the public without payment or ticket.

IN connexion with the London University Extension Movement, Dr. H. R. Mill, librarian of the Geographical Society, will deliver a course of five educational lectures on "The Principles of Geography," at Gresham College, on Mondays at 6 p.m., beginning on April 13. The special subject of the course is "The Distribution and Redistribution of Natural Resources"; and the lectures will deal with the geographical relations of a few leading commodities—gold, coal, wheat, cotton, and meat.

WE have received the report of Manchester College, Oxford, which was presented at the one hundred and tenth annual meeting. Most of the incidents have already been recorded in the ACADEMY. But we may mention a legacy of £250, for the purchase of books of permanent value for the library; and the gift of a bust of Carlyle, by Miss Froude, which had been presented to her father by the son of the sculptor, Mr. Weigall.

ACCORDING to a report submitted to the Secretary for Scotland by the University Court, the total number of matriculated students at Edinburgh during the last year was 2939, thus distributed under the several faculties: Arts, 760; science, 151; divinity, 69; law, 446; medicine, 1512; music, 11.

THE late Mrs. Nichol, of Edinburgh, has bequeathed £2,000 to Edinburgh University, to found a scholarship in connexion with the chair of natural philosophy.

IT is proposed to establish a library of political science, in connexion with the School of Economics and Political Science at 9, John-street, Adelphi, of which Mr. W. A. S. Hewins is director. Nearly half of the required sum of £5000 has already been promised, among the subscribers being the Earl of Rosebery, Lord Welby, Sir Charles Dilke, Sir Hickman Bacon, Prof. Marshall, Prof. Edgeworth, Mrs. J. R. Green, and Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Webb.

THE authorities of the McGill University, Montreal, which has received within recent years—and is still receiving—such munificent endowments for the departments of applied science, law, and medicine, are now about to undertake the extension and reorganisation also of the faculty of Arts. The first step is announced in connexion with the classical department, which is under the immediate direction of the new Principal, Dr. William Peterson, formerly of University College, Dundee. The governors of the university intend to make two important appointments on the staff of this department during the ensuing summer, the holder of the one to co-operate with Principal Peterson as professor or assistant professor of classics, while the holder of the other will rank as lecturer.

THE March number of the Pelican Record (Oxford: Blackwell) contains an English rendering of the "Confessio Goliae," or well-known Latin drinking song attributed to Walter Mapes, which is signed S. H. H.—the initials of an honorary fellow of Corpus Christi College. We quote the most familiar stanza:

"Let a tavern, when I die, be my place of dying, Wine unto my fainting lips with falling hand applying,
That the angel choir may cry, on their mission flying,
'May the Lord have mercy on the soaker here a-lying.'"

ORIGINAL VERSE.

TO CHRISTINA ROSSETTI.

LADY, we would behold thee moving bright
As Beatrice or Matilda 'mid the trees,
Alas! thy moan was as a moan for ease
And passage through cool shadows to the night:
Fleeing from love, hadst thou not poet's right
To alip into the universe? The seas
Are fathomless to rivers drowned in these,
And sorrow is secure in leafy light.
Ah, had this secret touched thee, in a tomb
Thou hadst not buried thy enchanting self,
As happy Syrinx murmuring with the wind,
Or Daphne thrilled through all her mystic bloom,
From safe recess as genius or as elf,
Thou hadst breathed joy in earth and in thy kind.

MICHAEL FIELD.

MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS.

THE Expositor for April contains nothing of special moment, but is, as always, well varied in its contents. Bishop Ellicott gives his reminiscences of the Sectionary Committee. Prof. Sanders replies to Prof. Ramsay on the subject which drew from the latter such an extraordinary article in the preceding number—viz., the early visits of St. Paul to Jerusalem. Prof. Kirkpatrick gives a popular paper on the Septuagint, originally read at Sion College. Another of the late Dr. Dale's sermonettes, on "Christians and Social Institutions," will find its audience. Dr. Bruce continues his really great work of popularising a devout but free criticism of the Gospels; he treats of the Synagogue Ministry. Dr. Denney discourses usefully on the Great Commandment.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE "PRENZIE" ANGLO.

Cambridge: March 23, 1896.

Every reader of Shakspeare's "Measure for Measure" remembers the word "prenzie" (iii. 1. 94); it is the great crux of the play. It is generally said to mean "precise, demure"; for no good reasons except that this will suit the context, and that both "prenzie" and "prim" begin with pr.

The etymology from "prim" is impossible; for this does not explain the z, or even the n or the c. I am aware that Burns has "primis", but he may very well have read Shakspeare; or the word "primis", if not coined by him, may have been formed on the model of "prenzie" itself.

What, then, is "prenzie"? My suggestion is that it is a misprint for "preuzie." Every-one knows that n and u are being mistaken for one another every day, both in MS. and by compositors.

But what is "preuzie"? The same as "preus-y," formed with the suffix -y, signifying "like," from the adjective or substantive "preus"; cf. "vast-y" from "vast," "soant-y" from "soant," "good-y" from "good," "dumm-y" from "dumb," "mirk-y" from "mirk," "war-y" from the M.E. adj. "war."

As to "preus" itself, it is an English spelling of the French preux. There is at least one example of it in Middle English, at p. 83 of the Aynbite of Inwit, where we find: "Ine prouesse byeth thri thinges to-deld, hardynesse, strengthe, and stedeuestnesse. Non ne is alyght preus, thet thise thri thinges ne heth"—i.e., in prowess there are three things distinguished, viz., hardiness, strength, and steadfastness. No one is truly preux (or excellent) who has not these three things.

The old spellings of French preux, are numerous; the forms preus, prus, pruz, prous, are all common (see examples in Godefroy).

Seeing that "prude" is the feminine form of this adjective, it is obvious that one sense of the word is "prudish." The fitness of this epithet requires no comment.

But this is not all. There is more in it than merely "prudish." For it so happens that Shakspeare probably coined the word (rather than adopted it from Middle English) from its proverbial use in the phrase "les neuf preux," which is French for "the nine worthies," so admirably introduced into "Love's Labour's Lost"—Act v. Nor is this all. For there was another proverbial phrase, "les neuf preuses," or the nine female worthies (see Godefroy and Littré). And now we see the full sense of the satire. I take "preus-y" to mean "like one of the nine worthies"—i.e., super-excellent, heroic, chivalrous, irreproachable, with an ironical tone in the voice. Just compare this with the mildness of "prim" or "finical," and the difference is immense. Moreover, the word is still, probably, alive. Jamieson gives, as a Roxburgh word, the following: "prossie, prouise, adj. vexatiously nice and particular in dress or in doing any work, as a prossie body." He gives an impossible derivation, but that is of no consequence whatever. "Vexatiously particular" is just what we want.

A last word on the grammatical formation. Although Shakspeare does not hesitate to form "vast-y" from the adjective "vast," it is much more usual to form words in -y from a substantive, as "ston-y" from "stone." Hence, from this point of view also, it is better to take preuz in the substantival sense, just as we use "worthy" as a substantive in English. The exact equivalent is "Worthy-like"; but we may read "worthy" in place of "preuzie" in the text, if we wish to substitute an equivalent for it without damaging the metre. So, again, a few lines below, we may give the sense of "in preuzie gardes" by substituting "in worthy dress."

The fact that the word is thus repeated shows that the printer had before him a written form which he could not much misread.

WALTER W. SKRAT.

THE FACSIMILE OF THE LAURENTIAN AESCHYLUS.

Florence: March 23, 1896.

Having been favoured with the privilege of seeing a proof copy of the facsimile of the Laurentian Aeschylus, may I take this early opportunity of informing your readers of the completion of this important work, which is to be published immediately under the auspices of the Ministry of Public Instruction here?

So far as I could judge at a first glance, it has been admirably executed, preserving not only the lines but even the tone of colours of the original.

Prof. Guidi Biagi, the prefect of the Laurentian Library, who has superintended the production, has been admirably seconded in this labour by the Conservator of MSS., Prof. Enrico Rostagno, already honourably known as a palaeographer.

In a preface of twelve pages, he has with great clearness stated the results of a fresh and elaborate examination of the famous codex (containing Sophocles, Aeschylus, and Apollonius Rhodius); and has thrown new light upon its history, by proving that, until the end of the fifteenth century, it formed part of the library of the Florentine Convent of St. Mark (the old title "Medicean" will, therefore, have to be abandoned). He has also, with the help of a re-agent, succeeded in deciphering the colophon, which calidus juvenis (comparatively speaking) I fancied I had made out, after long poring over it. It proves to be unimportant; but it is well that the matter should be set at rest.

Signor Rostagno differs from Merkel in thinking that the main part of the Aeschylus is in a later hand than the Sophocles. But on this subject, as on others, he speaks with the caution of a true expert.

LEWIS CAMPBELL.

GENESIS XIV.

London: March 23, 1896.

Those who, like me, are inclined to give weight to the suggestion that the accounts hitherto discovered of Sargon of Agade and his son Naramsin were dressed up by the Assyrian party among the scribes at Babylon, for the edification of Sargon (the conqueror of Merodach-baladan) and his son and heir Sennacherib, may find these conjectures not without interest.

In Jer. xxvii. 3 we read of messengers of the King of Edom, the King of Moab, the King of the Ammonites, the King of Tyros, and the King of Zidon, who came to King Zedekiah, obviously with the idea of organising resistance to Babylon. In Deut. ii. 6, 9, 19, good relations with Edom, Moab, and Ammon are expressly enjoined (ib. 10, 11, 20-23). We have notices of prehistoric races replaced by the children of Esau and of Lot, and by the Caphtorims (who furnished recruits for the royal bodyguard which did the menial work of the Temple in Josiah's time—Zeph. i. 9, Hæk.

xliv. 7). In Deut. ii. 11 the children of Esau drive out the Horims; in 20-30 the Horims, like the other prehistoric races, are destroyed before their destined successors by the Lord. Now in Gen. xiv. 5, 6, all these prehistoric races, except the Avims, are smitten by Chedorlaomer and the kings that were with him. Lastly, we may observe that thirteen years (Gen. xiv. 4) from the fourth year of Jehoiaikim take us to the fourth year of Zedekiah, when, according to the relatively early scribe, who thought of that date for the great prophecy against Babylon already incorporated in the Book of Jeremiah, the King of Judah and his quarter-master paid their respects at Babylon.

This leads me to guess that Gen. xiv. (like Deut. ii., the parallel is a commonplace) took its present shape when it was hoped that Nebuchadnezzar would clear the way for the expansion of the remnant of the Hebrews as Chedorlaomer had cleared the way for their first planting, and that Zedekiah (of whom when Jer. xxiii. 6-8 was written even Jeremiah must have had hopes) would prove himself a worthy son of Abraham and (as another scribe believed) a fit successor of Melchizedek. If so, one of the children of the first captivity must have consulted cuneiform documents, from which he borrowed the names of the kings who, according to the story, more or less historical—which seemed to him credible as prefiguring the good things he looked for—had invaded the land of promise and come empty away.

G. A. SIMCOX.

ON A PAIR OF GAULISH DEITIES.

Paris: March 23, 1896.

Mr. Stokes and Prof. Strachan have based their etymology of the new Gaulish deity's name on a bad reading: the stone gives NANTOSVELTA, not NAUTOSVELTA. I have republished the stone and inscription, after M. Michrélis, in the last number of the Revue Celtique.

SALOMON REINACH.

APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK.

TUESDAY, April 7, 3 p.m. Anglo-Russian: "Siberia," by Mr. A. Uvslankin.
8 p.m. Toynebee Library Readers: "The Defence of Optimism," by Mr. Israel Abraham.
SATURDAY, April 11, 3.45 p.m. Botanic: General Fortnightly Meeting.

SCIENCE.

ONIONS' EDITION OF NONIUS.

Nonius Marcellus, de Compensiosa Doctrina, I.-III. Edited, with Introduction and Critical Apparatus, by J. H. Onions, Student of Christ Church, Oxford. (Oxford: Clarendon Press.)

MR. ONIONS, at the time of his death in 1889, left ready for the press the text and apparatus critical of the first three books of the De Compensiosa Doctrina of Nonius: the treatise of a grammarian, probably an African, intended to explain difficulties of expression and subject-matter in the earlier Latin writers. Nonius is of inestimable value to students of Latin literature, as to him we are very largely indebted for our knowledge of the lost early poets, Ennius, Naevius, Terentius, Varro, and others, while his quotations from Plautus are of great critical importance. The want of a trustworthy edition of his text had long been felt; this want it was Mr. Onions' intention to supply. The present volume was an instalment of the great critical edition in the preparation of which he had spent many years. Its execution is marked by that thoroughness and acuteness, which were specially characteristic of its author. For several years he devoted his vacations to the collation of MSS., often with too little consideration for his health and strength; and when surprised by death, he had almost reached the goal of his labours. Except the Escorial MS., he had collated with rare fidelity and fulness all the known MSS. of Nonius which could be considered to have any independent value; and his design has been completed by the addition of a collation of the Escorial MS. by Mr. Lindsay. Mr. Onions' intention was to print the text, with a full apparatus criticus beneath it containing the variants of the MSS., and to relegate the conjectures of modern scholars to an appendix, as is done in Wecklein's Æschylus. Mr. Lindsay, who has, according to Mr. Onions' expressed wish, supervised this book in its passage through the press, has printed the apparatus of MSS. readings as Mr. Onions left it, without appending the list of modern emendations which he never lived to draw up, and which is now scarcely necessary, as they are to be found in Lucian Müller's edition. Of that edition Mr. Onions formed an unfavourable opinion, on account of the inadequacy and inaccuracy of the recorded MSS. material, and the conjectural licence allowed in the text: his views were expressed in two searching articles in the Classical Review (1886 and 1889). Mr. Onions had little in common with Prof. Müller; his cautious conservatism, scrupulous accuracy in the minutest details, and, above all, his fine and sensitive poetical feeling were antagonistic to the inconsiderate, though sometimes brilliant, hastiness of the St. Petersburg professor.

Had Mr. Onions lived to complete his work as he conceived it, there is no doubt that it would have been a masterpiece of editorial skill, a lasting monument of Oxford scholarship, which would have done much to remove from that University the reproach of barrenness that attaches to it. But even as it stands, this noble fragment is invaluable; for being, as far as it goes, fortunately complete, it presents a text of the first three books far in advance of any yet existing, both in editorial judgment and fulness of material collected.

An introduction of twenty-six pages contains a description of the MSS. employed. Of these the older MSS. are of two classes. The first class consists of the following: A, saec. x., at Bamberg; O, saec. x., at Paris; X, saec. x.-xi., at Leyden; D, saec. x., partly at Paris, partly at Berne; M, saec. x., at Montpellier; O, saec. x.-xi., in the Bodleian Library at Oxford. These so-called extract MSS. do not contain the whole work, which however exists in the following, which form a second class: F, saec. ix., at Florence; H, saec. ix.-x., in London, in the British Museum (a collation of this Harleian MS. was published in the Anecdota Oxoniensia by Mr. Onions in 1882); L, saec. ix., at Leyden; P, saec. x., at Paris; V, saec. x., at Wolfenbüttel; E, saec. x., in the Escorial. Of these MSS. all were collated by Mr. Onions except the last, which is added by Mr. Lindsay. Besides these, an account is given of thirty-five later MSS., which Mr. Onions had seen and examined. There is, too, a concise discussion of the relationship of the older MSS., and an estimate of them. In this part of the introduction Mr. Onions briefly announces his great discovery as to the corrections by a contemporary hand in the Florence codex, derived from an entirely different MS., which he denotes by the symbol F<sup>2</sup>. "This source is by far the best; and its corrections are almost invariably to be adopted." The fact that this edition contains the first publication of the readings of this the best MS. of Nonius would alone give the book a high value. But it is no less important as indicating the right way in which the text should be edited. The reader will miss the ingenious emendations which adorn the pages of Lucian Müller's two large volumes; but he will feel that the ground is substantial on which he is treading: the evidence of ancient documents is faithfully reported, and the text represents the results of that evidence, and not the imaginings of latter day critics. From the time of his death the friends of Mr. Onions had wished that his work should appear exactly as it left his hands; and it was fortunately easy to carry out this wish, as he had already printed a specimen. Mr. Lindsay is to be congratulated on having skilfully and faithfully performed his pious task.

S. G. OWEN.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE RESTORED PRONUNCIATION OF GREEK.

Liverpool: March 25, 1896.

Of the seventeen Greek consonantal signs there are only seven which are undisputedly correct, in their present school pronunciation—viz., κ, λ, μ, ν, π, τ, ψ. In three other cases the corrections needed are slight, and are agreed upon—namely, that ξ should be always (k+s), never s; that ρ, when it has the rough breathing, should be pronounced accordingly, like ρh in Welsh and hr in Old English; and that σ should be always s, never z. There were slight exceptions to the last rule, but it is needless to confuse the modern learner with them. As to the remaining seven (β, γ, δ, φ, χ, θ, ζ), I have shown in my previous letters that there is no practical agreement among authorities, such as Profs. Arnold and Conway allege to exist; nor do I think that, except in the case of β, γ, δ, they have chosen wisely between conflicting authorities. This conflict of authority is based on a conflict of evidence, and this in turn is based, as I believe, upon a transitional state of Attic pronunciation. I have given reasons for this before, both general and particular; and I hope now, in taking up the vowels, to show that some of them also were undergoing changes at an unusual rate in 500-300 B.C. Under these circumstances we may and ought to choose those values which can be most effectually taught; and I am persuaded that if the choice is set before the teachers of this country of teaching φ, χ, θ, ζ, with the values (p+h), (k+h), (t+h) and (s+d), or with the values f, Ger. ch, Eng. th (as at present) and (d+z), they will not only choose the latter but pronounce the former quite impracticable. I hear that an attempt to introduce (s+d) for ζ into Denmark has signally failed.

There are at present only two vowels and two diphthongs which are at all correctly rendered in our teaching of Ancient Greek.

These are the short ε and ι, and the diphthongs α and αι. For the rest it is a pleasure to agree with the Welsh professors in about one half of their recommendations. There can be no doubt that υ, and long ε and ι, should be pronounced like French u, a, and i, of which only the first is foreign to us. The diphthong αι should be pronounced like αι in the reformed pronunciation of Latin—i.e., like the diphthong of Eng. "how." The diphthong αι should consist of ε (in its continental value) and ι; not the Greek υ (= u), however, but the Latin u (English oo). The digraph αι is no true diphthong in Attic: it is a long υ (= u), followed by a y glide; thus, αἰες = hū-yos.

Six vowels and important diphthongs remain, and they fall into two disconnected groups—ε, η, αι, and ο, ω, ου. I will here deal with the former of these; but for clearness it will be necessary to adopt three phonetic signs. I will take ε̇ and ε̈, in their French values, to represent what Profs. Conway and Arnold, no less than myself, call open and close ε; and I will take ει to represent any diphthong composed of ε and (continental) i. Greater minuteness than this is not needed for the present purpose. Let it be remembered, however, that both ε̇ and ε̈ may be either long or short; ε̇ is short in Eng. "bets, and long in Fr. bête or Eng. "bear"; ε̈ is short in French in final syllables and often long elsewhere, but in English both forms are wanting. Our short ε is always ε̇, except in a certain Cockney pronunciation; and our long sound in "rain," "grey," "fade," "day" is always a diphthong, being made up of (ε̇ + i). Profs. Conway and Arnold's recommendations are simply that ε̇ shall be short ε̇, that η shall be long ε̇, and that αι shall be long ε̇. They say (ACADEMY, February 16) that the third item of this programme is "a commonplace of Attic grammar." But I cannot accept this as a fair description of a doctrine which they evidently know, from their own footnote, to be still in dispute. It is, in fact, denied by Blass, though accepted by Brugmann.

Let me briefly outline the facts. The Phœnician alphabet was very scanty in vowels. At most it could only be made to yield α, ε, ι, ο. To these υ was perforce invented and added. Then diphthongs were invented, but still the signs were woefully deficient; ε stood for no less than five values—viz., short ε̇ or ε̈, long ε̇ and ε̈, and (sometimes) ει. No dialect, however, had both values of short ε at one time. But before 600 B.C. the Ionians (Kierohoff, Studien zur Geschichte des griechischen Alphabets, p. 169) took the sign η (H), which had been previously used for the rough breathing, and applied it to represent the long ε̇. For the time this was a remedy; η stood for long ε̇, αι for ε̇, and ε, standing for both long and short ε̈, was no worse a sign, at any rate, than α, ι, or υ. But already in the sixth century a phonetic change was setting in, in both Attic and Ionic, which eventually abolished the difference between the ε̇ sound and the long ε̇ sound. The great question at issue is, whether ε̇ superseded long ε̇, or vice versa. They have both come down to us in our literary texts with the spelling αι; and this gives the student of this question some trouble in discriminating that which was originally ε̇ from that which was originally long ε̇. Words like λείβε (stem λειρ), and γίβε (= γειβε[ε̇]) were diphthongal from the first; but in εἶχε, εἶρελα, the ε̇ does not represent an original diphthong, but a simple lengthening of the short ε̇ of the stems εχ and ερελ into a long ε̇. Brugmann, and the Welsh professors with him, assume that this long ε̇ never became ε̇. But, in that case, how did it come to be written αι? Merely to indicate length, it is said. But surely this is quite contrary to the habits of Greek spelling, up to 350 B.C. at any rate. They did not add  $\epsilon$  to  $\alpha$  or  $\epsilon$  merely to indicate length; on the contrary, they were content to allow  $\alpha$ ,  $\epsilon$  and  $\iota$  to continue to be ambiguous in length. Prof. Blass works out this argument much further, showing that the spelling of original  $\epsilon$  on old Att.-Ion. monuments is relatively steadfast, as  $\epsilon$ ; but original 'long  $\epsilon$ ' oscillates gradually from  $\epsilon$  towards  $\alpha$ ; the complete victory of the  $\alpha$  spelling only takes place in the fourth century, after the middle; both sounds had then equally become  $\alpha$ . And it is much better to hold fast to this value, unambiguous, teachable, and consistent with the spelling, than to go back to a fifth century value, which would, after all, be wrong for original  $\epsilon$  wherever it occurs.

Next as to  $\epsilon$  and  $\eta$ . The professors say (loc. cit.):

"We know of no evidence to justify Dr. Lloyd's statement that  $\eta$  and  $\epsilon$  were identical in quality at Athens in the time of Demosthenes. He will certainly not find it in any of the standard authorities on Greek phonology—Brugmann, G. Meyer, or Meisterhans."

My authority, however, is Aristotle, De Arte Poetica (ch. xxi.), where he is showing how diction may be properly varied by lengthening (or shortening) words:

'Ἐκτεταμένον δ' ἔστιν . . . τὸ μὲν [δύναμις], δὲν φωνῇ μακροτέρῃ κεχρημένον ὃ τοῦ εἰκείου ἢ συλλαβῇ ἐμβαλεμένη. . . . οἷον το πόλεως πόλις, καὶ τὸ Πηλείδου Πηληϊάδου. . . .

I take this to imply that to Aristotle's ear  $\eta$  was simply a lengthening of  $\epsilon$ . If not, he would and could easily have chosen a better example. Granting even, for the sake of argument, that in the fifth century B.C.  $\epsilon$  was still short  $\epsilon$ , and  $\eta$  was long  $\epsilon$ , we must remember that these values did not continue. They actually are found at an early period A.D. to have quite changed places in quality, though not in length; this is proved by the earliest spellings of the New Testament (see Blass, § 11). There must, therefore, have been some intermediate point at which their quality was identical, and this point I take to be indicated by the quotation from Aristotle.

I find these speculations deeply interesting as a study in the history of language; but I must confess that, when I recur once more to the tutorial point of view, the distinction of  $\epsilon$  as  $\epsilon$  and  $\eta$  as  $\epsilon$  seems to me to be of very minor importance, seeing that they are fully distinguished by quantity in any case. Profs. Arnold and Conway, strange to say, seem sometimes (loc. cit.) to be of the same opinion, but in their pamphlet they do not countenance any departure from these values. They give to  $\epsilon$ ,  $\eta$ ,  $\alpha$  the values of short  $\epsilon$ , long  $\epsilon$ , and long  $\alpha$ —all more or less foreign to an English boy. Now, if reformation is to make Greek pronunciation as difficult as that of French or German, or any other living language, it will simply remain a dead letter. Neither master nor scholar will take the trouble: the motives are wanting. It seems to me, therefore, that for  $\epsilon$  we must accept the English short  $\epsilon$  in "bet," in spite of its open quality. And it also seems to me that for  $\eta$  and  $\alpha$  we have an excellent starting-point in the English  $\epsilon$  of "rein," "day," &c. This is really ( $\epsilon + i$ ). The pupil might be taught to modify this sound, after recognising its diphthongal character, (1) by prolonging the second element so as to make a well-balanced ( $\epsilon + i$ ) diphthong for  $\alpha$ , and (2) by omitting the second element, so as to produce a long  $\epsilon$  for  $\eta$ . This last is, perhaps, wrong, if we must speak like Pericles: but probably right, if we are content with Demosthenes for our model. It has the collateral advantage of being so much gained towards a proper pronunciation of French or German.

R. J. LLOYD.

SCIENCE NOTES.

DR. SAMUEL WILKS, of Guy's Hospital, has been elected president of the Royal College of Physicians of London, in succession to Sir J. Russell Reynolds.

THE following have been elected honorary members of the Royal Irish Academy, in the department of science: Sir Joseph Lister, Sir W. H. Flower, Prof. T. G. Bonney, and Prof. W. Ramsay.

PROF. H. G. SEELEY, of King's College, will begin his series of Sunday afternoon excursions in connexion with the London Geological Field Class on April 25, when a visit will be made to Purley and Croydon. Full particulars may be obtained from Mr. R. Herbert Bentley, 31, Adolphus-road, Brownswood-park, N.

MESSRS. G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS announce for immediate publication A Scientific Demonstration of the Future Life, by Mr. Thomson Jay Hudson. The object of the author is to outline a method of scientific inquiry concerning the powers, attributes, and destiny of the soul, and to point out specifically and classify a sufficient number of well-authenticated facts of psychical science to demonstrate the fact of a future life for mankind.

MESSRS. W. B. WHITTINGHAM & Co., of the Charterhouse Press, announce Argon and Newton—a Realisation, by Lieut.-Col. W. Sedgwick, of the Royal Engineers.

PROF. DANIEL GIRAUD ELLIOT, of the Field Columbian Museum, Chicago, together with Mr. C. E. Akeley and Mr. Dodson, the latter of whom accompanied Dr. Donaldson Smith on his recent expedition to Lake Rudolph, has left London for Aden, whence they will proceed on a scientific expedition to Central Africa. Prof. Elliot before his departure stated that, owing to the rapid disappearance of wild animals in Africa, the Field Columbian Museum had determined to despatch a representative in order to acquire specimens. He and his party would collect not only mammals (the chief object of the journey) but everything pertaining to zoology. Landing at Aden, he would cross to Berbera and strike inland from there. He would probably cross the desert just behind Berbera, then make for the Chibyle river. Thence he would go across the Juba river, and afterwards his movements would depend upon circumstances. Before his return he wished to go round by the Tana river, probably striking the coast at Lamu. The duration of the expedition would depend upon the number of specimens obtained. He would bring his specimens back to London and make a considerable stay in England before returning to Chicago.

PROF. OLIVER J. LODGE, of Liverpool, has addressed the following letter to the Times:

"It may be worth just putting on record that during the past week I have seen fluorescence excited by Röntgen rays after they had penetrated the bodies of two men standing one behind the other in their clothes. Also, that we have succeeded in radiographing the details of a damaged vertebra in the spine of an adult patient at the Northern Hospital, Liverpool, with an exposure of half an hour; and have found a 'Murphy-button' in the intestine of another adult at the Liverpool Royal Infirmary with an exposure of ten minutes. A 'focus-tube' and a powerful ordinary induction coil were the means used."

We also quote the following from the Berlin correspondent of the Daily News:

"Prof. Winkelman and Dr. Straubel, of the University of Jena, have succeeded in discovering a new method of photographing with Röntgen rays, by which the length of exposure is reduced from ten or fifteen minutes to only a few seconds. The method is based on a conversion of the X rays into rays of other undulations, by means of fluor spar crystal. If the Röntgen rays are allowed to fall upon a photographic plate, the sensitised film of which is turned away from them, and covered with fluor spar, the rays—after passing the film—will be absorbed by the fluor spar, and there undergo the modification spoken of. The new rays now act upon the photographic plate, and, indeed, much more strongly than did the Röntgen rays on passing through. As large fluor spar plates are to be had with difficulty, powder of the same crystal was tried in their place, and as this succeeded, nothing stands in the way of the further application of the method. The new rays emitted by the fluor spar were minutely examined by the discoverers. They succeeded in determining the frangibility, and from this the length of the undulations. The rays lie far beyond the ultra violet end of the visible spectrum."

PHILOLOGY NOTES.

ALL true lovers of the English tongue will be glad to learn that the English Dialect Dictionary is now making steady progress. At one time the prospects of publication seemed remote, as the expenses to be incurred largely exceeded the amount of subscriptions, notwithstanding a hearty response on the part of students of English. There are still, no doubt, many people who are interested in the racy speech of their humbler neighbours, and who would be willing to help if they once realised that the number of supporters is still far short of what is needed to meet the outlay. Few people probably know that Prof. Wright is obliged to employ at his own expense no less than seven assistants in editing the accumulated and steadily accumulating work of over 600 voluntary readers in all parts of the British Isles. Some notion of the work involved may be gained when it is stated that every day's post brings, on an average, about 1000 fresh slips. When these facts were brought to the knowledge of the First Lord of the Treasury, he was anxious that a work of such national importance should not fall through for want of a little timely help, and the friends of the Dialect Dictionary will be pleased to hear that £600 has been granted from the Royal Bounty Fund to meet the initial expenses. If intending subscribers will send in their names promptly to Prof. Wright, 6, Norham-road, Oxford, they will do much to stimulate the work by removing all anxiety of a financial nature. The greater portion of part i. is now in type, and will be in the hands of subscribers in June. The remaining parts will be issued at regular intervals of six months.

PUNCTUALLY with the first day of the new quarter, the Clarendon Press publish another part of the New English Dictionary, being the section of Volume IV., from FIELD to FISH, edited by Mr. Henry Bradley. This section records 1985 words altogether, of which, however, only 766 are main words. The total number of illustrative quotations is no less than 8526, which compares with 556 in Johnson and 1138 in the Century Dictionary. To an even greater extent than former portions of F, the present section is concerned with words that are the oldest and most frequently used in the language. As might be expected, very many of these words, on account of their multiplicity of senses and applications, require to be illustrated at much more than average length. Hence, while the number of main words is smaller than in any recent section, the total number of words is, on the contrary, much larger, chiefly owing to the extraordinary abundance of the combinations of certain important substantives. Among the words that exhibit interesting development of meaning may be mentioned: "field," "fight," "figure," "file" (eleven distinct words), "fill," "fillet," "find," "fine" (sub., adj., and verb), "first," and "fish." The quotations illustrating these words will be found to throw new and often unexpected light on the origin of the senses now current, and on the interpretation of many passages in our older literature. In most instances the derivation of the words treated in this section, Mr. Bradley tells us, has already been satisfactorily ascertained by previous investigators, so that the etymological paragraphs contain little that is strikingly novel; but it has frequently been found possible to present the facts with greater accuracy and completeness of detail than in former dictionaries.

REPORTS OF SOCIETIES.

ANGLO-RUSSIAN.—(Imperial Institute, Tuesday, March 3.)

E. A. OZALET, Esq., president, in the chair.—Mr. W. F. Kirby read a paper entitled "Passages in the Life of a Siberian Peasant." The lecturer commenced by describing the researches of Dr. W. Radloff into the popular literature of the Turkish races of Siberia. This labour extended over a number of years, and resulted in the publication of six large volumes. After commenting on the characteristics of the tales, Mr. Kirby said the subject of his paper was a T'lent, who had helped Radloff as an interpreter and translator. His name was originally Cyprian; but the influence of a Russian family who lived in the same village, near the river Ulula, in the government of Tomak, and the teaching of the priest, Father Makarii, induced Cyprian, when a youth, with several members of his family, to embrace Christianity, and he was baptised in the name of Michael, by which he was afterwards known. The young man had a taste for learning, and was taught to read and write from Father Makarii, but was turned adrift by his father, and worked at a translation of the Bible into Telcut for the priest. Father Makarii was succeeded by Father Stephan, who also gave employment to Michael, and afterwards sent him among the villages near Kusnetak to preach. Here he found some people who were Christians, others Shamans, and some who said their gods were Father Mukolo (Nikolai) and Ili, the prophet. In one place he found the people had been converted to Christianity by force, but through ignorance of the Russian language had relapsed into Shamanism. "So I related everything to them, from Adam to the birth of Jesus Christ, and about the return of Jesus Christ at the end of the world." Finding interpreting, however, not sufficiently lucrative, Michael turned his attention to trading. He first took his wife and family on a fishing expedition to Lake Tetetkoe (or Altai), and then laid in a stock of goods and proceeded to the T'ules, who live on the Cholyshman. The custom of these people is to place goods offered in barter side by side and then consider whether they are worth the exchange. Here Michael obtained much valuable information about the neighbouring peoples, which Mr. Kirby dwelt upon at some length. It was four years after this journey that Dr. Radloff met Michael and obtained his help in his literary and philological studies.—A discussion followed, in the course of which several speeches in Russian were made by gentlemen who had travelled in various parts of Siberia.

METEOROLOGICAL.—(Wednesday, March 18.)

E. MAWLEY, Esq., president, in the chair.—Mr. Frederic Gaster, of the Meteorological Office, delivered a lecture on "Weather Forecasts and Storm Warnings: How They are Prepared and made Known," illustrated with numerous instruments, diagrams, and lantern slides. Mr. Gaster said that in the preparation of forecasts the position held by the barometer was so much more important than that of any other instrument, that its action must be fully comprehended if the rest of the work was to be at all clearly understood. The lecturer having fully explained this, referred to the use of a single isolated instrument, and showed how new light was thrown on the observer who could have telegraphed to him simultaneous observations from a large number of places scattered over a considerable area of the earth's surface. The kind of variation in the distribution was dealt with, isobars were drawn, and the phenomena which they exhibit in the way of high and low pressure areas described. An explanation was given of the terms "cyclonic" and "anti-cyclonic," and the generally opposite characteristics of these two systems were referred to. Mr. Gaster next drew attention to the obvious importance of the variation in the weather over a given area caused by alterations in the position of the cyclonic and anti-cyclonic systems, and the importance of the fact that the former tended to move round the latter from left to right. This led to some remarks on the indications observed when disturbances were advancing towards our islands from different points. Attention was drawn to secondary systems, both of high and low pressure, the forms they assume, and their effect on the weather which, but for their presence, would probably have accompanied their primaries, and the necessity for allowing for such systems in sending warning to our coasts. The lecturer then remarked on the value of auxiliary information, such as is to be obtained from decided changes in the direction of the wind, sudden changes of temperature, the movements of clouds at different levels, observations made at high-level stations, and telegrams from the United States. Mr. Gaster next explained how the information is made known to the public. Forecasts are issued by the Meteorological Office in the daily weather report, and also communicated to the press, &c. Hay harvest forecasts are issued to certain selected authorities, who circulate them as much as possible in their neighbourhood. Storm warnings are telegraphed to our coasts with instructions to hoist the cone—point up when the gale is probable from northerly to easterly points, and point down when from southerly to westerly points. In conclusion, the lecturer drew attention to the marked improvement which had occurred in these warnings in recent years, and to some of the occurrences which from time to time caused failures.

HISTORICAL.—(Thursday, March 19.)

SIR M. E. GRANT DUFF, president, in the chair.—Messrs. Frederick Seeböhm and Hugh Exton Seeböhm were elected fellows.—A paper was read by Mr. H. E. Malden, a vice-president, on "Shakespeare as a Historian," in which the author's theory as to the importance of the contemporary evidence supplied by the plays was illustrated by numerous quotations.—A discussion followed, in which Dr. Furnivall and others took part; and Mr. Malden's paper was recommended for publication in the Transactions of the Society.

PHILOLOGICAL.—(Friday, March 20.)

H. BRADLEY, Esq., vice-president, in the chair.—A resolution was unanimously passed, congratulating Prof. Skeat on the successful result of his efforts to found a public lectureship in English Literature in the University of Cambridge, to which Mr. I. Gollancz has just been appointed.—Prof. F. Heath read a paper on "The Text and Metre of Chaucer's Early Minor Poems." He first insisted that no early poem could be edited until the pedigree of its MSS. had been made out and their relative value ascertained. This was a canon universally accepted in Germany, but too much neglected by English editors, who had felt free to take a various reading from any MS. they pleased, however far it might be from the original MS. to the neglect of that MS.'s more direct successors. This proceeding had led to most improper liberties being taken by some editors with Chaucer's heroines, or at least with their texts; and Prof. Heath protested against this treatment. He showed on the blackboard how the pedigree of the 5 MSS. and the earliest print (Julian Notary's) of Chaucer's "Complaint of Mars" was to be deduced from the lost MS. of the poet, and stated that, when he had worked it out, he found it identical with that made by Dr. F. Koch, of which he had not known before. After discussing a few of his differences with Prof. Skeat in the "Complaint," he passed on to the "Book of the Duchess," in 1100 lines of which he disagreed with 150 of Prof. Skeat's changes. Several of these were instances of the extra syllable before the caesura—a syllable which Prof. Skeat admitted theoretically in his canons, after Ten Brink, but too generally cut out of his text, though his MSS.

had it. Prof. Heath also contended that seyn was sometimes a dissyllable—se-yn, like se-int; and that It is was occasionally Its or 'Tis. Sorowful, in l. 14 of the "Duchesse"—which the three MSS. and Thynne's first print of 1532 all have—Prof. Heath contended was only two syllables, so'ful, and should not have been turned into sory by Prof. Skeat. Many other changes in the latter editor's treatment were suggested, several of which were accepted by the meeting, while others were thought arguable. On the whole, Prof. Heath stuck to the MSS., and considered that in Chaucer's early work, and specially in his four-beat lines, his metrical canon was less strict than in his five-beat and later work, so that we could trace a development in his style.

ARISTOTELIAN.—(Monday, March 30.)

SHADWORTH H. HODGSON, Esq., vice-president, in the chair.—The Hon. Bertrand Russell read a paper on "The a priori in Geometry." The a priori in any science may be regarded from two points of view: (1) as a necessary condition of the reasonings of the science, as revealed by analysis of its procedure; (2) as an essential prerequisite for the possibility of experience of the subject-matter of the science. Thus, (1) geometrical reasoning, which aims either at spatial measurement or at localisation, is logically impossible unless it accepts three axioms, which are used by Euclid and retained by the non-Euclidean. These three axioms are the axiom of free mobility, the axiom that space has a finite integral number of dimensions, and the axiom that any two points have an intrinsic relation (distance), measured, in general, by a line which those two points completely determine. The truth of these axioms involves the complete relativity of position. But (2) this is itself a necessary property of any form of externality (since externality cannot be an intrinsic property of anything), and is therefore a prerequisite of all experience of an external world. By an argument the converse of the above, the three essential axioms can be deduced from the relativity of position. Thus, these three axioms are a priori in both aspects. The remaining axioms required to distinguish Euclidean from non-Euclidean space are, for geometry, empirical.—The paper was followed by a discussion.

FINE ART.

ART BOOKS.

Picture Posters. By Charles Hiatt. (Bell.) This is an exceedingly handsome volume, admirably covered, printed, and illustrated; moreover, it deals with a fascinating and novel subject, and should therefore command success. The growing habit of decorating the hoardings with posters that shall be at once useful as advertisements and pleasant to the eye is deserving of encouragement. Mr. Hiatt's book should be a capital incentive to designers, for it is probably the first only of a long series of such volumes wherein a permanent record will be kept of the most deserving fancies. The danger of oblivion is to a great extent averted, and the fear of being forgotten need no longer keep any artist from trying his skill at picture-making for the streets. Though Mr. Hiatt, with no little ingenuity, claims for the poster a very ancient history, and gives us samples of advertisements discovered in Pompeii, it is with the modern work of the last half of the century that he chiefly concerns himself. He writes clearly and well; and if some of his judgments are likely to be upset on appeal to the reader, he is a really capable critic and never a dull one. He probably praises Cheret too much, for the clever Frenchman's work is really more for the shop windows than the hoardings; and a longer time might have been spent with profit discussing those most masterly performances of the Brothers Beggarstaff. But so competent a writer has, after all, a definite right to his own opinions, and would probably advance cogent arguments in favour of his methods. His selection of illustrations is quite admirable; and though some of the designs suffer considerably by reason of the inevitable reductions in size, they are excellently reproduced. Many are, of course, familiar enough, such as Grieffenhagen's Pall Mall Budget and Dudley Hardy's "Phit-Eesi"; others are less well known, though scarcely less clever and interesting. Among those that specially struck us as the work of young English artists were two thoughtful pictures by Charles F. Foulkes, one of which is printed also on the cover, a distinctly clever design by Mabel Dearmer, and a capital burlesque of Mr. Aubrey Beardsley's peculiar style by J. Hearn announcing the production of "Pygmalion and Galatea" at the New Theatre, Oxford. On the whole, however private opinions may differ as to details, there can be no doubt that Picture Posters is a delightful and valuable book to possess; and Mr. Hiatt and his publishers deserve, and will doubtless achieve, a real measure of popularity.

Wappenzeichnungen Hans Baldung Griens in Coburg. By Robert Stiasny. (Wien.) This publication, illustrated with sixteen good autotypes of the drawings to which it refers, will interest students both of heraldry and of German art. The drawings form part of a series of fifty-one glass-window designs in the Ducal collection at Coburg, forty-four of which are genuine drawings by Baldung. Twenty others of the same series, and by the same artist, are in the Albertina, and have been published already. The design of almost all is of one type. There is a frame, usually an arch carried on pillars with some figures or other decoration in the spandrels. Under the arch are one or more supporters of a very unconventional and naturalistic type, and by or between them is the shield, about waist high, and surmounted by a most elaborately foliated helmet bearing the crest. The foliation is in most instances the part where the artist's fancy has been allowed freest play. Most of the designs are highly decorative and suited for their purpose. They were, of course, to be carried out in colours, the nature of which is indicated by initial letters. There is a good heraldic feeling in the work, as usual in all late Gothic decoration of South Germany and Switzerland, a fact not generally recognised. Our author (p. 6) gives a list, confessedly incomplete, of other glass-window designs by Grünhans; and he traces their fortunes through the hands of the painter Nikolaus Kraemer (ob. 1553) to those of Sebald Büheler (ob. 1595), who wrote the names and inscriptions on them, and probably sold them. Six of the Coburg set bear dates between 1512 and 1542. Internal evidence ascribes the majority to years succeeding 1520. Into a description of particular drawings we cannot here enter. The author has pursued his studies far, and entered into the history of the families commemorated. He quotes numerous authorities, and seems to have done his work most thoroughly. There is an appendix on the coat-of-arms of the Baldung family, with some notes on the family history. The appreciation of this work by the German public is shown by the fact that it has already passed into a second edition.

Repertorium für Kunstwissenschaft, XVIII. 6. There is an important article in this number, by Max Friedländer, hitherto on an unidentified painter, "Hans der Maler zu Schwaz." The writer identifies as by him a series of nineteen bust portraits, chiefly of men, and previously for the most part ascribed to Strigel, Amberger, and even Schaufelin. They bear dates from 1519 to 1529. One of them signed, H.M., M.Z.S., is in Bridgewater House (Gower's Great Historic Galleries, 1884, No. 1). At Dresden are two of his pictures, at Vienna three, at Berlin two, and at Wörlitz two. From the subjects it seems probable that the painter worked in the Tirol. The signature M.Z.S. (by analogy with the signature on the Nürnberg Schaffner) suggests "Maler zu S——." The only large Tirolese town beginning with S is Schwaz, which in the early sixteenth century was a bigger place than Innsbruck. In Schwaz there was a painter of repute named Hans, and archives prove him to have been employed by Kaiser Max to paint and copy portraits. The argument is followed out in great detail and with much skill and inevitableness. Hans of Schwaz was not a great painter; but, from the specimen of his work reproduced, we gather that he was a conscientious portraitist and craftsman. Herr Franz Rieffel, in a short article, indicates his reasons for thinking that Cranach began life in a goldsmithy in Southern Bavaria. Max Lehrs writes on the materials for dating Martin Schongauer's engravings, but he does not know all the dated copies mentioned in Conway's Woodcutters of the Netherlands. The remainder of the Journal is filled with some minor articles and the usual excellent reviews and notices.

LETTER FROM EGYPT.

Dahabiyah Israr, Luxor: March 14, 1896.

In my last letter I believe I spoke of the inscribed granite stones which have been found at Assuan as altars. So they are in a sense; but I should have described them more accurately had I called them pedestals, as they were the bases of bronze statues, the holes in which the latter stood being still visible.

After leaving Assuan, Mr. Wilbour and myself spent a day in exploring the country on the west bank opposite Kom Ombos. Here on the edge of the desert we found a large "Kom," as large as the island of Philae in circumference, and consisting entirely of tombs. Two or three of these at the north end of the Kom had been opened. They were of the Roman age, the dead being buried in terra-cotta coffins. Another tomb on the east side had also been opened and utterly destroyed. This was of a much earlier period, and the entrance to it had been constructed of that beautiful white limestone of which the temples of Abydos are built. About half a mile to the east of the Kom, in the middle of the cultivated land, we came across another smaller Kom, of rectangular shape, with a few remains of broken stone and of an encircling wall of burnt brick. The Shêkh of the village told us that he remembered large blocks of stone lying upon it which have long since been carried away. It is evidently the site of the temple of Contra-Ombos.

About two miles to the south of Fares (south of Silsilis), at a place called Kom er-Resras, is the site of a large town and of a temple of rectangular form. We cleared away the sand from its foundation walls, and copied the inscriptions with which they are covered. The temple proves to have been built by Domitian, and to have been dedicated to Isis in her stellar character. In fact, the worship carried on in it seems to have been peculiarly astronomical, as the deities mentioned in the text are Ah (the Moon-god), Sirius, and Orion. It is interesting to find this monument of Domitian in Upper Egypt, since we know that he was a special patron of Egyptian religion. He built a temple to Isis in Rome itself; and at Kom Ombos, in the near vicinity of Fares, the chapel, on the south side of the great temple, was erected in his reign. The sanctuary of the temple at Kom er-Resras measures 12 ft. by 12 ft. 8 in. North of the site of the old city is a ruined Coptic monastery, into the walls of which a good many stones from the temple have been built.

I spent a week at El-Kab, where Mr. Somers Clarke and his companions are still hard at work. He has uncovered more of the foundations of the late temple-buildings in the ancient city, which are composed of stones taken from the ruins of the older temples which stood there. Among the new inscribed blocks which have thus been discovered are three with the name of Ramses III., who must therefore be added to the list of royal builders at El-Kab. One of them states that "his majesty gave orders to the governor of Thebes, the strategos"; another refers to the chief scribes in the Rolls office. Most of my time at El-Kab, however, was passed in copying the Old Empire graffiti on the "great rock" near the temple of Amenôphis III.

At Gebelén the fellahin are rapidly destroying the scanty remains of the temple under the pretext of digging for sebakh, and by digging up Greek papyri and demotic ostraca, which are bought by the dealers at Thebes and elsewhere. As the so-called "guardian" of the antiquities is the chief depredator among them, nothing will soon be left of all the interesting monuments which existed at Gebelén a few years ago.

Here at Thebes much has been done since I was here a few weeks since. Miss Benson's excavations in the temple of Mnt at Karnak have yielded a number of valuable monuments, one of the most interesting of which is a fine statue of Gebel Ahmar marble, in a perfect state of preservation, of Sen-Mut, the architect of Dér el-Bâbari and the temple of Mut itself. He also states that he superintended the construction of certain buildings in the temples of Karnak and Luxor, and was overseer of the granary of Amon. The inscription on the statue is longer and more important than that on the statue of the same individual which is now in the museum of Berlin. I may add that his walking-stick, with his name upon it, is in the hands of the German consul here in Luxor.

Besides the statue of Sen-Mut, Miss Benson has found another large and well-preserved statue (in white limestone) of a certain Bak-er-Khonen, as well as portions of a frieze on which the Ethiopian king Piankhi gave a detailed account of the ships he captured from the princes of the North, of their precise size, and of the spoil he obtained with them. On one of the fragments is a picture of "the great ship of Sais" (which seems to have been about 80 feet in length) as well as of Tef-nekht, the Saite prince. Close to the Piankhi fragments is a block of granite with the cartouches of Tut-Ankh-Amon.

M. Legrain has just finished his winter's work at Karnak, and has returned to Cairo. Nothing could have been better or more skillfully done; and, considering the difficulty and magnitude of his task, it has been performed in a wonderfully short space of time and at a wonderfully small outlay. The walls and columns have been cleared of earth almost to their foundations, and have been effectively repaired, restored, and made thoroughly secure. The change effected in the great Hall of Columns is magical. The walls and pillars have been almost doubled in height, and one feels, as one walks among them, that "there were giants in those days." An avenue of sphinxes has been found, leading westward to a stone quay, on the walls of which are a number of inscriptions, important from an historical point of view. One of them, for instance, is dated in the thirty-ninth year of Shishak III., which will require a revision of our chronology of the period; and another contains a new cartouche. Among the hieroglyphic texts is a faintly traced Phœnician graffito in which the word khopesh occurs.

M. Legrain has further discovered, as might be expected, a considerable number of inscriptions—mostly fragmentary, however—and the remains of a chapel of Shep-an-Apt, "the royal daughter of Piankhi."

On the western bank of the Nile, Medinet Habu is disencumbered of the rubbish in which it was buried, and stands before us in all its stately magnificence; while Prof. Petrie, who has just returned to Europe, has been restoring the topography of ancient Thebes. On the south side of the Ramesseum he has found the sites of the temples of Thothmes IV., Queen Ta-User (P), and Menepthah, as I stated in a previous letter, and on the north side those of Amenôphis II. and Si-Ptah, the latter of which adjoined the temple of Thothmes III. The temple of Menepthah was built out of the ruins of that of Amenôphis III.; and in it Prof. Petrie has disinterred a huge stela of granite, with an inscription of Amenôphis III., re-engraved by Seti I. on one side and on the other an inscription of Menepthah, which will be of intense interest to Old Testament students. The inscription has been copied by Dr. Spiegelberg. The stela is on its way to the Cairo Museum, and it may be hoped that before very long Prof. Petrie will give us an account of what it contains. Mr. Quebell, Prof. Petrie's companion, has been chiefly occupied in clearing out the tombs among which the Ramesseum was built. In one of them he has found the relics of a hitherto unknown queen, who seems to have belonged to the XXIInd Dynasty. Mr. Newberry has lately returned from an expedition into the desert east of Quia, which he made with Johnson Pasha, and where, in the Wadi Gadammeh, about thirty miles north-east of Quia, he discovered and copied three Sinaitic graffiti.

I think I forgot to say in my last letter that while I was at Elephantinê with Mr. Wilbour we found, built into the wall of the Roman quay, a stone of the age of the XIXth Dynasty, with a curious inscription containing the name of "Ramesses, the prince of the city of the Libyans" (Lebu).

A. H. SAYCE.

THE NATIONAL PORTRAIT GALLERY.

THE new National Portrait Gallery, in St. Martin's-place, will be opened to the public to-day (Saturday) at 10 a.m. The opening will not be attended by any public ceremony.

The gallery will be open free on Mondays, Tuesdays, Wednesdays, and Saturdays from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. during the summer months. On Thursdays and Fridays, which will be students' days, the public will be admitted upon payment of 6d. from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. The arrangements for students will be similar to those in force at the National Gallery. The trustees are prepared to carry out any instructions which they may receive from the Government with reference to the opening of the gallery to the public on Sunday afternoons.

The following additions to the gallery have been made during the last few weeks: Mrs. Delany, painted by J. Opie, R.A.; engraved as a frontispiece to the Autobiography and Correspondence of Mrs. Delany, by Lady Llanover; bequeathed by Baroness Llanover. The Right Hon. Spencer Perceval, a posthumous portrait by G. F. Joseph, A.R.A.; bequeathed by Miss Anna Jane Perceval. Sir William Jackson Hooker, F.R.S., a large Wedgwood medallion; presented by Mr. F. T. Palgrave. John Thurloe, secretary to Oliver Cromwell, by W. Dobson; presented by Mr.

William Henry Alexander. Edward IV., an old panel portrait, deposited on loan by the president and council of the Society of Antiquaries at the request of the trustees, completing the series of Sovereigns of England (with the exception of Edward V.) from Henry III. to George IV. inclusive.

Two portraits have been acquired by purchase: namely—Sir Thomas Wyatt, poet and statesman, painted from a drawing by Holbein; and Samuel Richardson, a small full-length portrait, painted in 1750 by J. Highmore.

THE PARTHENON INSCRIPTION.

WE quote the following from the New York Nation:

"Your issue of February 6 contains a reference to the attempts at deciphering, by aid of the nail-prints, the bronze inscription which once stood upon the eastern architrave of the Parthenon. Your readers will be gratified to learn that this difficult task has now been successfully accomplished by an American student. The initial difficulty lay in securing accurate representations of the nail-prints. These are forty feet above the ground, and inaccessible except as one be lowered from the overhanging geison blocks some twelve feet above them. In spite of numberless difficulties and hindrances, and certainly at some considerable risk, the work of procuring paper prints or squeezes from the perilous vantage-ground of a swing in mid-air was begun about the middle of January last by Mr. Eugene P. Andrews, a member of the American School. Great patience, persistency, and technical skill, as well as coolness of head, were essential to the work.

"The nail-holes appeared in twelve groups between the spaces once occupied by the bronze shields, and only one of these groups could be copied in a day. Sometimes the day's work resulted in failure, but finally three weeks of persistency brought the copies to completion, and the first careful review of them showed that decipherment was only a question of scholarship and patience, for the variety in the order of the nail-prints surely betrayed the individuality of the letter-forms. As a rule, only three nails were used to a letter, but the order or relative position of the holes proved to be much the same in all the different occurrences of the same letter.

"The first word to emerge was αὐτοκράτορα. It made itself peculiarly venerable by its possession of two Omicrons, two Rhos, two Taus, and three Alphas (one of them, however, obscured). From this key Mr. Andrews proceeded with his unraveling until, after a fortnight, he was able to make a public report at a meeting of the School, giving practically a complete reading of the inscription. Two proper names alone have not yet been deciphered. The reading is as follows:

"ἡ δὲ Ἀρείου πάγου βουλὴ καὶ ἡ βουλὴ τῶν Χ καὶ δ δῆμος δ' Ἀθηναίων αὐτοκράτορα μέγιστον Νέρωνα Καίσαρα Κλαύδιον Σεβαστὸν Γερμανικὸν Θεοῦ Τῶν στρατηγούντων ἐπὶ τοῖς ὅπλοις τὸ δὲ δούρον τοῦ καὶ ἐπιμελητοῦ καὶ νομοθετοῦ Τι. Κλαυδίου Νουίου τοῦ φίλῳ ἐπὶ ἱερῆας . . . [name of priestess] τῆς . . . [father's name] θυγατρὸς.

"The reference to the eighth term of Novius's generalship fixes the date of the inscription at 61 A.D. It probably accompanied the erection of a statue of Nero, possibly just at the front of the Parthenon. The important historical bearings of the discovery it must be left to Mr. Andrews to set forth in the official publication. The importance of the subject, the difficulty of the task, and the brilliant and successful method of decipherment, have combined to awaken here more general public as well as scientific interest than has attached to any other archaeological event of the year.

"BREV. IDS. WHEELER.

"Athens, February 26, 1896."

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

MR. GEORGE H. BOUGHTON, A.R.A., has been elected a full member of the Royal Academy, to fill the place made vacant by Lord Leighton's death.

THE sixteenth exhibition of the New English Art Club will open next week at the Dudley Gallery, Piccadilly. The private view is—somewhat awkwardly—fixed for to-day (Easter Eve).

THE Earl of Rosse has been elected president of the Royal Irish Academy, in succession to Dr. J. K. Ingram.

THE South London Fine Art Gallery, in Peckham-road—which, we believe, mainly owes its existence to the enthusiasm and personal services of Mr. W. Rossiter—has now been transferred to the Commissioners of Public Libraries for Camberwell. A grant of £3000 from the City parochial charities has cleared off all liabilities; and Mr. J. Passmore Edwards has promised, with characteristic munificence, to give £5000 for the erection of an institute for art-teaching, as a memorial to the late Lord Leighton, who was the first president of the gallery. The institute will be supported by grants from the technical education board of the London County Council.

A FREE picture exhibition was opened last Monday in the Public Hall, Canning Town, with an address by Mr. Walter Crane. The pictures that have been lent include three works by Mr. G. F. Watts, Lord Leighton's "Golden Hours," Fred. Walker's "Mushroom Gatherers," and examples of Mr. Frank Dicksee, Mr. H. S. Tuke, Mr. Arthur Hacker, Mr. George Clausen, Mr. David Murray, &c. Last year the Easter exhibition at Canning Town was visited by 143,000 persons.

WE understand that Her Majesty has been pleased to accept a complete copy of The Queen's London, which has just been published in volume form by Messrs. Cassell & Co. The work, which contains nearly four hundred photographic views, forms a pictorial and descriptive record of the streets, buildings, parks, and scenery of the metropolis. It was dedicated to Her Majesty by special permission.

THE Lords of the Committee of Council on Education have decided to open the South Kensington Museum, including the India Museum and Science Collections in the galleries on the west of Exhibition-road, as well as the Bethnal-green Branch Museum, as an experiment on Sundays. But this arrangement must be regarded as temporary, and liable to be rescinded, if it be hereafter found desirable to do so. Both museums will be open for the first time on Sunday next at 2 p.m., and will remain open till dusk.

A CORRESPONDENT writes: "It may save some disappointment to visitors to Paris to state that the lower gallery of Egyptian antiquities at the Louvre is still closed for rearrangement, and the upper gallery is yet unaltered, the 'dernières acquisitions' lying as they have done for many years past. There is, therefore, much less to see than usual."

AT a recent meeting of the Académie des Inscriptions, Mr. Collignon exhibited three large bronze fibulae, which had been found in a tomb near Thebes, in Boeotia. They are all ornamented with drawings in line. On two of them one recognises the familiar designs of Boeotian artists—fishes, a horse, a water-bird—executed in the transitional geometrical style which succeeded the Mycenaean. But the third shows a very remarkable decoration: two worshippers, placed heraldically on either side of a trunk with branches, and separated by a disk with rays. It is an awkward and simple adaptation of a subject borrowed from oriental sculpture—the adoration of the sacred plant, which appears so frequently on Chaldean cylinders. This example may be added to those already supplied by the dipylon pottery and the proto-attic vases, to prove how oriental motives entered into early Greek art, and came to take their place by the side of the native elements.

WE quote the following from the Times:

"The British School at Athens has undertaken, besides its excavations on the island of Melos, some excavation work in Athens itself, which, so far as one can judge at this early stage, gives promise of very important results for the topography of ancient Athens. The site of the ancient Athenian suburb called Kynosarges, known chiefly for its gymnasium, was for a long time thought to lie at the foot of Mount Lykabettos, on the south-eastern side. This was Leake's view, and was not disputed till recently, when Prof. Dörpfeld made it clear, from a comparison of the testimonies of ancient authors, that the Kynosarges must have lain further to the south, along the banks of the Ilissus. In pursuance of this view, Mr. Cecil Smith, director of the British School, had his attention attracted to a spot on the south bank of the river, several hundred yards below the Stadion, where the ground falls away from a small plateau in remarkably abrupt and perpendicular manner, indicating the presence of hidden walls. As on either side of this plateau are two prominent hills, which might well be those mentioned by ancient authors in connexion with the Kynosarges, it was decided to dig a trench through this plateau. The trench, at the depth of a few inches, brought to light numerous walls, chiefly of the Roman period; and one of the first constructions whose outlines could be traced exactly was that of a Roman calidarium. This would seem to point to the existence of a gymnasium; and this fact, if proved, would go far towards settling the question of the Kynosarges site, provided that the remains of the classic period can be found beneath or beside these Roman remains. Numerous interesting fragments of ancient Greek vases and various metal objects have been found in the rubbish excavated; the remains of a huge vase of Melian type, as it seems, deserve especial mention, as this would be almost a unique find in Attica. The wide extent of the ruins and the solid character of the masonry discovered thus far make it evident that this is the site of a large public building or group of buildings—a very significant fact for a spot so far outside the ancient city walls. The British School are to be congratulated on having secured a piece of work which promises to be of such importance for the study of ancient Athenian topography; and if it should prove at length to be the site of Kynosarges, it will be a source of special satisfaction to Englishmen that the site, which was eagerly sought by two English excavators at the beginning of this century, and for whose discovery Lord Byron once planned excavations, should have been brought to light by the British School."

THE STAGE.

STAGE NOTES.

Few Englishmen know English life better than M. Paul Villars, the keen, sagacious correspondent of the Débats and of the Figaro; and yet his verdicts on our performances in politics, in literature, and in the arts have always that French flavour which gives them individuality and places them rightly apart. It is interesting, therefore, to read what he has to say now and then upon the English stage; and when it is a translation from the French that is in question, his qualifications for judgment become pre-eminent. We have read with interest M. Villars' brief comments on "For the Crown" at the Lyceum, the piece in which Mr. John Davidson, with his frank and vigorous talent, has applied himself to the translation of the delicacy of M. François Coppée's verse. According to M. Villars, Mr. Davidson's version has the happiness of being at the same time "très littéraire et très fidèle." That it would be "literary" we could not doubt; and the interpretation by its principal actors taking part in the representation satisfies M. Villars scarcely less. He writes in the Figaro: "Miss Emery a déployé une vigueur, une énergie, qu'on ne lui connaissait pas, et Mme. Patrick Campbell une douceur et un charme qu'on ne lui soupçonnait pas." And he adds, what English spectators of the performance know to be the truth, "Chose singulière, en effet, elles ont, l'une et l'autre abordé des rôles d'un genre différent de ceux qu'elles remplissent d'ordinaire." Of Mr. Forbes Robertson the verdict is that he, "à qui vont si mal les rôles modernes," "est tout-à-fait dans son élément dans le rôle de Constantin." In regard to the performance of Mr. Mackintosh—an admirable actor in a certain line, as our readers know—"il faut faire quelques réserves," says M. Villars.

WE understand that the next performance given by the members of the Elizabethan Stage Society, under the accomplished direction of Mr. William Poel, will take place in June, and will be devoted to a revival on the older lines of Marlowe's tragedy of "Doctor Faustus." The stage fittings of the sixteenth century, prepared for the recent performance of "Measure for Measure" in Gray's Inn Hall, are used in the Society's revivals, together with a valuable and characteristic wardrobe, mainly purchased from Mr. Barthe; Captain Hutton kindly advises on matters of old swordsmanship; and for the adequate interpretation of Elizabethan music, the guarantee is sufficient when it is mentioned that they are under the control of Mr. Arnold Dolmetsch. We may add that the Society—judging from a semi-private prospectus that has lately been put in our hands—would seem to cherish the hope of being able (through the help, it may be, of some enterprising soul) to build a theatre; for it is remarked in the document before us—"A theatre specially built on the plan of the sixteenth century would not be an expensive building"; and we are further reminded that "with no scenery and no necessity to renew the costumes for every play, the bill can be changed at little cost."

DR. MARCUS LANDAU has recently published in Prof. Max Koch's Zeitschrift für Vergleichende Literaturgeschichte a monograph on the dramatic treatment of Herod and Mariamne, from the sixteenth century to the present time. The author passes in review the dramatisation of the subject by German, English, French, Italian, and Spanish playwrights; and it is noteworthy that none of them has succeeded in producing a first-rate drama on the tragic fate of the hapless queen, although they include such names as Calderon and Voltaire, and in modern times Friedrich Hebbel.

MUSIC.

RECENT CONCERTS.

IN our notice of the Crystal Palace Concert of March 21, we forgot to mention the Concert-piece for pianoforte and orchestra written by Miss Ellicott for the Gloucester Festival of last year. The music shows taste and skill; and when the talented composer's individuality is more fully developed, her aim after simplicity of expression and clearness of form, though at present it may lay her open to the charge of being influenced by the past rather than the present, will bear good fruit. The pianoforte part was neatly and sympathetically interpreted by Miss Sybil Palliser.

Last Saturday Mr. F. H. Cowen's Cantata,

"The Transfiguration," also written for the Gloucester Festival, was performed under the composer's direction. It is with pleasure that we congratulate Mr. Cowen on having produced a work of high aim, and, in a large measure, of successful achievement. There is, it is true, in the music a certain halting between two opinions—Bach and Mendelssohn form, as it were, the basis; while in the structure traces of the master-builder of the nineteenth century are visible. In any music, especially sacred, a mixture of this kind is now almost inevitable. Mr. Cowen, however, works up his thematic material in so skilful a manner, possesses in so high degree the art of instrumentation, and so well avoids the Scylla of complexity and the Charybdis of commonplace, that his work, not patchy in effect, commends itself to musicians and to the public generally. The chorus "O Elder Brother, Come," of graceful character and finished form, is, to our thinking, the most characteristic of all the movements. The libretto by Mr. J. Bennett treats a difficult subject in a skilful manner. The solo vocalists, who all sang well, were Mme. Medora Henson, Miss Greta Williams, and Messrs. Lloyd and Douglas Powell. Mr. Lloyd sang with much enthusiasm.

The last Popular Concert of the season was given on Monday evening. The programme commenced with Mendelssohn's Octet in E flat (Op. 20), played with finish and fervour by Messrs. Joachim, Ries, Kreuz, Burnett, Gibson, Hobday, Ould, and Piatti. This Octet, for a boy half way through his seventeenth year, is not only an extraordinary composition, but in fresh charm and character compares favourably with works written by the master in after years, with the exception, however, of the Overture to "A Midsummer Night's Dream," written about a year later. Dr. Joachim, who in his early days knew Mendelssohn, interprets his music with more than artistic skill—with affection. The programme concluded with Schumann's Quintet (Op. 44), also in E flat, with Mr. Leonard Borwick at the pianoforte, another work which must remind Dr. Joachim of his early career. In the opening movement, the only one we heard, Mr. Borwick interpreted the music with vigour and intelligence, though not quite in the true Schumann vein. As solos he played, and exceedingly well, a clever Prelude and a rather uninteresting Valse by the Russian composer Rachmaninoff. Lady Halle and Dr. Joachim delighted the audience with Bach's Concerto in D minor for two violins, a work in which the composer's heart and head were in equal measure engaged. Mr. David Bispham sang Henschel's fine setting of Heine's "Salomo," Purcell's "Let Formal Lovers," and Schumann's light and pleasing "Der Hidalgo" with skill and feeling.

During the season just brought to a close Mr. Chappell has almost exclusively limited himself to well-known standard works. There are many compositions of interest which other concert-givers, and within recent date, have proved to be well worthy of a hearing; and the manager of the Popular Concerts, while paying due attention to the great masters, ought not only to revive neglected works but to produce good new modern music of whatever nationality. The present is every moment turning into past; and we should not leave to a perhaps distant future the possibility of discovering some neglected composer of great talent, perhaps genius; as in our day Sir G. Grove and Sir A. Sullivan—or ought we to say Schumann?—discovered that Schubert was a great symphonic as well as a great song writer.

J. S. SHEDLOCK.

CADBURY'S Cocoa

Absolutely Pure, therefore Best.

---

CADBURY'S COCOA is appreciated throughout the world as a pure, delicious beverage, free from adulteration, and containing the full nourishing properties of the cocoa bean, one of the most sustaining and invigorating of nature's products. Health says: "Cadbury's Cocoa has in a remarkable degree those natural elements of sustenance which give the system endurance and hardihood."

Referring to a thorough examination recently made by the Lancet, that Journal says:—"The results leave no doubt of its purity and excellence, and show there has been no treatment with fixed alkalies, or with ammonia. . . It represents therefore the standard of highest purity at present attainable in regard to cocoa."

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 1249.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, APRIL 11, 1896.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

TABLE OF CONTENTS.	PAGE
A REPLY TO WELLHAUSEN, by A. W. BENN . . .	207
ALFRED AUSTIN'S ENGLAND'S DARLING, by GEORGE COTTERELL . . .	208
SOME DANTE BOOKS, by PAGET TOYNBEE . . .	209
MME. HANSSON'S MODERN WOMEN, by RANGER GULL . . .	209
NEW NOVELS, by J. B. ALLEN . . .	331
CURRENT LITERATURE . . .	302
NOTES AND NEWS . . .	303
ORIGINAL VERSE: "THE POET'S GRAVE," by MISS BARKER . . .	304
OBITUARY: J. A. NOBLE, by J. S. C. . . .	304
MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS . . .	304
CORRESPONDENCE—
Mons. Badois and Geoffrey of Monmouth, II., by E. W. B. NICHOLSON; On a Pair of Gau'ish Deities, by Whitley Stokes . . .	305
APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK . . .	307
BEDDARD'S MONOGRAPH ON EARTHWORMS, by P. CHALMERS MITCHELL . . .	307
TWO DICTIONARIES . . .	308
SCIENCE NOTES . . .	308
PHILOLOGY NOTES . . .	308
REPORTS OF SOCIETIES . . .	308
TWO BOOKS ON CLASSICAL ARCHAEOLOGY . . .	309
EXCAVATIONS IN EGYPT, by Prof. FLINDERS PETRIE . . .	309
LETTER FROM EGYPT, by A. H. SAYCE . . .	310
NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY . . .	310
STAGE NOTES . . .	311
MUSICAL PUBLICATIONS . . .	311

Library of the late Rev. JOHN OWEN, Rector of East Anstey, N. Devon, Author of "Evenings with the Skeptics," &c.

MESSRS. HODGSON will SELL by AUCTION, at their ROOMS, 115, CHANCERY LANE, W.C., on TUESDAY, April 14th, and Three Following Days, at 1 o'clock, the above LIBRARY, comprising Theology, Philology, Bibliography—French, German, Spanish, and Italian Renaissance Writers—Sets of Publications of the Camden Society, Chaucer Society—Notes and Queries—Encyclopædia Britannica, Ninth Edition—Fine Galleries and Books of Prints—and the usual Standard Works. To be viewed, and Catalogues had.

The Library from Gog-Magog Hills, the Property of His Grace the late DUKE of LEEDS.

MESSRS. SOTHEBY, WILKINSON & HODGE will SELL by AUCTION, at their HOUSE, No. 13, WELLINGTON STREET, STRAND, W.C., on WEDNESDAY, April 15, at 1 o'clock precisely, the LIBRARY from Gog-Magog Hills, Cambridgeshire, the Property of His Grace the late DUKE of LEEDS (sold by order of the Executors, consisting of important Works in the various Branches of English and Foreign Literature—First Editions of the Works of W. H. Ainsworth, Miss Burney, Dickens, Sir Walter Scott, Thackeray, &c., and including Ashmole's Antiquities of Berkshire, 3 vols.—Congreve's Works, 3 vols.—Large Paper—Pine's Horace, "Post Est" Edition, 2 vols.—Racing Calendar, 1750-1850—Chaucer's Hertfordshire—Dugdale's Barons of England, Monasticon Anglicanum, and St. Paul's Cathedral—Shakespeare's Plays, Fourth Edition, 1685—Thoroton's Nottinghamshire—Wycherley's Miscellaneous Poems, Presentation Copy from the Author—Large-Paper Editions of Scarce Works. May be viewed two days prior. Catalogues may be had of the Solicitors, Messrs. Lowe, 2, Temple Gardens, E.C., and of the AUCTIONEERS.

The Valuable Library of ADRIAN HOPE, Esq.

MESSRS. SOTHEBY, WILKINSON & HODGE will SELL by AUCTION, at their HOUSE, No. 13, WELLINGTON STREET, STRAND, W.C., on THURSDAY, April 16, and Four Following Days, at 1 o'clock precisely the Valuable LIBRARY of ADRIAN HOPE, Esq., of Chesterfield Gardens, Mayfair, consisting of Works on the Fine Arts in most Languages, including the Galleries and Museums, and Books illustrated by the most Celebrated Engravers—Classical Antiquities—Picturesque and Antiquarian Voyages and Travels—Works by Standard Authors, English and French—Bibliography—History—English and Foreign Topography—and Works in nearly every Class of Literature, all in handsome Bindings. May be viewed two days prior. Catalogues may be had; if by post, on receipt of six stamps.

A. BAIRD CARTER'S GALLERY, 67, JERMYN STREET.—ON VIEW, RAMBLES in DEVONSHIRE, Water-colour Drawings by Arthur H. Enock, during APRIL, 10 to 6. Admission and catalogue free.

WINTER SEASON, 1896-7.—LAN-TERN LECTURES and others by ERNEST RADFORD, LL.M. Cantab., formerly Secretary of the Arts and Crafts Exhibition Society—For List of Subjects, &c., apply to the LECTURER, care of "The Artist," 14, Parliament Street, Westminster.

ROSE CRAWSHAY'S PRIZES—BYRON, SHELLEY, KEATS. For rules send addressed halfpenny wrapper to her at Bwlen, Breconshire. Book 4s. post free. "Sumptuous volume." "Highly amusing." "Literary curiosity."

Advertisements of Schools, Colleges, Institutions, Fine Arts, &c., see page 295.

MESSRS. J. C. DRUMMOND & CO.,

Art Reproducers,

14, Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, W.C.,

Respectfully invite attention to their various processes as under.

PHOTOGRAVURE.

MESSRS. DRUMMOND & CO. are the sole representatives in Great Britain and Ireland of HERR HANFSTAENGL, of Munich, the well-known Artist in Photogravure. Since its introduction into this country this justly celebrated process has earned a well-merited success, and is now patronised by the leading London Art Publishing Houses. A large collection of important plates always on view. Prices on application.

PROCESS BLOCKS.

MESSRS. DRUMMOND & CO. supply the cheapest and best processes in the market. They are adapted to the purpose of ordinary Book Illustrations, and will be found to meet the requirements of Antiquarians, Archaeologists, and those engaged in the investigation and publication of Parochial and Diocesan Records. They are also being largely used by Manufacturers, Engineering Firms, and others, for advertising purposes.

COLLOTYPE.

MESSRS. DRUMMOND & CO. have pleasure in submitting the following Price List for Reproductions by their

Improved Rapid Photo-Mechanical Process,

FOR THE

REPRODUCTION OF WORKS OF ART, BOOK ILLUSTRATIONS, ORIGINAL MSS., DESIGNS, LACE, MANUFACTURES, PHOTOGRAPHS, MACHINERY, VIEWS, ARTISTIC ADVERTISEMENTS, CATALOGUES, &c., &c.

Size of Paper determines cost.	Price, including Proofs, in Quantities of					If Proofs only are required.
	3,000	1,000	500	250	100
	£ s. d.	£ s. d.	£ s. d.	£ s. d.	£ s. d.	£ s. d.
Demy 8vo...8½ × 5½	7 18 0	3 0 0	2 3 0	1 10 6	1 3 0	0 8 6
Crown 4to...10 × 7½	9 2 6	3 6 6	2 8 6	1 13 6	1 6 0	0 9 0
Demy 4to...11 × 8½	10 10 0	4 1 0	3 0 6	2 3 0	1 10 0	0 10 6
Royal 4to...12 × 10	12 2 6	4 10 6	3 15 6	2 15 0	1 15 0	0 13 0
Imp. 4to...15 × 11	16 10 0	6 6 6	4 14 6	3 4 6	2 1 0	0 15 0
Foolscap...17 × 13½	21 0 0	7 10 0	5 19 6	3 19 6	2 12 0	0 19 6
Crown...20 × 15	24 0 0	9 0 0	7 1 0	4 11 0	2 18 6	1 1 0
Demy...22 × 17	30 0 0	10 10 0	8 5 0	5 5 0	3 7 0	1 5 0

The above charges include paper of good quality.

SPECIAL QUOTATIONS GIVEN FOR SERIES OR LARGE QUANTITIES

Reversed Negatives are preferred when possible for reproduction by this process.

MESSRS. DRUMMOND & CO. will be pleased to effect Insurance of Originals or Negatives against all risks, otherwise they cannot hold themselves liable for any accident that may occur.

Photogravure, Typographic Blocks, and all the Latest Photographic Processes.

J. C. DRUMMOND & CO.,
ART REPRODUCERS,

14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, LONDON.

CATALOGUES FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS

promptly supplied on moderate terms.
CATALOGUES on application.
DULAU & CO., 27, BOND STREET.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE,
IMPORTERS OF FOREIGN BOOKS,
14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN,
20, SOUTH FREDERICK STREET, EDINBURGH,
AND
7, BROAD STREET, OXFORD.
CATALOGUES post free on application.

TH. WOHLLEBEN,
FOREIGN BOOKSELLER,
45, GREAT RUSSELL STREET
(Opposite the British Museum),
Supplies all FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS at the most
moderate prices.
Catalogues on application.

On application for one stamp.
THE INTERNATIONAL BOOKMARKET.
Monthly List of the most important Publications issued by
H. GREVEL & CO.,
Importers of Foreign Books,
33, KING STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C.

Just out, No. 70.
ALBERT JACKSON & SON'S CATA-
LOGUE OF CHOICE, RARE, and STANDARD LIBRARY
BOOKS, recently purchased, gratis and post free, 224, Great Portland
Street, London, W.
N.B.—Established nearly a Quarter of a Century.

AGENCY FOR AMERICAN BOOKS.
G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS, PUBLISHERS
and BOOKSELLERS, of 27 and 29 West 23rd Street, New York, and 24, BEDFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C., desire to call the attention of the READING PUBLIC to the excellent facilities presented by their Branch House in London for filling, on the most favourable terms, orders for their own STANDARD PUBLICA-TIONS and for ALL AMERICAN BOOKS and PERIODICALS—
CATALOGUES sent on application.

IMPORTANT.—PRINTING AND PUBLISHING.
NEWSPAPERS, MAGAZINES, BOOKS,
&c.—KING, SEEL & RAILTON, Limited, high-class Printers
and Publishers, 12, Gough Square, 4, Bolt Court, Fleet Street, E.C.,
have specially-built Rotary and other fast Machines for printing
illustrated or other Publications, and specially-built Machines for fast folding and covering 8, 16, 32, or 52-page Journals at one operation.
Advice and assistance given to anyone wishing to commence New Journals.
Facilities upon the premises for Editorial Offices, free. Advertising and Publishing Departments conducted.
Telephone 56121. Telegraph "Africanism, London."

ESTABLISHED 1861.
BIRKBECK BANK
Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane, London.
TWO AND A HALF per CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS
repayable on demand.
TWO per CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, on the minimum
monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.
STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.
For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposit and allows interest monthly on each completed £1.

BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.
HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE
FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH.

BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY
HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND
FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.

The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post free.
FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

BREAKFAST—SUPPER.
EPPS'S
GRATEFUL—COMFORTING.
COCOA.
BOILING WATER OR MILK.

WM. & GEO. LAW.

COFFEE—SUGAR—TEA.

104, NEW OXFORD STREET, W.C.

THEATRES.

ADELPHI THEATRE.
THIS EVENING, at 8, ONE OF THE BEST. Mr.
William Terriss and Miss Millward. Messrs. W. L. Abingdon, Chas. Fulton, Edward Bass, Julian Cross, L. Delorme, H. Athol, Forde, and Harry Nicholls, &c.; Miss Edith Ostlere, Miss Kate Kearney, Miss Vane Featherston, &c.

AVENUE THEATRE.
THIS EVENING, at 8.15, a Musical Play, THE NEW BARMAID. Mr. J. L. Shine; Messrs. Harrison Brock-bank, J. J. Dallas, Fitzroy Morgan, E. Dagnall, C. Rowan,
C. Wilford, J. Thompson; Misses Jennie Rogers, Maggie
Hunt, Maria Baker, Edith Denton, Ethel Gain, Agnes Ingreville, and Miss Lottie Collins.

COMEDY THEATRE.
THIS EVENING, at 9, A MOTHER OF THREE. Mr.
Felix Morris, Mr. Stuart Champion, Mr. C. Blakiston, Mr.
Cosmo Stuart, and Mr. Cyril Maude; Miss Rose Leclercq, Miss Esme Beringer, Miss Audrey Ford, Miss L. Johnson,
Miss A. Goward, Miss Mackenzie, and Miss Fanny Brough.
Preceded at 8, by THE GUINEA STAMP. Mr. Ernest Cosham, Mr. Stuart Champion, Mr. Cosmo Stuart; Miss
May Edoulin, Miss J. Bateman.

COURT THEATRE.
THIS EVENING, at 9, MRS. PONDERBURY. Messrs.
Charles Hawtrey, Eric Lewis, Brandon Thomas, W. Wyse,
Willis Searle, Wm. F. Hawtrey, Aubrey Fitzgerald; Mesdames Lottie Venn, Violet Lytster, Evelyn Harrison, and Mrs. John Wood. Preceded at 8, by A HIGHLAND LEGACY. Messrs. Brandon Thomas, E. W. Farver, Miss Florence Haydon, &c.

DUKE OF YORK'S THEATRE.
THIS EVENING, at 8, THE GAY PARISIENNE.
Messrs. Lionel Rignold, Frank Wheeler, Edgar Stevens, and W. H. Denny; Mesdames Ada Reeve, Violet Robinson, Louie Freear, and Lillie Behmore.

GAIETY THEATRE.
THIS EVENING, at 8, THE SHOP GIRL. Messrs.
Seymour Hicks, Colin Coop, W. J. Manning, Willie Warde, George Mudie, Robert Nainby, F. Stayton, L. Mackinder, and Arthur Williams; Misses Katie Seymour, Maria Davis,
E. Spiller, Kate Adams, Grace Palotta, M. Russell, Florence
Lloyd, M. Stantley, K. Yuddall, and Ethel Haydon.

GLOBE THEATRE.
THIS EVENING, at 9, CHARLEY'S AUNT. Messrs.
F. Newton-Lindo, W. Everard, Sydney Paxton, Farmer, C.
Thornbury, and Reeves-Smith; Misses Ada Branson, Kimmie Merrick, Kate Graves, A. L. Aumonier, R. Kildare, and Mabel Lane. At 8, THE JOURNEY'S END.

HAYMARKET THEATRE.
THIS EVENING, at 8.30, TRILBY. Mr. Tree, Mr.
Lionel Brough, Mr. E. Maurice, Mr. H. V. Esmond, Mr.
C. M. Hallard, Mr. Holman Clark, Mr. Gayer Mackay, Mr.
Berte Thomas, Mr. H. Ross, Mr. Allan, Mr. Gerald Du Maurier; Miss Frances Ivor, Miss Rosina Filippi, and Miss Dorothea Baird.

LYCEUM THEATRE.
THIS EVENING, at 8.45, FOR THE CROWN. Preceded, at 8, by SHADES OF NIGHT. Mr. Forbes
Robertson, Mr. Charles Dalton, Mr. Mackintosh, Mr. Ian
Robertson, Mr. Frank Gilmour, Mr. Fisher White, Mr. J.
Willes, Mr. Murray Hathorn; Miss Winifred Emory, Miss Henrietta Watson, Miss Sarah Brooks, Miss Weyburn, Mrs.
Patrick Campbell.

LYRIC THEATRE.
Mr. Wilson Barrett's Season.
TO-DAY, at 2.30 and 8.15, THE SIGN OF THE CROSS.
Mr. Wilson Barrett, Miss Maud Jeffries, and Company.

OLYMPIC THEATRE.
THIS EVENING, at 7.45, TRUE BLUE; or, Adios and Ashore. Messrs. A. Bucklaw, W. Rignold, E. O'Neill, C.
Wibrow, J. A. Bonham, A. E. Raynor, F. De Lara, J. Wildiomb, J. F. Cornish, Teedale, Brennan, Bertram, Callaen, Everard Taylor, &c.; Mrs. Raleigh, Misses Laura Graves, M. Huntley, M. Bates, E. Rutland, and K. Phillips.

OPERA COMIQUE.
THIS EVENING, at 8.15, SHAMUS O'BRIEN. Messrs.
Denis O'Sullivan, William Stephens, Joseph O'Mara, C.
Magrath, F. Fisher; Mdmes. Kirby Lunn, Maggie Davies.

ST. JAMES'S THEATRE.
THIS EVENING, at 8, THE PRISONER OF ZENDA.
Mr. George Alexander, Messrs. Herbert Waring, W. H.
Vernon, Allan Aynesworth, Laurence Cantley, W. H. Day,
Vincent Sternroyd, Arthur Boyston, Henry Loraine, George
P. Hawtrey, George Bancroft, Charles Glenney; Miss Evelyn Millard, Miss Olga Brandon, Miss Mabel Hackney, Miss Lily Hanbury.

SAVOY THEATRE.
THIS EVENING, at 8.20, THE GRAND DUKE.
Messrs. Rutland Barrington, C. Kenningham, Scott Fiske,
Scott Russell, J. Hewson, and Walter Passmore; Mesdames
Ilka Palmay, Florence Perry, Emmie Owen, and Rosina
Brandram. At 7.40, AFTER ALL.

SHAFESBURY THEATRE.
THIS EVENING, at 8, THE SIN OF ST. HULDA.
Messrs. Lewis Waller, Chas. Cartwright, Henry Kemble,
Frank Thornton, Kenneth Black; Misses Annie Webster,
Helena Dacre, Sheridan, Mrs. Arthur Ayers, and Miss Kate Rorke.

TERRY'S THEATRE.
TO-DAY, at 3 and 8.45, JEDBURY JUNR. Messrs. F.
Kerr, John Beauchamp, Arthur Playfair, Gilbert Farquhar,
J. L. Mackay, G. E. Bellamy, A. L. Robinson, E. Beecher; Mesdames Eva Moore, Emily Cross, Elsie Chester, and Maude Millett. At 8, Miss Nellie Ganthony in her new Sketch, OUTWARD BOUND.

THE SOLICITORS' JOURNAL.

THE ORGAN OF BOTH BRANCHES OF THE LEGAL PROFESSION.

ESTABLISHED 1857.
Published every Friday. Price 6d.

Of the general contents of the JOURNAL the following statement will afford some idea:—

CURRENT TOPICS.

Discussions of the legal events of the week.

LEADING ARTICLES.

Essays upon branches of law and matters of professional interest.

CASES OF THE WEEK.

Short original reports, by Barristers specially engaged for the purpose, of cases of importance decided during the current week.

PENDING LEGISLATION.

All important measures before Parliament are summarised in this department.

LEGISLATION OF THE YEAR.

Under this head careful criticisms are given of the legislative results of the Session.

REVIEWS.

New legal works are elaborately noticed in this department.

NEW ORDERS, &c.

In this department are given all new Rules and Orders; in some cases before they can be obtained by the public.

GENERAL CORRESPONDENCE.

A medium for the interchange of ideas between members of the profession.

COURTS.

Special reports of cases decided by the Railway Commission. Selected cases in the County Courts are also reported. All important decisions on Election Petitions are reported, and notes are given of decisions of importance in the Revising Barristers' Courts.

SOLICITORS' CASES.

Full reports (furnished specially by Barristers) of applications against Solicitors.

APPOINTMENTS AND OBITUARY.

Pains are taken to render these accurate and complete.

SOCIETIES AND INSTITUTIONS.

Full reports of the proceedings of the Law Societies.

A Careful Summary is given of all the Legal News of the Week, and special attention is bestowed on Furnishing Early Copies of all Court Papers.

ANNUAL SUBSCRIPTIONS.

SOLICITORS' JOURNAL ONLY, 28s.; by post, 28s., when paid in advance. Single Number, 6d.

SOLICITORS' JOURNAL and WEEKLY REPORTER,
£2 12s., post-free, when paid in advance.

WEEKLY REPORTER, in Wrapper, £2 12s., post-free Single Number, 1s.

The Solicitors' Journal and Reporter can be ordered from any date.

Cheques and Post Office Orders payable to H. VILLERS
OFFICE: 27, CHANCERY LANE, W.C.

VINOLIA GUARANTEED
HARMLESS.

FOR ITCHING, FACE SPOTS,

ECZEMA. 1s 11d. a box.

Digitized by Google

MANCHESTER COLLEGE, OXFORD.

An OPEN THEOLOGICAL SCHOLARSHIP, of the annual value of £75 (tenable for 1, 2, or 3 years) is OFFERED by the Dr. DANIEL JONES TRUSTEES for COMPETITION. Examination October 15th to 18th. For particulars apply to the SECRETARY, 1, St. James's Square, Manchester.

MANCHESTER COLLEGE, OXFORD.

"The College adheres to its original principle of freely imparting Theological knowledge, without insisting on the adoption of particular Theological doctrines."

CANDIDATES for ADMISSION are requested to forward their applications and testimonials to the SECRETARIES. The Trustees OFFER for COMPETITION EXTERNAL EXHIBITIONS, open to STUDENTS for the MINISTRY, tenable for the ordinary undergraduate period at any approved British or Irish University.

The Trustees also OFFER EXHIBITIONS, tenable at the College, for STUDENTS for the MINISTRY.

For further particulars apply to the PRINCIPAL, or to

Rev. H. EVELYN DOWSON, B.A.,

Geese Cross, Hyde, } Secretaries.
A. H. WORTHINGTON, B.A.,
1, St. James's Square, Manchester.

UNIVERSITY of LONDON.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN, that the NEXT HALF-YEARLY EXAMINATION for MATRICULATION in this University will commence on MONDAY, the 8th of June, 1896. In addition to the Examination at the University, Provincial Examinations will be held at University College, Aberystwyth; University College, Bangor; The Modern School, Bedford; Mason College, Birmingham; University College, Bristol; Dumfries College (for University College), Carlisle; The Ladies' College, Cheltenham (for Ladies only); St. Gregory's College, Devon; The Heriot-Watt College, Edinburgh; The Royal Medical College, Exeter; The County College, Hereford; The Yorkshire College, Leeds; The Weymouth College, Leicester; St. Edward's College, Liverpool; University College, Liverpool; The Owens College, Manchester; Rutherford College, Newcastle-on-Tyne; University College, Nottingham; The Athenaeum, Plymouth; The Convent of the Sacred Heart, Romsey; Firth College, Sheffield; St. George's College, and St. Catherine's College, Ushaw.

Every Candidate is required to apply to the REGISTRAR (University of London, Burlington Gardens, London, W.) for a Form of Entry not less than five weeks before the commencement of the Examination.

April 7th, 1896. ARTHUR MILMAN, M.A., LL.D., Registrar.

ST. BARTHOLOMEW'S HOSPITAL and COLLEGE.

The SUMMER SESSION will BEGIN on FRIDAY, MAY 1, 1896. The Hospital contains a service of 750 beds (including 75 for Convalescents at Hareley). Students may reside in the College, within the Hospital walls, subject to the College regulations.

Scholarships of the aggregate value of over £800 are awarded annually, and Students entering in May can compete for the Entrance Scholarships in September.

For full particulars apply to the WARDEN of the College, St. Bartholomew's Hospital, E.C.

A Handbook forwarded on application.

MASON COLLEGE, BIRMINGHAM.*FACULTY OF SCIENCE.*RESEARCH SCHOLARSHIPS.

Founded by the late T. Aubrey Bowen, Esq., of Melbourne, Australia. The object of these SCHOLARSHIPS is to encourage higher work and research in scientific professional engineering and in chemical and metallurgical science.

APPLICATIONS, supported by details of educational training and references to former teachers and others, should be sent in to the REGISTRAR on or before the 1st of June, 1896. The Awards will be made in September next, and the Scholarships will be tenable during the Session 1896-97.

(a) THREE BOWEN SCHOLARSHIPS in ENGINEERING of the value of £100 each.

(b) ONE BOWEN SCHOLARSHIP in METALLURGY of the value of £100.

(c) THREE FLETCHER SCHOLARSHIPS in CHEMISTRY of the value of £100 each.

Further particulars may be obtained on application to the REGISTRAR.

ROYAL INSTITUTION of GREAT BRITAIN, Albemarle Street, Piccadilly, W.

TUESDAY NEXT (April 14), at 3 o'clock.—PROFESSOR JAMES SULLY, M.A., LL.D., FIRST of THREE LECTURES on "CHILD-STUDY and EDUCATION." Half-a-Guinea the Course.

THURSDAY (April 16), at 3 o'clock.—PROFESSOR DEWAR, M.A., LL.D., F.R.S., Fullerton Professor of Chemistry, R.I.—FIRST of THREE LECTURES on "RECENT CHEMICAL PROGRESS." Half-a-Guinea.

SATURDAY (April 18), at 3 o'clock.—PROFESSOR W. R. RICHMOND, R.A.—FIRST of THREE LECTURES on "THE VAULT of the SIXTINE CHAPEL." Half-a-Guinea.

Subscription to all the Courses in the Season, Two Guineas.

FRIDAY (April 17), at 9 o'clock.—M. G. LIPPMANN, Membre de l'Institut (France).—"COLOUR PHOTOGRAPHY."

To the Friday Evening Meetings Members and their Friends only are admitted.

McGILL UNIVERSITY, MONTREAL.*CLASSICAL DEPARTMENT.

It is intended to make Two Additional Appointments to the Staff of the above Department in the course of the summer—one a PROFESSORSHIP or ASSOCIATE PROFESSORSHIP, the other a LECTURESHIP.—For particulars apply to J. W. BRACKENRIDGE, B.C.L., Acting-Secretary.

SAPELLNIKOFF will give THREE

PIANOFORTE RECITALS (under the direction of Mr. EUGEN CAVOUR) at ST. JAMES'S HALL, on TUESDAY AFTERNOON, April 14th; THURSDAY AFTERNOON, April 23rd; TUESDAY AFTERNOON, May 5th, at 3 p.m. Steinway Grand Pianoforte. Tickets 10s. 6d., 5s., 2s., and 1s., of Basil Tree, St. James's Hall; Chappell; Leason & Oller; Keith, Prowse; Robert Newman, Queen's Hall; and of the Concert Direction Ernest Cavour, 136, Adelaide Road, N.W.

ST. EDWARD'S SCHOOL, near

OXFORD.—Public School, founded 1883, to provide Education for Gentlemen's Sons in Preparation for Universities, Army, &c., on definite Church principles. Fees: £80 per annum (Bos of Clergyman £60). Day Boys, 21 guineas. Classical and Modern sides, scholarships, July 29th.—Rev. T. F. HOSKIN, M.A., Warden.

PRIFYSGOL CYMRU. UNIVERSITY OF WALES.

The UNIVERSITY COURT is about to proceed to the ELECTION of EXTERNAL EXAMINERS in the following Departments for the year 1896:—

GREEK LANGUAGE and LITERATURE.
LATIN LANGUAGE and LITERATURE.
ENGLISH LANGUAGE and LITERATURE.
WELSH LANGUAGE and LITERATURE.
FRENCH LANGUAGE and LITERATURE.
GERMAN LANGUAGE and LITERATURE.
HEBREW LANGUAGE and LITERATURE.
HISTORY.
PHILOSOPHY.
MATHEMATICS.
PHYSICS.
CHEMISTRY.
BOTANY.
ZOOLOGY.

Candidates must send in their names to the REGISTRAR, with any attestation of their qualifications they may think desirable, on or before WEDNESDAY, APRIL 15th.

Information in regard to the work and stipends of Examiners may be obtained on application to Ivor JAMES, Registrar.
University Offices,
Town Hall Chambers, Newport, Mon.
March 11th, 1896.

ST. PAUL'S SCHOOL.—An EXAMINATION

NATION for filling up VACANCIES on the Foundation will be held on the 8th MAY NEXT.—For information apply to the BURSAR, St. Paul's School, West Kensington.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY.

Recent Issues of Permanent Autotype Reproductions.

THE NATIONAL GALLERY, LONDON.

A completely New Series of the Chief Works in this Collection. Each print measures about 18 by 15 inches, and is sold separately, price 12s.

VELASQUEZ and MURILLO.

A Selection of the Works of these Painters, included in the Spanish Exhibition at the New Gallery. The same size and price as the above.

ALBERT DÜRER.

A Series of Autotype Facsimiles of the Finest Proofs of this Master's Work in the Department of Prints and Drawings, British Museum. The copies are in all cases of the exact size of the original copperplates.

Now Published for the First Time in Autotype.

WORKS by DANTE GABRIEL ROSSETTI.

Sir EDWARD BURN-JONES, and ALBERT MOORE. Including the "Blessed Damsel," "Proserpine," "The Lamp of Memory," "Venue's Looking Glass," "Wine of Circe," &c., &c.

NOW READY.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY'S FINE-ART

CATALOGUE, of 184 pages, and REVISED ILLUSTRATED SUPPLEMENT, containing 88 Miniature Reproductions of Selected Autotypes, price, post-free, One Shilling.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY,

74, NEW OXFORD STREET,
LONDON, W.O.

MESSRS. J. C. DRUMMOND & CO., ART REPRODUCERS,

14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C.

Are the sole representatives in Great Britain of

HERR HANFSTAENGL, of Munich.

the well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAPHY now patronised by the leading London Art Publishing Firms. A large Collection of important Plates always on view.

Process Blocks for the purpose of Ordinary Book Illustrations.

Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. supply the cheapest and best Processes in the market, which are specially adapted to meet the wants of Antiquarians, Archaeologists, and those engaged in the investigation and publication of Parochial and Diocesan Records.

J. C. DRUMMOND & CO. invite attention to their

Improved Rapid Photo-Mechanical Process

For the Reproduction of Works of Art, Original MSS., Designs, Lace Manufactures, Photographs, Views, Book Illustrations, Artistic Advertisements, Catalogues, &c., &c., at a moderate cost. Specimens and price list on Application.

Offices: 14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, LONDON.

THE ZOOLOGICAL SOCIETY'S GAR-

DENS, Regent's Park, are OPEN DAILY (except Sundays) from 9 a.m. till sunset. Admission, 1s.; on Mondays, 6d.; children, 3d. Amongst the recent additions are a young Manatee from the Amazons and a Lion presented by Rowland Ward, Esq., F.Z.S.

THE AUTHOR'S MANUAL. By PERCY

RUSSELL. With Prefatory Remarks by Mr. GLADSTONE. Crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d. net. (EIGHTH and CHEAPER EDITION.) With Portrait.

"Mr. Russell's book is a very complete manual and guide for journalist and author. It is not a merely practical work—it is literary and appreciative of literature in its best sense.... We have little else but praise for the volume."—Westminster Review.

DIOSY, LONG & Co., 18, Boulevard Street, London, E.C.

ROYAL LITERARY FUND.

The EARL of CREWE, President of the Corporation, will preside at the 100th ANNIVERSARY DINNER to be held at the WHITE-HALL ROOMS, HOTEL METROPOL, S.W., on WEDNESDAY May 6th, at 7 for 7.30 p.m. precisely.

The LORD BISHOP of PETERBOROUGH

Will respond for the Toast of "Literature."

FIRST LIST OF STEWARDS.

F. E. ARMITSTEAD, ESQ.
W. A. BAILWARD, ESQ.
ALFRED BALDWIN, ESQ., M.P.
EDWARD BELL, ESQ.
EDWARD BENLEY, ESQ.
MR. WALTER BEAST.
HENRY L. BISCHOFFSHEIM, ESQ.
JAMES TAIT BLACK, ESQ.
J. ALEXANDER BLACKIE, ESQ.
HON. GEORGE C. BRIDGECROFT, D.C.L. (Warden of Merton).
T. R. BUCHANAN, ESQ., M.P.
C. F. CLAY, ESQ.
C. A. CRIPPS, ESQ., Q.C., M.P.
W. E. DARWIN, ESQ.
AUSTIN DOBSON, ESQ.
H. ARTHUR DOUGLASS, ESQ.
FRANCIS GALT, ESQ., F.R.S.
JOHN P. GARNOT, ESQ.
F. W. GIBBS, ESQ., C.B., Q.C.
RUDOLPH GLOVER, ESQ., F.R.A.
PROFESSOR F. S. GRANGER, LITT.D.
FREDERIC HARRISON, ESQ.
OTTO KYLMANN, ESQ.
RIGHT HON. SIR JOHN LUBBOCK, BART., M.P., D.C.L., F.R.S.
FREDERICK MACMILLAN, ESQ.
PROFESSOR F. S. MAITLAND, LL.D.
HARRY H. MARK, ESQ.
SIR THEODORE MARTIN, K.C.B., LL.D.
SIR JOHN EVERETT MILLAIS, BART., P.R.A.
JOHN MURRAY, ESQ., F.R.A.
J. C. PARKINSON, ESQ.
E. H. PENNIE, ESQ., Q.C.
CHARLES ROBERT RIVINGTON, ESQ., F.R.A.
ALFRED DE ROTHSCHILD, ESQ.
LEONARD DE ROTHSCHILD, ESQ.
FLEETWOOD SANDERMAN, ESQ.
HUGH STOWELL SCOTT, ESQ. (Henry Aston Merriman).
FREDERICK SEEBORN, ESQ.
A. MURRAY SMITH, ESQ.
REGINALD J. SMITH, ESQ., Q.C.
HENRY VATES THOMPSON, ESQ.
HON. LIONEL A. TOLLEMACHE.
MR. ALDERMAN F. TRELHOAR.
RIGHT HON. SIR G. TREVILLYAN, BART., M.P.
T. FISHER UNWIN, ESQ.
W. FRUING WARNE, ESQ.

The Anniversary Committee will be glad of an early reply from those gentlemen who have been invited to act as Stewards.

A. LLEWELYN ROBERTS, Secretary.

7, Adelphi Terrace, W.C.

PARTNERSHIP or INVESTMENT

OFFERED in a Journal which will become a very big business. Influential support. Profits large. Non-speculative.—Environ, S. H. Benson's Advertising Office, 123, Fleet Street, E.C.

GOETHE'S FAUST.—A COURSE of

FIVE LECTURES on "FAUST" will be given at the Chelsea Centre of the University Extension Society by Mr. J. W. HEAFLAM, F.R.S., of King's College, Cambridge, on TUESDAY, at 5.15 p.m. at the SOUTH-WEST LONDON POLYTECHNIC INSTITUTE, CHELSEA, beginning APRIL 21st. Tickets for the Course, 10s., may be obtained at the Polytechnic, or from the Hon. Sec., R. G. TAYLOR, 87, Cadogan Gardens, S.W.

PERFECT SET of TANAGRA GREEK

STATUETTES and ARCHAIOS to SELL, including exquisite tiny Cupid with outspread wings.—Apply HELLAS, Young's Library, Kensington.

DUGDALE'S MONASTICON, complete

edition, with Illustrations, 1848, 8 vols., half-bound, excellent condition, 20s.—Balaide, LORD RATHENAN, earliest edition, complete, 2s.—Advertiser, Salt Library, Stafford.

PICTURE PRESERVATION & RESTORATION

—For advice and full particulars address C. H. MIDFORTH, Studio, 268, Devonshire Road, Honor Oak Park, S.E.

TO INVALIDS.—A LIST of MEDICAL

MEN in all parts, willing to RECEIVE RESIDENT PATIENTS, giving full particulars and terms, sent gratis. The list includes private asylums, &c.; schools also recommended.—Address Mr. G. B. BROOKER & Co., Lancaster Place, Strand, W.C.

WANTED, to PURCHASE, fine PIC-

TURES, in OIL, by Old Masters of the Dutch, Flemish, and British schools.—Downhewell, 100, New Bond Street, W.

TYPE-WRITING.—MSS. of every

description COPIED. Special attention to work requiring care. Examination Questions, Notices, &c., by DUPLICATING process. Usual terms.—Miss THOMAS, 5, Cautley Avenue, Clapham Common, S.W.

8, HART STREET, BLOOMSBURY, LONDON.

MR. GEORGE REDWAY, formerly of

York Street, Covent Garden, and late Director and Manager of Kegan Paul, Trench, Trübner & Co., Limited, begs to announce that he has RESUMED BUSINESS as a PUBLISHER on his own account, and will be glad to hear from Authors with MSS. ready for publication, and to consider proposals for New Books. Address as above.

THE AUTHOR'S HAIRLESS PAPER.

PAD. (The LEADENHALL PRESS, Ltd., 50, Leadenhall Street, London, E.C.)

Contains hairless paper, over which the pen slips with perfect freedom. Sixpence each. 5s. per dozen, ruled or plain.

NOW READY.—Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

At all Booksellers and Libraries.

NEW NOVEL BY DORA RUSSELL.*A FATAL PAST

By the Author of "Footprints in the Snow," "The Vicar's Governess," "Beneath the Wave," &c., &c.

SIMPSON, MARSHALL, HAMILTON, KENT & Co., Limited.

BOOKS FOR THE COUNTRY AND SEASIDE.

A SELECTION FROM Bentley's Favourite Novels.

Uniformly bound, each in One Volume,
crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

By MAARTEN MAARTENS.

MY LADY NOBODY.
"GOD'S FOOL."
THE SIN OF JOOST AVELINGH.
AN OLD MAID'S LOVE.
THE GREATER GLORY.

By ROSA N. CAREY.

SIR GODFREY'S GRAND-DAUGHTERS.
BASIL LYNTHURST.
LOVER OR FRIEND?
MARY ST. JOHN.
WOODED AND MARRIED.
NELLIE'S MEMORIES.
BARBARA HEATHCOTE'S TRIAL.
HERIOT'S CHOICE.
NOT LIKE OTHER GIRLS.
ONLY THE GOVERNESS.
QUEENIE'S WHIM.
ROBERT ORD'S ATONEMENT.
UNCLE MAX.
WEE WIFIE.
FOR LILIAS.

By MARY CHOLMONDELEY.

DIANA TEMPEST.
SIR CHARLES DANVERS.

By MARY LINSKILL.

BETWEEN THE HEATHER AND THE NORTHERN SEA.
THE HAVEN UNDER THE HILL.
IN EXCHANGE FOR A SOUL.
TALES OF THE NORTH RIDING.
CLEVEDEN.

By RHODA BROUGHTON.

SCYLLA OR CHARYBDIS?
A BEGINNER.
MRS. BLIGH.
COMETH UP AS A FLOWER.
GOOD-BYE, SWEETHEART!
NANCY.
JOAN.
NOT WISELY, BUT TOO WELL.
RED AS A ROSE IS SHE.
SECOND THOUGHTS.
BELINDA.
"DOCTOR CUPID."
ALAS!

By JESSIE FOTHERGILL.

FROM MOOR ISLES.
ALDYTH.
THE "FIRST VIOLIN."
BORDERLAND.
KITH AND KIN.
PROBATION.

By FLORENCE MONTGOMERY.

MISUNDERSTOOD.
THROWN TOGETHER.
SEAFORTH.

By L. DOUGALL.

THE MADONNA OF A DAY.

Each in One Volume, crown 8vo, cloth, 6s., at all Booksellers and Railway Bookstalls in Town or Country.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington Street
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

NOW READY.

Classes and Masses; Or, Wealth, Wages, and Welfare in the United Kingdom.

A Handbook of Social Facts for Political Thinkers and Speakers.

By W. H. MALLOCK,
Author of "Labour and the Popular Welfare."
Crown 8vo, cloth, illustrated, price 3s. 6d.

NOW READY.

Strikes and Social Problems.

By J. SHIELD NICHOLSON, M.A., D.Sc.,
Professor of Political Economy in the University
of Edinburgh.

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 3s. 6d.

NOW READY.

Christianity and History

By ADOLF HARNAACK.
Translated, with the Author's sanction,
By THOMAS BAILEY SAUNDERS,
With an Introductory Note.

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 1s. 6d. net.

NOW READY.

Father Archangel of Scotland, And Other Essays.

By R. B. CUNNINGHAME GRAHAM,
Author of "Notes on the District of Menteith"

AND
GABRIELA CUNNINGHAME GRAHAM,
Author of "Santa Teresa, her Life and Times."

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 4s. 6d.

NOW READY.

A Woman with a Future

By Mrs. ANDREW DEAN,
Author of "The Grasshoppers."

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 3s. 6d.; paper covers, price 2s. 6d.

NOW READY.

Oh, What a Plague is Love!

By KATHARINE TYNAN,
Author of "An Isle in the Water."
Crown 8vo, cloth, price 3s. 6d.

NOW READY.

Gobelin Grange.

By HAMILTON DRUMMOND.

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 6s.

NOW READY.

A Question of Degree.

By CAROLINE FOTHERGILL,
Author of "The Comedy of Cecilia."

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 3s. 6d.

A. & C. BLACK, SOHO SQUARE, LONDON.

MACMILLAN & CO'S NEW BOOKS

ILLUSTRATED STANDARD NOVELS.

GRYLL GRANGE. By Thomas
LOVE PEACOCK. Illustrated by F. H. TOWNSEND.
With an Introduction by GEORGE SAINTSBURY.
Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

16mo, 1s. cloth; 1s. 6d., Persian, each volume.

TENNYSON'S POEMS. The People's Edition. Vol. XI., THE BROOK, and other Poems. Vol. XII., IDYLLS OF THE KING, Part I.

EVERSLEY SERIES.—New Volumes.

HISTORY of the ENGLISH
PEOPLE. By J. R. GREEN, M.A. Vol. V., PURITAN
ENGLAND, 1603-1644. Globe 8vo, 6s.

THE POETICAL WORKS of WILLIAM WORDSWORTH. Edited by WILLIAM
KNIGHT. To be completed in 16 volumes. Vols. 1.
and II. Globe 8vo, 6s.

GLOBE.—"There appears to be no doubt that, when finished, this issue of the works of Wordsworth will, for fulness and accuracy, hold the field."

Royal 8vo, 1s. net.

A HISTORY of MANKIND.

By Professor FRIEDRICH RATZEL. Translated from the Second German Edition by A. J. BUTLER,
M.A. With a Preface by E. B. TYLOR, D.C.L.
Part VII. (To be completed in 30 Monthly Parts.)
Illustrated.

8vo, 17s. net.

THE LABOUR QUESTION in BRITAIN. By PAUL DE ROUSIERS, Author of
"American Life." With a Preface by HENRI DE TOURVILLE. Translated by F. L. D. HERBERT-SON, B.A.

Demy 4to, 6s. net.

A SYNOPSIS of the GOSPELS
in GREEK. After the Westcott and Hort Text. By the Rev. ARTHUR WRIGHT, M.A., Fellow and Tutor of Queen's College, Cambridge, Author of "The Composition of the Four Gospels."

THE

JEWISH QUARTERLY REVIEW.

Edited by I. ABRAHAMS and C. G. MONTEFIORE.
Vol. VIII. APRIL. No. 31.

Price 3s. 6d.; Annual Subscription, post free, 11s.

Contents:—Some Aspects of Rabbinic Theology. VI.
The Torah in its Aspect of Law. By S. SCHWARTZ.
Poetry: Passover Hymn, and Light and Darkness. Translated by Mrs. HENRY LUCAS; The Burning of the Law.
Translated by Miss NINA DAVIS—The Cotton Grotto: an Ancient Quarry in Jerusalem. By ORAUS ADLER—Dr.
Wiener on the Dietary Laws. By C. G. MONTEFIORE—Yedaya Bedarsai, a Fourteenth Century Hebrew Poet and Philosopher. By J. CHOTZKOW—Inedited Chapters of Jehudah Hadassai's "Eshkol Hakofer." By Prof. W.
BACHWITZ—Johann Beuchlin, the Father of the Study of Hebrew among Christians. By S. A. HIRSCH—A Collation of Armenian Texts of the Testaments of (1) Judah; (2)
Dan; (3) Joseph; (4) Benjamin. By F. C. CONYBEARE—Critical Notices—Miscellaneous.

MACMILLAN & CO., LIMITED, LONDON.

Just published, crown 8vo, illustrated, price 2s. 6d.

WILLIAM KNIBB,
Missionary in Jamaica.
A MEMOIR.

Introduction by the Rev. J. G. GREENHOUGH, M.A.
By Mrs. JOHN JAMES SMITH.

People's Edition, price 6d., with Portrait. (Special terms for quantities.)

JOSEPH MAZZINI.

A Memoir by E. A. V.

With TWO ESSAYS by MAZZINI—
"THOUGHTS ON DEMOCRACY"

AND

"THE DUTIES OF MAN."

"In its new form it should have thousands of new readers."—Weekly Dispatch.

LONDON: ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD,
21 AND 22, FURNIVAL STREET, E.C.

SATURDAY, APRIL 11, 1896.

No. 1249, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

A REPLY TO WELLHAUSEN.

Sanctuary and Sacrifice: a Reply to Wellhausen. By the Rev. W. L. Baxter, D.D. (Eyre & Spottiswoode).

DR. BAXTER is a Stalwart of traditionalism. He believes that the whole law, both Levitical and Deuteronomic, was written by Moses, acting as the secretary of the Creator. Of course, he has a right to his own opinion, just as he has a right to believe, if he likes, that the Book of Enoch quoted by Jude was really written by the seventh from Adam. But he is not the best qualified person to reply to Wellhausen. There is an epigram by a countryman of Dr. Baxter, the late James Hannay, which, if I remember rightly, runs as follows:

"You answer Renan? That you cannot do.
We only answer when we're spoken to,
And Renan speaks to scholars, not to you."

I do not say that Dr. Baxter is not a scholar. Perhaps before this review is finished, some facts may be laid before the reader enabling him to form an opinion of his own on that point. What I mean is, that Wellhausen writes for a public of scholars who are already convinced that the Deuteronomic Law originated during or not long before the reign of Josiah. His object is to prove that, so much being granted, a later instead of an earlier date must be assigned to the Levitical Code. He also assumes that the latter document is a distinct composition due to a different author, which, along with several other points taken for granted throughout his Prolegomena, would be freely admitted by the critics whom he addresses. Such a procedure is perfectly justifiable, and even necessary; for no progress could be made in science if each successive investigator had to demonstrate the whole series of propositions presupposed by his conclusions. Of course, the elementary demonstrations are forthcoming, but they must be sought for in elementary treatises. As regards the date of Deuteronomy in particular, Canon Driver's recent Commentary does all that is needed, and those who hold the opinions of Dr. Baxter would be much better employed in replying to it than to Wellhausen. But perhaps they have a wholesome fear of venturing within reach of the Canon's velvet paw. If, however, they give up Deuteronomy, there seems no reason why they should stickle for the Mosaic authorship of Leviticus. As theologians, it must be tolerably indifferent to them whether it was "forged" (if they insist on using that word) in the age of Solomon or in the age of Ezra.

So much being premised, I must next observe that this volume deals only with less than a sixth of Wellhausen's work, while it exceeds that portion in bulk by a ratio of about four to one. Abuse of the plaintiff's attorney is, as usual, responsible for a good deal of padding. Dr. Baxter is not remarkable for urbanity. Like Boswell, he doubtless objects to "treating an infidel writer with smooth civility," and presumably he considers Wellhausen no better than an infidel. Moreover, as if his language was not sufficiently violent, he makes up for the absence of intonation and gesture by a free use of italics and small capitals. As for the substance of his argument, it consists for the most part in refuting what has not been asserted, and in proving what has not been denied. When Wellhausen completes or modifies one statement by means of another, he is accused of self-contradiction; if he qualifies an assertion, the qualifications are omitted; if he quotes a Scriptural writer as good evidence for the beliefs and customs of his own time, this is twisted into an admission that the writer in question is an unimpeachable historical authority for all times; when his proofs are too strong to be otherwise met, they are garbled or omitted. Finally, he, the plainest and simplest of writers, is perpetually taunted with being grandiloquent, and his work, a model of concision, is described as "a huge volume."

To go through Dr. Baxter's replies seriatim would require far more space than I can dispose of; nor am I concerned to maintain the soundness in every point of Wellhausen's theory considered as a contribution to the religious history of the Jews. The late date of the Levitical Law, which alone the apologist is interested in denying, has been established by considerations which occupy a very small part of his attention. Take the famous passage in Amos: "Did ye offer unto Me sacrifices and meat-offerings in the wilderness forty years, O house of Israel?" No unprejudiced person can doubt that the prophet who wrote those words had never seen or heard of the Priestly Code. Kittel thinks that it may nevertheless have existed in his time; but such an alternative is not open to one who believes, as Dr. Baxter does, in the shepherd's inspiration. What, then, is his explanation? Why, that God had ordained a sacrificial ritual, but that the people preferred worshipping Moloch and the host of heaven (p. 186). In point of fact, neither form of idolatry is ever mentioned in the Pentateuchal narrative as having been actually practised in the wilderness; nor, had such an aberration occurred, would it exlude the daily offering of sacrifices to Jahveh prescribed and assumed by the Code.

Jeremiah's evidence is scarcely less decisive:

"I spake not unto your fathers, nor commanded them in the day that I brought them out of the land of Egypt, concerning burnt-offerings or sacrifices; but this thing I commanded them, saying, Harken unto My voice, and I will be your God, and ye shall be My people."

On which Dr. Baxter prattles in this style:

"We have here a clear declaration that God's great requirement, at [the Exodus, was not sacrificial but moral; and no declaration could fit in more harmoniously with the old Mosaic narrative and legislation . . . the chief and all-embracing importance is assigned, not to Sacrifices, but to the Moral Law" (pp. 192, 193).

The relative importance which a legislator attaches to the different articles of his code may be accurately estimated by the degree of punishment attending their violation; and punishment may with similar accuracy be measured by its certainty, rapidity, and severity. Now, certain infractions of the ritual or sacrificial law, as laid down in the Priestly Code, are visited with instant death. Not only is this fate threatened, but it is recorded as having been actually inflicted on certain offenders, and not only on these, but on others who murmured at their destruction, while infractions of the moral law are visited with no such penalties. If Jeremiah, believing all this to be true, meant his words to be interpreted as Dr. Baxter interprets them then he was simply calling black white; and we have to ask ourselves in amazement what possible reliance can be placed on a creed founded on such testimony as this? Shall we not "See whether hell be not heaven, Find out whether tares be not grain."

I may add that Dr. Baxter does not seem to be a careful student of this terribly inconvenient prophet. Wellhausen, he says, "assigns the Deuteronomist to Josiah's age: can he point to a single post-Josian instance of the seventh year of release which the Deuteronomist prescribes?" (p. 456). I wonder how anyone can become a Doctor of Divinity in Scotland who has not read that sublime and awful chapter in which Jeremiah denounces the violation of the promise to let all Jewish slaves go free, in express reference to the Deuteronomic law (xxxiv. 13 seq.); or how, having read it, anyone, even a traditionalist theologian, could forget it. Had Wellhausen been guilty of such an oversight, one can imagine with what whoops and yells his opponent would have danced round him, and how he would have been cheered by such backers as Mr. Gladstone, Prof. Snyce, and Bishop Ellicott.

But, indeed, an accurate reproduction of Scriptural statements does not characterise Dr. Baxter. When Wellhausen (with perfect reason) quotes Balaam as an instance of a non-Israelite who "understands how to offer sacrifices to Jahveh that do not fail of their effect," his critic objects that the sacrifices were not accepted, "their essence" being a "prayer to God that He would curse Israel," which prayer "was indignantly and persistently rejected"; and he further describes them as "a mixture of hypocrisy, covetousness, and malice" (p. 174). The charge against Balaam is absolutely untrue, as anyone who takes the trouble to read over Numbers xxii.-xxiv. will at once perceive. Balaam had no malice against Israel; he refused to curse it for money, and steadily acted up to his religious professions. The object of his sacrifices was to obtain a word from Jahveh, and in this respect they were perfectly efficacious; while the prophet delivered that word in its integrity, as he had pledged himself to do from the outset. No wonder he is detested by the false prophets of our own time, by men who pretend to knowledge that they do not possess, and hide the truth that they know.

The beginning of wisdom for Dr. Baxter would be to learn the extent of his own ignorance. It will take a long time for him to master, but meanwhile he may find safety in silence. For instance, he should not venture on such an assertion as that "the momentous discovery that the Book of Leviticus was unknown to Malachi has not yet figured in any of the pages of the 'Higher Criticism'" (p. 205). On p. 202 of Wellhausen's Die Kleinen Propheten stand the words, "Malachi kennt nicht den Priester-codex."

It is a part of Wellhausen's case that no sacrifices are mentioned in the introductory narrative of the Priestly Code. To this Dr. Baxter replies that "not a solitary occasion is specified in which its sacrificial silence can in the least be described as singular" (p. 123); thus again proving nothing but his own extreme ignorance of the subject. For not only does P leave out Noah's sacrifice, but he deliberately makes such an offering impossible by reducing the pairs of clean animals preserved in the Ark from seven (the Jahvist number) to two. Indeed, so profoundly unacquainted is this Doctor of Divinity with a most elementary branch of the higher criticism, the division of the sources in the early chapters of Genesis, that he quotes the sacrifice of Abel in disproof of Wellhausen's theory that sacrifice began with the naïve custom of giving God a share of man's eatables.

"Abel," he says, "offered not what was 'eat-able by man,' but what man was forbidden to eat, 'the firstlings of his flock and of the fat thereof'! Noah offered 'of every clean beast and of every clean fowl'; and yet the Priestist assures us that slaughtering and eating flesh were not permissible till after the Flood!" (p. 292).

It belongs to the very essence of the critical case that P with his exclusion of animal food before the Deluge absolutely contradicts J with his story of Abel's sacrifice, that J knows nothing of such an exclusion, and that he alone can be quoted as an authority about early customs. If Dr. Baxter does not know this what becomes of his competence to interfere in the controversy? If he knows it, what becomes of his logic and of his honesty?

Nor is this all. The reverend gentleman seems to think that Wellhausen, whom all scholars regard with the deepest gratitude and respect, is just such another person as he is himself. He accuses him of wrongly translating the words hammisbeach 'ets, in Ez-k. xli. 22, "an altar of wood"; and adds that "as a professor of Oriental languages he knows that the article prevents mizbeach being in the construct case" (p. 345). Perhaps Dr. Baxter, like some of his brethren, thinks that the Massoretic text is inspired; but he must really allow others occasionally to prefer the LXX., as Wellhausen does in this instance, translating it with perfect correctness.

Bad enough, but there is worse to come. Wellhausen is quoted as saying that "the rite of the most solemn atoning sacrifice takes place in Lev. iv. indeed, on the golden altar," &c.—and is forthwith accused of "stating the thing that is not" (p. 355). Translations, even the best, are liable to err; and before a writer like Dr. Baxter charges a scholar of world-wide reputation with telling lies (for that is what it comes to) he should make sure that the incriminated word occurs in the original. Now the expression used there is not "auf dem goldenen Altar," but "am g. A.," which might, perhaps, more properly have been rendered "by" or "in connexion with" the golden altar, and, in any case, is surely quite permissible in a description of a ceremony where some of the blood is put on the horns of the altar, although the body of the victim is otherwise disposed of. I may add that, even had Wellhausen been guilty of the alleged inaccuracy, which he is not, it would, if anything, have weakened rather than strengthened his argument.

I could collect several specimens of "saying the thing that is not" from the volume before me, but one will suffice. Wellhausen observes that the late date of the prophecy in 1 Sam. ii. 27-36 is evident from the language, and from the circumstance that it anticipates the threat conveyed in the following chapter (iii. 11-14). Observe that this argument involves no reference to the incredibility of the supernatural as such, and leaves the question of the possibility of miraculous prophecy untouched. And now observe the use made of it by Dr. Baxter:

"If the prophecy on Eli's sons, a few years at most beforehand, 'in one day they shall die both of them,' was an incredible 'anticipation' showing the passage containing it to be of recent date, how was it possible for Ezekiel to 'anticipate' a 'restoration of the theocracy'?" (p. 266).

I am relieved from the necessity of a comment where a pair of tongs and an open window are the most appropriate rejoinder.

If I have been unduly severe, let me make amends by quoting some of the compliments addressed by Mr. Gladstone to the author after reading a part, and that the weakest, of his book:

"Unless your searching inquiry can be answered, and your statements confuted, his [Wellhausen's] character, both literary and theological, is destroyed.

"And he has been set up as our guide in the Encyclopædia Britannica!"

"I am very desirous to know how long your criticism has been published, so that I may know whether he has had the opportunity of reply; a task in which he is not to be envied."

Some years ago Mr. Gladstone himself made certain statements about Wellhausen, which, as I showed at the time in the ACADEMY, were absolutely baseless. I am not aware that he ever took the trouble to explain them. At any rate, no explanation has come my way. To ignore criticism may be good policy; but it is as good for a German professor as for an ex-Prime Minister of England.

ALFRED W. BENN.

England's Darling. By Alfred Austin, Poet Laureate. (Macmillans.)

EARLIER critics of Mr. Austin's poem have pointed out, not too graciously, the mistake into which he has fallen in his preface. He supposes that "the greatest of Englishmen"—by whom, and by the ill-chosen title of the poem, he means Alfred the Great—"has never been celebrated by an English poet." The Poet Laureate can hardly be excused his want of knowledge in such a matter, seeing that one of his predecessors in the Laureateship made Alfred the subject of a poem, and that Joseph Cottle devoted an epic to him which was big enough to be remembered, though Cottle was only a small poet. This, however, is a trifle. It is of more importance to see whether Mr. Austin has himself satisfactorily filled the gap which he conceived to exist in English poetry. He did not lack enthusiasm for his subject. He tells us that he cannot remember the time when Alfred was not the hero of his affections. The hero-worship of the nursery, and "the fresh partiality of childhood," had in his case the confirmation of intelligent sanction in later life. In this he was less singular than he may seem to himself to have been, but it was well that he could approach his pleasant task with an enthusiasm founded both on youthful affection and on mature conviction. These were favourable conditions, and if success had been attainable at all they should have made its attainment easier.

One cannot say that Mr. Austin has succeeded, but his failure is not wholly to be charged upon himself. Some part of it should be ascribed to the unsuitability of his subject to poetic treatment. Mr. Austin says of Alfred that "by his birth, his character, and his exploits, he is the one Englishman pre-eminently fitted to be a national hero." That may be so, but it does not follow that he is the one national hero pre-eminently fitted to be celebrated in song. Such a hero must possess qualities which neither history nor myth has associated with Alfred. He is too much of a paragon, too blameless, too unerring, too remote. History has only preserved for us the high lights in Alfred's character; and legend has rejoiced so much in these that in its amplification of history it has added nothing to them beyond a greater degree of emphasis. It has introduced no shadows, nor has it imparted any colour. No immaculate person was ever yet a successful hero of poetry or romance. "The low sun," Tennyson says, "makes the colour." He makes Guinevere say:

"I could not breathe in that fine air,
That pure severity of perfect light—
I wanted warmth and colour, which I found In Lancelot."

King Arthur was more of a poet's hero than King Alfred, for the very reason that he was a Celtic and not a Saxon prince; though it is on this ground, and because Alfred was Saxon, that Mr. Austin prefers Alfred. But Celtic though he was, and therefore great in poetic possibilities, Arthur makes a poorer show in the Idylls of the King than Lancelot. For a like reason it is not Gabriel, or any other of the unfallen angels, but Satan, that is the hero of Paradise Lost. Mr. Austin, indeed, unconsciously states the defects of Alfred from the point of view of romance and the essentially human point of view, when he particularises his virtues. "Alfred," he says, "has neither stigma nor stain." He was "a ruler without arrogance, a soldier without personal ambition, a lawgiver devoid of pedantry, a poet free from vanity, a saint untainted by fanaticism." If one might essay to paint the lily, or to gild refined gold, it were a bootless task, and one in which it would be hard to get up any human interest. It is because of their human nature, after all, that we never tire of Shakspeare's kings and queens and men and women.

But while Mr. Austin's failure is in part due to the character of his subject, it is also in part attributable to his limitations. He is essentially an idyllic poet, but he has attempted here a dramatic achievement, and the result is that he has produced neither drama nor idyll, but something which has only the form of the one with only the partially suggested quality of the other. It is no disparagement of Mr. Austin's powers to say that he cannot write dramatic verse, for greater poets than he have attempted that form of composition and failed in it. That he has failed in a marked degree shows that the drama is entirely alien to his genius. His King Alfred, and his Edward and Edgiva and the rest, are lay figures without any real personality. They are automata who utter what is put into their mouths, but the voices are not living. We do not distinguish one from another, and we do not recognise the speakers. King Alfred we know in nursery story and in history, but we do not know him in Mr. Austin's poem. Here he is a featureless shade and a bodiless voice. And the whole structure of the poem is as unreal as the personages are. It is like a picture on a screen: there is a succession of scenes, but no movement; we are told that certain things happen, but we do not realise the event. We do not feel the wind blow; there is no ripple of life, no atmosphere. Nevertheless, the poem has its charms. When Mr. Austin forgets that he is trying to produce a drama, and is content to be pastoral and idyllic, he succeeds admirably, as in this love-song:

"Edward.

"Sing, throistle, sing,
On the hornbeam bough;
But tell not the King
Of a maiden's vow.
When the heart is ripe,
Then the days are fleet:
Pipe, throistle, pipe!
Sweet! sweet! sweet!

"If but the best of us could sing like thee!
But even Adhelm lacks the craft to reach
Thy untaught silvery syllables of song.
Wild gleeman of the woods! In all the world
There lives no sound to match thy minstrelsy, Saving her voice; and that, though heavenlier still,
Alack is seldom heard.

"Flute, throistle, flute,
To my lagging dear,
And never be mute!
Till she hie to hear.

Now that the Spring
And the Summer meet,
Sing, throistle, sing!
Sweet! sweet! sweet!"

He succeeds again in the thrilling verses which Alfred declaims in praise of England, when, disguised as a minstrel, he gains admission to the Danish camp. Here the utterance is distinctly alive; but it is a lyric utterance, though for once a dramatic note is reached. One could wish that Mr. Austin would be content to cultivate this lyric gift, and to make no ineffectual attempts towards bolder things. He is the poet of springtime, of the hedge-rows, the garden, and the fields; and within these pleasant limitations he has few rivals. When he wanders beyond them he loses himself. He lacks the strength of wing for ambitious flights, and his footing is not firm enough for the march of majestic verse.

GEORGE COTTERELL.

SOME DANTE BOOKS.

La Divina Commedia di Dante Alighieri: riveduta nel testo e commentata da G. A. Scartazzini. Seconda edizione, riveduta, corretta e notevolmente arricchita coll'aggiunta del rimario perfezionato del Dott. Luigi Polacco. (Milano: Ulrico Hoepli.)

Pensieri sull'Allegoria della Vita Nuova di Dante: opera postuma di Francesco Pasqualigo. (Venezia: Leo S. Olschki.)

Pietro Peccatore, ossia della vera interpretazione di Paradiso XXI. 121-123. Giovanni Mercati. (Roma.)

In the first volume, which claims to be an improved edition of that issued under the title of edizioni minori three years ago, Dr. Scartazzini proves himself to be incorrigible as well as indefatigable. Additional matter, to the extent of nearly a hundred extra pages, has been incorporated in this new edition; and we looked forward with much interest to an examination of the revised commentary, which we hoped to find enriched with fresh notes and illustrations, and freed from the most glaring defects of its predecessor. Great is our disappointment. Dr. Scartazzini, like the House of Bourbon, has learned nothing and forgotten nothing. It is now nearly a quarter of a century since he first began to comment on the Divina Commedia, and it might have been supposed that by this time he had come to understand pretty thoroughly (with the help of his critics) what was wanted in a work of this kind. Yet it will hardly be credited that one of the so-called "improvements" in the present edition consists in the insertion of the Greek and Hebrew equivalents of classical and Biblical proper names in Greek and Hebrew characters; and this in a book which, as was explained in the preface to the first edition, is primarily intended for "principianti e scolari." Dr. Scartazzini is fully alive to the absurdity of quoting Greek and Hebrew in illustration of Dante; he has been reminded of it at sundry times by his critics, both here and on the continent, and he himself ridicules the practice in this very book—"Se soltanto Dante avesse saputo di ebraico! Se soltanto Dante avesse saputo di greco!" he exclaims after quoting Greek and Hebrew interpretations of Inferno vii. 1. Yet he cannot refrain from continually indulging himself in the parade of this useless learning—useless because, as every student of Dante is, or ought to be, well aware, the poet knew nothing of Hebrew, and next to nothing of Greek.

Perhaps the most flagrant instance of Dr. Scartazzini's wrongheadedness in this respect is afforded by his note on Inferno xxxi. 46-7, where Dante is describing Nimrod. In the edition of 1893 his comment occupies eighteen lines; in the present edition it occupies thirty-five lines, or just about double the space. The additional matter consists of the Hebrew and Greek (two) equivalents of "Nembrotto," and of the following note, which we give as a fair sample of the sort of material with which the present volume is "enriched":

"VENTRE: i giganti della mitologia greca hanno ordinariamente serpenti invece di piedi. Εἶχον δὲ τὰς βάσεις πολλὰς δρακόντων. (Apollod. Bibl. i. 6.) Εἶχον αὖ τὸ γένος [sic] κεφαλὰς περιεσπειραμένους πολλοὶ δρακόντων. (Ibid. ii. 4.) Δρακοντόπους καὶ βαθυγενέλους καὶ βαθυκαίτας. (Tzet. ad Lycophr. Alex. 63.) 'Anguipedes.' (Ovid. Met. i. 184.) 'Serpentipedes.' (Ovid. Trist. iv. 7; cfr. Lucil. Aetn., 46 e seg. Apollin. Sidon. ix. 73 e seg.) Dante dà ai suoi giganti piedi, cfr. Inf. xxxii. 17, ma non dice che questi piedi fossero serpentine, attenendosi probabilmente alla mitologia biblica, che di piedi serpentine non fa veruna menzione."

Of the five authorities here quoted or referred to, in a note which, by the way, is totally irrelevant, one only is in the least appropriate, viz., Ovid: of the other four Dante had in all likelihood never so much as heard. Of what earthly use is it to go on multiplying notes of this kind? To the student and to the general reader they are worse than useless, and they occupy valuable space which might have been profitably employed in explaining real difficulties. For instance, in the very passage under discussion, two points which certainly require a few words of explanation are passed over without remark, the only help given being bare references to Brunetto Latino's Treisor and St. Augustine's De Civitate Dei, neither of them works very likely to be within easy reach of "principianti." Why does Dante imagine Nimrod to be a giant? Why does he represent him as the builder of the Tower of Babel? Surely these questions deserve an answer; yet, instead of giving the desired information on these points, which might have been done at the expense of a couple of short quotations from the De Civitate Dei (xvi. 3, 4), Dr. Scartazzini devotes his space to the absolutely useless and irrelevant matter reproduced above.

There is a homely saying that no man should hoe his own turnips. If Dr. Scartazzini would take this to heart, and entrust the revision of his work to some disinterested editor, who would remorselessly cut out all that is not strictly to the point, we might eventually have a commentary of some value, for space might then be found for notes on numerous more or less puzzling passages which at present are left without any explanation whatever. A case in point occurs in Inferno v. 60, where Semiramis, the Queen of Assyria, is spoken of as having held "the land which the Sultan governs," i.e., Egypt. This, of course, is a mistake, for as Benvenuto da Imola points out, Semiramis never ruled over Egypt. The explanation of the difficulty, which Dr. Scartazzini passes over in silence, lies probably in the fact that Dante confused the ancient kingdom of Babylonia (or Assyria) with Babylon or Babylon (old Cairo) in Egypt, which was the territory of the Sultan.

We regret to have been obliged to speak so severely of the latest edition of Dr. Scartazzini's commentary, for in common with every student of Dante we are deeply indebted to his labours; but we have felt it our duty to protest as strongly as possible against such abuses as we have drawn attention to above.

The only original feature about this volume is the rimario, which has been reconstructed on a new plan by Dr. Luigi Polacco, the advantages of which over the old one we fail to perceive. Instead of arranging the lines in the order of the rimes as they occur in the poem, Dr. Polacco has adopted an alphabetical order according to the first letter of the riming word. Thus, under abbia, we have first five lines ending in "abbia," then four in "labbia," then four in "rabbia," then two in "scabbia." This arrangement seems to us to be almost as perverse as that adopted by Dr. Fay in his Concordance. It makes it impossible, for instance, to discover, without a great deal of trouble, in what particular combination of rimes a word of frequent occurrence happens to be employed by Dante, or what number of times a particular rime is used in each of the several divisions of the poem. Taking the word "abbia," for example, we see at a glance by the old method that it occurs three times in rime with "labbia" and "rabbia," once with "rabbia" and "scabbia," and once with "labbia" and "scabbia"; and, further, that in the first combination the order of rimes is varied in each instance, thus we have abbia, labbia, rabbia (Inf. vii. 5, 7, 9); rabbia, labbia, abbia (Inf. xiv. 65, 67, 69); and rabbia, abbia, labbia (Inf. xxix. 80, 82, 84). These facts, which have a distinct value in connexion with the study of Dante's manipulation of the terza rima, are completely disguised by the alphabetical arrangement adopted by Dr. Polacco, and can only be arrived at by laboriously re-arranging the lines in their natural order. Why it should have been thought worth while to go to the expense of reprinting the whole of the rimario (and consequently the whole of the Divina Commedia) in order to attain this very undesirable result, we are at a loss to discover. Possibly the expense incurred in this direction deterred the publisher from printing a new index. Dr. Scartazzini, it is true, in his preface defends the retention of the old index, which is, in several places, in direct contradiction with his commentary, on the ground that up till now it has served the turn of all, "even the most illustrious" students of Dante—a powerful argument indeed, and one which, if applied generally, would tend to put an effectual stop to all progress or reform whatever. By way of an additional excuse, a reference is made to the index printed at the end of the Oxford Dante: "Volendo agire da copista, avrei potuto prendere l'indice del Tyynbes . . . ma io non volli saccheggiare il Tyynbes . . ." We are much obliged to the learned doctor for resisting the temptation; but we cannot see that he is thereby in the smallest degree excused from the task of undertaking the revision of the index he originally borrowed, with all its misprints, from Fraticelli's edition. As it is, we still have such absurd references as those to "Ridolfo, figlio di Carlo Martello" and to "Europa, figlia d' Agenore," and such misprints as "Rionardo" for "Rinoardo," besides misplaced words and at least a dozen wrong references. It is true that one alteration has been made, for in this edition the famous "Titan" (for "Titone") of Purg. ix. 1 finds a place in the index as well as in the text, from which it ought to have disappeared long ago. Certainly Dr. Scartazzini is incorrigible.

We must say a word in conclusion as to the book from a material point of view. To produce a volume of nearly 1200 pages, well printed on good paper, at the modest price of L. 4.50—that is, less than four shillings—is a real achievement, for which Signor Hoepli deserves great credit, and we congratulate him heartily on his enterprise. We only wish it had been in our power to speak as favourably of the contents of the volume.

The second book on our list is a posthumous work of Francesco Pasqualigo, formerly editor of the Alighieri, which was started mainly through his exertions. Signor Pasqualigo was unfortunately one of that class of Dantists whose very enthusiasm for their subject renders the bulk of their work useless for practical purposes. They are so intent upon elaborating every minute detail in their author, that the latter is lost sight of in the mass of illustration and comment which is accumulated about him. They write without any sense of proportion, expending as much labour and space upon trivial and non-essential points as would suffice for the elucidation of the most complex and intricate problems. To give a case in point: Signor Pasqualigo takes the word vita in the phrase "Incipit Vita Nova" (V. N. § 1), and devotes five whole pages to it. He begins with the information, "vita: astratto di vivere, come corso di correre," and then, after remarking that the word has many meanings, proceeds to give examples of fifteen different senses in which it is used by Dante. This would be appropriate enough were he compiling a Dante lexicon, but it is intolerable in a work professing to be a commentary on the Vita Nuova.

After this sample, the reader will hardly be surprised to learn that the present volume, consisting of 438 crown octavo pages, deals with three only out of the forty-three chapters of the Vita Nuova. If the commentary were continued on the same scale, it would require fourteen similar volumes for the Vita Nuova alone, and more than two hundred for the whole of Dante's works—ex pede Herculem!

It is a great pity that writers like

Pasqualigo cannot be brought to realise that commentaries of this kind are fatal to the promotion of the studies they have at heart. There are, however, we are glad to say, signs of a healthy reaction in Italy against this fatal tendency to diffuseness, which is characteristic of so many writers of the older school of Italian Dantists.

Signor Pasqualigo wholly disbelieves in the actuality of Beatrice; for him she is simply an abstraction. His conclusions on this head are summed up as follows:

"A chi legge attentamente la Vita Nuova, si offrono infiniti argomenti, per concludere, che il racconto è fittizio ed allegorico. Ma, se non una donna in carne ed ossa, che cosa è adunque la Beatrice? . . . La Beatrice non è alcun che di assoluto ed immutabile. Scorgesi in lei, come oggi si dice, un processo di evoluzione. La Beatrice da principio è la Pietà, la Pietà Cristiana, che poi dà luogo alla Scienza, e finalmente, unita ad essa Scienza, diventa Sapienza. La Beatrice in sé, è un attributo di Dio, cioè la Pietà o l'amore divino: La Beatrice, in Dante, è un dono di natura, ossia, come direbbero i teologi, un dono dello Spirito Santo."

As a further sample of his fanciful mode of interpretation we may mention that he regards the "peccato contro natura," for which Dante condemns Brunetto Latino to a place among the Sodomites in Hell, to be Brunetto's selection of French instead of Italian as the language in which to write the Trésor! If that were the case we might have expected to find Marco Polo among his companions, instead of the persons of doubtful reputation with whom Dante has associated him.

Signor Mercati deals, at somewhat needless length, with the much disputed passage in the Paradiso (xxi. 121-123) in which Dante mentions St. Peter Damian. None of the interpretations hitherto proposed was altogether satisfactory. Signor Mercati now offers quite a new one, in the light of which most of the difficulties disappear. He identifies "la casa di Nostra Donna in sul lito Adriano," not with the monastery of Santa Maria in Porto fuori at Ravenna, as his predecessors had done, but with that of Santa Maria in Pomposa, which is situated on a small island at the mouth of the Po, near Comacchio. He proves that St. Peter Damian resided here for two years, and that the monastery, which in those days was an important place, was commonly spoken of as "monasterium sanctae Mariae in Pomposia," a name by which St. Peter Damian himself refers to it. Signor Mercati also points out that it is highly doubtful whether Pietro degli Onesti (whom some identify with Dante's "Pietro Peccatore") ever called himself, or was known in Dante's time, as "Petrus Peccator," this appellation having apparently been given him in the middle of the fifteenth century; whereas St. Peter Damian invariably described himself in his letters and other writings as "Petrus peccator monachus." The interpretation of the passage (vv. 121-123) then would be: "At Fonte Avellana was I, Peter Damian, known as Peter the Sinner. I resided also at the monastery of Santa Maria, in Pomposa, on the Adriatic coast." This is satisfactory so far; but it is a little strange that none of the old commentators seems to have heard of Santa Maria in Pomposa. At any rate, Signor Mercati's explanation is the most convincing that has been put forward hitherto, and goes far towards clearing up one of the many puzzling passages in the Divina Commedia.

PAGET TOYNBER.

Modern Women. By Laura Marholm Hansson. Translated from the German by Hermione Ramsden. (John Lane.)

THIS is a series of studies on George Egerton, Sonia Kovalevsky (the mathematician), Eleonora Duse, Amalie Skram, Mme. Edgren-Leffler, and Marie Bashkirtseff.

It is a book full of bewildering contradictions. Mme. Hansson vehemently tells us that the woman of the day requires a higher culture and a larger latitude, and in the same breath asserts that, if she tries to attain them, she not only forfeits her place in social economics, but loses all the zest and happiness of life. But the authoress makes a greater mistake than this, in the very raison d'être of the book, for she confidently assumes that what is known as the "Woman Movement" has a real importance, and is more than a passing phase. This opinion is not confined to Mme. Hansson. The people who use the catchwords and read the writings of the new cult forget, or do not know, that the latter-day journalist—always eager to withdraw the curtain which conceals the couliasses of life—has given to the utterances of a small band of pessimistic Scandinavian authors an undue and entirely fictitious importance, from which has resulted a widespread belief that the movement is a universal one.

But whatever we may say of Mme. Hansson's convictions, her skill of portrayal must be acknowledged. She has a certain power of psychological insight, and in her happier moments a felicity of phrase which, though it occasionally shows a touch of mechanism, is distinctly effective. It is impossible, however, to avoid noticing traces of the hysterical posing style of Björnson and Hans Jaeger. The following paragraph (from p. 87) is a good example of this lack of restraint:

"He is no longer the great comic animal of Keynotes whom the woman teases and plays with—he is a nightmare who smothers her during horrible nights . . . a despot who demands admiration, caresses, and devotion; while her every nerve quivers with emotion; a man born blind, whose clumsy fingers press the spot where the pain is, and when she moans replies with coarse, unfeeling laughter, 'Absurd nonsense!'"

The book is marred by many such passages, but the more sober imprint of Teutonic thought is never quite obliterated. It is from the psychologist's point of view that these studies are most interesting. The essay dealing with Marie Bashkirtseff is a careful piece of work, which forcibly paints the wreck of principle and happiness brought about by a neurotic temperament and an unrestrained imagination. Mme. Hansson takes a curious view of the art of Eleonora Duse, for she insists that the great actress is a type of the modern woman on the stage—a novel opinion which may or may not be correct, but which the study quite fails to justify. Certainly in many of her parts the actress strikes a predominant note of discontent, but it seems a weak hypothesis on which to base a careful analysis of Mme. Duse as a "modern woman."

When Mme. Hansson comes to study the work of the lady who writes under the name of "George Egerton" she is more unsatisfactory than in any of her other dissections. She treats books like Keynotes and Discords almost as if they were the textbooks of a new gospel, which is surely giving them an importance they do not merit.

The book is interesting and clever, but on every page it lacks a sense of proportion, and is accordingly valueless as a serious criticism of even a transient phase.

Miss Ramsden's translation is excellent, and it surmounts idiomatic difficulties easily and gracefully. The translator has also written an interesting study of the German authoress, from which we quote the last few lines:

"Numerous and conflicting as are the various opinions on the so-called 'woman question,' the best and perhaps the only way of elucidating it is by doing as she has done in giving us these sketches."

This may be the way to arrive at a definite conclusion, but Mme. Hansson has at any rate failed to reach it.

RANGER GULL.

NEW NOVELS.

Mrs. Tregaskiss. By Mrs. Campbell Praed. In 3 vols. (Chatto & Windus.)

The Dancer in Yellow. By W. E. Norris. In 2 vols. (Heinemann.)

A Riverside Romance. By Mrs. Edward Kennard. (White.)

A Provincial Lady. By Mrs. F. H. Williamson. (Hutchinson.)

The Sowers. By H. S. Merriman. (Smith, Elder & Co.)

A Man and a Woman. By Stanley Waterloo. (George Redway.)

The City of Gold. By E. Markwick. (Tower Publishing Co.)

Dr. Koomadhi of Ashantee. By F. F. Moore. (Constable.)

Studies in Black and White. By Lady Henry Somerset. (Fisher Unwin.)

STORIES descriptive of Australian life possess in general a monotony, referable, no doubt, to the monotonous nature of the actual scenes themselves. Sheep-rearing and cattle-rearing, the miseries and ruin entailed by a long drought, and the horrible experiences endured by those who have lost their way in the scrub or the trackless wilderness, together with depredations by bushrangers or outrages by workmen on strike, are the sole stock-in-trade possessed by writers of Australian romance, unless they confine themselves to the city life of the provincial capitals. Many writers have succeeded remarkably well with these slender materials, but Mrs. Campbell Praed goes a step beyond her competitors. She is the only author, so far as we know, who not only excels in graphic description, but also possesses the attribute of being an acute analyst of character and motive. Mrs. Tregaskiss is the familiar story of an ill-assorted marriage. Clare Gardyne, a penniless orphan, accepts the offer of Keith Tregaskiss, a bluff Australian squatter, and accompanies him to the Antipodes, only to find after a short experience of wedded life that her rough, unrefined husband, with his oaths and coarse jokes and intemperate habits, has scarcely an interest or sympathy in common with her own cultivated and imaginative nature. Then Dr. Geneste appears upon the scene, and the current of her life is changed. The plot in its subsequent developments may easily be imagined from the indications here given and needs no detailed notice: it is the treatment and character of the novel that better merit attention. The main characters are drawn with a minute completeness that leaves nothing to be desired, and we owe to the sex of the author the advantage of getting a more intimate acquaintance with the habits and daily routine of women whose lives are passed in the bush than is to be found in most Australian stories. If there is any fault to be found with Mrs. Praed, it is that besides furnishing analytical comment herself she makes her characters talk too analytically, with the result that what is meant for an impassioned love scene sometimes takes the shape rather of a philosophical discussion. But it is an excellent novel nevertheless.

Mr. W. E. Norris is entirely to be congratulated upon his labour expended in the production of The Dancer in Yellow. This also is a tale of an ill-assorted marriage, but the circumstances and the treatment are as different from what we find in Mrs. Praed's book as London is different from the Australian bush. In this case the superior person—in the eye of the world—is Frank, second son of Sir Harry Coplestone, Bart., of Malling; and the lady who does all the mischief is Miss Daisy Villiers, née Margaret Black, pet dansseuse of the music-halls, and undeniably at the head of the profession in her particular line of entertainment, but not accredited with a spotless reputation in private life by the London public. In the opening chapter we find Daisy on board the yacht Mongoose, spending her honeymoon as the lawful bride of Frank Coplestone, who has fallen a victim to her beauty, but who, retaining the prejudices and views of life common to scions of county families, speedily finds reason to disapprove of many of his wife's little ways. The breach between them rapidly widens; and, indeed, when a woman openly accepts jewellery from the Marquis of Wednesbury and other admirers, gives or attends champagne suppers every night, and fills her bijou residence off Regent's Park with all and sundry of the male kind, one can hardly wonder at her husband's enthusiasm cooling a little. Everything, in fact, points to a painful and complete estrangement, and a verdict of universal sympathy for the husband. Yet, strange to say, under the touches of the author's masterly pen, this apparently abandoned wife becomes quite a lovable creature, and completely wins our regard, if not altogether our esteem. For she is as sterling in reality as she is outwardly frivolous; she is the shrewdest of shrewd little women, entirely truthful, and entirely knowing her own mind; added to which she cares throughout for her husband and for no one else, and her moral character proves to have been clear of all suspicion. Whether Daisy's character is a possible one may be open to question; but it is capitally, even brilliantly, drawn. And when we add that the other persons who figure in the story are almost equally interesting in their way, and that the whole book teems with cultivated irony and humour, we have said no more of Mr. Norris than he deserves. The description of the Marquis of Wednesbury's wife as Viscountess Wednesbury in vol. ii., p. 46, is a slip which may be noted for correction in future editions.

No more enthusiastic votary of sport exists than Mrs. Edward Kennard; and when she selects her favourite Norway, and salmon fishing, for her scene of adventure, we may be certain of getting a good novel. A Riverside Romance is inferior to none of its author's previous efforts, and reproduces nearly all their distinctive features. Mrs. Carson, an English lady, and her daughter Agatha have, at the opening of the story, been settled for fifteen years in the remote valley of Foedalen, abounding in magnificent salmon, but hitherto unvisited by tourists, and only tenanted by three or four Norwegian families besides themselves. The romance begins when Agatha is about nineteen, and the salmon fishing is taken for the season by Mr. Richard Loftus, a handsome and wealthy young Englishman. The great obstacle to its successful course is Agatha's mother, who, having had painful experiences of her own in early life, entertains a rooted aversion to matrimony, and declares that "every sensible woman should bring up her daughters to look upon man as their natural enemy." Here Mrs. Kennard's pet hobby, the naughtiness and wickedness of man considered as a husband, displays itself; but it is satisfactory to notice that on this occasion she launches her philippics against the male sex through the mouth of one of her characters, and to that extent relieves herself of responsibility for them. However, in Didrik Peterhof we have a ne'er-do-weel husband of the sort we have become quite accustomed to in previous novels. In other respects the story is deserving of all praise, except that the ending is sadly tragic.

When John Wills, ironmonger, and sometime Mayor of Amcaster, died, his widow, Rachel, being left with a fortune of three thousand a year, conceived the ambitious project of removing to London and obtaining an entrée to the highest society. By the aid of Lady Sophie Long—who receives a thousand pounds for her trouble—she obtains a presentation at Court and a number of highly desirable introductions, only to find, after spending half her fortune, and enduring countless snubs and vexations, that she has no aptitude whatever for mixing with the society to which she has gained access, and that her whole attempt has been a failure. Such is, in outline, the plot of A Provincial Lady. The theme is anything but a new one; and the only unusual feature of the present story is that the failure of Rachel Wills is due not to any pushing vulgarity, but to her artless and sincere nature, which is unable to assimilate itself to the requirements of London society. As may be supposed, the tale is frothy and gossiping throughout; but readers who like this sort of thing will find the book a thoroughly enjoyable one.

There is a story of William Penn having bargained with Indians for a piece of land a hundred miles square, and having obtained it upon remarkably cheap terms, the vendors being under the impression that they were selling him merely a hundred square miles. This story is recalled to us on reading p. 2 of Mr. Merriman's Russian tale, The Sowers, in which the author attempts to convey to us an impression of a "scene suggestive of immense distance, of countless miles in all directions," by explaining that the plain of Iver covers an area of "nearly two hundred square miles"—i.e., a portion of country measuring something less than fifteen miles each way. However, there are not many other slips in the novel, which is concerned with the history of Prince Howard Alexis, a Russian noble, though English on his father's side. His benevolent projects for the relief of his peasantry are ill appreciated by the government, and in the end he is practically banished from the country. His marriage with a woman, who, unknown to him, has thwarted the great scheme of his life, by betraying to the government the secret of a vast Charity League, designed for the relief and education of the peasant population, is the principal theme of the book, which is a good specimen of a novel of incident, and is replete with masterly description and thrilling situations.

A delightfully written book is A Man and a Woman, by Stanley Waterloo. Of plot there is none; but the description of episodes in the life of Grant Harison, from the age of six upwards, is full of exquisite humour, and no one who reads the first half-dozen chapters will be likely to put the book down again. Of Jean Cornish, the woman who becomes his wife, we do not hear anything until the story is half told; but her portrait is drawn with as loving a hand as the one which sketches that of Grant Harison, and the record of their married life has a mixture about it of quaintness and pathos which is as unusual as it is interesting.

If belief in the possible existence of a mysterious centre of wealth and civilisation somewhere in the heart of Africa has not entirely died out, The City of Gold will possess a fascination for a certain number of readers. The narrative begins with the capture by some Matabele of Captain Vincent and his attendant, William Strong, who are brought to Katquilla, a rebel chief, and compelled by him to accompany an expedition against Madinat ul Zahab, the City of Gold, which proves when reached to be a sort of Utopia, as regards government and customs, and to be ahead of European civilisations in scientific research and material appliances, especially such as are destructive of human life. Amazing adventures and terrible tragedies crowd the pages of the book, which is well illustrated, and is capital reading for boys.

Dr. Koomadhi of Ashantee is a book of a sort which precludes serious criticism. A negro practising as a doctor at a West African Coast settlement offers marriage to an European girl, daughter of the English commissioner resident on the station, but is refused by her, with an intimation that she would as soon marry an ape which happened at that moment to be gesticulating in the verandah. The negro conceals his anger; but when Miss Hope subsequently marries Major Minton he persuades the latter, by means of a charm called the Sacred Ear, to transform himself as far as possible into the similitude of an ape, and take refuge in the forest among the monkey tribes. Dr. Koomadhi's death, which is caused by an invasion of many hundreds of apes and baboons, who attack his house and tear him limb from limb, is not accounted for, and appears to be only a climax to the general absurdity.

A pathetic little production by Lady Henry Somerset, entitled Studies in Black and White, consists of two sketches, the subject of the first being an episode in the life of a London alum boy, while the second is a tale of seduction. The author has an extensive acquaintance with the habits and language of the poor, and her descriptions of squalor and vice are powerfully drawn, if painful to read.

JOHN BARROW ALLEN.

CURRENT LITERATURE.

An Ambassador of the Vanquished. By the Duke de Broglie. Translated by A. O. Vandam. (Heinemann.) Viscount Elie de Gontaut-Biron was French Ambassador at Berlin from December 4, 1871, till the last days of 1877. This book is based upon his diaries and memoranda. At the time the mission was confided to him, two out of the five milliards of the war indemnity had been paid, and six French departments were held in pledge by German troops for the balance. It was, indeed, a delicate situation that the Ambassador had to face at the capital of the conqueror.

"The slightest disagreement with regard to the time and manner of payment, or in connexion with the mapping out of the contested districts, a scuffle between the victorious soldiers and the vanquished populations on this or that occupied spot, any or all of those contingencies might place us once more, just as during the negotiations for peace itself, in the alternative of having to make painful concessions or of resuming a hopeless resistance. We were, in fact, under the heel of the victor, who was still the master, to interpret according to his own will the conditions he himself had dictated."

This is curious reading in 1896, but was true enough a quarter of a century ago. The final payment of the war indemnity was made in September, 1872, and M. de Gontaut had the well-deserved honour of affixing his name to the text of the convention that liberated France. The National Assembly has been reproached by some with having waited until the liberation of French territory was completed before engaging in the conflict with the President of the French Republic. The Duke de Broglie successfully repels this accusation. He points out that it was M. Thiers himself who founded the truce of parties, which was to last "as long as shackled France had not thrown off the alien's shackles." The Duke protests against the notion that a constitution is to be imposed in perpetuity out of deference to the merits or services of one man, however eminent.

"England has never been considered an ungrateful nation to those who served her well. But what Englishman ever dreamt of securing power to any man, were he the victor of Waterloo himself, for a day longer than the free movement of parties had naturally conferred that power on him?"

In May, 1873, Thiers resigned, and was succeeded as President by Marshal de MacMahon. The Duke de Broglie received the portfolio of Foreign Affairs. No one was more annoyed at the prospect of a monarchical restoration in France than Prince Bismarck. The Republican form of government was the best calculated, in his opinion, to perpetuate the isolation and weakness of France. In this the Duke and the Prince were in entire agreement. The alliance between the Russian autocracy and the French Republic was still on the knees of the gods. All hopes of a Restoration were destined to be speedily shattered. The famous letter from Frohadorf reached Paris on October 29, 1873. The incident is thus referred to in a despatch of the French Minister of Foreign Affairs to M. de Gontaut.

"The letter of M. le Comte de Chambord has caused all parties unanimously to abandon any idea of the present restoration of the Monarchy. Consternation reigns in the camp of all decent people [Académie gens], for the success was as good as certain. We ought to be thankful that we have in this emergency a man like the Marshal around whom we can group ourselves."

A greater man than the Duke was equally amazed at the action of the Comte de Chambord. "Why," said Moltke to the French Ambassador—"why should the King of France be more difficult than our Emperor, who, while reserving his own ensign for his palace, has left the German tricolour to his troops?" The final surrender of the Royalists took place four years later, after the elections of 1877. A new Cabinet was then formed, and their first resolution was to recall M. de Gontaut. He was asked to send in his resignation by intermediaries who did not hide from him that his request was eagerly expected. M. de Gontaut was, above all, a loyal Frenchman. He might have dared the new Ministry to recall him, but this would have endangered the dignity of France, so M. de Gontaut sank all personal feeling and resigned. His resignation was accepted by means of the telegraph "in the brief and dry fashion peculiar to that kind of communication." His friends, who asked what grievances were alleged against him, were told that there were no grievances, "but Herr von Bismarck could no longer endure him, and we wish to stand well with him." The Duke has discharged a labour of love in inscribing

"the name of Elie de Gontaut-Biron in the annals of our deliverance side by side with that of the statesman [Thiers] who selected him, and the enlightened Minister [Decazes], of whom he was the auxiliary and friend."

Countess Schimmelmänn. Edited by W. Smith Foggitt. (Hodder & Stoughton.) Adeline Countess Schimmelmänn was born at the Castle of Ahrensburg, in Holstein, in 1854. Her father was a Peer of Denmark, and evidently a man of serious and reflective character. The Countess tells us she was her "father's child," and that it was by means of his last sufferings and death that she became "consciously and fully the child of God by faith in Jesus Christ."

We admit to the full that the Countess has "sacrificed everything to follow in the footsteps of Christ," and that she has been a doer as well as a preacher of Christ's Christianity. Her faith and practice can best be summed up in a passage from a sermon, which, were it not concealed in one of the world's masterpieces, would take high rank as an ethical discourse.

"For the Redeemer of mankind, whose words never could deceive, said 'that His yoke was easy and His burden light'; and according to that He could prescribe nothing to our practice which was impossible to be done."

Countess Schimmelmänn (to pay her a deserved compliment) has much in common with the utterer of these words—Don Quixote. It is well, indeed, for those who suffer and are oppressed that the Don Quixote race is not extinct: that there are women, like the authoress, who do not regard the Sermon on the Mount as mere obiter dicta, intended more for philosophic reflection than daily imitation. Unfortunately, our modern Don Quixotes do not all enjoy the humility and delightful absence of self-consciousness which distinguished the founder of their family. The events of the Countess's life are sufficiently varied to have produced a more attractive autobiography. For eighteen years she was attached to the Berlin Court as a maid-of-honour to the Empress Augusta. Afterwards she devoted her life and her means to mission work among the Baltic fishermen. Nearly half the volume is devoted to a disgraceful family plot, which resulted in the Countess being confined as a lunatic in what she describes as "a human hell." Happily she was released from the clutches of her relations, and returned to Denmark, "where, from the Royal Family to the little boys in the street, she was received with unbounded kindness and sympathy." Her book closes with an appeal to the English, "whose generosity, as all the world knows, is not lavished upon their own insular needs, but overflows the great continents of the earth." Her narrative is evidence enough of the difficulties which beset "the few women on the Continent who have begun the work for Christ, which has attained such proportions in England and America."

The Last Years of St. Andrews. By the Author of "The Recollections of a Country Parson" &c. (Longmans.) We gather from a casual statement of the author that this is the thirty-first volume that he has published, and that he scarcely expects that it will be followed by another. Many will miss the musings and moralisings of A. K. H. B., for he has made for himself a large and appreciative circle of readers. We have sometimes been tempted to use the word "twaddle" in connexion with passages in his later writings, and to doubt whether such very "common-place philosophy" may not share the fate that has already overtaken the labours of Martin Tupper. But there is, we think, enough salt in them to prevent such speedy extinction. Certainly they breathe throughout such a spirit of kindness that criticism is disarmed. In the present volume (which, like a lady's last words, is rather spun out) there is a sad tone. The philosopher is suffering from the results of old age. His physical strength has been tried by illness, friends have one by one been removed by the hand of death, and the retrospect is clouded by the conviction that he himself has scarcely met with his deserts. Presbyterianism has no prizes to offer to its ministers. Froude thought this a subject of thankfulness, but A. K. H. B. does not conceal his preference for a Church where things are otherwise ordered. "I might have made," he says "a decent Dean." We have no reason to doubt it. Much of the present volume is occupied with reminiscences of Bishop Thorold, with whom the writer was on terms of intimate friendship; and there are some interesting notices of Froude, who, we are told, contemplated at one time resuming clerical duty, and had the offer of a cathedral stall. It is unnecessary to add that anecdotes of every sort abound, and not a few shrewd observations on men and things. It will be with reluctance that we shall say the word farewell to this author when the time for so doing arrives. We will not anticipate it.

NOTES AND NEWS.

MESSRS. MACMILLAN & Co. announce a volume of poems by the late Mrs. Alexander (C. F. A.), edited, with a preface, by her husband, now Archbishop of Armagh.

Mr. T. FISHER UNWIN will publish immediately The Courtships of Queen Elizabeth: a history of the various negotiations for her marriage, by Mr. Martin A. S. Hume, editor of the Calendar of the Spanish State Papers for the time of Elizabeth. The volume will be illustrated with a photogravure of the portrait by Zuccherro at Hampton Court.

MR. HEINEMANN will shortly add to his series of the works of Dr. Max Nordau a translation of his Paradoxes, which originally appeared in 1884, with a new introduction specially written by the author for this edition. The book deals with such subjects as—pessimism and optimism, the rights of majorities, genius and talent, the natural history of love, evolution in aesthetics, &c.

MR. JOHN O'LEARY'S Recollections of Fenianism will be published, in two volumes, by Messrs. Downey—probably in the course of next month.

MESSRS. F. V. WHITE & Co. will publish this month the following works: Marlborough House and its Occupants, Present and Past, by Mr. Arthur H. Beavan, containing a large amount of most interesting detail never before printed, illustrated with sketches by Mr. Holland Tringham and photographic views taken by the special permission of the Prince of Wales; In Days of Strife, by E. Yolland; Letters to a Bride, by Mrs. Armstrong; and a Handbook for Lady Cyclists, by Mrs. Edward Kennard.

MR. ELKIN MATHEWS will publish next Monday, in his "Shilling Garland" series, Mr. Robert Bridges's Purcell Commemoration Ode, and Other Poems; and also a volume of poems by Mr. Vincent O'Sullivan, printed on hand-made paper at the Chiswick Press, with title design by Mr. Selwyn Image.

MESSRS. CHAPMAN & HALL will publish immediately The Transvaal and the Boers, a Brief History, by Mr. W. E. Garret Fisher.

MESSRS. CHAPMAN & HALL will shortly issue a work entitled The Veil Lifted, which professes to give a new reading of ancient history—Biblical, Egyptian, and Roman.

MR. CLEMENT SHORTER is editing for Messrs. Ward Lock & Co. a series of "Nineteenth Century Classics." The first volume will be Sartor Resartus, for which Prof. Dowden writes an introduction; the next two will also be Carlyle's: namely, Heroes and Hero-Worship and Past and Present, with introductions by Mr. Gosse and Mr. Frederic Harrison. These will be followed by Matthew Arnold's Poems, Mrs. Browning's Prometheus Bound, and Mrs. Gaskell's Cranford.

THE publication of The Oracle of Baal, a romance of adventure in Africa by a new writer, Mr. J. Provand Webster, was postponed to allow of the issue of the book in America. It will be published there by Messrs. J. B.

Lippincott & Co., and in England by Messrs. Hutchinson.

THE second volume of the new series of novels which Messrs. Hutchinson have just commenced, under the general title of the "Leisure Library," will be The Flaw in the Marble, issued anonymously. Like its predecessor in the same series, it will have numerous illustrations.

MESSRS. SWAN SONNENSCHNEIN & Co. have in preparation new editions of Prescott's History of Peru, and Prescott's History of Ferdinand and Isabella.

A NEW edition of James Waylen's The House of Cromwell is announced by Mr. Elliot Stock for early publication. It will be thoroughly revised and greatly added to, under the editorship of Canon Cromwell, a descendant of the Protector. Numerous portraits will illustrate the volume.

MESSRS. DODD, MEAD & Co., of Boston, invite subscriptions to a limited edition of the Journal of Captain William Pote, during his captivity in the French and Indian War from May, 1745, to August, 1747, an inedited document of much interest and historical and genealogical importance, discovered only six years ago in MS. by Bishop Hurst, who furnishes a preface. Mr. Victor H. Paltsits, of the Lenox Library, will supply an historical introduction, annotations, and an index. Illustrations and maps will add to the attractiveness of a luxurious piece of bookmaking.

A GERMAN translation of Prof. Driver's Introduction to the Literature of the Old Testament, by Prof. Rothstein, of Halle, is shortly to be published by Reuther & Reichardt, of Berlin.

ON Tuesday next Prof. James Sully will begin a course of three lectures at the Royal Institution on "Child-Study and Education."

THE annual dinner of the Booksellers' Provident Institution will be held on May 2, at the Holborn Restaurant, with Mr. George A. Macmillan in the chair, and Mr. Joseph W. Darton as vice-chairman.

THE Society of Public Librarians met at the Bermondsey Public Library on Wednesday in last week, when Mr. C. W. F. Goss (hon. sec.) read a paper on "The Beneficial Influences of Novel Reading." The next meeting will be held at the Stratford branch of the West Ham Public Libraries.

A DRINKING fountain erected to the memory of William and Dorothy Wordsworth in the Public Park at Cockermouth, the poet's birth-place, was unveiled on Tuesday, by Canon Rawnsley, Vicar of Crosthwaite, who read the following letter from Mr. Gladstone:

"I rejoice in any and every manifestation of honour to Wordsworth. I visited his house when a boy, and when a young man had the honour of entertaining him more than once in the Albany. I revered his genius and delighted in his kindness, and in the grave and stately, but not austere, dignity of his manners, apart from all personal impression and from all the prerogatives of genius. As such we owe him a debt of gratitude for having done so much for our literature in the capital points of purity and elevation."

DURING the first three days of next week Messrs. Sotheby will be engaged in selling the collection of autograph letters and historical documents formed by the late Baron N. C. de Bogouschewski. It consists mainly of letters, &c., signed by sovereigns, statesmen, and generals of all European countries; but even English authors are by no means badly represented. We notice signatures of Machiavelli, both Caesar and Lucrezia Borgia, Cardinal Pole, Henri Quatre, Mazeppa, and the Chevalier D'Eon.

ORIGINAL VERSE.

THE POET'S GRAVE.

Oh, wayfarers, be mute
As ye pass by.
With viol and with lute,
Muses, make melody
And music soft and slow
Where he lies low.

Dear Heart, to cover thee
Blossoms I bring.
I strew all over thee
White lilies, and I tinge
A wealth of roses red
To make thy bed.

Lo, for thy song sublime,
Laurels I throw:
Green garlands for all time
And dead, I crown thee so
And make thee off'ring meet,
O singer sweet.

Oh, may the earth be light
Upon thy head,
And on thy grave at night
Soft dew, like tears, be shed,
And rich-veined ivy creep
Where thou dost sleep.

ETHEL R. BARKER.

Versailles.

OBITUARY.

J. A. NOBLE.

WE have to record, with sorrow that will be widely felt, the death of Mr J. A. Noble a valued contributor to the ACADEMY so long as it has been under its present management. About thirteen years ago, he was struck down by a terrible disease, from which he recovered in unexpected measure. But he never regained his physical vigour; and all his later work was accomplished under conditions that would have depressed any but the bravest heart. His final illness was of a different nature, sudden and painful; but it was borne with equal fortitude. He died on Good Friday, April 3, at his home on Wandsworth Common.

James Ashcroft Noble was born in 1844 at Liverpool, and all his early life was spent in his native city. From a boy he was devoted to literature, and never attempted to enter any business or profession. There collected round him as their centre a band of younger men who may some day be known as the Liverpool School, who studied modern literature together, read papers to one another, and wrote poetry. Some of them, such as Mr. Hall Caine, Mr. William Watson, and Mr. R. Le Gallienne, have since become famous; but we may further mention the names of Mr. Walter Lewin, Mr. Robert Leighton, and Mr. William Tirebuck. The position which Noble occupied among them may be learnt from the fact that, in 1876, he was selected to be the editor of a weekly Liverpool paper, called the Argus, in which appeared the earliest writings of many of those we have mentioned. The personal influences that had most to do with determining his own character came from Prof. Edward Dowden of Dublin, Sir Edward Russell of the Liverpool Daily Post, and the late Alexander Ireland of the Manchester Examiner.

In 1881, Noble came up to London, resolved to make his way as a literary journalist. His considerable knowledge, his wide sympathy, his critical insight, his agreeable style formed exceptional qualifications for such a career; and to these were added the still rarer virtue of conscientiousness, both towards the editor for whom he wrote and towards the author whom he reviewed. Unfortunately, just when he was beginning to establish his position, his health broke down, and he was compelled to retire to Southport. There he continued to support himself by literary work and occasional lecturing.

Three or four years ago he was emboldened to return to London, so as to be in closer contact with newspaper offices. Though still contributing to the Spectator, the Daily Chronicle, and other journals, he had recently devoted most of his time to starting the New Age, in conjunction with Mr. A. E. Fletcher.

It is to be regretted that Noble has left little for permanent remembrance. His Pelican Papers (1873) are a collection of early Liverpool essays. To the Contemporary Review for September, 1880, he contributed a paper on "The Sonnet in England," which won approval from the best critics, and was some years afterwards reprinted in a volume to which it gave its title. In 1887, he published what is little more than a pamphlet on Morality in English Fiction; and in the same year a volume of simple, reflective poetry, which he modestly entitled Verses of a Prose Writer. Many of the critical estimates in Miles's Poets and Poetry of the Century are from his sympathetic pen. Quite recently he brought out a volume of Impressions and Memories, which reveals with charming candour the tastes and character of its author.

Noble was essentially a reviewer; and almost all his work is buried in that most ephemeral of all kinds of publication. But as a reviewer of pure literature—poetry, fiction, or essays—we do not know that he had any superior. Others may be more clever, more suggestive, or more trenchant. Noble was content to suppress himself in the interests of his author: to find out what there was of good in the book before him, and to deliver his verdict with geniality. In truth, he carried into his work the goodness of heart that characterised his private conduct. In his relations as husband, father, and friend, he recalls the stories told about Southey. To have known him was to learn that the ill-rewarded toil of a literary life can be sweetened by domestic happiness and a conscience void of offence. He acted up to his motto: "Let Name show Aim."

J. S. C.

MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS.

MR. CLIVE HOLLAND's paper on "Badges and Devices," in the April number of the Antiquary, has some useful illustrations, and contains much information not readily to be found elsewhere. Badges and devices are not heraldic in the narrow sense in which most of us are accustomed to use the word, but they belong to the same order of ideas as merchants' marks, and other signs akin to heraldry. The old printers were wont to use them, as well as the ball-founders; and the practice has, we are glad to know, been revived in modern days. Trade-marks are, for the most part, vulgar monstrosities; but we have seen some that are excellent in both design and execution. The most interesting article in the number is a portion of a diary kept by the Rev. William MacRitchie, a minister of the Scottish Church, who made a tour in England in 1795. We have here his notes of the principal things he saw between Carlisle and London. He was evidently an ardent botanist and a man of generally cultivated taste. He was delighted with the rich and highly cultivated appearance of the land near Liverpool. He remarks that the Pink-eye potato, "as it is here called, is becoming the fashionable potato of this country: it is preferred to the Champion." A quarter of a century ago there were potatoes bearing these names cultivated extensively on the "warp-lands" near the banks of the Ouse and the Trent. Were they, we wonder, descendants of those Mr. MacRitchie saw, or were they new varieties under old names? The designations of potatoes are constantly varying. To give a list of all, imperfect as it must necessarily be, would fill a whole number of the Antiquary. Dr. Fowler continues his valuable annotated account-book of William Wray, the Ripon shopkeeper. There are several things therein we should like to remark upon, but space fails us. One passage must not be passed over. In 1402 we are told that "The emperor Rob. cam into england." The editor tells us that he has not been able to find any other account of this visit; we have been equally unsuccessful. The account of the demolition of the Rolls Chapel should be pondered by all who desire the preservation of our national antiquities. It is one of the most wanton and stupid acts of destruction that have occurred during the present generation.

CORRESPONDENCE.

MONS BADONICUS AND GEOFFREY OF MONMOUTH.—II.

Bodleian Library, Oxford: March 29, 1896.

At least as early as 1139 the South-Welshman Geoffrey of Monmouth issued a work of which the first edition is lost, but of which a later edition is celebrated under the title of Historia Regum Britanniae. At the very beginning (i. § 1) Geoffrey says it is a translation of a very ancient book of Breton speech (Britannici sermonis) which Walter, the Archdeacon of Oxford, put before him (obtulit) and asked him to translate. And at the very end (xii. § 20) he cautions William of Malmesbury and Henry of Huntingdon not to say anything about the kings of the Britons, because they have not that book of Breton speech which Walter, Archdeacon of Oxford, brought out of Brittany (Britannia). It has been suggested that "Britannici" and "Britannia" mean "Welsh" and "Wales"; but Zimmer, in an article to which Prof. Rhys called my attention (Zeitschr. f. franz. Sprache u. Lit. XII. p. 256), replied long ago that when Geoffrey is certainly speaking of Wales he always calls it Cambria or Gualia. On the other hand, he does speak of "Armorican regnum, quod nunc Britannia dicitur" (v. 12).

Geoffrey's Breton original, like so much other medieval literature, has either perished or at least awaits rediscovery. Consequently some have supposed that it never existed, and that the history is entirely a make-up of Geoffrey's own. If this were so, Archdeacon Walter must have been a party to the fraud; for the statement was made by Geoffrey in Walter's lifetime. Nor can I believe that, if the statement were false, the book would have been dedicated to Robert, Earl of Gloucester, and at one time also to King Stephen, or that William of Malmesbury and Henry of Huntingdon would have been cautioned by name. Had any one of these four insisted on seeing the Breton original, and the latter had not been producible, what would have happened to Geoffrey and the Archdeacon?

I shall now abstract Geoffrey's account of Arthur's reign to the end of the Mons Badonicus affair, suppressing no detail which can prejudice the reader against it; and shall then show that it contains the most convincing evidence of being ultimately based on a genuine and, in its main outlines, trustworthy narrative.

On the death of Uther Pendragon, the chief men of the different provinces met at Silchester,* and moved Dubricius, Archbishop of Caerleon, to consecrate Artur king. For the Saxons had invited their fellow-citizens from Germany, and under the captaincy of Colgrim were trying to exterminate the Britons; they had subjugated all the land between Humber and the Caithness sea (i.e., the sea between Aberdeenshire and Caithness). Accordingly Dubricius, assisted by the other bishops, crowned Artur, who was only fifteen years old, and whose qualities made him loved by almost all the peoples.

On his coronation he gave the customary largess, and such a multitude of soldiers flocked to him that he was unable to pay them all. He determined to get wealth by attacking the Saxons, since he was entitled to the hereditary monarchy of the entire isle. Accordingly he marched towards York. Colgrim collected the Saxons, Scots, and Picts against him, but suffered defeat on the banks of the Douglas, and taking refuge in York was besieged there by Artur.

His brother Baldulf, who had been waiting on the coast for reinforcements from Germany under Cheldric, then marched with 6000 men to relieve York and, when ten miles off, planned to break in by a night march. Artur, learning this, sent Cadur, "dux" of Cornwall, with 600 horse and 3000 foot, who surprised and routed Baldulf's force. Baldulf then shaved himself, dressed as a gleeman, and passed into the British camp unsuspected; thus he managed to get under the walls, and those inside, perceiving his object, drew him up with ropes. At last Artur heard that Cheldric had landed in Alban (i.e., on the Pictish coast) with 600 vessels carrying soldiers, and, in fear of their coming down on him, abandoned the siege.

Following his friends' advice, he then retired to London, where he held a council of the clergy and all the chief men, and as a result sent messengers to his sister's son, Hoel, King of Armorica (son of King Budicius), who collected 15,000 men and landed them at Portus Hamonis (Southampton).

Artur and Hoel then marched to Kaerludcoit,* which was being besieged by the Saxons, and Geoffrey says it is in the province of Lindsey, is on a mount between two hills, and is also called Lindocoolinum (i.e., Lincoln). They inflicted on the Saxons a loss of 6000 killed (part of them drowned in the rivers), and Artur pursued the rest as far as the wood of Caledon, where they made a successful stand, the trees sheltering them from missiles. Thereon Artur had trees cut down and piled round that part of the wood to prevent egress, and blockaded them three days. The Saxons, beginning to suffer from famine, then offered to leave all their gold and silver behind and return to Germany, whence they would send him tribute; they also offered hostages. Artur, after taking counsel, granted these terms.

But when at sea the Saxons changed their mind, returned to Britain, landed at Totnes (Totonesium litus), and devastated the country up to the Severn Sea (Sabrinum mare), whence they proceeded to the district of Badon (pagum Badonis) and besieged the city (urbem).

Artur, on receiving the news, ordered sentence to be promulgated of the speedy execution of the hostages, abandoned a campaign he had begun against the Scots and Picts, and, leaving Hoel ill in Alolyde, marched into the province of Somerset.

After an exhortation by Dubricius, given from the top of a mount, they armed—Artur putting on a breastplate; a gold helmet with a dragon carved on it; his shield Pridwen, which had a figure of St. Mary on it, and continually reminded him of her; his sword Caliburn, wrought in the isle of Avallon; and his long and broad spear Ron.

The Saxons received his attack in their customary wedge-formation, and in the course of a long day's fight continually assumed the aggressive themselves. Towards sunset they withdrew to the nearest mount, which they wished to serve them as a camp (pro castris). For they were so confident in the number of their allies that they thought the mount of itself sufficient for this purpose.

At sunrise Artur stormed the ascent, but with heavy loss, owing to his men having the lower position, and in the hand-to-hand battle on top the Britons gained no advantage. Much of the day having thus passed, at last Artur drew his sword, called out the name of St. Mary, and rushed among the enemy. With each stroke of his sword, invoking God, he slew a foe—470 in all—and the Britons following him decided the day. Colgrim, Baldulf, and many thousands of Saxons fell.

Cheldric, however, had taken to flight, and Artur left Cadur to pursue him, while he himself returned to relieve Hoel in Alolyde, which was being besieged by the Scots and Picts. Cadur, with 10,000 men, at once made for the Saxons' ships, put some of his own troops into them, and then pursued the Saxons. They, sheltering themselves in woods, mountains, and caves, at length reached the Isle of Thanet (insulam Teneth) with shattered force. There Cadur attacked them, and, Cheldric being killed, they surrendered and gave hostages.

And now for the evidence that this is a story founded, in its main outlines, on fact.

Silchester* was doubtless called Kaer Segeint in Geoffrey's Breton book, and he got his identification from Henry of Huntingdon (i. § 3), whose work had appeared before 1133. Bishop Stubbs's preface to Cheales's new Guide to Silchester† contains some observations of great value to my case.

"Mr. Cheales," says the Bishop, "has taken up an attitude of scepticism with regard to the Arthurian connexion. What strikes me in this point is the curious fact that the place should have been selected for the localising of any part of the legends. Geoffrey of Monmouth must either have known more of Silchester than the mere name as he found it in Henry of Huntingdon, or have taken flight into an unaccustomed region of ecclesiastical mythology when he thought it necessary to record the appointment of Mauganius as Bishop of Silchester. As for the coronation of Constantine and Arthur, it is as likely to have taken place here as anywhere else."

The reality of St. Dubricius's existence needs no confirmation, but it used to be alleged against the champions of Artur's personality that Gildas does not mention him. In my letter of October 12 I showed that Gildas does mention him, under the name of Ursus, the Latin equivalent of Artur, which meant "bear-man" or "bear-male." Gildas implies that he was then dead, but that Gildas's own contemporary Cuneglasus had when a young man been comes stabuli to his queen. And this exactly consists with Artur's having been the king who fought at the obsecro of the Badon mount, which, Gildas says, took place forty-four years before the date of his writing.

The alleged occupation of the land between Humber and the Moray Firth by the Saxons (of course only the east side of it is meant) is confirmed by Nennius's statement (c. 38), that Vortigern gave settlements "iuxta murum qui vocatur Gual," up to the Pictish frontier, to Hengist's son and nephew, and by the fact that Lothian was called Saxonia. We know that Roman emperors gave largess on their accession. The fall of York is assigned by Green in The Making of England to this very period of 500-

* What does its modern name mean? Pillar-chester, from A.S. stȳl, "pillar"? The only basilica, I believe, yet found there is quite small; but there was a columned Forum.

† Published by Miss Langley, 37, London-street, Reading. 1s. net.

* Where my spelling of a proper name indicates a departure from Giles's very corrupt text, it is always based on one or more early Bodleian MS.

* Giles, "Kaerludcoit." Most Bodleian MSS. have -lud or -lud-, but the thirteenth century MS. Fairfax 28 has kaerlud and a gap, the scribe having been unable to read the rest of the name.

520, although he ignores Geoffrey. Colgrim is a real Anglo-Saxon name.

Nennius (c. 56) says that Artur's first battle against the Saxons was at the mouth of the Glein and his next four on the Dubglas "in regione Linnuis." If Geoffrey and Nennius are both writing real history, the Glein and the Dubglas ought to lie between Silchester, or London, and York. If Artur started north from Silchester, he might, choose either of two routes to Lincoln, one of which would, while the other would not, take him across the river Glen (otherwise Glean). If he started from London, he would naturally cross that river. The Wash then extended far inland, and the Glen flowed into it at a distance (see Pearson's map of Roman Britain) probably of only about six miles from the Lincoln road. As for Linnuis, it is simply the assimilated form of Linduis: in O. Welsh "pro nd . . . primitivo frequentissima est geminatio nn" (Zeuss, p. 147). Linduis is a collective = inhabitants of Lind, like "Monwys (Monenses), Lloegrwys (Loegrenses)" (Zeuss, p. 294). The district is, of course, the Lindesse or Lindesige of the Anglo-Saxon Chronicle, our Lindsey (a name embracing nearly all Lincolnshire), respecting the Old English forms of which see Mr. T. Miller's lately published Place Names in the English Bede. The river Dubglas was, of course, a stream on the line of the Roman road, probably the Brant, the Witham, or the Till. Dubglas merely means "dark gray" and would naturally be a common river-name.

Colgrim had obviously planned to meet Artur south of Lincoln, cutting him off from that city if he were defeated, and ensuring its fall. And Baldulf, who was coasting on the look-out for the German reinforcements, was to co-operate by landing at the Wash so as to take Artur in the rear or right flank. Colgrim, however, was a little too late, or Baldulf a little too soon, and Artur was able to drive the latter back into his ships at the mouth of the Glen before meeting Colgrim. Then followed a four days' battle on the Dubglas, Colgrim probably expecting each day that Baldulf would come up, while Baldulf himself, in ignorance of Colgrim's whereabouts, had sailed back to the Humber. That is how I read the campaign.

Baldulf = Balduulf, a genuine Northumbrian name, but so rare that I have only found one instance of it (in Sweet's Old English Texts). Cheldric is apparently the Frankish and Breton form (cf. Childeric = Hilderic) for a name which would have appeared in Old English as Hyldric or Heldric ("powerful in protection," from hyld, held, "protection," and rice, "powerful"). Nennius (c. 56) says that all the time Artur was beating the Saxons they were calling allies from Germany.

That there was a "dux" of Cornwall, or "rex" of it (as Geoffrey afterwards calls Cadur)

* Perhaps "dark tawny." Gildas renders glass in Oune-glass by "fulve." Mr. W. Jones, M.P., has pointed out to Prof. Rhys and myself that in the Book of Aneurin glas is an epithet of mead (glaswed), and Prof. Rhys adds that there is reason to be found in O. Irish literature for thinking that it once indicated a colour tinged with yellow.

A glance at Nennius, the Ordnance Gazetteer of Scotland, and Johnstone's Place Names of Scotland is enough to dispose for ever of Skene's identification of Linnuis with Lennox. In 1210 Lennox was Levenax, which is simply an English plural of Levenach (found in the same year), as we might speak of "the Bermudas." Levenach is a Gaelic adjective meaning "of Leven," the parts in question being those which lie about the river Leven and Loch Lomond (once also known as Loch Leven). The v in Leven is the Gaelic mh, aspirated from an earlier n. Tighernac, about 1100, calls the glen Glen Lemnae; and Nennius himself, about 798, calls the river Lenn (c. 67)—the district he would have named Lemnach, Lemnauc, or Lemnoc.

is practically certain from Gildas's styling one of his group of British kings "the whelp of the lioness of Devon": if Devon had a king, he must have ruled Cornwall also, or else Cornwall must have had a king of its own. Cadur is obviously either the Welsh and O. Breton cadur ("decorus" or "robustus"), or more probably Welsh cadur "warrior," Cornish cadur. Hoel = Breton Ho-uuel (the ordinary Cymric form being Hy-wel, Stokes, Urskell. Spr. p. 304). Budic-ius ("victorious") = O. Breton Budic (Stokes ib., p. 175). Daru (Hist. de Bretagne, vol. i.) puts the accession of Budic (p. 80) about 490, and that of his eldest son Hoel (p. 90) about 509. Kaerludocit. (called by Nennius, c. 28, Cair Luit Coyt) had been erroneously identified by Henry of Huntingdon (i. 3) with Lincoln—hence Geoffrey's mistake. It really was the Roman Letocetum, i.e. Wall, in Staffordshire, near Lichfield. Letocetum was on high ground (394 ft.); Hammerwich water ran below it, and the River Tame less than a mile off. The battle fought was doubtless the next one mentioned by Nennius, "super flumen quod vocatur Bassas." The battle of the wood of Caledon then follows in Nennius, who calls it "bellum in silva Celidonis id est cat" [battle] "Coit Celidon." The wood had nothing directly to do with the Caledonian wood: it was the great forest which once covered Cannock Chase. Nennius thought that celidon was a singular, doubtless derived (as badon from bad) from celid (Mod. Welsh celydd), a place of concealment, retreat. And I submit that the obvious connexion with the Welsh word strongly confirms the story of Geoffrey as to the Saxons taking refuge in it.

The statement that the plunderers who capitulated sailed round from the east coast, and landing at Totnes wasted the land up to the Severn Sea, explains Gildas's statement (c. xxiv.), that the fire of invasion piled up by an eastern band of church-robbers eventually licked the western ocean. The dragon on Artur's helmet is what we should have expected; his father, Pendragon, evidently wore it before him, and the red dragon is the national standard of Wales. The statement that Artur carried an image of the Virgin on his shield explains and corrects that of Nennius, that in one of his battles he carried her image on his shoulders; the original chronicle obviously contained the word scut, which might = either "shield" or "shoulders" (Williams ab Ithel, preface to the Annales, p. xxiv.). The name of the shield, Pridwen = "white-face," either from its own colour or from the face of the Virgin painted on it. I suspect Caliburn meant "ivory-hilted," from the stem cal ("stalk"), and an adjective borrowed from the Latin eburnus. Avalon ("Appleton") is a genuine Celtic place-name (see Holder); there is an Avalon in France to this day. Ron is the Welsh rhon, "spear," and in oldest Welsh rh is unknown (Zeuss, p. 111).

Mr. Oman tells me that the Saxons did fight in wedge-shaped formation, but had ceased doing so before the Conquest. The hill to which they retired I take to be Hampton

* I have to thank Prof. Rhys and Mr. Haverfield for information.

† But what Geoffrey says about the site and the Saxons' loss by drowning may be mere deductions of his own from the supposed identity with Lincoln.

‡ The Caledonian wood was so called from the Caledones.

§ The Annales Cambriae make him carry "crucem Domini nostri Jesu Christi tribus diebus et tribus noctibus in humeros suos" (i.e., on his shield), at the Badon Mount. This suggests that there may have been a day's pause between Artur's arrival at Bath and the first battle, or between the first battle and the storming of the hill.

Down. The single stone bridge over the Avon from the south was opposite the city walls; it is doubtful whether they would be able to cross this bridge at all, and there was no other means of passage (short of swimming or wading) except a wooden bridge or ferry higher up (it is uncertain which). Hence they may not have crossed en masse at all, but have merely sent over enough men to form a cordon round the city and cut off its supplies. If, however, they did cross en masse, they would surely recross on Artur's approach: they would scarcely accept battle with the Avon at their backs, especially when by recrossing it they could put Artur in that disadvantageous position. Hence the battle would be where Bathwick now stands, and the Saxons would naturally retire up Hampton Down (which they had probably occupied from the very first) both for the advantage of the higher ground and also for that of the "fortified British settlement" and "Roman camp" on top of it, (Scarsh, Roman Bath, 128).

Artur's miraculous charge is mentioned (about 796) by Nennius, who puts the number killed in it at 960, instead of the 470 of the Breton Chronicle: that Artur did head a final attack in which he invoked divine aid and performed feats which time exaggerated, may very well be believed. What is difficult to imagine is that Cadur, after putting men on board the Saxon ships, pursued the fugitives to the Isle of Thanet. All Kent was held by the Jutes, and, even if these were unable to oppose the sudden inroad of Cadur, would not the Saxons have found safety by simply mixing with and passing as Jutes?

I have collated the sixteen Bodleian MSS. and two others (twelfth century) belonging to Magdalen; have had all thirty-four of the British Museum MSS. collated for me; and have ascertained from the Bern librarian the reading of the celebrated twelfth century MS. there, supposed to have been written (or copied from one written) in 1136-38. Every one of these has Teneth or some other form of the name Thanet, and every one has "insulam." Henry of Huntingdon, in his abstract of Geoffrey's first edition, has not got "insulam," but no weight can be attached to the absence (in an abstract) of a needless word.

When, however, we turn to Wace's verse Roman de Brut, written in 1155, and obviously based on Geoffrey, we find nothing about Thanet, but are told that Cadur met the Saxons at the passage of the water of the Teigne (9624, l'ève del Teigne †), and that Cheldric was killed at the ascent of Teignewic ‡ (9628). In other words, the Saxons were naturally making for their ships at Totnes, and were met by Cadur at the Teign. The termination in Teignewic = O. Corn. wich (Domesday), Breton guik, Latin vic-us, our wick, but whether the town of Teign (Domesday) or a district is meant it is impossible to say. If anyone should doubt what is the right reading in Wace, let me say that Layaumon, who had Wace before him, calls the river Teine and speaks of the hill called Teinnewic.

It is easy to see that such a form might pass into one something like Tenech (an actual reading in some MSS. of Geoffrey), and that this was mistaken for Teneth (the then name of Thanet), which is read in the printed text of Henry of Huntingdon's abstract of Geoffrey, and in two thirteenth century copies (MS. Bodley 514, and MS. Laud misc. 720) of Geoffrey himself. But how comes it that not one of the 53 MSS.

* See Delisle's ed. of Rob. of Torigni, i. 109.

† So the early thirteenth century MS. du Roi, 73, Cange. Another reading is de Tiengne. The bad printed text has de Trains.

‡ The printed text has Ténédis, but three MSS. give Tignevic (thirteenth century), Tegnigwic (early thirteenth), or Tringunwic (fourteenth).

of Geoffrey collated for this passage has the right form, and that every one has the fatal word "insulam"? And why no mention of the water of Teign?

The only plausible explanation I can suggest is this. Geoffrey, in dedicating his book to Robert of Gloucester, expressly invites his patron's corrections:

"Opusculo igitur meo, Rotberte dux Claudio-cestrie, faueas, ut sic te ductore, te monitore, corrigatur, quod non ex Galfridi Monemutensis fonticulo censeatur exortum, sed sale Minerve tue conditum illius dicatur editio quem Henricus illustris rex Anglorum generauit."

Did Robert alter the Teign passage because he failed to see what places were meant; and did Wace, who translated the book in the year after Geoffrey's death, come into possession (at that event) of Geoffrey's own original draft?

And so I end the twofold task of restoring the site of the Badon Mount to Bath and of revindicating to British history an unjustly discredited chapter of events.

E. W. B. NICHOLSON.

ON A PAIR OF GAULISH DEITIES.

London: April 4, 1896.

My authority for the reading Nantosvella is M. Solomon Reinach himself. See the Revue Critique for Février 10, 1896, p. 120. Nantosvella yields a clear and probable meaning. Nantosvella is, if I may say so, epigraphic gibberish. In the absence of further evidence, such as a photograph, rubbing, or paper cast, I shall continue to believe that the third letter is v, and that a flaw or accidental scratch in the stone has been mistaken by M. Michaelist for the first stroke of an n.

WHITLEY STOKES.

APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK.

MONDAY, April 13, 4.30 p.m. Victoria Institute: a Paper by Mr. Theodore Wood.

5 p.m. Royal Institution: General Monthly Meeting.

8 p.m. Aristotelian: "Some Effects of Attention," by Miss E. E. Constance Jones.

8 p.m. Society of Arts: Cantor Lecture, "Precious Stones," I., by Prof. Henry A. Miers.

8.30 p.m. Geographical: "Popocatepetl and the Volcanoes of Central Mexico," by Mr. O. H. Howarth.

TUESDAY, April 14, 3 p.m. Royal Institution: "Child-Study and Education," I., by Prof. James Sully.

8 p.m. Civil Engineers: "The Thirlmere Works for the Water-Supply of Manchester," by Mr. G. H. Hill; and "The Vyrnwy Works for the Water-Supply of Liverpool," by Mr. G. F. Deacon.

8 p.m. Colonial Institute: "One Hundred Years of British Rule in Ceylon," by Mr. L. B. Clarence.

8.30 p.m. Anthropological Institute: "The Asiatic Element of the Tribes of Southern Mexico," by Mr. Osbert H. Howarth; "Unusual Forms of Burial by People of East Borneo," by Mr. C. V. Creagh; "The Cave Dwellers of Perak," by Mr. L. Wray, jun.

WEDNESDAY, April 15, 7.30 p.m. Meteorological: "Mean Amount of Cloud on each Day of the Year at the Royal Observatory, Greenwich, on the Average of the Fifty Years 1841 to 1890," by Mr. William Ellis; "Atmospheric Dust Observations from Various Parts of the World," by Mr. E. D. Fridlander; "Analysis of the Greenwich Rainfall Records from 1879 to 1890, with Special Reference to the Declination of the Sun and Moon," by Major H. E. Rawson.

8 p.m. Geological: "The Junction-beds of the Upper Lias and Inferior Oolite in Northamptonshire," by Mr. Beeby Thompson; "The Stratigraphy and Palaeontology of the Gl. bigerrina-Limestones of the Maltese Islands," by Mr. John H. Cooke; "The Geology of the Neighbourhood of Caermarthen," by Miss M. C. Crofield and Miss E. G. Skent.

8 p.m. Society of Arts: "Early English Organ Writers," by Mr. Burnham Horner.

8 p.m. Microscopical.

8 p.m. Elizabethan: "Marlowe and the Tudor Rationalists," by Mr. J. M. Wheeler.

THURSDAY, April 16, 3 p.m. Royal Institution: "Recent Chemical Progress," I., by Prof. Dewar.

8 p.m. Linnean: "Berkeley's Types of Fungi re-described," by Mr. G. Massee; "The Internal Anatomy of Belle (Laur.)," by Mr. A. D. Michael.

* I once fancied that Wace did not translate from Geoffrey at all, but had independent access to Geoffrey's Breton source; further comparison has led me to abandon this idea.

† Misprinted "Michrells" in to-day's ACADEMY.

8 p.m. Electrical Engineers: "Telephonic Exchanges and their Working," by Mr. Dane Sinclair.

8.30 p.m. Antiquaries.

FRIDAY, April 17, 8 p.m. Philological: "Report on the Progress of the New English Dictionary," by Dr. J. A. H. Murray.

8 p.m. Civil Engineers: Students' Meeting: "Recent Developments in Lighthouse Engineering," by Mr. Nicholas G. Gedge.

8.30 p.m. Viking Club: Annual General Meeting: "The Worship of Freya and other Tentative Gods in Roman Britain," by Mr. F. T. Norris.

8 p.m. Royal Institution: "Colour Photography," by Prof. G. Lippmann.

SATURDAY, April 18, 3 p.m. Royal Institution: "The Vault of the Sixtine Chapel," I., by Prof. W. B. Richmond.

SCIENCE.

A MONOGRAPH UPON EARTHWORMS.

A Monograph of the Order Oligochaeta. By Frank Evers Beddard, Professor to the Zoological Society of London and Lecturer on Biology at Guy's Hospital. (Oxford: Clarendon Press.)

MR. BEDDARD has made so many contributions to knowledge of the earthworms that he has become one of the leading authorities on the group, while the attention he has paid to very different forms of animal life give him a breadth of view that is rare with specialists.

This beautifully printed and well illustrated volume forms a notable addition to the list of English monographs on special groups. The importance of the volume and the fact that it will remain for long the standard treatise on Oligochaetes compel me to express regret that more elaborate treatment of embryology has been excluded from it. Mr. Beddard refrained chiefly on account of the careful treatise of Prof. Vejdovsky, and he has limited himself to an account of the development of some of the organs, in connexion with a description of their anatomy. In the anatomical portion of his book, Mr. Beddard gives an account of the structure and modifications of the various tissues and organs, which is of the greatest interest to anatomists and morphologists. But the morphological nature of many of these structures, notably of the systems of internal cavities, depends upon their embryological history. The exact nature of the coelome, genital cavities and ducts, nephridia and blood spaces, are burning questions in morphology. Mr. Beddard would have laid morphologists under a greater debt, had he made a more generous allotment of his space to embryology. With exception of this criticism, which, after all, is chiefly a matter of opinion, it would be difficult to do other than admire the lucidity, learning, and care shown in the eight hundred pages of the volume. After the anatomical section, there is a chapter on geographical distribution, a chapter on the affinities and relationships of the groups, and then follows the systematic part. The volume concludes with a list of the literature and a careful index.

The systematic part, the account of the families, with diagnoses of the genera and species, naturally occupies the greater part of the monograph. Mr. Beddard himself has described so large a number of the forms for the first time that he was peculiarly fitted to give clear diagnoses, and to throw light on vexed questions of synonymy. Two things have made the difficulties arising from the multiple naming of the same creature and the reference of different creatures to the same name less great in the case of earthworms than among many other groups. First, the study and collection of earthworms is, for the most part, a recent event in natural history. Secondly, and partly because the species-makers have been for the most part anatomists, the criteria employed in describing species have been anatomical facts rather than vague references to colour, size, and so forth. But the difficulties were great enough; the literature was very scattered; access to type forms was difficult; and Mr. Beddard is to be congratulated upon his success.

The section upon geographical distribution, recently expanded by the author in a little volume on distribution, contains matter of novelty and interest. At first sight it would seem that earthworms had fewer means of dispersal than most animals. They have small powers of locomotion; they are easily killed by salt water; and their cocoons, being deposited deep down in burrows, unlike the eggs of molluscs, are not likely to be carried accidentally in particles of soil attached to the feet of birds. On the other hand, Mr. Beddard is convinced that earthworms have spread across oceans by the agency of man. In the cultivated parts of the world, European forms have nearly always managed to replace the native species and genera. In Melbourne, for instance,

"to get native species it is necessary to go well outside the town, the town's gardens being filled with the European species. In gatherings of worms from cultivated regions in New Zealand, there were hardly any native species to be found; the same was the case in gatherings from the seaboard of South America."

It is possible to exclude these accidental or recent modes of distribution, and, after their exclusion, Mr. Beddard comes to some remarkable generalisations. He strongly supports a view, which is gaining ground from study of many other groups, that a former Antarctic continent connected New Zealand with Patagonia. He finds that Australia is marked off sharply from New Zealand by its earthworm fauna, while New Zealand, the islands of the Antarctic Ocean, and Patagonia are characterised by closely allied worms. It is, however, to be remembered that there is a considerable difference between conclusions based upon the presence of identical species and of identical groups of higher systematic rank. There are wide divergencies among systematists of different groups, as to the degree of anatomical difference which they denote by the terms variety, species, genus, family, and so forth. The personal equation becomes greater the higher one goes in systematic rank. There is more certainty that individuals grouped together as varieties of a species are really blood relatives than for the kinship of the various groups of individuals ranked together as species of a genus. When it comes to grouping genera together as families, the individual equation is at its greatest, and certainly an abstraction of anatomical characters supposed to be identical is denoted by the term family much more than a blood relationship. It is only so far as the terms species, genus, family, express blood relationships that they are important as indicating affinity between geographical regions. Identical species mean a great deal; identical genera much less; identical families almost nothing from the point of view of establishing a land connexion between regions now far separated.

P. CHALMERS MITCHELL.

TWO DICTIONARIES.

Deutsches Wörterbuch. Von Hermann Paul. Erste Lieferung: A—Gebühr. (Halle: Niemeyer.) The announcement of a German dictionary by the distinguished author of the Principien der Sprachgeschichte cannot fail to excite high expectations, which, however, may be in some degree moderated when it is known that the work is addressed rather to the general educated public than to scholars, and that it is not to extend to more than 800 pages. Under such conditions there is comparatively little opportunity for the display of Prof. Paul's characteristic powers; but the book is nevertheless one of great interest and value. Although the scale of the dictionary is so small, most of the articles are of considerable length: the word ab, for instance, occupies two and a half pages, and bleiben nearly a page. The space for this copious treatment of individual words is gained by the omission of the customary explanations of words and senses which all educated speakers of German may be presumed to understand sufficiently. The literal senses of Auge, Flügel, Fuss are not noticed, and many common words, such as Arm, Baum, Et, Flamme, are omitted altogether. Foreign words are also ignored, however frequent in German use; for the explanation of these the reader must go to the "Fremdwörterbücher." The special objects of this dictionary, in addition to the "explanation of hard words," are to trace the development of secondary senses, when this is not obvious; to exhibit the changes in usage or construction that have taken place during the modern period of the language, and the diversities in vocabulary and idiom in different parts of Germany; and, in general, to furnish such lexical aid as ordinary readers may be expected to require for the accurate understanding of classical and contemporary literature. In many instances, neologisms that have come into current use are assigned to their original authors. As a rule, etymological information is not given, unless for some special reason, as when it helps to account for the divergent senses of a word. In a popular dictionary this method has much to recommend it, and it might possibly be adopted with advantage in English works. The prefixes and the pronouns are treated with great minuteness. A considerable number of illustrative quotations are given, but without any more precise reference than the name of the author quoted. Now and then we have failed to find useful information which, so far as we can see, might have been furnished without any deviation from the general plan. Words like Baumwolle, Fernrohr, &c., of course need no explanation of their meaning, but a few words on their history would not have been out of place. Under Blau, Prof. Paul mentions the common European expression "blue blood," but leaves its origin unexplained. Under Fuss, the use of the word for a metrical foot should have been mentioned and accounted for. The statement that Brautlauf properly means "bridal procession" seems at least questionable; and it is hard to believe, even on so high authority as that of Prof. Paul, that the etymological sense of entbehren is "nicht tragen." To dismiss für with a mere cross-reference to vor would be all very well in an etymological dictionary, but in such a work as this it seems to be an inconvenient course.

An Etymological Dictionary of the Gaelic Language. By Alexander MacBain. (Inverness: The Northern Counties Printing and Publishing Co.) To attempt the compilation of an etymological dictionary of any Celtic language is to give proof of no little boldness; but Mr. MacBain's courage proceeds neither from ignorance of the difficulty of his task nor from excessive confidence in his own powers. He possesses a good knowledge of the principles of modern philological science, and has spared no pains to make himself acquainted with all the literature bearing on his subject. That many of his results must be uncertain, he would be the first to admit; but the book lays a valuable foundation for the scientific study of the language, and deserves the attention of all students of Celtic and Indogermanic philology. Apart from its etymological merits, this dictionary is important as containing a more complete and trustworthy vocabulary of Scottish Gaelic (so far as the primary words are concerned) than is elsewhere to be found. The fragments and blunders of former lexicographers have been carefully eliminated, and obsolete words are distinguished by a special mark. The introduction contains an excellent sketch of the phonological relations between Gaelic and the kindred languages, and there are two useful appendices: one on the names of the Celtic peoples and countries, and the other on the personal and family names current in the Highlands. It is to be hoped that the book will be extensively studied among that large class of Highlanders whose enthusiastic interest in the philology of their own tongue is not directed by any scientific knowledge. In a future edition it would be well to avoid the oddity of writing "cfs." for "compares," and to remove a few peculiarities of idiom which may be found puzzling by Southern readers.

SCIENCE NOTES.

THE first soirée of the Royal Society will be held at Burlington House, on Wednesday, May 6.

ON Thursday next, Prof. Dewar will begin a course of three lectures, at the Royal Institution, on "Recent Chemical Progress." The Friday evening meetings are to be resumed on April 17, when Prof. G. Lippmann will deliver a discourse on "Colour Photography."

ON Monday next, Prof. Henry A. Miers—formerly of the Natural History Museum, who was recently appointed to the Waynflete chair of mineralogy at Oxford—will begin a course of Cantor Lectures at the Society of Arts, on "Precious Stones." In his first lecture he will deal with the properties which make precious stones esteemed among minerals, and the properties by which precious stones are recognised.

At the meeting of the Anthropological Institute, to be held on Tuesday next, at 3, Hanover-square, Mr. Osbert H. Howarth will read a paper, illustrated with exhibits and by the optical lantern, on "The Asiatic Element of the Tribes of Southern Mexico."

HER Majesty's Commissioners for the Exhibition of 1881 have considerably increased their annual grant in aid of the work carried out in the department of scientific and technical research at the Imperial Institute; and the executive council of the Institute have consequently decided to take active steps for the development of this department, which is charged with the work of investigating new or little known natural products from the colonies and India, and of advising as to their industrial and commercial utilisation and value. A commodious laboratory having been fitted up, and, so far as possible, equipped, in 1894, with the aid of funds provided for that purpose by the Goldsmith's Company, the operations of the scientific department commenced in October of that year, under the temporary direction of Sir Frederick Abel, the general director and secretary of the Institute; and much work, both of scientific interest and of practical value to India and certain of the colonies, has already been carried out by it. The council of the Institute have now appointed Prof. Wyndham B. Dunstan (hon. secretary of the Chemical Society), as director of this department, to the staff of which other additions are contemplated.

PHILOLOGY NOTES.

At the meeting of the Philological Society, to be held at University College, on Friday next, Dr. J. A. H. Murray will present a report on his progress with the New English Dictionary, dealing with the letter D.

At a recent meeting of the Académie des Inscriptions, M. Clermont-Ganneau exhibited a small intaglio which has recently been acquired by the Louvre. Despite the fact that it does not measure more than sixteen millimeters, its interest is very great. It is a seal of hard stone, of Jewish origin; and its date can be fixed to about the sixth century B.C. The stone is a kind of dull jasper, cut to an ellipsoid, and pierced right through, so that it could be hung on a string or mounted in a ring. On one of its faces is engraved an uræus, with four wings, borrowed from Egyptian symbolism; beneath, in characters of Phœnician type belonging to the old Hebrew alphabet, are to be read the two Hebrew names—Yahmolyahu and Maaseyah. The former means "May Jehovah be compassionate!"; the latter, which occurs several times in the Bible, means "Work of Jehovah." The etymology of these names is enough by itself to disclose the nationality of the persons who bore them, and who could not have been other than Jews and worshippers of Jehovah. Moreover, the letters of the inscription exhibit all the characteristics of Phœnician writing, such as was used by the Jews before the captivity.

REPORTS OF SOCIETIES.

CAMBRIDGE PHILOSOPHICAL SOCIETY.—(Monday, March 9.)

PROF. J. J. THOMSON, president, in the chair.—The following communications were made: (1) "Notes on the Geological History of Monocotyledons," by Mr. A. C. Seward. The object of the paper was to examine the evidence of palaeobotany as to the geological antiquity of monocotyledonous plants. Various fossil plants have been recorded from Permo-Carboniferous, Triassic, and Jurassic strata, as examples of inflorescences and leaves of monocotyledons; but an examination of the specimens on which such determinations were founded throws very considerable doubt on the accuracy of the identifications. Special reference was made to a specimen from the Lower Greensand beds of Potton, originally described as Kalidacarpus minus Carr., and referred to the Pandanus, also to the stems from the Iguanodon quarry at Maidstone, included in the recent genus Dracaena; the former the author regarded as an example of an araucarian cone, and the latter as a cycadean stem. On the whole, it would seem that we have no satisfactory records of monocotyledons prior to Cretaceous times.—(2) "A Description of the Skulls found at Giron in 1881," by Mr. H. Horton-Smith. The cemetery in which the skulls were found contained also a large number of Anglo-Saxon cinerary urns, but no Roman coins and no Christian emblems. The absence of these fixes the date of the cemetery between the limits of 410 and 650 A.D., as the Roman legions were recalled from Britain in 410, and the Anglo-Saxons embraced Christianity about 650. A study of the crania led to the conclusion that they belonged to the East Anglian rather than to the Saxon race. The East Anglian skulls, with which they were compared, were discovered either at Hauxton or in Cambridge itself, and the resemblance between the mean indices of these and the Giron skulls is sufficiently close to warrant the assertion that they were all members of one race.—(3) "Some Scratched Stones from the Permo-Carboniferous Rocks of South-East Australia, and the Bearing of the Evidence on the Question of Recurring Ice Ages," by Prof. Hughes. He exhibited some specimens and photographs given to him by Prof. David of the University of Sydney, pointing out that the glaciation of South Australia as generally understood had been entirely disproved; that there had been no glaciers in the district in question, but that the traces of glaciation were due to ice floating from the south over a subsiding area, with, as he inferred, a compensating elevation elsewhere. He gave a résumé of the new evidence which he had collected, in favour of the view that the recurrence of local glacial conditions was always connected with movements of elevation and depression, and appealed to physicists to explain the overthrusts and contortions of the surface of the earth, not solely by shrinkage of the nucleus, nor by deformation of the whole mass, but by some conditions affecting regions limited in extent and depth, with perhaps a certain amount of periodicity determined by some more general cosmical causes.—(4) By Prof. Hughes: "Some Chipped Flints from the Higher Plateau Gravel of Salisbury." Prof. Hughes, having explained the mode of formation of surface soils and subsoils on chalk, their mode of distribution and transport, and the distinctive characters of surface flints, criticised the evidence which had been adduced in favour of the discovery of man older than the palaeolithic age, exhibiting in illustration a collection of so-called palaeoliths from the plateau gravels near Salisbury, from the stony surface between Six Mile Bottom and Balsham, and from Kent. So far as he had seen, no satisfactory evidence had been adduced in favour of the higher antiquity assigned in the case of any of the flints which could be said to bear marks of design.—(5) "The Leakage of Electricity through Dielectrics traversed by Röntgen Rays," by Prof. J. J. Thomson and Mr. J. A. McClelland. This paper contains an account of a series of experiments made with the object of investigating the laws regulating the passage of electricity through dielectrics transmitting Röntgen rays. This phenomenon has been discussed by one of the authors in a paper read before the Philosophical Society on January 27, and also in one read before the Royal Society on February 13. The first experiments relate to the rate of leakage through different gases under similar conditions as to pressure and potential gradient. The gases used were hydrogen, ammonia, carbonic acid, air, coal gas, sulphuretted hydrogen, chloroform, chlorine, bromine, iodine, sulphur chloride, and mercury vapour. Numbers showing the rate of leakage in these gases relatively to that in air are given. In general, though the rule is not without exceptions, the greater the molecular weight of the gas the more rapid the leakage. In hydrogen the leak was slowest, and in mercury vapour fastest; the rate in the vapour of boiling mercury was about twenty-eight times as fast as hydrogen. The rapid rate in mercury vapour is interesting, for this gas offers great opposition to the passage of an ordinary electric discharge. The rate of leak in the halogens is also very rapid, and a tube containing a charged plate in chlorine gas is a very sensitive and convenient method of measuring the intensity of these rays. The rates of leakage in air at different pressures were investigated; it was found that the rate of leak was slower at a low pressure than at a high one, and was over a considerable range of pressure approximately proportional to the square root of the pressure. The effect of temperature was also investigated; and it was found that through air the rate of leak was slower at a very high temperature than at the temperature of the room, but there was an intermediate temperature at which the rate was a maximum. The most remarkable thing about this leakage under the influence of these rays is that the rate is almost independent of the potential difference. Thus when the high potential plate was 5 volts above that of the low, the rate of leak was appreciably greater than when the potential difference was 1 volt, but the rate was no greater when the potential difference was 500 volts than when it was 5. A series of experiments were made to find how the rate of leakage varied with the distance from the bulb. The bulb was placed behind a metal plate with a hole in it: it was found that in the neighbourhood of the phosphorescent glass the reciprocal of the rate of leakage was a linear function of the distance from the phosphorescent patch, but at greater distances it diminished more rapidly than is indicated by this law. The measurements are not inconsistent with the view that the rate varies inversely as the square of the distance from a place in the neighbourhood of the negative electrode. Some experiments on the rate of leakage produced by the rays after passing through a varying number of strips of tin-foil seem to indicate that these rays are not all of one kind.

FINE ART.

TWO BOOKS ON CLASSICAL ARCHAEOLOGY.

Rome and Pompeii: Archaeological Rambles. By Gaston Boissier. Translated by D. H. Fisher. With Maps and Plans. (Fisher Unwin.) Those travellers who have taken M. Boissier's Promenades Archéologiques with them to Italy and have enjoyed his genial guidance on the spot will be glad to know that his help is now within reach of readers whose French is weak. A really good book of rambles or walks must first waken our interest and then satisfy it; and this is just what M. Boissier does. Interest ready-made is adequately met by such plain and exact information as may be found in many sources; M. Boissier, while he has exact information to give, also shows us why we ought to be interested, and never fails to make us so. He knows where to stay and where to pass by; and he never lingers long enough on any one thing to let either the feet or the attention of his followers grow cold. We follow him with pleasure from the Forum to the Palatine, from Ostia to Pompeii. His collection of Promenades (first printed together in 1880) has been kept up to date, and is here well translated. We can forgive the shock of a Via Nomentana or Lutatius Catullus, and even "Denys of Halicarnassus," when we find the translation generally correct and spirited.

Guide to the Public Collections of Classical Antiquities in Rome. By W. Helbig and E. Reisch. Translated by J. and F. Muirhead. In 2 vols. (Dulau.) We are glad to see translated into English the excellent Führer whose usefulness we have felt in actual practice. The moderate limits within which it describes each work of art or antiquity make it possible for the whole Guide to be of only pocket size, while full references to the bibliography are given for those readers who would pursue a subject further. Where circumstances allow and such information is wanted, the authors tell us about each object—its provenance, its material, its restorations, its purpose or meaning, its school, and its merits. Vol. i. deals with the collections in the Vatican, Lateran, and Capitoline Museums; vol. ii. with the villas, certain special parts of the Vatican, the new Museo delle Terme, the Museo Kircheriano, and others. The translation is well done.

EXCAVATIONS IN EGYPT.

University College, London.

ALTHOUGH Thebes has been so relentlessly plundered for ages past, and especially by the antiquity hunters of this century, yet it has yielded many fresh results to the work of the Egyptian Research Account and my own private work this season. On one of the best known parts—the desert front on either side of the Ramesseum—four temple sites have been explored which were quite untouched before; and seven temples in all have been completely cleared. We see, therefore, how much yet remains to be done by systematic research in even the best known and most obvious sites. Taken in historical order, the following results have rewarded our work:

XIIIth Dynasty.—A fine tomb of a priest, Sehotehabra, underlies the brick galleries of the Ramesseum. It had been entirely plundered and re-used, but the brick passage leading to it is lined with paintings in good condition. These have been completely copied in full-size coloured facsimile by Miss Prie, and are valuable as being the only example of painting of this age at Thebes.

XVIIIth Dynasty.—The funeral temple of Amenhotep II. was discovered north of the Ramesseum. Some large brick tombs—one of a priest, Tahutinefer—stood on the rise of rock: on these Amenhotep II. built his temple. Amenhotep III. altered it, adding a colonnade in front, the foundations of which are of his grandfather's sculptures; and thus it was adapted for Princess Satamen. This fell into disuse, and was occupied as a school for young sculptors, whose trial pieces remained. In the XXIIIrd Dynasty a great brick tomb, with wells, was built over it. The piling and interpenetration of the building of all these periods, of which but a small amount remains, made this a confused site. Of the first temple we have foundation deposits of Amenhotep II., and a fine seated granite statue of his, unhappily headless. Manetho is brilliantly vindicated. He assigns twenty-six years to this king; but as no monumental dates were above five years, the short chronologists scorned him. A wine jar, however, bears the name of the king, and is dated in the twenty-sixth year.

The funeral temple of Tahutmes IV. was found south of the Ramesseum. This had been a very fine building, the great court having a triple colonnade at the sides, and the portico being a double colonnade. It was completely destroyed by Ramessu II., only the bases of some columns and a few foundations remaining. The foundation deposits were all thrown out, and the inscribed stone which had covered one of them was found in the Ramesseum; the bricks were also used in that later temple. Some fragments of colossi of limestone were found, including the lower half of the king's face. Below the temple was a large re-used tomb, containing a mass of burials, which from their position were contemporary with the temple. A collection of eighty skulls, all of one age and rank in life, were thence secured: they vary much in form. The great temple of Amenhotep III. behind the colossi was not included in my permission; but I found more sculptures of it than could probably be obtained on its actual site. Merenptah had ruthlessly looted it of everything movable to build his temple behind it; and broken-up statues, sphinxes, tablets, &c., were thrown into the foundations to support the walls built of the fine blocks, which were turned round and re-carved. We thus found that an avenue of colossal jackals had led to the temple, each with a statue of the king between the paws, and resting on an inscribed base with a cornice: they were thus exactly analogous to the ram-avenues of Karnak. Of statuary there were pieces of a colossal group of Amen and Amenhotep, and of a sphinx whose head was five feet across, beside smaller sphinxes, all in hard limestone. Two steles are now removed to the Ghizeh Museum. One of limestone, over six feet high, shows the king offering to Amen, and a double scene of the king in a chariot driving over a group of the northern nations, and again over a group of southerners. The work of this is very fine, and the composition unique. The other stele is the largest known in granite, and of magnificent polish; it is 10 ft. 3 in. high and 5 ft. 4 in. wide, with a scene of the king offering, and an inscription of thirty-one long lines below, concerning the offerings to Amen. This was largely erased by Akenhaten, and re-engraved by Sety I., who added a line recording his restoration.

Amenhotep III. also rebuilt the small temple of Uazmes, as we found a ring of the king under the great door-sill. Probably of this date is the bust of an exquisite statue of a queen, in hard limestone, found in a small chapel behind the temple of Amenhotep II.

XIXth Dynasty.—The funeral temple of Ramessu II., so familiar as the Ramesseum, would perhaps be thought well known enough; but a great work remained to be done there in clearing all the brick galleries around it. This has been the special affair of the Egyptian Research Account, and Mr. Quibell has had it in hand the whole season. The foundation deposits of the temple were discovered, and great quantities of ostraka, &c., of the same date. Besides these the galleries yielded dozens of burials of the XXIIIrd Dynasty, having been much divided into funeral chapels at that age. These were plundered anciently; but much valuable material has been obtained, the cartonnages giving many genealogies of royal relatives. The front court of the temple proves to have had Osiride colossi along the sides of it; and the construction of the whole temple and buildings around it is being completely planned. An earlier building has stood here, apparently; for in the axis of the court, at a very low level, a drum of a column of earlier work was found in situ. The whole site behind this had been used for a cemetery before the temple was built.

The funeral temple of Merenptah has been often attributed to Amenhotep III., owing to all the material having been plundered from the temple of the colossi. Some work remains of the later king; a large slab indicates a Sudan war by a procession of negro soldiers; the upper half of a colossal statue in black granite has preserved for us the finest portrait of Merenptah, with the features quite intact; and the great black granite stele of Amenhotep III. was built in, with its face in a wall, and carved on the back with a scene of offering, and an inscription of twenty-eight long lines; altogether this stele bears about 6000 hieroglyphs. This later inscription describes the defeat of the Libyan king, and mentions the destruction of many places in Syria—above all, the crushing of "the people of Israel." Of the transliteration of the name there can be no doubt: that Merenptah about 1200 B.C. left "the people of Israel without seed" is now a fixed point for Biblical criticism. But how this is to be adjusted to our other authorities will be a matter for much discussion. I hope to treat it at length in a magazine next month; until then I would ask students to withhold their pens, so that they may consider the text as a whole before they commit themselves.

The foundations of the funeral temple of Queen Tausert were discovered, with extensive deposits, in the sand. Five hundred scarabs and plaques, and twelve hundred objects of offering, all in coloured glaze pottery, were found in this one site. The form of the name is new; but as the historical evidences show that it must belong to the age of this queen, and the cartouche can be read as hers (beneath its forced imitation of Ramessu II.), we can hardly refuse to see in this her temple begun before her marriage.

The similar foundations of Saptah's temple, with similar deposits but poorer in quality, were also found. No trace of Tausert occurred here; but each deposit contained a slab with the cartouches of the king, and another with the name of the chancellor Bai, and also rings and cartouches of Bai.

Of later times Ramessu III. had rebuilt part of the Ramesseum galleries; chapels were arranged in them in the XXIInd-XXIIIrd Dynasty, of which many pieces of wall-painting remain, and much cartonnage, bead work, thousands of ushabtis, and a great alabaster pan inscribed for a royal grand-daughter, were obtained. A prominent bit of brick wall standing high on the south of the Ramesseum was part of a large tomb, which proves to belong to Khonsuardus, chief goldsmith of the temple of Amen in the XXVth Dynasty.

Though all the royal monuments go by agreement to Cairo, yet there is an encouraging amount of material to come to England, which will probably be exhibited at University College in July. The good results thus obtained in history by the recovery of these temples, and especially by the great inscription of Merenptah, should encourage the public to forward such enterprise, especially when directed to small sites of importance like those worked this year. The whole cost of these discoveries are under a thousand pounds, which will be mostly covered by the value of the objects secured for our museums. I hope to see the Research Account enabled this year to extend its work by taking up some of the students now waiting to find scope for such labours.

I should add that, partly assisted by the Research Account, Miss Paget and Miss Pirie have made a full-sized facsimile of the important tomb of Ptah-hotep at Sakkara, beside copies of parts of the tombs of Mera and Tii, which show the games similar to those of Ptah-hotep. Miss Pirie has also been copying paintings and sculptures from the excavations, which could not be brought to England. There is a wide field for accurate copyists in securing the knowledge of the paintings, which are all too rapidly perishing in Egypt.

W. M. FLINDERS PETRIE.

LETTER FROM EGYPT.

Gizeh: March 21, 1896.

I HAVE a few supplementary notes to add to my last letter, which the necessity of catching the post obliged me to shorten. Otherwise I should have explained that the inscriptions engraved on the newly discovered quay at Karnak are records of the height of Hâpi, the Nile, in each of the years in which they are dated, and consequently they are not only important to the historian, but also of considerable value to the modern Inspectors of Irrigation. They belong almost entirely to the XXIInd, XXIIIrd, XXVth, and XXVIth Dynasties, and among them is the cartouche of an unknown king. In one record the fifth and sixth years of Queen Karôâmâ, the wife of Shishak I., seem to be associated with the eighth year of Osorkon II.

Within the west court of the great temple of Karnak, on the north side and a little to the east of the chapel of Seti II., a ruined angle of wall has been uncovered, on which are thirty-two names of places in Palestine captured by Thothmes III. They agree for the most part with the well-known Palestine list of that king, except that the arrangement of the names is somewhat different. We find, however, Shushkhen instead of Ashushkhen, and in Shemesh-stum the ideograph of the Sun is attached to the word Shemesh, while Harel appears to be written Har-Hor.

Just before I left Luxor the excavators in the temple of Mut brought to light another stone belonging to the frieze of Piankhi, with the representation of another of the ships he had taken from the princes of the north. The frieze shows that Piankhi must have exercised his power sufficiently long in Thebes to have been able to work at Karnak. A large green scarab was also offered for sale at Luxor, on which were the two cartouches of "Piankhi" and "Taharka" side by side with the titles "Son of the Sun" on the left, and "King of Upper and Lower Egypt" on the right. This Piankhi, however, who thus appears as a co-regent with Tirhakah, was not the same as the Piankhi of the frieze, and is probably to be identified with Prof. Wiedemann's Piankhi III.

One of the dealers at Luxor has an alabaster vase, broken and mended in ancient times, on which are engraved the winged vulture, and below it the inscription: "The Horus who unites in peace the two lands, the son of the Sun, Teta." Another dealer has a curious Greek sepulchral inscription of the late Roman age from Erment, in which it is said of a certain Eubios, the son of Andromakhos:

οὐκ ἔστι γὰρ γονεὺν μέλος σφραῖμα οὐδὲ γυναικὸς πατέρα γὰρ μ' ἀτεκνῶσα οὐδὲ γὰρ ἡλικίου ψυχρὸν ὕδωρ τίομαι.

The task of clearing Medinet Habu is now practically completed, and very stately and magnificent the great temple of Ramessu III. looks. At Dêr el-Bihari also the work of excavation is practically finished, and Dr. Naville is to be congratulated upon the result. His restorations have given us again in a fairly complete state the most striking of ancient Egyptian sanctuaries. His most interesting discovery this year has been that of an XIth Dynasty tomb with all its furniture, except the mummy. At Abydos M. Amélineau has found, among other things, a richly furnished tomb of the XXIInd Dynasty, and at Lisht M. Gautier has disinterred some more interesting remains of the XIIth Dynasty. The finely executed statues of the Dynasty which he found there last year are now in the Gizeh Museum.

I forgot in my last letter to mention one of the most remarkable scarabs which have ever been met with. The sebak-diggers are busy in the mounds of the old city of Kom Ombo, on the north side of the temple, and the other day Mr. J. Ward bought from them a fine green scarab, though much worn, which is in the style of the XIIth Dynasty. When I came to look at it, great was my astonishment at finding that it was inscribed with the words "Sutekh Apopi." Here, then, we have a record of the Hyksos king, under whom the war of independence broke out, confirming the statements of Manetho and the Sallier Papyrus that his rule extended not only over Lower Egypt, but over Upper Egypt as well. What is still more interesting is the testimony it bears to the accuracy of the Sallier Papyrus, where the king is called "Ra Apopi." Like a good Egyptian, the author of the Papyrus has substituted Ra for the heterodox Sutekh, which the scarab shows was prefixed to the royal name.

A. H. SAYCE.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

THE following exhibitions will open next week: a collection of drawings and studies by Sir Edward Burne-Jones, at the Fine Art Society's, in New Bond-street; and four pictures by Mr. Julius von Payer, representing the loss of the Franklin expedition, at the Grafton Galleries.

THE Painter Stainers' Company have resolved to confer their honorary freedom, with a seat on the court, upon Sir John Millais, president of the Royal Academy. The late Lord Leighton received the same mark of distinction in 1884.

ON Saturday next, Prof. W. B. Richmond will begin a course of three lectures at the Royal Institution on "The Vault of the Sixtine Chapel."

MR. HECTOR MACLEAN, of Croydon, has in the press a handbook entitled Photography for Artists, which is intended to be a guide to all who lean upon photography for illustration, decorative design, or picture painting. It will be illustrated with reproductions of work by the late Col. Stuart-Wortley and Dr. P. H. Emerson, and also with examples of Mr. Linley Sambourne's photographs and the line-engraving founded on them.

It is stated that one of Sir Thomas Lawrence's finest works, a portrait group of "Mr. and Mrs. Angerstein," has been purchased for the Louvre.

THE late Miss Roteley, of Swansea, has bequeathed her collection of pictures, including examples of Murillo and Reynolds, to the Royal Institution of that town. She has also bequeathed a number of Nelson relics to Greenwich Hospital.

THE American School of Classical Studies at Rome offers three fellowships—two of the annual value of 600 dollars, and one (in Christian archaeology) of 500 dollars—open to graduates of any college in the United States. Residence for the full School year of ten months will be mainly in Rome, with possibility of travel and study in Italy and Greece.

M. EUGÈNE MÜNTZ has been chosen to deliver the address at the quarterly meeting of the Académie des Inscriptions. His subject will be "The Tiaras of Pope Julius II."

WE quote the following from the annual report of the Society of Antiquaries of Newcastle-upon-Tyne:

"The exploration of the Roman camp at Great Ocheaters has been successfully prosecuted by the Northumberland Excavation Committee, and the excavations have disclosed the existence of a western gateway unknown to Bruce and Maclean. Interesting evidences are afforded of at least three distinct periods in the history of the camp, separated by intervening periods of demolition. The committee earnestly hopes to continue the operations in the central part of the camp next summer; but unless subscriptions are furnished on a more liberal scale than during the past year, the work will have to be restricted to a very narrow one.

"In connexion with the operations undertaken by the Cumberland Society at Walltown, our member and vice-president, Mr. Cadwallader J. Bates, has discovered what appear to be the traces of a turf wall, similar to that which the Glasgow explorers have found between Forth and Clyde. It is too early as yet to appraise the consequences of this discovery, which may open out one of the most interesting chapters in the story of the scientific exploration of the Roman Wall."

THE STAGE.

ONE night last week we saw "The New Barmaid," at the Avenue Theatre, drawn thereto especially by what all playgoers recognise as the abundant humours of Mr. Shine and Mr. Dallas, and by the ingenious energy—the diablerie, almost—of the famous Miss Lottie Collins. There is nothing in the piece itself that is particularly attractive. So far as comedy is concerned, much more might have been made, on the part of the writers, of the scene at a Bohemian Club for men and women, and even of the Henley scene. But, on the other hand, there is more than one good song that we are thankful for, though it has nothing to do with the story. Miss Jennie Rogers—who is not otherwise particularly telling or life-like as the lady journalist—has especially one song or scene of low-class life, which is delivered in quite the best method of the "Halls," and is rather touching. Mr. Shine and Mr. Dallas enact the parts of two brothers, one of whom is in comparative adversity when the other is in prosperity—and vice versa—and nothing can be much funnier than the transition, in each case. It is very good fooling indeed. In regard to Miss Lottie Collins, we had expected that she would have shown us some ampler specimens of her powers in comedy. In this we were disappointed. She proved, effectively, that, though eccentricity is her forte, she can also be pleasingly quiet. But of actual comedy there was little; for when in "The New Barmaid" she ceases to be subdued, she is again charged to the full with that eccentric energy we know of old, and of which the old song with the impossible name, or even the recent "I went to Paris with Papa," is a sufficient and indeed a highly entertaining example. At such times, Miss Collins is as one "possessed." In another part—a small one—a pretty lady, named Miss Edith Denton, danced with grace. And the Sisters Johnson (there must always be some "sisters" in any entertainment which savours of the music-hall) were mildly interesting. The dresses and the "staging" of the piece are all that they require to be; and it is understood that, in spite of the absence of very particular attractiveness, "The New Barmaid" has "caught on."

THE reader even of a learned newspaper is after all a man before he is a scholar, and it is possible therefore that as there is not very much to amuse him at the theatres just now, he may thank us for telling him something of what there is at the music-halls. The fashionable woman too, with a praiseworthy ambition to be up-to-date in the matter, will certainly be indebted to us for recounting to her—now and again next week—some little of the newer programmes at places of entertainment, the especial characteristics of which have of late inspired two poets, and at least one writer of stories. At the Empire the immense and picturesque and almost historical ballet remains the principal attraction—the ballet with its great sequence of dances, as they have been danced almost from the days of Herodias's daughter to the days of "Bouton d'Or" at the Moulin. At the Alhambra, in addition to a ballet scarcely inferior to "La Danse" itself, there are two attractions which we apologise for even momentarily coupling together: Miss Cissy Loftus, piquante, witty, and incisive in her new as in her old imitations; and Mdlle. Bertoldi, an extraordinarily supple and quite good-looking "contortionist"—one of the very few "contortionists" not inevitably repulsive (for, remember, it is the "contortionist's" business to do with the figure feats that were never meant to be accomplished by the figure at all). The art of Miss Cissy Loftus, we need hardly remind our readers, is, for the music-hall, unusually real. It is refined and finished, whether it deals, as now, with Mr. Gus Elen, Miss Lottie Collins, or Mrs. Patrick Campbell, or deals, as it has dealt before, with Yvette Guilbert, who sings now of the Pensionnat de Demoiselles, and now—as Mr. Arthur Symonds admirably puts it—

"The pity of unpitied human things."

Whatever is done by Miss Cissy Loftus is done with the keenest intelligence, the most alert appreciation.

evidence in favour of the latter date was not strong. But why did not Miss Janotha give us her authority for the new one? From her confident statement we presume that it is trustworthy—probably the register of birth. The remarks of the author on the romantic music of his fellow-countryman are admirable; and Miss Janotha deserves the thanks of English musicians for this translation, for it is not given to everyone to read the Polish language. Kleczynski has thoroughly entered into the spirit of Chopin's music, and communicates his own feelings in a singularly clear and delicate manner. The author is still in search of the "ideal" exponent of the composer's music. There have been several excellent interpreters—Rubinstein, Pachmann, &c.; but when one is in search of the ideal a single shortcoming spoils a multitude of good qualities. To describe the contents of the book would spoil the enjoyment of the reader, so we will only allude to one feature. Our author touches on the question of programme-music. He accepts the programme plan "so far as its design is purely musical, its developments controlled throughout by rule, and the attention paid to detail not too great." Had our author used the expression "purely emotional" in place of "purely musical," his sentence would, we think, better agree with the judicious comments which follow. A programme from the composer of a piece is always welcome. Several are here given which seem to rest on good foundation; special interest is imparted to the quaint Mazurka (Op. 17, No. 9) by the "Little Jew" story. The volume contains, in addition to the lectures, some valuable notes made by Chopin for a "Méthode des Méthodes," also three portraits and a facsimile.

Delivery in the Art of Pianoforte Playing. By C. A. Ehrenfechter. (William Reeves.) This little book contains practical hints on rhythm, measure, phrasing, and tempo, which students of the pianoforte may peruse with profit. Our author quotes a passage (p. 24) from the opening movement of Beethoven's Appassionata Sonata, and remarks that "in a popular edition before me" it is marked f at the outset. He proposes to commence mf or p, so as to give scope for a crescendo. The passage in question is, however, thus marked in Herr E. Mandy-czewski's critical edition of the Sonatas. We agree with our author's emphasis marks in the examples Nos. 9 and 10, on p. 26, though scarcely with the proposed "slight" emphasis in Nos. 7 and 8—at any rate, not for pupils, who would be almost sure to make the phrase jerky. Our author (p. 28) describes a musical sentence as always ending "on the accented division of the bar." On the next page he gives the conclusion of a phrase from Beethoven's First Sonata, remarking that it "seems" to fall on the unaccented division of the bar; it not only "seems," it actually does so fall. The remarks on tempo and on practising "to the accompaniment of the 'tick' of a metronome" are excellent: that instrument is a good servant, but a bad master.

MUSIC.

MUSICAL PUBLICATIONS.

Chopin's Greater Works (Preludes, Ballads, Nocturnes, Polonaises, Mazurkas): How they should be Understood. By Jean Kleczynski. Translated, with additions, by Natalie Janotha. (William Reeves.) The contents of this little book were delivered in lecture form by Kleczynski at Warsaw, in 1883. From the preface we learn that the correct date of Chopin's birth is February 22, 1810, and not March 1, as generally given. From Prof. Nieck's Life of Chopin (vol. i., p. 23) it will be seen that the

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTIONS

TO

THE ACADEMY.

(PAYABLE IN ADVANCE.)

	YEARLY.	HALF-YEARLY.	QUARTERLY.
	£ s. d.	£ s. d.	£ s. d.
If obtained of a Newsvendor or at a Railway Station	0 18 0	0 8 6	0 3 8
Including Postage to any part of the United Kingdom	0 15 2	0 7 7	0 3 10
Including Postage to any part of France, Germany, India, China, &c.	0 17 4	0 8 8	0 4 4

MESSRS. HENRY beg to announce that they have published Vol. XI. (being the first volume of the English edition) of

THE COLLECTED WORKS OF FRIEDRICH NIETZSCHE.

Edited by ALEXANDER TILLE, Ph.D.,
Lecturer at the University of Glasgow.

THE VOLUME CONTAINS—

THE CASE of WAGNER.
NIETZSCHE contra WAGNER.
THE TWILIGHT of the IDOLS.
THE ANTICHRIST.

Medium 8vo, buckram extra, 10s. 6d. net.

"We are of opinion that the publication of Nietzsche's works in England and in the English language will have a most important influence on our literary, political, and moral opinions. Whether or no they will affect us in any vital degree, we must leave for time to show. Of this we are certain, that a full appreciation of Nietzsche's teaching will direct the activities of many thoughtful men and women into ways quite different from those they are now treading."

Bookselling.

Prospectus of the complete series post free on application.

H. HENRY & CO., LIMITED,
93, ST. MARTIN'S LANE, W.C.

JUST PUBLISHED, super-royal 8vo, cloth, gilt top, price 21s.

FROM NORTH POLE TO EQUATOR:

Studies of Wild Life and Scenes in Many Lands.

BY THE NATURALIST-TRAVELLER
ALFRED EDMUND BREHM,
Author of "Bird-Life," "Tierleben," &c.

Translated from the German
By MARGARET R. THOMSON,
Edited by J. ARTHUR THOMSON, M.A., F.R.S.E.
With Eighty-three Illustrations from Original Drawings.

From the TIMES.

"Among the multitude of good books on natural history now issuing from the press this deserves a high place. It is both informing and entertaining."

From the DAILY NEWS.

"The work contains many excellent descriptions of the scenery, people, and customs of the various countries in which the author travelled. The capital description of Nubia and the Nile Rapids, and of the desert tribesmen, derives additional interest from the fact that a new Anglo-Egyptian expedition is now marching to the Soudan."

From the SPEAKER.

"A fascinating volume of travel by the late well-known German naturalist, Alfred Brehm..... The present book is in many respects remarkable, and not least for the minuteness of its observation of birds and beasts in almost every quarter of the globe. The illustrations are many, and, like the translation, they are excellent."

LONDON: BLACKIE & SON, LIMITED, 50, OLD BAILEY.

NOW READY AT ALL LIBRARIES.

The Power of the Dog:

An Entirely New Novel.

By ROWLAND GREY, Author of "In Sunny Switzerland," "By Virtue of his Office," "Linden-Blumen," "Chris." Crown 8vo, art linen, gilt top, 6s.
[Ready April 9th.]

The Heart of a Mystery.

By T. W. SPEIGHT, Author of "The Mysteries of Heron Dyke," "Quittance in Full," "The Grey Monk," "Wife or No Wife," &c. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

"The story thoroughly justifies its name, it is told so deftly. How the mystery is cleared up, how its solution assists in unravelling another of a more romantic nature, and how almost everything turns out so differently from earlier anticipations, is told with dexterity and ingenuity."

Scotsman.

Harum Scarum.

By ESMÉ STUART, Author of "A Brave Fight," "Cast Ashore," "Miss Fenwick." Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

"Harum Scarum" is the best that Miss Stuart has yet written, and it may be described as a refreshing tale with considerable originality of ideas."—Cambridge Daily News.

Lindsay's Girl.

By Mrs. HERBERT MARTIN, Author of "Britomart," "Her Debut," "Bonnie Leslie," "A Country Mouse," "Cast Adrift," &c. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

Brenda's Experiment:

An Indian Marriage Story.

By Surgeon-Major H. M. GREENHOW, Author of "The Bow of Fate." Crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.
"Stirring scenes are brilliantly portrayed, and while they are in progress one almost forgets the perils of the heroine. How Brenda is rescued and her life again brightened is a very interesting episode, which the reader will have pleasure, we are sure, in finding out for himself."

Leeds Mercury.

London:

JARROLD & SONS, 10 and 11, Warwick Lane, E.C.;
At all Libraries, and of the Booksellers.

NEW WORK BY DR. ALEX. MACLAREN.

Now ready, crown 8vo, cloth, price 6s., post free.

THE BEATITUDES, AND OTHER SERMONS,

"Dr. Maclaren's new volume will be received with special warmth, as containing an excellent exposition of the beatitudes. Dr. Maclaren's work is always full of thought and knowledge and power, intensely evangelical, and unfailingly fresh."—British Weekly.

"Undiminished vigour and undimmed brilliancy."

Independent.

Uniform with the above, price 5s. each, post free.

CHRIST'S "MUSTS," and other Sermons.
"Dr. Maclaren is our ideal preacher."—Expository Times.
"Masterly, beautiful, inspiring."—Methodist Recorder.

THE UNCHANGING CHRIST, and other Sermons.

"The work of a master of pulpit oratory."—Freeman.
"Distinguished by the finest scholarship and the most exquisite literary finish."—Christian Leader.
"Few preachers combine so many elements of effective pulpit address."—Independent.

THE HOLY of HOLIES: a Series of Sermons on the 14th, 15th, and 16th Chapters of the Gospel by John.

"Every sermon glows with unction, and shows intense power."—Methodist Recorder.

THE WEARIED CHRIST, and other Sermons.

"They show the same wonderful fertility of apt and beautiful illustrations, the same exquisite use of language, and the same direct heart-searching power which we are accustomed to find in all Dr. Maclaren's works."

Christian World Pulpit.

PAUL'S PRAYERS, and other Sermons.

"For more than a quarter of a century he has held almost an unchallenged position as the prince of pulpit orators.... The back pews of Dr. Maclaren's church are in the nooks and corners of the earth."—Methodist Times.

THE GOD of the AMEN, and other Sermons.

"Open the book wherever we may, the temptation to read on and on is very great. The volume is invaluable."

Sunday School Chronicle.

ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD, Farnival St., London, E.C.

THREE CENTURIES OF NONCONFORMITY.

NOW READY, large crown 8vo, nearly 800 pages, cloth, 6s., post free.

HISTORY

OF THE

FREE CHURCHES OF ENGLAND

FROM THE REFORMATION TO 1851.

By HERBERT S. SKEATS.

WITH A CONTINUATION TO 1891,

By CHARLES S. MIALl.

THE GUARDIAN.—"It is certainly a convenience to have the history of Dissent in England presented in a connected form, and from a Dissenter's point of view. And for these purposes we can recommend this, which gives the history in a handy and convenient form."

TIMES.—"As a complete exposition of the history of Dissent, from the Nonconformist point of view, it is no doubt certain to retain its reputation."

PALL MALL GAZETTE.—"Readers will find here in a clear and attractive form much information which cannot readily be found anywhere else."

THE LONDON QUARTERLY REVIEW.—"It is essential that Dissenters and Methodist Churchmen should know why they stand apart from the National Establishment, and this knowledge can only come through the study of the ecclesiastical history of the last 300 years. . . . We ought to be specially grateful to Mr. Skeats and Mr. Miall for the light which they have shed upon the experiences of the Nonconformists of England."

LONDON: ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD, PUBLISHERS,
21 & 22, FURNIVAL STREET, E.C.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 1250.
[New Issuc.]

SATURDAY, APRIL 18, 1896.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

24, Bedford Street, W.C.

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS beg to announce that they will publish on Monday next Volume I. of Mr. G. H. Putnam's "Books and their Makers during the Middle Ages, 476-1600," 8vo, cloth, gilt top, price 10s. 6d.; and "A Scientific Demonstration of the Future Life," by Thomson J. Hudson, Author of "The Law of Psychic Phenomena," &c, crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

OLIPHANT, ANDERSON & FERRIER beg to announce the Removal of their LONDON HOUSE from 24, Old Bailey to larger and more convenient Premises at 21, PATERNOSTER SQUARE, E.C.

FAMOUS SCOTS.

THE SECOND VOLUME OF THE SERIES IS NOW READY.
ALLAN RAMSAY. By Oliphant Smeaton.

Price 1s. 6d., cloth; and in extra binding, gilt top, 2s. 6d.
The SCOTSMAN says: "With Mr. Oliphant Smeaton, Ramsay's fame and character are in good hands. Granted the space at command in these compact and tasteful little volumes, it is not easy to see how the life, the times, the environments, and the genius of the author of 'The Gentle Shepherd' could have had more justice done to them."

IN THE SAME SERIES.

THOMAS CARLYLE. By Hector C. MacPHERSON. Price 1s. 6d., cloth; extra binding, gilt top, 2s. 6d.

SECOND EDITION.
FROM FAR FORMOSA: the Island, its People and Missions. By GEORGE LESLIE MACKAY, D.D., Twenty-three Years a Missionary in Formosa. Edited by the Rev. J. A. MACDONALD. With Portraits, Illustrations, and Maps. Price 7s. 6d.

"The book will take rank with the best missionary biographies, with such 'Lives' as those of Paton, Gilmour, or Mackay of Uganda. The volume is an admirable record of a noble work."—Presbyterian.

UNIFORM WITH "FROM FAR FORMOSA."
PERSIAN LIFE and CUSTOMS. With Scenes and Incidents of Residence and Travel in the Land of the Lion and the Sun. By S. G. WILSON, M.A., Fifteen Years a Missionary in Persia. Demy 8vo, gilt top, with Map and Illustrations, price 7s. 6d.

THE CHRIST in MAN; or, the Indwelling Christ. By JAMES M. CAMPBELL. With Preface by Prof. A. B. BRUCE, D.D. Crown 8vo, price 2s. 6d.

TWO NEW STORIES.

A MOST PROVOKING GIRL. By Margaret MOYES BLACK, Author of "Tempted," "Between the Ferries," &c. Decorated by JOSEPH BROWN. Art canvas, price 3s. 6d.

MARRIED in the MAKING. By H. W. Shrewsbury. Cloth extra, illustrated, price 2s. 6d.
OLIPHANT, ANDERSON & FERRIER, LONDON AND EDINBURGH.

MESSRS. HUTCHINSON & Co.'s NEW BOOKS.

39,000 COPIES CALLED FOR WITHIN A FORTNIGHT OF PUBLICATION OF MARIE CORELLI'S NEW BOOK

THE MIGHTY ATOM. In handsome cloth gilt, 3s. 6d. A Sixth Edition (5,000 copies), completing 44,000 copies, in preparation.

A NEW TRAVEL BOOK ON A NEW DISTRICT.
IN the VOLCANIC EIFEL. A Holiday Ramble.

By KATHARINE S. and GILBERT S. MACQUOID, Authors of "Through Normandy," "In the Ardennes," &c. With 3 Maps and 53 Illustrations by Thos. R. Macquoid, R.I. In small demy 8vo, cloth gilt, 7s. 6d. [In the Press.]

NEW AFRICAN ROMANCE BY A NEW WRITER.
THE ORACLE of BAAL: a Narrative of Some Curious Events in the Life of Professor Horatio Carmichael. By J. PROVAND WEBSTER. With 12 Full-page Illustrations by Warwick Goble. In cloth gilt, 6s.
* The First Edition being over sold before publication a Second Edition is in rapid preparation.

THE LEISURE LIBRARY OF COMPLETE ILLUSTRATED NOVELS.
Each volume in artistic paper, 2s., in cloth gilt, 2s. 6d. With numerous Illustrations.
"The most vivacious and amusing book of the year."

THE SECOND OPPORTUNITY of MR. STAPLEHURST. By W. PETT RIDGE.
"Mr. Ridge is to be heartily congratulated on his work, which we can sincerely commend to all in search of a delightful, humorous, and fascinating story."—Echo.

The Second Volume of THE LEISURE LIBRARY, by a new writer, is ready this day, entitled

THE FLAW in the MARBLE.

THE ANTICHRIST LEGEND. A Chapter in Jewish and Christian Folk-lore. Engleished from the German of Herr W. ROUSSET, with a Prologue on the Babylonian Dragon Myth, by A. H. KEANE, F.R.G.S., late Vice-President of the Anthropological Institute, Author of "Ethnology," &c. In crown 8vo, cloth gilt, with explanatory and other notes and full appendix, 6s. [In the Press.]

THIRD AND CHEAP EDITION OF MRS. HUGH BELL'S SUCCESSFUL NOVEL.
THE STORY of URSULA. In cloth gilt, 6s.

"One cannot but be struck by the literary grace of the narrative: few people who have once begun this novel will be inclined to put it down before they have read to the very last chapter."—Illustrated London News. [This day.]

THE NEW ZEIT-GEIST.
OUT of BOUNDS. Being the Adventures of an Unadventurous Young Man. By A. GARRY. In cloth gilt, 2s.; in artistic paper, 1s. 6d., with coloured frontispiece and title-page. [Next week.]

A NEW NOVEL OF DUTCH LIFE BY E. SUTOLIFFE MARCH.
A STUMBLER in WIDE SHOES. In crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 6s. [In the Press.]

NEW NOVEL BY FREDERICK CARREL.
THE CITY. In Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 6s.
This Novel deals largely with Finance and Company promotion in the City of London, and is written with intimate knowledge. [Immediately.]

NEW NOVEL BY JOHN BICKERDYKE.
LADY VAL'S ELOPEMENT. By the Author of "A Banished Beauty," "The Book of the All-round Angler," &c., in crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 6s. [Immediately.]

LONDON: HUTCHINSON & Co., PATERNOSTER ROW.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

WYLLIE'S HISTORY OF ENGLAND UNDER HENRY IV., by C. L. KINGSFORD . . . . .	317
MR. AND MRS. SHARP'S LYRA CELTICA, by ERNEST REYS . . . . .	318
PERSIAN LIFE AND CUSTOMS, by S. G. WILSON . . . . .	319
GROOME'S KRIEGSFELD, by D. MACRITCHIE . . . . .	320
NEW NOVELS, by PERCY ADDLESHAW . . . . .	321
RECENT THEOLOGY . . . . .	322
NOTES AND NEWS . . . . .	323
UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS . . . . .	324
ORIGINAL VERSE: "RUNNERS FROM MARATHON," by Mrs. EDMONDS . . . . .	324
MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS . . . . .	324
CORRESPONDENCE— Professor Knight and his Revisers, by T. Hutchinson; The "Prenin" Angelo, by Mark Liddell; Berber Names, by J. E. Budgett Meakin; The Basques, by the Rev. Wentworth Webster; Basque Tombstone Decorations, by E. S. Dodgson . . . . .	324
APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK . . . . .	326
NEUMANN'S SERMONS OF BUDDHA, by HERBERT BAYNES . . . . .	326
CORRESPONDENCE— The Restored Pronunciation of Greek, by Dr. R. J. Lloyd . . . . .	326
SCIENCE NOTES . . . . .	327
PHILOLOGY NOTES . . . . .	328
REPORTS OF SOCIETIES . . . . .	328
COSMO MONKHOUSE ON THE NATIONAL GALLERY, by REGINALD HUGHES . . . . .	329
NOTES OF ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY . . . . .	330
STAGE NOTES . . . . .	330
MUSIC NOTES . . . . .	331

CATALOGUES

FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS
promptly supplied on moderate terms.
CATALOGUES on application.
DULAU & CO., 27, BOND STREET.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE,
IMPORTERS OF FOREIGN BOOKS,
14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN,
20, SOUTH FREDERICK STREET, EDINBURGH,
AND
7, BROAD STREET, OXFORD.
CATALOGUES sent free on application.

TH. WOHLLEBEN,
FOREIGN BOOKSELLER,
45, GREAT RUSSELL STREET
(Opposite the British Museum),
Supplies all Foreign Books and Periodicals at the most moderate prices.
Catalogues on application.

On application for one stamp.
THE INTERNATIONAL BOOKMARKET.
Monthly List of the most important Publications issued by
H. GREVEL & CO.,
Importers of Foreign Books,
33, King Street, Covent Garden, W.C.

FIRST EDITIONS OF MODERN
AUTHORS, including Dickens, Thackeray, Lever, Alcott, &c.
Books illustrated by G. and R. Cruikshank, Phil. Rowlandson, Leech,
&c. The largest and choicest collection offered for sale in the world.
Catalogues issued and sent post free on application. Books Bought—
WALTER T. SPENCER, 27, New Oxford Street, London, W.C.

IMPORTANT.—PRINTING AND PUBLISHING.
NEWSPAPERS, MAGAZINES, BOOKS,
&c.—KING, SELL & RAILTON, Limited, high-class Printers
and Publishers, 12, Gough Square, 4, Bolt Court, Fleet Street, E.C.
have specially-built Rotary and other fast Machines for printing
illustrated or other Publications, and specially-built Machines for fast folding and covering 8, 16, 24, or 32-page Journals at one operation.
Advice and assistance given to anyone wishing to commence New Journals.
Facilities upon the premises for Editorial Offices, free. Advertising and Publishing Departments conducted.
Telephone 65121. Telegraph "Africanism, London."

THE AUTHOR'S MANUAL. By PERCY
RUSSELL With Prefatory Remarks by Mr. GLADSTONE.
Crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d. net. (EIGHTH and CHEAPER EDITION.)
With Portrait.
"Mr. Russell's book is a very complete manual and guide for journalists and authors. It is not a merely practical work—it is literary and appreciative of literature in its best sense. We have little else but praise for the volume."—Westminster Review.

DIOUT, LONG & CO., 18, Bouverie Street, London, E.C.

THE AUTHOR'S HAIRLESS PAPER.
PAD.
(THE LEADENHALL PRESS, Ltd., 50, Leadenhall Street, London, E.C.)
Contains hairless paper, over which the pen slips with perfect freedom. Sixpence each. 2s. per dozen, ruled or plain.

ST. BARTHOLOMEW'S HOSPITAL and COLLEGE.

ENTRANCE SCHOLARSHIPS AND EXHIBITIONS.
An EXAMINATION will be held on SEPTEMBER 23, 1896, and succeeding days, for the awarding of the following:—
1. A SCHOLARSHIP of £75 for One Year to the best Candidate in Chemistry and Physics who is under Twenty-five years of age.
2. A SCHOLARSHIP of £75 for One Year to the best Candidate in Biology (Animal and Vegetable) and Physiology who is under Twenty-five years of age.
Candidates for these two Scholarships must not have entered to the Medical or Surgical Practice of any London Medical School.
3. A SCHOLARSHIP of £150 and the Preliminary Scientific Exhibition of £50 each, tenable for one year, in Physics, Chemistry, Vegetable Biology, and Animal Biology. Candidates for these must be under Twenty years of age, and must not have entered to the Medical or Surgical Practice at any Medical School.
4. A JEFFRESON EXHIBITION of £21 for One Year in Latin and Mathematics, with any one of the Languages—Greek, French, and German. (Classical Books as in Matriculation of Univ. of London, June, 1896.) Candidates must not have entered at any Medical School.
The successful Candidates in all cases will be required to enter to the full course at St. Bartholomew's Hospital in the October succeeding the Examination.
For full particulars apply to Dr. T. W. SMOKE, Warden of the College, St. Bartholomew's Hospital, E.C.

MANCHESTER COLLEGE, OXFORD.

An OPEN THEOLOGICAL SCHOLARSHIP, of the annual value of £75 (tenable for 1, 2, or 3 years) is OFFERED by the Dr. DANIEL JONES' TRUSTEES for COMPETITION. Examination October 12th to 16th.—For particulars apply to the SECRETARY, 1, St. James's Square, Manchester.

MANCHESTER COLLEGE, OXFORD.

"The College adheres to its original principle of freely imparting Theological knowledge, without insisting on the adoption of particular Theological doctrines."

CANDIDATES for ADMISSION are requested to forward their applications and testimonials to the SECRETARIES.
The Trustees OFFER for COMPETITION EXTERNAL EXHIBI-TIONS, open to STUDENTS for the MINISTRY, tenable for the ordinary undergraduate period at any approved British or Irish University.
The Trustees also OFFER EXHIBITIONS, tenable at the College, for STUDENTS for the MINISTRY.
For further particulars apply to the PRINCIPAL, or to
Rev. H. ENFIELD DOWSON, B.A.,
Gos Cross, Hyde,
A. H. WOODWARD, B.A.,
1, St. James's Square, Manchester, } Secretaries.

MASON COLLEGE, BIRMINGHAM.

FACULTY OF SCIENCE.

RESEARCH SCHOLARSHIPS.

Founded by the late T. Aubrey Bowen, Esq., of Melbourne, Australia.
The object of these SCHOLARSHIPS is to encourage higher work and research in scientific professional engineering and in chemical and metallurgical science.
APPLICATIONS, supported by details of educational training and references to former teachers and others, should be sent in to the RECTORIAN on or before the 1st of June, 1896. The Awards will be made in September next, and the Scholarships will be tenable during the Session 1896-97.
(a) THREE BOWEN SCHOLARSHIPS in ENGINEERING of
the value of £100 each.
(b) ONE BOWEN SCHOLARSHIP in METALLURGY of the
value of £100.
(c) THREE PRIESTLEY SCHOLARSHIPS in CHEMISTRY
of the value of £100 each.
Further particulars may be obtained on application to the RECTORIAN.

MCGILL UNIVERSITY, MONTREAL.

CLASSICAL DEPARTMENT.

It is intended to make Two Additional Appointments to the Staff of the above Department in the course of the summer—one a PROFESSOR-SHIP or ASSOCIATE PROFESSORSHIP, the other a LECTURESHIP.—For particulars apply to J. W. BAKERMAN, Esq.,
B.C.L., Acting-Secretary.

ST. EDWARD'S SCHOOL, near

OXFORD.—Public School, founded 1883, to provide Education for Gentlemen's Sons in Preparation for Universities, Army, &c., on definite Church principles. Fees: £60 per annum (Sons of Clergymen, £80); Day Boys, 21 guineas. Classical and Modern sides.
Scholarships; July 29th.—Rev. T. F. HOSKIN, M.A., Warden.

ST. PAUL'S SCHOOL.—An EXAMI-

NATION for filling up VACANCIES on the Foundation will be held on the 6th MAY NEXT.—For information apply to the Bursar, St. Paul's School, West Kensington.

ROYAL HISTORICAL SOCIETY.

(Incorporated by Royal Charter.)

Patron—HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN.
President—The Right Hon. Sir M. E. GRANT DUFF, G.C.S.I.
THURSDAY, April 23rd, at 5 p.m., the following paper will be read:
"THE FOREIGN POLICY OF WILLIAM PITT," by Dr. FELIX SALOMON.
HUMBERT HALL, Director and Hon. Sec.
Museum of Practical Geology,
Jermyn Street, S.W.

ROSE CRAWSHAY'S PRIZES.—

BYRON, SHELLEY, KEATS. For rules send addressed halfpenny wrapper to Rose Crawshay, Book as post free.
"Sumptuous volume." "Highly amusing." "Literary curiosity."

DUGDALE'S MONASTICON, complete

edition, with Illustrations, 1849, 8 vols., half-bound, excellent condition, £20.—Ballade, LORD BATEMAN, earliest edition, complete, £8.—Advocate, Salt Library, Stafford.

PUBLISHING BUSINESS FOR SALE

(old established); numerous Stereotypes of Books, Copyrights, Illustrations, Saleable and Profitable Stock, &c. Owner retiring; rare opportunity; favourable terms. Long Lease. Premises can also be had at Low Rent or Purchase.—48c. Looker, 12 Warwick Lane, E.C.

TO INVALIDS.—A LIST OF MEDICAL

PATENTS, giving full particulars and terms, sent gratis. The list includes all the latest and best patents, &c.; schools also recommended.—Address
Mr. G. B. STOKER, 8 Lancaster Place, Strand, W.C.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY

Invite the attention of Artists
and others to their

PERMANENT PROCESSES OF PHOTOGRAPHIC REPRODUCTION,
combining great range of tone effect with accurate
monochrome representation and artistic expression.

THE AUTOTYPE SOLAR OR
CARBON PROCESS

for the reproduction in permanent pigments of oil paintings, drawings, in water-colour, pencil, crayon,
Indian ink, &c.

AUTO-GRVURE.

The Autotype Company's Process of Photographic
Engraving on Copper, yielding results resembling mezzotint engravings.

The Company has successfully reproduced several important works by this process, including Portraits
by Sir J. E. Millais, P.R.A., J. Pettie, R.A., W. W.
Oulless, R.A., F. Holl, R.A., The Hon. Jno. Collier, Sir
G. Reid, P.R.S.A.; also examples of Gainsborough,
Turner, Constable, Schmalz, Douglas, Draper, &c., &c.

THE AUTOTYPE MECHANICAL
PROCESS (Sawyer's Collotype)

for Book Illustrations of the highest class. Adopted by the Trustees of the British Museum, many of the Learned Societies, and the leading Publishers

Examples of work may be seen, and terms and prices
obtained at

THE AUTOTYPE FINE ART GALLERY,
74, NEW OXFORD STREET,
LONDON.*MESSRS. J. O. DRUMMOND & CO.,

ART REPRODUCERS.
14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C.

Are the sole representatives in Great Britain of HERR HANFSTAENGL of Munich,
the well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAPHURE now patronised by the leading London Art Publishing Firms. A large Collection of Important Plates always on view

Process Blocks for the purpose of Ordinary Book Illustrations.

Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. supply the cheapest and best Processes in the market, which are specially adapted to meet the wants of Antiquarians, Archaeologists, and those engaged in the investigation and publication of Pictorial and Diocesan Records.

J. O. DRUMMOND & CO. invite attention to their
Improved Rapid Photo-Mechanical Process
for the reproduction of Works of Art, Original MSS., Designs,
Lace Manufactures, Photographs, Views, Book Illustrations,
Artistic Decorations, Catalogues, &c., &c., at a moderate cost.

Specimens and price list on Application.
Offices: 14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, LONDON

MONDAY NEXT, April 20.—Valuable Birds' Eggs.

MR. J. C. STEVENS will SELL by AUCTION, at his GREAT ROOMS, 38, KING STREET,
COVENT GARDEN, on MONDAY NEXT, April 20, at half-past 12 o'clock precisely, the FIRST PORTION of the COLLECTION of BIRDS' EGGS, by order of the Executors of the late DUCHESS of MANTUA; also, by order of the Executors of the late JAMES HACK TUCKER, Esq., of Hitchin, a very fine EGG of the GREAT AUK, and an EGG of the EGYPTIAN MAXIMUS from Madagascar.
On view the Saturday prior 12 till 4 and morning of Sale, and Catalogues had.

Author's Sale of Copyrights and Manuscripts.

MR. JOHN PARNELL, Founder and President of the "Kew Bee" Literary Society, and the National and Municipal Record Society, will SELL by AUCTION in one hundred and eleven lots, at his HOUSE, 12, ROCKLEY ROAD, SHEPHERD'S BUSH GREEN, LONDON, W, on WEDNESDAY
NEXT, April 23rd, at 1 o'clock, the COPYRIGHTS and MANU-SCRIPTS of his WORKS published since A.D. 1871, and his UN-PUBLISHED WORKS now ready for publication. Catalogues ready, 6d. each.

A. BAIRD CARTER'S GALLERY,

61, JERMYN STREET.—ON VIEW, RAMBLES in
DEVONSHIRE, Water-colour Drawings by Arthur H. Enock, during APRIL, 10 to 6. Admission and catalogue free.

THE NEW ENGLISH ART CLUB.

DUDLEY GALLERY, EGYPTIAN HALL, PICCADILLY, W.
SIXTEENTH EXHIBITION OF MODERN PICTURES.
OPEN DAILY until end of May.
Admission, 1s.

MR. D. Y. CAMERON'S New Set of

NORTH ITALIAN ETCHINGS NOW ON VIEW at Mr. R.
GUTENKUNST'S GALLERY, 16, KING STREET, ST. JAMES'S, S.W.
Open from Saturday, April 18th, till May 2nd, 10 to 6 daily. Admission free.

FOR SALE, a fine old OIL PAINTING

on PANEL, believed to be a genuine Morland. Price £7.
Approval Deposit. Been in family 50 years.—H. S. Harrington Park.

PICTURE PRESERVATION & RESTORATION

—For advice and full particulars address C. H. MURPHY,
Studio, 288, Devonshire Road, Honor Oak Park, S.E.

WANTED, to PURCHASE, fine PIC-

TURES, in OIL, by Old Masters of the Dutch, Flemish, and British schools.—Downswell, 160, New Bond Street, W.

TYPE-WRITING.—MSS. of every

description COPIED. Special attention to work requiring care.
Examination Questions, Notices, &c., by DUPLICATION process.
Usual terms.—Miss Thomas, 5, Cautley Avenue, Clapham Common,
S.W.

NOW READY AT ALL LIBRARIES.

The Power of the Dog:

An Entirely New Novel.

By ROWLAND GREY. Author of "In Sunny Switzerland," "By Virtue of his Office," "Linden-Blumen," "Chris." Crown 8vo, art linen, gilt top, 6s.
[Ready April 24th.]The Heart of a Mystery.By T. W. SPEIGHT, Author of "The Mysteries of Heron Dyke," "Quittance in Full," "The Grey Monk," "Wife or No Wife," &c. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.
"The story thoroughly justifies its name, it is told so deftly. How the mystery is cleared up, how its solution assists in unravelling another of a more romantic nature, and how almost everything turns out so differently from earlier anticipations, is told with dexterity and ingenuity."
Scotsman.Harum Scarum.By ESMÉ STUART, Author of "A Brave Fight," "Cast Ashore," "Miss Fenwick," Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.
"Harum Scarum" is the best that Miss Stuart has yet written, and it may be described as a refreshing tale with considerable originality of ideas.—Cambridge Daily News.Lindsay's Girl.By Mrs. HERBERT MARTIN, Author of "Britomart," "Her Début," "Bonnie Leslie," "A Country Mouse," "Cast Adrift," &c. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.
"Lindsay's Girl" is powerfully written and retains one's interest. The book is well worth reading."
Devon and Exeter Gazette.Brenda's Experiment:

An Indian Marriage Story.

By Surgeon-Major H. M. GREENHOW, Author of "The Bow of Fate," Crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.
"Stirring scenes are brilliantly portrayed, and while they are in progress one almost forgets the perils of the heroine. How Brenda is rescued and her life again brightened is a very interesting episode, which the reader will have pleasure, we are sure, in finding out for himself."—Lancet Mercury.London:
JARROLD & SONS, 10 and 11, Warwick Lane, E.C.;
At all Libraries, and of the Booksellers.EFFINGHAM WILSON'S LIST.

Just published, crown 8vo, price 6s. net.

HANDY GUIDE TO PATENT LAW and PRACTICE.

By G. F. EMERY, LL.M.

"Well conceived and carefully executed."—Manchester Guardian.
"Will be found useful for study and reference in the offices of patent agents and of solicitors with practice in that field of litigation."
Scotsman.

Price 10s. 6d. net.

DIAGRAM for CALCULATING the YIELD on REDEEMABLE STOCKS.

By A. A. BOOTH and M. A. GRAINGER.

By means of a small ruler and a table of lines the true yield on a stock or bond purchased above par can be obtained at once without calculation of any kind.

Demy 8vo, price 5s. net.

LAW RELATING to LITERARY COPYRIGHT and the AUTHORSHIP and PUBLICATION of BOOKS.

By DANIEL CHAMIER, of the Inner Temple.

"The work may be conscientiously recommended to any one requiring a cheap and trustworthy guide on the subject."—Athenaeum.
"The book will be found extremely useful by authors."
Whitehall Review.
"Deserves a welcome from those who are concerned with the question dealt with."—Morning Post.

SECOND EDITION, REVISED AND ENLARGED.

Just published, demy 8vo, price 6s. net.

THE SCIENCE of MONEY.

By ALEX. DEL MAR.

"Mr. Del Mar will find no lack of supporters in the views he upholds... a storehouse of references... recommended both to student and master."—Glasgow Herald.
"Mr. Del Mar has the faculty of dealing with a subject, generally regarded as intricate and unattractive, in a lucid and rightly interesting manner, and those who desire a knowledge of the scientific aspect of money cannot do better than acquire it from this able treatise."
Liverpool Courier.

Crown 8vo, price 2s. net.

A SKETCH of the CURRENCY QUESTION.

By OLIVE CUTHBERTSON, B.A.

EFFINGHAM WILSON, 11, Royal Exchange, E.C.

MACMILLAN & CO.'S NEW BOOKS

8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

PERSONAL CHARACTERISTICS from FRENCH HISTORY.By Baron FERDINAND ROTHSCHILD, M.P. With Portraits.
DAILY NEWS.—"The book is most pleasantly written."
DAILY TELEGRAPH.—"Can be confidently recommended to those who feel an interest in the inner life of France and the social characteristics of some of her most famous children."

The Successful Romantic Story by a New Writer.

THE COURTSHIP of MORRICEBUCKLER. A Romance. By A. E. W. MASON, Author of "A Romance of Wastdale." Crown 8vo, 6s.
Mr. H. D. TRAILL, in the GRAPHIC of March 31, says: "A fine stirring narrative it is... A gallant and chivalrous story cast in a period and among scenes of which I, at least, am never tired of reading."

MACMILLAN'S SIX-SHILLING NOVELS.

NEW VOLUMES.

HIS HONOR and a LADY.

By SARA JEANNETTE DUNCAN. Illustrated by A. D. M'CORMICK. Crown 8vo.

ADAM JOHNSTONE'S SON.

By F. MARION CRAWFORD. Crown 8vo.

Fourth Thousand.—8vo, 30s. net.

THE LIFE of CARDINAL MAN-

NING, Archbishop of Westminster. By EDMUND SHERIDAN PURCELL. In 2 vols. With Portraits.

ILLUSTRATED STANDARD NOVELS.

GRYLL GRANGE.

By Thomas LOVE PEACOCK. Illustrated by F. H. TOWNSEND. With an Introduction by GEORGE SAINTSBURY. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

8vo, buckram, 10s. 6d.

THE BAMBOO GARDEN.

By A. R. FREEMAN-MITFORD, C.B. Illustrated by ALFRED PARSONS.

EVERSLEY SERIES.—New Volumes.

HISTORY of the ENGLISH

PEOPLE. By J. R. GREEN, M.A. Vol. V., PURITAN ENGLAND, 1633-1644. Globe 8vo, 6s.

THE POETICAL WORKS of

WILLIAM WORDSWORTH. Edited by WILLIAM KNIGHT. To be completed in 16 volumes. Vols. I. and II. Globe 8vo, 6s. each.

GLOBE.—"There appears to be no doubt that, when finished, this issue of the works of Wordsworth will, for fulness and accuracy, hold the field."

Crown 8vo, 6s.

THE MAN from SNOWY RIVER,

and other Verses. By A. B. PATERSON. With a Prefatory Note by ROLF BOLDREWOOD.

MACMILLAN &amp; CO., LIMITED, LONDON.

AGENCY FOR AMERICAN BOOKS.

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS, PUBLISHERS

and BOOKSELLERS, of 27 and 28 West 23rd Street, New York, and 24, BEDFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C., desire to call the attention of the READING PUBLIC to the excellent facilities presented by their Branch House in London for filling, on the most favourable terms, orders for their own STANDARD PUBLICATIONS and for ALL AMERICAN BOOKS and PERIODICALS—CATALOGUES sent on application.

WHAT MUST I DO TO GET WELL,

AND HOW CAN I KEEP SO? By Mrs. ELMA STUART. Toutley Hall, Wokingham, Berks. Twelfth Edition. Rewritten and greatly enlarged. Handsome volume, 320 pp., price 6s. net, or post free from herself, 6s. 6d.

Sole Trade Agents: SIMPKIN, MARSHALL & CO., Ltd., London, E.C.
The DUKES of ARROU writes: "I now feel that all other remedies I have ever taken were addressed to the symptoms alone, not to the cause and source of disease. The Salisbury Treatment... as clearly explained in your book, makes a direct attack upon those causes, on principles which seem to me to be as sound and simple in theory as I have found them to be successful in practice."MIND:*A Quarterly Review of Psychology and Philosophy.

Edited by G. F. STOUT.

With the Co-operation of Professor H. SIDGWICK, Professor W. WALLACE, Dr. VENN, Dr. WARD, and Prof. E. B. TITCHENER.

CONTENTS OF NEW SERIES.—No. 18.—APRIL 1896.—Price 2s.

THE CONCEPTION OF IMMORTALITY IN SPINOZA'S ETHICS.

A. E. TAYLOR.

PLATO'S EARLIER THEORY OF IDEAS. R. P. HARDIE.

SENSE, MEANING, AND INTERPRETATION.—H. V. WELBY.

CHARACTER and the EMOTIONS. ALEXANDER F. SHARP.

DISCUSSIONS: Self-Knowledge. JOHN I. BEARE.

The "Type-Theory" of the Simple Reaction. E. B. TITCHENER.

The Philosophy of Common Sense. WILLIAM W. CARLISLE.

CRITICAL NOTICES. NEW BOOKS.—PHILOSOPHICAL PERIODICALS.—NOTES.

WILLIAMS &amp; NORDGATE, 14, Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, London; 20, South Frederick Street, Edinburgh; and 7, Broad Street, Oxford.

ELLIOT STOCK'S NEW PUBLICATIONS.

In demy 8vo, cloth, price 7s. 6d.; Roxburgh, hand-made paper, 10s. 6d. net; Large Paper, £1 11s. 6d. net.

NEW READY.

THE SEVENTH VOLUME of

THE

TOPOGRAPHICAL SECTION

OR

THE GENTLEMAN'S MAGAZINE LIBRARY,

EDITED BY G. LAURANCE GOMME, F.S.A.,

CONTAINING—

LEICESTERSHIRE, LINCOLNSHIRE,
MIDDLESEX,
MONMOUTHSHIRE.

The First Volume contains—

Bedfordshire, Berkshire, and Buckinghamshire.

The Second Volume contains—

Cambridgeshire, Cheshire, Cornwall, and Cumberland.

The Third Volume contains—

Derbyshire, Devonshire, and Dorsetshire.

The Fourth Volume contains—

Durham, Essex, and Gloucestershire.

The Fifth Volume contains—

Hampshire, Herefordshire, Hertfordshire, and Huntingdonshire.

The Sixth Volume contains—

Kent and Lancashire.

The "Gentleman's Magazine Library" presents the principal contents of the The Gentleman's Magazine, from its commencement in 1731 to 1868, arranged in subjects—all the contributions throughout this period, on each topic, being brought together and classified systematically under heads. Each volume is devoted to one subject and is complete in itself, and besides Notes and an Appendix, has a very copious and carefully prepared Index.

In handsome crown 4to, bound appropriately in extra cloth, gilt, and fully illustrated, price 21s.

Lincoln's Inn Fields, and the Localities Adjacent.

Their Historical and Topographical Associations.

By CHARLES WILLIAM HECKETHORN, Author of "Roba D'Italia," "Secret Societies," &amp;c. With many Illustrations, Plans and Maps, by Alfred Beaver and other Artists.

In cloth, price 2s. 6d. net.

The Chevalier D'Eon de Beaumont.

A Treatise by Captain J. BUSHAN TELFER, R.N., F.S.A., F.R.G.S., Author of "The Strange Career of the Chevalier D'Eon de Beaumont, Minister Plenipotentiary from France to Great Britain in 1763."

Now ready, in crown 8vo, cloth, price 5s.

Industrial Day-Dreams:
Studies in Industrial Ethics and Economics.

By SAMUEL E. KEEBLE.

"An honest attempt to throw light upon a subject which repels so many because of the difficulties with which it bristles."—Sheffield and Rotherham Independent.

In crown 4to, paper cover, price 6d.

George Fox and the Quaker Testimony.

A LECTURE BY HENRY DEACON.

LONDON:

ELLIOT STOCK, 62, PATERNOSTER ROW.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S LIST.

NOW READY.

A MEMOIR OF MRS. AUGUSTUS CRAVEN.

By MRS. BISHOP.

With Extracts from her Diaries and Correspondence.

A New Edition.

In one vol., crown 8vo, with Portrait, 7s. 6d.

"A beautiful literary portrait of a fascinating woman." Tablet.

THE ETCHINGS OF JOHN LEECH.

RICHARD SAVAGE.

By CHARLES WHITEHEAD.

With 18 Full-page Illustrations worked from the Original Etchings on Steel by John Leech.

A New Edition, Now Ready. In one vol., crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

A few copies only in demy 8vo, 14s.

NEW NOVELS AT ALL THE LIBRARIES AND BOOKSELLERS.

NOW READY.

LORD HEVER.

By PERCY HURLBURD.

Author of "The Romance of Shere Mote," &c.

In 2 vols., crown 8vo, 12s.

NOW READY.

GIFTS AND WEIRDS.

By LILY PERKS.

Author of "A Late Springtime," &c.

In one vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

"There is not a little skill in the presentment of character. Orkney scenery is well done, and the conversation is bright."—Manchester Guardian.

"An agreeable and pleasantly written story."—Scotsman.

NOW READY.

THE INDIAN UNCLE.

By LESLIE KEITH, Author of "Lisbeth," &c.

In one vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

"A novel of healthy sentiment and of a quiet, well-sustained interest that makes it always enjoyable." Scotsman.

NOW READY.

MISS DRUMMOND'S DILEMMA.

By R. RAMSAY.

In one vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

NOW READY.

THE MYSTERY OF MR. BERNARD BROWN.

By E. PHILLIPS OPPENHEIM.

In one vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

"This is the best mystery story we have read for many a long month."—Daily Chronicle.

"A real good mystery."—World.

NOW READY.

THE MADONNA of a DAY.

By L. DOUGALL, Author of "The Mermaid," &c.

In one vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

"This stirring tale is strange and remarkable, dealing with only one incident, and treating that in an original and vivid style."—World.

THE NEW ISSUE OF THE NOVELS OF MRS. HENRY WOOD.

THE SIXTEENTH VOLUME,

ELSTER'S FOLLY

(50TH THOUSAND), NOW READY.

In red cloth, gold lettered on side, similar to the 3s. 6d. Edition, 2s. 6d.

In green cloth, gold lettered on back, but with a plainer binding, 2s.

To be followed at monthly intervals by the other Stories in the Series.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington Street
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

SMITH, ELDER & CO.'S LIST.

"AN ADMIRABLE AUTOBIOGRAPHY."
THE WORLD.

Just published, with 2 Portraits, 8vo, 15s.

MY CONFIDENCES:

An Autobiographical Sketch, addressed to my Descendants.

By FREDERICK LOCKER-LAMPSON.

EDITED BY

AUGUSTINE BIRRELL, Q.C., M.P.

From the TIMES.

"These 'Confidences' are delightful reading for all and sundry. We seem to hear the man speaking to us familiarly, and we feel sure we understand the manner of the work. There is a good deal in the dry humour which reminds us of Sterne, as there are constant suggestions of the fascinating reminiscences of Moxley in the pictures of old London and old Rome, peopled as they are with vanished personalities."

From the WESTMINSTER GAZETTE.

"This is a charming book. These 'Confidences' bear on every page the impress of their genial author."

From the DAILY CHRONICLE.

"My Confidences" bubble with good humour. It would be difficult to find an unkindly thing in these reminiscences."

MR. CROCKETT'S NEW NOVEL.
AT ALL BOOKSELLERS' AND LIBRARIES.

Crown 8vo, 6s.

CLEG KELLY, ARAB of the CITY.

By S. R. CROCKETT, Author of "The Raiders," &c.

From the DAILY CHRONICLE.—"If ever there was an ideal character in fiction it is this heroic ragamuffin."

From the WESTMINSTER GAZETTE.—"Cleg Kelly is from first to last a wholly delightful and stimulating figure—a hero fit to make the fame of any book."

MR. CROCKETT'S "CLEG

KELLY." Crown 8vo, 6s.

From the DAILY TELEGRAPH.—"A good book, full of sunny optimism of thought and sentiment, which is the best boon that any author can give us nowadays."

From the CHRISTIAN WORLD.—"Cleg is the most fascinating specimen of the fiery untamed boy we have had the pleasure of meeting for many years."

CLEG KELLY. By S. R.

CROCKETT. Crown 8vo, 6s.

From the BRITISH WEEKLY.—"The first impression and the last given by 'Cleg Kelly' is one of extraordinary cleverness."

From the DUNDEE ADVERTISER.—"Not Dickens himself ever did better with the City Arab than Mr. Crockett with his 'Cleg Kelly.'"

MR. CROCKETT'S "CLEG

KELLY." Crown 8vo, 6s.

From the REVIEW OF REVIEWS.—"A book which will add to the fame of its author, and establish the popularity of the Scotch story on still wider and broader foundations."

From the ABERDEEN FREE PRESS.—"A story of singular readability. It rivets attention. It is rich in human interest. Humour and pathos abound in it."

NEW VOLUME OF THE "DICTIONARY OF NATIONAL BIOGRAPHY."

JUST PUBLISHED, 15s. net in cloth; or in half-morocco, marbled edges, 20s. net.

Volume XLVI. (POCOCK-PUCKERING) of the DICTIONARY OF NATIONAL BIOGRAPHY.

Edited by SIDNEY LEE.

Volume I. was published on January 1, 1885, and a further Volume will be issued Quarterly until the completion of the Work.

Third Edition Nearly Exhausted.

Crown 8vo, 6s.

THE SOWERS.

By HENRY SETON MERRIMAN,

Author of "With Edged Tools," "The Grey Lady," &c.

"From first to last the book teems with interest. There have been few such good novels for years."

Mr. JAMES PATRICK in the Illustrated London News.

THE SOWERS. Third Edition.

Athenaeum says: "The best and strongest romance which he has yet given to the public."

Graphic says: "His absorbingly interesting story will be found very difficult indeed to lay down until its last page has been turned."

LONDON:

SMITH, ELDER & CO., 15, WATERLOO PLACE.

MR. T. FISHER UNWIN'S NEW AND FORTHCOMING BOOKS.

WITH INTRODUCTORY LETTER BY W. E. H. LECKY. A LIFE SPENT FOR IRELAND:

Leaves from the Diary of W. J. O'NEILL DAUNT. With Portrait. Cloth, 21s.

THE COURTSHIPS OF QUEEN ELIZABETH.

A History of the Various Negotiations for her Marriage. By MARTIN A. S. HUME, F.R.H.S., Editor of "The Calendar of Spanish State Papers of Elizabeth." With Portraits. Cloth, 12s.

THE COUNTRY OF HORACE AND VIRGIL.

By GASTON BOISSIER. Translated by D. HAVELOCK FISHER. Maps. Large crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d. [April 20.]

THE AFRIQANDER:

A Plain Tale of Colonial Life. By E. CLAIRMONTE. Illustrated. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s. [April 20.]

PUBLIC SPEAKING AND DEBATE:

A Manual for Advocates and Agitators. By GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, Author of "Sixty Years of an Agitator's Life," &c. Second and Revised Edition. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

NEW WHEELS IN OLD RUTS:

An Account of a Pilgrimage to Canterbury via the Ancient Pilgrims' Way. By HENRY PARK. With 50 Pen and Ink Sketches by F. W. R. ADAMS. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

EFFIE HETHERINGTON.

New By ROBERT BUCHANAN. [April 20.]

Novels

An OUTCAST of the ISLANDS.

By JOSEPH CONRAD.

at

6s. "A work of extraordinary force and charm." Daily Chronicle.

each, "A very striking novel. There is on every page the unmistakable note of genius."—Sketch.

in

CLARA HOPGOOD.

By MARK RUTHERFORD.

uniform

cloth

THE EBBING of the TIDE:

South Sea Stories.

By LOUIS BECKE.

binding.

New

THE STATEMENT OF STELLA MABERLEY.

By HERSELF.

Novels

at

3s. 6d.

PAUL HEINSIUS:

A Study from Life.

each,

in

By COBA LYSTER.

uniform

cloth

GINETTE'S HAPPINESS.

By "GYP."

binding.

Translated by RALPH DERECHOFF.

NEW VOLUME OF THE HALF-CROWN SERIES.

THE HONOUR of the FLAG, and Other Stories. By W. CLARK RUSSELL. Cloth binding.

NEW VOLUME OF "THE AUTONYM LIBRARY."

CHRONICLES from the LIFE of an EMINENT FOSSIL. By W. DUTTON BURRARD. Paper, 1s. 6d.; cloth, 2s.

In paper covers, price 1s. 6d.

A CASTAWAY of the BARRIER. By DAVID G. FALK. [April 20.]

LONDON:

T. FISHER UNWIN, PATERNOSTER SQUARE, E.C.

SATURDAY, APRIL 18, 1896.

No. 1250, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

History of England under Henry IV. By James Hamilton Wylie. Vol. III., 1407-1410. (Longmans.)

WHEN the second volume of Mr. Wylie's History of England under Henry IV. appeared, now a little over two years ago, the author announced that he looked forward to its completion in a third volume within the space of a twelvemonth. But his readers must have felt that his estimate was over sanguine, and will find no cause for surprise in the fact that the present instalment covers little more than one half of the remainder of the reign. It would have been a real ground for regret if Mr. Wylie had felt it necessary to narrow the scope of his work, by compressing the history of the last half of his period into the space permitted by a single volume. If at first reading one is half inclined to quarrel with the author for the copious discursiveness of his narrative, a further acquaintance forces the reader to recognise that the richness of detail goes far to compensate for any possible loss of perspective. Like its predecessors, this volume is difficult to read as a whole; but, also like them, the more we study it the more are we forced to admire and appreciate the patient industry that has marshalled so vast a wealth of material. The debt which students and other workers in the same field owe to Mr. Wylie is well nigh incalculable. At the same time the general reader may dip into these volumes at random with a tolerable certainty of lighting on some episode that is either curious or interesting, or both.

The history of the four years comprised in the present volume does not lend itself to consecutive treatment. So far as it is possible to regard them as a whole, we may say that the troubles both at home and abroad which had disturbed Henry IV.'s early years were beginning to wear themselves out, and events were shaping themselves to bear fruit in the glories and good order of the following reign. The crux of European politics in the opening years of the fifteenth century was the healing of the great schism in the Papacy. The schism had been fostered by the national rivalry of France and England. The first step towards the establishment of a better order in ecclesiastical matters was brought about by the somewhat futile Council of Pisa: futile, since it was impossible to overcome rival jealousies, and for the time Europe had "tri-vision" in the place of "di-vision," and instead of schism tri-schism." Such success as was achieved was due to the temporary co-operation of France and England. A more thorough settlement was only to become possible when the victory of Agincourt had made Henry of England the arbiter of Europe. Nor were these four years less pregnant for national than for ecclesiastical politics. In 1406 France and England were at open war. If the rival parties of the Armagnacs and Burgundians were unable to work in unison, both for once took simultaneous action against the common foe. "The Duke of Burgundy, as lieutenant of Picardy, was told off to attack Calais, while the Duke of Orleans went against Guienne." Such a division of warfare revealed the hollowness of French unity; but English disorganisation was scarcely less apparent. The attack on Calais appealed the more strongly to French patriotism, and the state of affairs in the town seemed to promise success.

"The actual condition of the English garrison was scandalous and deplorable. Scarcity was everywhere, and provisions were up to famine price. From time to time dummy troops had been turned out to parade—men of straw, such as sailors from the ships in harbour, or strangers staying in the town. These were counted in to swell the muster roll, and wages were claimed and certified for them as if they had been genuine efficient."

However, the English set as much store by the holding of Calais as the French did by its capture, and the prospect of actual danger wrought a rapid change. Burgundy's heart was not in the war; and, after fifteen days' trifling skirmishes of outposts, he made the approach of winter an excuse for raising the siege. The war in Guienne was a more serious matter. The French won many successes during the summer; and when, in October, Orleans laid siege to Bourges and Blaye, it looked as though he were indeed to prove that "Louis the conqueror whom God had fore-ordained to crush the English out of France." But, in the south as in the north, English spirit was roused by danger. Still, it was rather the approach of winter than the military force under Sir Thomas Swinburn, the English mayor of Bordeaux, or the fleet under the redoubtable Harry Pay, that eventually forced the French to retire. It is remarkable to find the citizens of Bordeaux appealing in their distress not only to the King and Council, but to the mayor and aldermen of London, Bristol, Hull, Southampton, and Lynn. It is evidence at once of the weakness of the English Government and of the strength of the commercial ties that united Aquitaine to England. The murder of Orleans at Paris towards the close of 1407 turned affairs in the direction of peace, and a three years' truce was concluded in June, 1408. The course of this warfare is effectively described by Mr. Wylie in three chapters, in which he well brings out the essential difference between the territory which the English King held by conquest in the north and his ancestral dominion in the south. The campaign of 1406 and the fatal feud of Burgundy and Orleans have also a special interest for English politics. They coincided with the close of the Welsh war, and with the entrance of Henry of Monmouth into an active share in the government of England. The early insight into continental politics that they afforded him is not without importance for an understanding of the aims of the future conqueror of Agincourt.

At home events were in a similar manner shaping themselves for a happier time. The practical close of the Welsh rebellion was brought about by the capture of Aberystwyth under the direction of the Prince of Wales. Mr. Wylie speaks of the final capture of the town as taking place in the depth of the winter 1408-9; but when Elmham uses the expression "frigoris inaudito fastigio," he was surely referring to operations that took place during the great frost of the previous winter. It was during that terrible frost, when the Rhine was frozen at Cologne and the Garonne at Bordeaux, that the old Earl of Northumberland took the field for his last fatal venture. His overthrow at Bramham Moor marks the close of civil strife in England, just as the fall of Aberystwyth was the practical end of the Welsh war. Thus the two great troubles that disturbed the peace of the new dynasty at home were set at rest. As a consequence, the young Prince of Wales was free to take up his share in the ordinary business of government just when his father's failing health began to render him incapable for its exercise. The King's health, indeed, grew worse and worse. "His mental fibre seems to have become a wreck" (p. 232), despondency made him seek consolation in religion, and he delivered himself into the arms of his Archbishop, loving to call himself Arundel's "child in God." At the close of 1408 his life was despaired of; and in the succeeding years he took little part in the government, which devolved on the Council, "directed with desperate earnestness by the young Prince of Wales. The prince sat at the head of every council meeting throughout the summer of 1410, and seemed to bend the whole machinery of government" (p. 323).

Henry of Monmouth probably depended for support on the Beauforts. It is commonly considered that the appointment of Thomas Beaufort to be Chancellor in January, 1410, marks the overthrow of Arundel and a possible anti-clerical reaction. But Mr. Wylie lays stress on the King's continued friendship with the Archbishop as pointing to another conclusion (p. 303). However, the crisis in politics did not come till 1411, and we must wait for Mr. Wylie's concluding volume to consider his estimate of the Prince's attitude in the last years of his father's reign. Meanwhile he gives us a chapter on "Prince Hal," in which he sketches the youth of the Prince, without reaching the question of his famous quarrel with Judge Gascoigne. Mr. Wylie argues that Henry of Monmouth was born in August, 1386. The question is a difficult one, but his arguments against 1387 do not seem to be conclusive. Elmham and Livius do not, as Mr. Wylie states, describe Henry as twenty-six years old at his accession, but say that he was in his twenty-sixth year. This is the most nearly contemporary authority for the date; and it favours 1387, not 1386. Leland also says Henry died in his thirty-sixth year, which again favours 1387. Nor does there seem to be sufficient evidence that Thomas, his next brother, was "born in the fall of 1387"; all we can say for certain is that he was born before September 30, 1388. This accords well enough with the birth of Henry in August, 1387, and of John of Bedford in June, 1389. Mary de Bohun's children were born at short intervals. The "Coldherbergh" where the Prince was resident in 1410 (p. 304) had been in a sense the official residence of the Prince of Wales; the Black Prince lived there for ten years previously to 1390, having acquired it from the heirs of Sir John de Pulteney, the London merchant who had built himself this hostel on a scale of great magnificence.

The narrative of political events is far from exhausting the importance of this volume. Social life, the religious movement, and University history—the years were critical at Oxford—all afford themes for chapters of unusual interest. Under the first head come two chapters, entitled "Travel" and "Gilds and Mysteries." The latter is a particularly interesting summary of a phase of the common life of medieval England that has only of recent years attracted the attention which it deserves. The reader will, however, sigh for a glossary, when he learns that "the braw wife's ale must not be red or ropy, but well sod and scummed, and certified on the ale konner's assay as good able and sety for man's body." The details of medieval commercial organisation have in some aspects a curiously old-world complexion, but, at the same time, we are constantly lighting on incidents which show how little change four centuries have wrought in man himself. Thus, the London craftsmen resist the settlement of Flemish weavers, by insisting that the number of looms in the city should be limited to eighty, and that no "foreign" should be allowed to trade there unless he was enrolled in their guild. At times a trade would look to its own interest under the guise of fatherly forethought for the consumer, as when it was ordered that no old caps should be dyed black and sold a second time, because the colours would run in the rain. But the caps got scoured with chalk or charcoal according to demand, and London was flooded with pokes and barrels of shoddy felt hats made in Germany. Four chapters are taken up with the history of the Schism and Council of Pisa, to which subject some reference has already been made. The last four chapters are concerned with the University of Oxford and Archbishop Arundel's constitutions and visitation, and with the connexion between the English and Bohemian reformers. The picture of a medieval university, where the student and the rioter, the rake-hell and the priest, all rubbed shoulders together, is a strange one. The number of students at medieval Oxford in her palmy days was estimated at 30,000, but the Black Death reduced them, and in 1379 there were said to be less than 3000. Mr. Wylie seems to think there may be some good basis for these numbers, but even the smaller figure is one that has only been reached in recent years, except, perhaps, during the Laudian revival; the larger number would mean that the city was more populous than it is to-day, for the townsmen could scarcely be less numerous than the students. The intellectual life of Oxford had been at its keenest pitch during the Wycliffite movement; but that movement had almost spent its force when the severity of Arundel's visitation crushed Oxford to only a shadow of her former self: in 1413 there were but seventy-one resident graduates all told, and for once we may believe that medieval figures are not exaggerated. Incidentally Mr. Wylie touches on the famous Oxford letter of October 5, 1406, in vindication of Wycliffe. He thinks that, though it may have been in some way informal, its substance reflects the prevailing temper of the University. Mr. Wylie rejects the theory that this document was the one for the attestation of which Peter Payne stole the University seal. But I do not feel convinced that Gascoigne's statement is incompatible with this theory, and Payne was a reckless firebrand who was sure to be mixed up in any irregular proceeding of the kind. As to the prevailing temper of the University, we must bear in mind the cynical avowal of Peter Partridge, that Wycliffite doctrine, even if it were true, would be a bar to the advancement of those who maintained it; and also that, if men like Payne, and earnest young scholars like Richard Fleming, were zealous for reform, they met with as stout opponents in the mendicant friars as Hereford, Repington, and their master Wyclif, and as Richard FitzRalph had done one or two generations previously. The Oxford fame both of Payne and Thomas Netter, the learned champion of orthodoxy, falls in these years; and, if we may believe Netter's own statement, Payne "suffocatus vecordia" did not dare to meet him in open controversy. Payne himself is the best of witnesses to the activity of the opposition that he met from the mendicants.

It is impossible, however, in the space of a brief review to indicate at all adequately the scope and interest of Mr. Wylie's volumes; it is by constant use alone that their value can be learnt and appreciated. Those who so use them will assuredly arrive at the conclusion that their worth cannot easily be over-estimated.

C. L. KINGSFORD.

Lyra Celtica. Edited by Elizabeth A. Sharp. With Introduction and Notes by William Sharp. (Edinburgh: Patrick Geddes & Colleagues.)

THIS volume, so strikingly attired in its green livery, is only the harbinger, we are told, of others to come. It is "intentionally given over mainly to modern poetry," and claims to be no more than a rough first selection, "culled from a vast mass of material—ancient, medieval, and modern." It is only fair to remember these stipulations of the editors in estimating what they have given us. It is to be remembered, too, that the book is practically the first of its kind; that it not only deserves the praise, but runs the risks, of a first adventure; and that many of its items have hitherto been mere flotsam on remoter Hebridean or Breton coasts.

It is natural, no doubt, that the book should have the freshest interest where it touches the extreme north and south of the demesne it can claim for its own, because this is less familiar ground. The Scottish and the Breton parts of its prospect will probably strike its readers most, especially those who, like the present reviewer, have known too little hitherto of those famously haunted regions. But above all, their own Highlands and Islands have supplied the editors with a superb harvest from the past, eked out by many haunting modern poems, from Mr. Robert Buchanan's memorable "Book of Orm," and by other contemporaries, whose work Mrs. Sharp has turned in her selection to most convincing account. Indeed, the book, after one has discounted everything in it that a most stubborn criticism can object to, is full of prodigiously fine things; and if some of its contributors do at times seem to wear their tarlatan a little awry, and make out a doubtful claim for themselves, this only says the more for the hospitality of the house that entertains them.

From the Ossian of the Cynveirdd to the painted Ossian of Macpherson, and from the latter to the Oisín of Mr. W. B. Yeats, one may range in this poetry at random, and find it a land full of strange lore, mysterious echoes, and forest refrains.

"The cry of the eagle of Assaroe
O'er the court of Mac Mórne to me is sweet;
And sweet is the cry of the bird below,
Where the wave and the wind and the tall cliff meet."

So Ossian sang, in words which were "jotted down in Gaelic by Dean Macgregor some 380 years ago," and which are newly translated for this volume.

"And we rode on the plains of the sea's edge—
the sea's edge barren and grey,
Grey sands on the green of the grasses, and over the dripping trees,
Dripping and doubling landward, as though they would hasten away
Like an army of old men, longing for rest from the moan of the seas."

And so sang Ossian, in the modern rhyme of Mr. Yeats, and in a music that serves to connect him suggestively with the one modern English poet who has been constantly drawn to our old Celtic storehouse—I mean Tennyson.

Ossian leads one to Merlin, who appears here only in one curious Cornish poem, and in his inferior guise of mere wizard or diviner:

"Merlin, Merlin! where art thou going,
So early in the day, with thy black dog?
O! o! o! o! &c.

"I have come here to search the way,
To find the red egg,
The red egg of the sea-serpent,
By the sea-side, in the hollow of the stone."

The poem ends:

"Merlin, Merlin! retrace thy steps,
There is no Diviner but God!"

To show how different is our modern temper in these things from the medieval spirit which converted the old bards to its own uses, one may compare with the above a Breton poem by Leo-Kermorvan, one of the contemporary Breton poets in Mrs. Sharp's collection. In this poem he imagines the return to Brittany of Merlin's bardic com-peer, Taliesin—who, let us note, is grown much less Christian in sentiment than he was wont to be in mediæval monastic Welsh imaginations of him.

"Full long I have slept with the heavy sleep of the dead,
Ofttimes my fugitive body has passed into divers forms,
I have spread strong wings in the air, I have swum in dark waters,
I have crawled in the woods.

"But amid all these manifold changes, my soul Remaineth ever the same: it is always, always myself!
And now I see well that this is the law of all that liveth,
Though none may know the reason, none the end.

"Still stand our lonely menhirs, and still the way-farer shudders.
As in the desolate dust he passes those Stones of Silence!
Thou speakest, I understand! My Breton tongue Is that of the ancient Kymry.

"Lights steal through the hours of shadow flame-lit for unknown saints,
As in the days of old our torches flared in the night:
Ah, before ever these sacred lamps shone for your meek apostles,
They burned for Héol.

"Blind without reason are we, thus changing the names of the gods:
Thus, mayhap, we think to destroy them, we who abandon their altars!
But cold, calm, unsmiling, before our laughter and curses,
The gods wait, immortal.

"Yea, while the sacred fires still burn along the hill-tops,
Yea, while a single lichened menhir still looms from the brushwood,
Yea, whether they name thee Armorica, Brittany, Breiz-Izel, Thou art ever the same dear land."

In the poem that immediately follows, by M. Tiercelin, entitled "By Menec'hi Shore," there is a touch of the same sentiment; if very differently expressed. Beside M. Tiercelin, we have M. Leconte de Lisle, the late Villiers de l'Isle Adam, that master of fantasy, with other poets, familiar and unfamiliar, in the contemporary Breton section; and the translations, some from Mr. W. J. Robertson's Century of French Verse, some by Mr. Sharp, strike one as admirably well done.

I wish one could say as much honestly for the older Welsh section of the book, in which Llywarch Hen, Taliesin, Dafydd ap Gwilym, and the two Rhys the Reds do not appear to advantage in pedestrian versions made before the finer art of translation was invented. For this, of course, we must not blame the editors, who have taken the best they could find; the blame really lies with us, who have failed to give so far any artistic equivalent account to English readers of our native Welsh poetry. Modern Welsh, it may be remarked in passing, does not appear at all. Modern Irish poetry, which has the advantage, in a collection of this kind, of being written in English, contributes as many as thirty-one writers; and this number does not include Tom Moore. Neither,

"By that lake whose gloomy shore
Skylark never warbled o'er!
Where the cliff hangs high and steep,
Young Saint Kevin stole to sleep," nor his "In the mid-hour of Night" have availed to save him. On the other hand, we have the largest number of poems by any single contributor chosen from the late Mr. Roden Noel—a poet whose work has been too much neglected hitherto, but who has as little Celtic colour in his poetry as it is possible to find in any most English poet of them all. And Sir Samuel Ferguson, who was in a sense the beginner of the new tradition in Irish poetry, a Celtic writer through and through, and at his best a poet of the true temper and the true style, has only three poems, which do not at all represent his real faculty. These are the discrepancies, however, which may serve to suggest once again how tastes may differ, and how rich the modern Irish field is, extending not only to Miss Tynan and Mr. Yeats, but to the latest intakes, and the names of Miss Norah Hopper, Miss Dora Sigerson, and the mysterious "A. E." The very latest Irish singer is Miss Moira O'Neill, whose song, "Sea Wrack," is most striking. The latest addition to the Scottish section is the author of The Sin-Eater, Miss Fiona Macleod, one of whose contributions, "The Prayer of Women," has not been equalled in its kind. A charmingly fresh "Milking Song," that breaks in pleasantly upon the prevalent melancholy of Gaelic poetry, whether written in English or in the vernacular, comes from her book, The Mountain Lovers, and begins:

"O sweet St. Bride of the
Yellow, yellow hair;
Paul said, and Peter said,
And all the saints alive or dead
Vowed she had the sweetest head,
Bonnie, sweet St. Bride of the Yellow, yellow hair."

Miss Macleod serves Mr. Sharp in his introduction with a notable conclusion to his whole argument for a modern literary movement, in which all the kindred Gaelic and Kymric peoples may work together. "They went forth to the battle; but they always fell," of the ancient Welsh saying receives a new reading at her hands; the true solution, no doubt, in politics and literature, of the whole international Celtic problem. "Yes," says Miss Macleod, "the Celt falls, but his spirit rises in the heart and the brain of the Anglo-Celtic peoples, with whom are the destinies of the generations to come."

Mr. Sharp's characteristic preamble ranges far—from the Myvyrian Archaeology to Ernest Renan—in its quest of the elusive Celtic muse whom he so enthusiastically serves; and his notes are equally full and various, many of them histories in little of the poets described. He carries one on a vigorous and triumphant march that makes light of centuries, and with a tale and a song relates the newest poet to the bards and warriors of the greyest past. His Kymric cousins in Wales may grumble that he does not understand them, on the score of his airy generality about their being the Germans of the Celtic races; and his Saxon audience may find in him, and the twelve or fourteen hundred octavo volumes of unpublished Celtic MSS. with which he threatens them, a new danger to civilisation. But in all this there is only just so much of a challenge to opinion as makes his contributions to the book properly provocative, and his argument stimulating and dynamic.

ERNEST RHYS.

Persian Life and Customs. By the Rev. S. G. Wilson. (Olipphant, Anderson & Ferrier.)

THIS is a valuable addition to the works already existing on Persia, by Curzon, Benjamin, Bassett, and Willis, being, for the most part, a record of the personal observations and experiences gathered by an American missionary, from a residence of fourteen years in Tabriz and visits to many localities, comprised mainly within the area of Azarbijan and Irak.

"My residence at Tabriz," says the author, "has been among the dominant race of Persia, the Turkis or Tartars, to whom the royal Kajars belong, and who have supplanted the ancient races in the north-west provinces as far south as Teheran and Hamadan."

Mr. Wilson's journey to Persia, across Europe to Odessa, thence by the Black Sea and Transcaucasia, is described in the first two chapters, "Coasting the Black Sea," and "Georgia and Ararat." Subsequent chapters are devoted to a description of scenes and places visited during successive journeys; and the chapters which follow describe the civil, religious, social, domestic, and commercial life of the people in cities, villages, and tents.

The author, on the whole, views the future of the people and the capabilities of the land with some hope, though he fully recognises the serious obstacles to progress presented by "official corruption on the one hand and the conservatism of the Mollas on the other, against which the Shah himself, with a progressive spirit and an earnest purpose for the advancement and enlightenment of his people seems powerless to effect his purpose."

In connexion with this consideration, we may call special attention to chap. x., "The Condition and Needs of Persia," one of the most interesting and suggestive in the book. Persia is a big country,

"comprising six hundred and twenty-eight thousand square miles—a territory equal to France, Germany, Great Britain and Ireland, with several of the smaller States of Europe. But its uncultivated area is said to be three-fourths of the whole. The central part of the country is an immense plateau, three hundred and forty thousand square miles in area, with an average altitude of three thousand seven hundred feet above the sea. The central plateau has a delightful climate. The seasons come with healthful regularity.

"Notwithstanding the wide extent of territory and the variety of climate, Persia has been for some centuries in a state of weakness. Its population is small and sparse, being estimated at (only) nine millions, of whom two millions are nomads. Are the causes of the decline in the land and the people, or in conditions and circumstances capable of change and amelioration?"

The author believes the latter can be shown. First as to the soil:

"The cultivated parts of Persia are rich and productive. It produces wheat, rice, barley, millet, and maize; grapes, peaches, and numerous other fruits and vegetables, as well as the sugar-cane, silk, tobacco, opium, and cotton. The domestic and wild animals of the temperate zone are also found in Persia, and trout, salmon, and other fish are abundant. Not a little of the uncultivated portion of Persia is desert, much in the same way as Colorado and Columbia once were.

Only irrigation is necessary to produce abundant fertility."

As regards mineral resources,

"coal, iron, lead, copper, arsenic, mercury, sulphur, asbestos, mica, marble, manganese, gold dust, and the turquoise are found, while the pearl fisheries of the Persian Gulf are very productive."

Next as to the people:

"Nor is there any inherent lack of vitality in the people. The men are strong and freer from disease than their more civilised contemporaries. The Kurds, Lurs, and Tartar Turks have the usual vigour of mountain tribes accustomed to nomadic life. The peasants are sturdy, healthy, and inured to hardship. The men of the cities have fine physiques and good constitutions. The rate of infant mortality is high, but this is due to neglect and ignorance of parents. The races represented are Persians, Tartars or Turks, Kurds, and Lurs, with Armenians, Nestorians, Jews, and Parsees."

But the Persians themselves as well as many of the Turks are of mixed race.

"The present inhabitants have had the advantage of a mixture of blood. Iran and Turan [and we may add Arabia] have been commingled. The present people is the resultant of the fusion of these elements through a long series of years."

Next, there is no intellectual feebleness in the race:

"The Persians are intelligent, subtle in argument, skilful in imitation, artistic, and delighting in poetry and music. Minister Benjamin remarks: 'Persia has vitality enough to carry her to another epoch of national greatness.'"

After some favourable remarks upon the capacity of the ruler, the postal and telegraph services, the army, education, the coinage, and general progress in the capital, Mr. Wilson proceeds to inquire into the needs of Persia, the supplying of which would make its progress more rapid and ameliorate its condition. Among these are "irrigation, a change of land-tenure, improvement in agricultural improvements, wagon-roads, railroads, and concessions." Also political reforms are required,

"official corruption being universally prevalent; and a codification of the civil law with a definite code of punishments, as well as a defining of the powers of the civil and religious authorities, which are now often antagonistic."

Again,

"popular education, on which, in Mr. Curzon's opinion, depend the regeneration and civilisation of Persia. Such schools as there are in the mosques, and the Molla is the teacher. There are, however, good colleges in Tabriz and Ispahan, and in the royal college of Teheran English, French, Russian, Arabic, and Turkish are taught, as well as science, music, drawing, and painting."

The author however feels called upon to deplore the deficiency of the upper classes in school education. With respect to this opinions may differ. Mr. Wilson's experience has been principally derived, as he intimates, from a residence among the Turki-Persians. The present writer's experience has been, that the Persian of some position is a man of considerable attainments, often deeply versed in philosophy, and speaking and writing his own language far more correctly and elegantly than the Englishmen of corresponding position. The enthusiasm with which Babism, with its mystical tenets, was taken up by so many is no slight evidence of the philosophical tendency of the Persian mind. This tendency exists, though it is not perhaps very openly shown in so bigoted a country; or if expression is given to it—as by nearly all the great Persian poets—the ideas are put forth as an esoteric sense of Muhammadanism, or concealed by the veil of Epicureanism.

Hafiz, among others, complains often of the intolerance of his contemporaries:

"Ba-yaki jur'ah ki azar-i kasash dar pai niet Zahmati mikasham az mardum-i uddan ki mapurs."

Teheran itself has become

"from a village of underground huts the political centre of Central Asia. In a century its population has increased from fifteen thousand to two hundred thousand. Because of its modern growth it has partaken more largely than any other Persian city of a European element. Broad avenues, new styles of houses, phaetons and carriages, telegraph-poles and tramways, street gas-lamps and the electric light, restaurants, drug stores, photograph galleries, and Franghi stores, strongly attest that Western life has invigorated the stereotyped East."

In the chapter on Tabriz the author gives a short sketch of the government of a Persian city.

"Let us now take a glance at Persian municipal life. The government of Tabriz may serve as a sample of that of other cities of Persia. A provincial or district governor (hakim) is ruler in each city; but he is often transferred from one place to another, and has few local attachments. The city government proper consists of officers who are rarely changed. These are the beglar-begi or mayor and the kand-khudas [read kad-khudas] or aldermen of different wards of the city. They hold court in their own houses, have their own prisons, decide cases, and punish with fines, the bastinado, or imprisonment in chains. Great criminals are transferred to the governor-general and punished by him."

In the chapter on Hamadan and Takht-i Suleiman we read:

"What antiquities has it [i.e. Hamadan, the southern Ecbatana]? Excavations have not been made. What lies buried of the city captured by Cyrus, Alexander, and Antiochus the Great is unknown."

This should offer a valuable field for future explorers.

"Takht-i Suleiman, the northern Ecbatana, where Cyrus deposited the wealth of Croesus, was later called Ganzaca by the Greeks, Kandzag by the Armenians, and Shir by the Arabs. Pompey and Antony marched against it. Here Heraclius destroyed the celebrated fire-temple in which the image of Khosru was enthroned, and surrounded by emblems of the sun, moon and stars."

The adornment of the fire-temple, as stated above, recalls an interesting passage in Nizami's poem, the "Haft Paikar," and makes clear even to those who have not visited Persia the correctness of a certain reading in which MSS. differ. Dr. William Bacher, in his Life and Works of Nizami, says:

"Ueber die Anwendung der Siebenzahl, welche in diesem Werke überhaupt eine grosse Rolle spielt, sagt Nizami:

"Dies Gemälde theilt', gleich Magerbildern,
Ich deshalb als Schmuck an sieben Bräute,
Dass der Sphären sieben Glanzgestirne,
Seh'n sie meine sieben Bräut' erglänzen,
Jedes unter ihnen helfend spende
Einer jeden Braut Geschmeid' und Zierrat."

reading nakh-i Majus ("Magian painting") for dair-i Majus ("Magian temple"), which latter is undoubtedly correct, inasmuch as the Magian temple was painted with stars, while Magian paintings were not always necessarily of stars.

To keen observation and a good and agreeable style Mr. Wilson adds a lively sense of humour. His account of the Persian builder (chapter, "Business Life") is most amusing.

"When the work actually begins, one is amazed at the slowness of the labourers. Their picks fall so very deliberately and accomplish so little. Two labourers fill a hod and lift it on the shoulder of the hod-carrier, who meanwhile stands idle, as they do also till he returns. One apprentice throws each brick to the bricklayer, and another passes him the mortar by the handful. The bricklayer as he works sings all day long, with variations, calling for materials: 'My child, give me mortar.' 'Throw me a brick, my son.' 'Let me see a brick; let it come to me.' 'Brother, throw me a baby brick (i.e., a half-brick).' 'Give me mortar, O my father.'"

The supposed conversion by machinery in the chapter on "Modern Missions in Persia," is also decidedly good.

"Some are suspicious that they may be converted even by machinery. A story is told by a missionary of a woman who came to visit her, and sat down in a rocking-chair. It rocked backward, so she drew her feet up under her. In doing so the chair tilted forward, and she was pitched on the floor. She sprang up and ran out of the room screaming 'Vy, vy! I have got into one of the converting machines.' Nothing could induce her to approach that Christian-making machine again."

In three appendices the author gives a history of Tabriz, the calendar of the Persian year, the monetary system, and table of weights and measures. The illustrations are good and useful; our only regret is that they are not more numerous. The work is handsomely printed, and tastefully bound in Persian-blue and gold.

CHARLES EDWARD WILSON.

Kriegspiel: The War-Game. By Francis Hindes Groome. (Ward, Lock & Bowden.)

"But helpless Pieces of the Game He plays
Upon this Chequer-board of Nights and Days;
Hither and thither moves, and mates, and slays,
And one by one back in the Cupboard lays."

THESE words of Omar Khayyám's, which are quoted on the title-page, serve much better than the title itself to indicate the character of Mr. Groome's novel. Who the "pieces of the game" individually are can only be properly ascertained by reading the book. But it may be said that, in addition to many subordinate figures, there is a young hero—not specially heroic—and there is an elderly fiend who is far and away the real "hero." This is a certain Dr. Watson, the imaginary grandson—for there is every reason to doubt his historical existence—of a veritable Dr. Robert Watson, probably unknown to the general reader, who flourished about eighty or ninety years ago, and whose portrait, "painted at Rome in 1817 by Prof. Vogel von Vogelstein, and now in the Scottish National Portrait Gallery, Edinburgh," is reproduced as a frontispiece. This Dr. Watson, the prototype, it seems, of Gashford in Barnaby Rudge, and actually secretary to Lord George Gordon in 1780, is said, in the novel at any rate, to have been a son of Prince Charles Edward by a bourgeois of Elgin; and, whatever his origin, his character was that of a subtle Machiavelli, who, if his grandson's word may be accepted, swayed half the Courts in Europe. And since, as the Watson of the novel profanely remarks, he and his grandfather are one, the real picture so ingeniously prefaced may be regarded as an actual portrait of Dr. Robert Watson's hypothetical grandson. As the latter first visibly appears in the pages of Kriegspiel, he is briefly described as "a small man, excessively bald, and dressed in black, his clothes good, but very old-fashioned"; his voice "soft, yet penetrating." But as the story progresses these outlines are gradually filled in, until one has an extremely real and living personality before one's mental vision. From almost the opening pages this dark and sinister figure dominates the book, and after his sudden and final disappearance the reader's interest palpably abates.

One can only refer briefly to the many points of interest in the novel. There is a pretty and touching little scene near the beginning, where the hero, Lionel, then a boy of thirteen, first meets the father who until then had refused to see him, believing him, unjustly, as it turns out, to be no son of his. The boy has come into his father's bedroom on the morning following his arrival; and after a short interview, during which the father struggles to maintain an attitude of cold reserve, Lionel prepares to withdraw.

"He lingered, though; and Glemham found himself asking, with a kindness, a tenderness even that surprised himself, 'What is it, Lionel?' And for answer the boy flung his arms round his neck and kissed him, and Glemham kissed him back—he was wondering still at that kiss when he found himself alone.

"The wonder lasted all the time he was dressing. He had intended to be so cool, to settle nothing rashly, to review his past conduct (it certainly had been hasty), and then, if he found that there was room for doubt, to try to be just, to make this boy what reparation was possible. 'This boy!' why, he had called him 'Lionel,' and had kissed him; nay, at this moment his brain was in a whirl, his blood coursing fiercely for joy, for very joy."

The most powerful passage in the book is undoubtedly the description of the discovery of the murdered body of Sir Charles Glemham, in circumstances which reveal the devilish hate and cunning of his unknown murderers. This culminating horror is effectively foreshadowed in the three or four preceding chapters, from the time when Lady Glemham, sitting in the gathering dusk at her oriel window, watches her husband ride away from her down into the dark hollow, and then, straining her eyes, at length sees the mounted figure as it tops the opposite slope, visible for a moment against the streak of after-glow in the western sky.

Other notable descriptions there are, from the opening scene in Germany to the mournful farewell among the Gypsy tents on the Welsh border. Throughout, there is considerable change of scene, and the reader is carried from Germany to Suffolk, thence to the south of Scotland, thereafter to Oxford, and once more to Scotland. Lionel's early experiences at Newark Peel, in Teviotdale, are delightful; and the picture of Marjory Avenel is a charming one. Indeed, she is such a frank, bright girl, and she develops into such a lovable woman, that one deeply regrets her destiny, and resents the fact of the Gypsy's prophecy coming true. For, of course, there are Gypsies in the book, real flesh-and-blood Gypsies, such as those whom Mr. Groome introduced to us in the pages of In Gypsy Tents. It is an amazing reflection that of all the novelists who have written about Gypsies almost none were acquainted with the inner life and the language of the people they attempted to describe. Not Sir Walter Scott, not Bulwer Lytton, not Whyte Melville. Indeed, excluding the works of Borrow and Leland, and In Gypsy Tents, as not coming precisely within the category of "novels," the only previous work of fiction that represents English Gypsies as they really are is Mr. Arthur Way's "No. 747; being the Autobiography of a Gypsy," which appeared in 1890. But the reality of the Kriegspiel Gypsies, even if one did not know the name of the author, is apparent to anyone who has mixed with those people; and many of their sentences proclaim themselves, by their own peculiar characteristics, to be actual quotations, and not merely the outcome of the author's fancy.

To some readers, the Gypsies may present themselves too frequently throughout the story; but that is a matter of taste. It is, however, questionable whether Lionel's abduction is altogether a happy idea. Moreover, it is a mistake to make the hero of a romance too much the victim of circumstances. During Lionel's captivity, one has a feeling of irritation similar to that which the reader of Redgauntlet feels when Darsie Latimer meekly submits to all his uncle's bullying. In each case, one is tempted to ask the captive why he does not act like a man and burst his bonds. To be sure, Lionel's experience was a much harder one than Darsie Latimer's. With a bald-headed Mephistopheles always at hand, ready to hypnotise or to administer narcotics, or to chain him hand and foot, he had certainly little chance of obtaining his freedom. Nevertheless, this incident, while containing nothing impossible, gives rise to questionings. Dr. Watson's complicated manoeuvres are hardly called for, and his reasons for abducting Lionel seem inadequate.

At this juncture comes in Dr. Watson's narrative, and it is certainly one of the very best things in the book. It reads like a chapter out of Roderick Random; and in the dialogues with Dean Beaumont and Mistress Fitzherbert the eighteenth-century tone is admirably reproduced. So good is this interlude altogether, that one is apt to wish that, instead of being embedded in a nineteenth-century tale, it had formed part of a complete novel assumed to be written in the eighteenth century. Nor is this the only portion of Kriegspiel that might have been omitted, and that without injury to the story itself. In the later chapters, especially, there is a tendency to obstruct the free current of the narrative by the introduction of what may be called extraneous matter. Prof. Seton-Hepburn, for example, with "his great scheme for the deodorisation of hetairism," could easily have been dispensed with. It is clever writing, but the story would have run all the easier without it. The book, in short, suffers somewhat from an embarras de richesses, and contains material enough for two good novels.

Objections of a more trifling nature might also be raised. In the description of the walk across Minchmoor, for example, there is mention of certain "low pillars of stones, built at intervals to indicate the track in time of snow." Now, these "pillars" are certainly intended solely for the use of sportsmen in a grouse-drive. Again, Dr. Watson is made to say (p. 265) that his grandfather "might, had he chosen, have borne the royal arms with the bar sinister": a repetition of the inaccuracy that so often vexes the souls of heralds. Bend or baton sinister would have come in all right, or, in colloquial phrase, "bastard bar," but not "bar sinister." And, although Mr. Groome is known to possess a minute and accurate knowledge of matters relating to Scotland, he is surely at fault in speaking of "the wersh salty taste of blood" (p. 292). The Scotch adjective "wersh" is almost—perhaps quite—synonymous with "insipid," and salt is the best and readiest corrective of "wershness" in food.

It is easy, however, to find fault. The fact remains that this is a book to be read. One may criticise this part of it or that; but no one who has read it can fail to recognise its freshness and originality, the strength of many of its passages, and the marked ability of its author.

DAVID MACRITCHIE.

NEW NOVELS.

The Things that Matter. By Francois Gribble. (Innes.)

The Indian Uncle. By Leslie Keith. (Bentley.)

The White Feather. By Oswald Crawford. (Chapman & Hall.)

The Red Star. By the Author of "Amabel." (Fisher Unwin.)

In a Silent World. By the Author of "Views of English Society." (Hutchinson.)

Stripped of the Tinsel. By J. E. Muldock. (Digby, Long & Co.)

Battlement and Tower. By Owen Rhoscaml. (Longmans.)

The Story of a London Clerk. (Leadenhall Press.)

MR. GRIBBLE'S story shows a considerable talent. The chorus characters in particular are sketched with a sure hand. Mrs. Bryant, of Bideford, who reads the stories of "that good and clever writer, Emma Jane Warboise," sensible, witty Mrs. Baebrooke, Mr. Stornoway, with his perpetual refrain, "quite a woman you ought to know," and Duncan, the realistic novelist—are almost too faithfully drawn, too pertinently photographic. Anyhow, the hits are above the belt and good-natured. About Mr. and Mrs. Temple, of whose married life the story treats, it is harder to speak. They begin by being friends only; and when the woman discovers that love is "the thing that matters," she commits suicide. Some of the conversations where the wife asks her friends for advice read with the painful accuracy of police reports. The humorous side of the book is telling enough; the pathetic, though urged eagerly, is never spontaneous and moving, but often interesting. The whole result is a rod or two above the average, if only because it is conscientiously done, with a determination to avoid the obvious, to employ a worthy style.

There is more of gentility than strength about Mr. Keith's manner; more of neatness than originality in the handling of his story. Such an old story it is too, that of the returned uncle, rich with Indian treasure, seeking his kindred under an assumed name. One can never care much for the middle-aged gentleman. True, in the last chapter he is lavishly generous; but he is not over honourable in the preceding pages, and causes a good many commonplace folk a deal of unnecessary trouble, ill-temper, and unpleasant revelations. However, this uncle is very soon ashamed of his incognito, and only excellent novelist's reasons prevent an early disclosure. So, perhaps, he is forgiven, though the reader gets none of the golden solace. The story reads pleasantly, and old Mrs. Gordon is a creation to be proud of. Even a hardened reviewer would be glad to make her "better acquaintance."

There are three stories in Mr. Crawford's book, but the title-story is the most important. The author writes daintily, prettily affecting the style of the last century. None of his characters are very definite, excepting delightful and not very sober Captain Wildacre; but they serve. The plot has the merit of giving an agreeable writer an excuse to amuse us.

The Red Star is not an ambitious novel, though elaborately contrived. The plot is good, the style is simple and direct. A large number of railway travellers for the next few months will probably, and deservedly, be grateful to the author. Nothing more need be said. Within his limits—self-imposed—the writer succeeds well. There are signs that he might do well even with a more ambitious venture.

Had the latter half of In a Silent World been at all equal to the opening chapters, the writer would have given us a very remarkable book. The heroine, whose autobiography the story pretends to be, is deaf and dumb. Some admirable and unexpected writing follow. No doubt the authoress found full achievement beyond her powers. But the task was worth attempting. That she could succeed in a scene or two were proof of considerable merit; that she has done so much more than this acclaims her a writer of no ordinary talent. At the end the story, though relentlessly logical, fails, albeit with that failure which is better than cheap success.

A prolonged course of novel reading makes a reviewer something more than human. He may become preternaturally kind, knowing intuitively or by unsuccessful endeavour frowning difficulties and easy temptations. On the other hand, he may grow fierce, uncritical. Mr. Muddock's novel is, I imagine, the sign-post pointing grimly towards the two inevitable highways. He who refuses to take either must sit in the ditch, solitary and silent, save for the cough that evades only the strongest. Mr. Muddock has, one opines, seen something of the world, had experiences, known people; yet he cannot put on paper what he has learnt, still less what he thinks. Each page is a corpse, dead though galvanised into garrulity. A brave array of books docketed on his title-page assert that he is at least a prolific author. They have been written, one is willing to acknowledge; presumably they have been read, since he finds a publisher; but I should be sorry to read them. Of the two paths I would fain choose the sunnier. Stripped of the Tinsel may find readers. I almost hope, for the author's sake, that it will; he seems buoyantly in earnest, cocksure of success. Perhaps he is very young, although the parent of so many high-sounding romances.

Mr. Rhoscaml's book does not greatly attract me. In truth, I found it rather tiresome. But I am no fair critic of the historical novel, a form of fiction I especially dread and dislike. Much of the writing is decidedly good, though the conversations are of that turgid quality commonly supposed to give dignity and verisimilitude to the speech of half real, half fanciful persons. The lovely Conwy country is admirably described; sojourners at the Welsh watering-places this coming summer will, no doubt, read Battlement and Tower with considerable sentimental satisfaction.

The Story of a London Clerk has the merit of following Dickens, though very far off. Its sub-title is "A faithful narrative faithfully told." Fact is, of course, stranger than fiction; but some of the facts here related seem a little, shall I say, exaggerated: the characters less real than grotesque. But judged by a tolerant standard the book passes muster. Though old-fashioned and straggling, it is not incompetent, and may give pleasure to the unexacting, if not to the critic.

PERCY ADDLESHAW.

RECENT THEOLOGY.

St. Paul the Traveller and the Roman Citizen. By W. M. Ramsay. (Hodder & Stoughton.) This book seems to be mainly composed of lectures delivered by its author before certain American universities and Mansfield College, Oxford; and if not so important as The Church in the Roman Empire, it will still be found full of interest and instruction for the student of St. Paul. Prof. Ramsay in this work follows the footsteps of the Apostle in his several missionary journeys, using his personal knowledge of the localities to good purpose, gives an amended translation of those portions of the Acts which concern Paul, and supplies a theory of the composition of that book. He treats Paul and Luke, in his own words, as "men among men," and (we may add) the Acts as a book among books. Naturally he reaffirms the views expressed in his former work—the South Galatian theory in particular; and we have here a vivid picture of the Apostle "in a Galatian village, or house, lying in the mud on the shady side of a wall for two hours shaking like an aspen leaf," under an access of malarial fever, the "thorn in the flesh" of which he complains in his second Corinthian letter. Leaving the ways of the German critics whom he once followed, and to whom he still acknowledges his indebtedness, Prof. Ramsay assigns to Luke a place in the first rank of historians, as one who truthfully recorded the events in which he himself took part or of which he was a witness, and otherwise relied on the best authorities—in this case, as regards a considerable portion of his narrative, on the Apostle whose companion he was. The marvels described in Acts, indeed, he admits are difficulties, and frankly says that "in themselves they do not add to, but detract from, its verisimilitude as history." He also admits that Luke is a "strong partisan." Even with these concessions, however, it may be doubted whether he makes out his case; and he certainly minimises the points of difference between the Acts and the Epistles, and between Paul and the Twelve. It is true he distinguishes the Pauline from the pre-Pauline portion of the Acts, and justly makes Luke dependent for the latter on oral tradition and informal narratives; but would a great historian give no hint as to the comparative trustworthiness of his sources, or could a companion of Paul have so misrepresented the nature of the gift of tongues as is done in Acts ii.? We should have said that the "travel-document," in Prof. Ramsay's view, consists of Luke's own notes which he has worked up into the body of his narrative. His chronology of Acts, and his identification of Paul's second visit to Jerusalem, merely alluded to in Acts xii. 25, with that so fully described in Galatians, are not likely to meet with much acceptance. We should be less inclined to quarrel with the date assigned to the composition of the Acts, shortly after 81 A.D. though German critics like Weissäcker refer it to the second century.

Archbishop Wake and the Project of Union (1717-1720) between the Gallican and Anglican Churches. By J. H. Lupton. (Bell.) This publication comes very opportunely, when projects of the union of the Anglican and Roman Churches are again brought forward; but we fear that the perusal will not tend to excite any great hopes of the possibility of such an event. The correspondence of Archbishop Wake with Dupin and others had never any official character. It was merely an exchange of views between private persons. The Archbishop does not seem to have communicated any of his letters, or even the fact that he was engaged in such a correspondence, to any of his suffragans. The correspondence was better known in Paris than in London, and the first overtures came from the French side; but neither party was hopeful of success. Archbishop Wake allows as much from the first; and when, on the death of Dupin, his papers were seized and the letters examined, the party in authority judged them to be "the most abominable plot which a Catholic doctor has ever formed in matters of religion. Apostacy has never perpetrated anything more criminal" (p. 88). The affair died away, and left no results. But we may notice that Archbishop Wake's ideas were far more comprehensive than those of the party who are now seeking re-union. He admitted freely foreign Protestants to communion, and had no thought of throwing them over to please Rome. Dr. Lupton has done his part well; now and then, perhaps, there is hardly sufficient explanation. Gerberon's work alluded to on p. 26 is really by De Barcos, and will not be found in any list of the works of the former; and it might have been made more clear at first that the Abbé Du Bois spoken of is the future Cardinal.

Thoughts and Aspirations of the Ages. Edited by W. Chatterton Coupland. (Sonnenschein). Dr. Coupland has made selections in prose and verse from the religious writings of the world. In a volume of 700 pages will be found passages from universal literature, "selected for their sublimity of thought, intensity of religious emotion, or purity and elevation of ethical sentiment." The book opens with an extract from the Book of the Dead, which M. Renouf says "contains the oldest known code of private and public morality," and concludes with Tennyson's:

"Ring out the darkness of the land, Ring in the Christ that is to be."

Selections from the scriptures of all religions are given, and though the Christian predominates, that (as the author points out) is simply due to the fact that of religious world-literature the Christian is the richest. Besides the religion of Ancient Egypt, we have Confucianism and Taoism, Brahmanism, Buddhism, Islam, Madaism, Sufism. The Church of England is well represented by Bacon, Sir Philip Sidney, Sir H. Wotton, George Herbert, Jeremy Taylor, William Law, Cowper, Coleridge, Wordsworth, Charles Kingsley, Keble, and R. C. Trench. It is needless to say that every quotation from these famous sons of the Church is well worth reperusal. The "English Romanists" have a compartment to themselves. One naturally expects to meet here with the most famous of English converts to the Church of Rome, John Dryden, but no place is found for the author of those noble lines:

"O gracious God, how well dost thou provide
For erring reason an unerring guide.
Thy throne is darkness in the abyss of light—
A blaze of glory that forbids the sight."

In place of "glorious John," we find Pope's "Universal Prayer," not where we might fairly expect it, among the poems of Theism, but included among the poems of the English Catholics. This, however, is a small matter compared with the absence of any reference or allusion to Dr. Martineau. To edit a work on the thought and aspirations of the world, and to make no selection from the works of the leading religious writer of our age, is indeed to omit the part of the Prince of Denmark from the play of "Hamlet." Dr. Coupland tells us in his preface that living authors are wholly excluded. Hundreds of readers who are not Unitarians will say that this explains but does not justify this singular exclusion. This is a book to be bought and kept for reference. It contains extracts from many books which are not to be found in every gentleman's library. If a second edition is brought out, it would be an improvement, we suggest, to print the name of the author at the foot of each selection. This seems preferable to turning to the notes at the end of the book for information. It is impossible adequately to review a work, every page of which is filled with extracts from the most suggestive writers of all ages and languages.

A Spiritual Faith. Sermons by John Hamilton Thom. (Longmans.) Dr. James Martineau has supplied an all too brief Memorial Preface to these selected sermons of his deceased friend. It is difficult to say which excites the greater admiration in Dr. Martineau's writings—the subtlety of the thought or the beauty of its expression. Fortunate, indeed, was Mr. Thom in the possession of such a friend. Mr. Thom, the well-known Unitarian minister of Liverpool, was of Scotch descent and Irish birth and training. At first his departure from the orthodox Confession of Faith went no further than Arianism. His ministry in Renshaw-street, Liverpool, began in 1831, and it was here that the young Ulster Presbyterian came under the influence of Dr. Channing. "Mr. Thom could the more easily let go the Arian conception of a superhuman Christ as his deepening religious consciousness assured him of the immediate living intercommunion between the human spirit and the Divine." To a devout Unitarian "God is His own revealer." The extraordinary humility of Dr. Martineau is manifest in all he writes. We have an instance here when, speaking of the part he took in managing the Prospective Review, he lays claim to "bringing to it only a homely contribution of common sense and some knowledge of affairs." These sermons are "no mere products of literary industry, producible at will; but like the true prophet's word, which can be spoken only when 'the Spirit of the Lord is upon him.'" After these words of Dr. Martineau, any commendation by the writer of this notice is quite superfluous: "He who ministers here is no priest of any altar made with hands, but a prophet of Him who is a Spirit and communes with those whose worship is in spirit and in truth. And if they are yet but a scattered host, it will not be always so. It needs but voices of the Spirit, like that which bears its witness here, to wake response from every side, and wider and wider spread the spiritual family of God."

NOTES AND NEWS.

MR. JOHN MURRAY will publish, before the end of the present month, The Great Rift Valley, by Mr. J. W. Gregory, of the Natural History Museum, describing his journey to Baringo and Mount Kenya in British East Africa, with special reference to the geography, geology, native races, fauna, and flora of the region, and remarks upon its future prospects.

MESSRS. SMITH, ELDER & Co. will publish during May a new work on The Labour Problem, by Mr. Geoffrey Drage, M.P.

MR. CLAUDE MONTEFIORE is preparing for publication The Bible for Home Reading, with comments and reflections for the use of Jewish parents and children. The first part, down to the second visit of Nehemiah to Jerusalem, will be issued shortly by Messrs. Macmillan & Co.

MESSRS. CASSELL & Co. will publish this week A Diary of the Home Rule Parliament, 1892-1895, by Mr. H. W. Lucy, author of "The Gladstone Parliament" and "The Salisbury Parliament."

MESSRS. G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS, of New York and London, will publish immediately a continuation of Mr. George Haven Putnam's work on Authors and their Public in Ancient Times. This continuation will be in two volumes, one of which deals with the production of MSS. in monasteries and the incunabula of printing, while the other covers the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries.

MR. FISHER UNWIN is about to add to his "Story of the Nations" series a volume on Bohemia, by Mr. C. E. Maurice, author of "The Revolutionary Movement of 1848-9 in Italy, Australia, Hungary, and Germany." This volume would have been published last autumn, but the original draft of the MS. was destroyed in the fire last year at Messrs. Unwin Bros. Fortunately, a second draft was in existence.

MR. GEORGE ALLEN, of Ruskin House, will shortly publish a Guide to the Dolomites, by the Rev. Dr. Alexander Robertson, of Venice, illustrated with forty full-page plates, a frontispiece by Mr. William Logsdail, and a map.

MESSRS. SWAN SONNENSCHN & Co. will shortly add to their "Social Science" Series a book on The Progress and Prospects of Political Economy, by Prof. J. K. Ingram, of Trinity College, Dublin.

MESSRS. ARCHIBALD CONSTABLE & Co. have nearly ready a reprint of Boswell's Life of Johnson, in six foolscap octavo volumes, with an introduction and some notes by Mr. Augustine Birrell.

MESSRS. DIGBY, LONG & Co. will publish immediately Boer and Uitlander, by Mr. William F. Regan, who attempts to present the recent incidents in the Transvaal from the point of view of the Boers. The book will be illustrated with portraits and a map.

A NEW volume of Messrs. Hutchinson & Co.'s "Zeit-Geist" Library will be published immediately, under the title of Out of Bounds, being the adventures of an unadventurous young man. It is written by Mr. A. Garry, and has a frontispiece in colours by Mr. Warwick Goble.

MR. JOHN MACQUEEN will publish early next week a last century romance by a new writer, Mr. Paul Creswick, entitled At the Sign of the Cross Keys. Mr. Macqueen will also have ready the following week a selection from the poems of the late Prof. Blackie, edited, with an appreciation, by his nephew, Dr. Stodart Walker.

MR. FISHER UNWIN announces a translation of M. Gaston Boissier's book on The Country of Horace and Virgil. The translator is Mr. D. Havelock Wilson, who (we trust) will have profited by the comments made on his version of the same author's Rome and Pompeii.

IN anticipation of the probable restoration of the cloisters and chapter-house, Mr. J. M. Cowper has decided to send his memorial inscriptions of Canterbury Cathedral to press immediately. He hopes to have them, with the biographical notices, printed before the work of restoration is commenced.

THE firm of Baron Tauchnitz has just added Miss Elsa D'Esterre Keeling's last novel, Old Maids and Young, to their "Collection of British Authors."

A new quarterly journal, under the title of Cheshire Notes and Queries, devoted to the antiquities, family history, parochial records, folk-lore, local customs, and traditions of the county whose name it bears, will be issued during the present month by Mr. Elliot Stook.

DR. KARL BLIND will have an article in this month's North American Review on England and the South African Republic, containing personal reminiscences of President Krüger, General Smit, and Minister Du Toit. He shows by documentary evidence the abolition of the suzerainty in 1884, and appeals to this country to respect the independence of the Transvaal commonwealth in the same way as the independence of Switzerland is respected by continental monarchies.

WE hear that it is proposed to form a new publishing company, by amalgamating the two firms of J. Masters & Co., of New Bond-street, and John Hodges, of Bedford-street. The former was founded, in Aldersgate-street, so long ago as 1827; one of the present partners can boast of sixty years' experience. The other, which was first started, at Frome, in 1854, is best known by its enterprise in bringing out the "Catholic Standard Library," which now numbers twenty volumes. The new company will continue the special class of business associated with the names of the two existing firms.

WE learn that, in accordance with a family arrangement, Mr. Theodore Watts has added to his surname that of his mother, and will in future sign himself Theodore Watts Dunton.

ON Wednesday next Messrs. Sotheby will begin the sale of the library of Lieut.-Col. J. Tobin Bush, of Bristol, which, though not large, is of a choice character. It comprises a series of Aldine and Elzevir editions of the classics, productions of the fifteenth-century press, and also books illustrated by Rowlandson, Cruikshank, and Leech. We may specially mention a copy of Villon, printed on vellum, that had belonged to Charles Nodier.

UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS.

FULL term begins next week at both Oxford and Cambridge—but, as usual, at Cambridge at the beginning of the week, and at Oxford at the end.

A CONFERENCE on secondary education will be held on Monday and Tuesday next in the Senate House at Cambridge, attended by representatives of the universities of Oxford, Durham, London, Victoria, and Wales, as well as from a large number of educational bodies. The following is the first resolution, to be proposed by the Rev. Dr. Magrath (vice-chancellor of Oxford), and seconded by Dr. J. G. Fitch:

"That this conference, before proceeding to the consideration of matters of detail, desires to express its general approval of the scheme set forth in the Report of the Royal Commission on Secondary Education, and would welcome the passing of legislative measures in general accordance with the recommendations therein contained."

THE University of Glasgow has this week conferred the following honorary degrees: that of D.D., upon M. F. A. Lichtenberger (dean of the faculty of Protestant theology in the University of Paris); and that of LL.D., upon Mr. Walter de Gray Birch (of the MS. department in the British Museum), Mr. W. T. Thiselton Dyer (director of the Royal Botanical Gardens at Kew), Prof. Andrew Gray of Bangor, and Prof. F. W. Maitland of Cambridge.

THE University of Edinburgh has received a grant of £20,000 from the trustees of the late Earl of Moray, as a fund to be used for the promotion of original research.

DR. J. PERRY has been appointed to the chair of mechanics and mathematics at the Royal College of Science, vacant by the resignation of Prof. T. Goodeve.

THE Drapers Company have voted £50 to Mr. Percy Williams, who was placed first in honours at the recent examination for B.Sc. at London University, towards defraying his expenses of post-graduate study at University College.

MR. TALFOURD W. ELY will deliver a course of six lectures on "Greek Art of the Fourth Century," at the Ladies' Department of King's College (Kensington-square), on Wednesdays, at 3 p.m., beginning on April 29. The lectures will be illustrated with photographs, casts, electrotypes, &c.; and visits will also be paid to the sculpture galleries of the British Museum, and to the collection of casts from the antique at South Kensington.

IN connexion with the London University Extension Society, Mr. J. W. Headlam will deliver a course of five lectures on "Goethe's Faust" at Chelsea, on Tuesdays at 5.15 p.m., beginning on April 21.

MR. F. C. CONYBEARE began on Friday of this week a course of five lectures on "Demonology," at University Hall, Gordon-square.

WE quote the following from the Paris correspondent of the Times:

"The inaugural meeting of the new Franco-Scottish Society is to be held in Paris from April 16 to 18 at the Sorbonne. The objects of the society are to promote more intimate relations between the universities of France and Scotland, and to stimulate research concerning the 'ancient alliance' between the two countries. A part of the scheme is to purchase the old Scots College here from its present owners, the Scottish Catholic Bishops, and to restore it to its old uses in some form consistent with modern ideas. At present it is let as a private school, and the proceeds are applied to educating young Scotchmen at St. Sulpice for the Catholic priesthood. It need hardly be said that the movement is purely academic and scientific, and free from political, religious, or anti-religious bias of any kind. Delegates will attend on behalf of the Scottish Universities, and on the French side the Paris University and Upper Schools will be represented by their chief authorities. The business part of the programme will be dealt with in the mornings, the afternoons being reserved for discussions on the place of Greek and the political sciences in university education. M. Jules Simon is to preside both at the sittings and at the banquet to be given to the Scottish guests by their French colleagues on Saturday."

ORIGINAL VERSE.

RUNNERS FROM MARATHON.

(490 B.C. and April 10, 1896, A.D.)

"A RUNNER comes from Marathon—look out—
He bringeth freedom—slavery or death.
Speak—but one word—thou craven, scant of breath!"

"Vict'ry"—he gasps in dying—"foe-in-rout."

On the o'erarching hills, and round about,
The crowded marble Stadion beneath,
All wait with straining eyes and heads awreath
The runner of to-day. "He comes," they shout,
"He comes, and we rejoice. A Greek hath won."
While generous gladness raineth storms of flowers,
As royal hands take Hellas' peasant son,
To lead him forth, one the acclaim that showers
From all alike; each grateful to those Powers
That gave to Greeks—the race from Marathon.

ELIZABETH MAYHEW EDMONDS.

MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS.

IN the Boletín de la Real Academia de la Historia for March, Maria Fabié prints an extract from the History of Saxony of Habler, giving an account of the rise and fall of the commercial house of Conrad Rott at Lisbon. He was a rival of the Fuggers, and had obtained a monopoly of spices and precious stones in Portugal. Rodriguez Villa writes on Francisco de Rojas, the ambassador of Ferdinand the Catholic. The materials are taken from the archives of the Duchess of Alba and those of the ex-Empress of the French. The article is full of interest. Rojas was proxy in the marriages between Philip and Juana de Loca and between Prince Juan and Margareta. Some fault of etiquette in the after-marriage ceremony so offended the latter that she never forgave it. Incidentally we have Ferdinand's opinion of Alexander VI., at a time when the Pope was loading him with favours: "He lets the affairs of the Roman Church, and many of those of the Church Universal, go to ruin and disorder"; and "there remains for him in this life only great infamy, and it is to be believed great punishment in the next, unless Our Lord treats him with the greatest mercy." A further instalment of Inscriptions Basques is given by Mr. Dodgson. Padre Fita fixes critically the date and circumstances of the Council of Tarragona in 1318. The "Noticias" report several new Roman inscriptions and archaeological works published in Portugal.

CORRESPONDENCE.

PROFESSOR KNIGHT AND HIS REVISERS.

Dublin: April 11, 1896.

IN the Preface to Messrs. Macmillan's re-issue (Eversley Series) of Prof. Knight's edition of Wordsworth, I observe that the editor states that "the whole of what was included in the former edition [published by Mr. Paterson, of Edinburgh] has been revised, corrected, and re-adjusted in this one. Errata are corrected: the changes of text, introduced by Wordsworth into the successive editions of his poems, have all been revised: while the chronological order of the poems has, in several instances, been changed in the light of fresh evidence."

In a note, Prof. Knight adds:

"In addition to my own detection of errors in the text and notes [of the first edition], I acknowledge special obligation to the late Vice-Chancellor of the Victoria University, Principal Greenwood, who went over every volume with laborious care, and sent me the result. To the late Mr. J. Dykes Campbell, to Mr. J. R. Tait, to the Rev. Thomas Hutchinson of Kimbolton, and to many others I am similarly indebted."

And, again, at the close of the Preface he expresses his obligation to "Mr. W. B. Kinghorn, for his valuable assistance in the revision of proof-sheets." Beyond these (so far as I have been able to find) no further acknowledgment of aid received in the task of revision appears in the Preface or elsewhere in these volumes. Now, seeing that the present fairly accurate condition of the textual notes in volumes i. and ii. is due in the main to the gratuitous labour expended by myself upon Prof. Knight's proof-sheets, this discovery, it will readily be believed, comes upon me as a distinctly unpleasant surprise. Such treatment indeed, I did not expect, for I never had to do with a Professor of Moral Philosophy before.

In December, 1894, I had a letter from Prof. Knight in which, after a flattering reference to my note on Wordsworth in the current Fortnightly, he told me of the forthcoming re-issue of his work, of which he asked me to read the proof-sheets; adding that Mr. J. Dykes Campbell had already promised to look them over. Well pleased to be associated with that genial and accomplished scholar, and willing to lend a hand, however feeble, in the cause of Wordsworth's poetry, I consented; and soon after received vol. ii., and, subsequently, the bulk (not the Preface) of vol. i., from the printer—that is to say, not the slip proofs, but the sewn sheets. These I revised with the utmost care, entering the needful corrections, &c., on the margin, for the sake of clearness, in red ink. The condition of the proofs when they reached me showed that someone—whether Prof. Knight or another I know not—had made an abortive and half-hearted attempt to correct, with the aid of the excellent "Aldine" notes, the myriad errors of the Edinburgh edition; but many of these—verbal and numeral—still awaited correction at my hand. I did not venture to suggest any important changes in the editor's critical or illustrative notes (indeed, in the advanced state of the sheets, any large modification of these was out of the question), but confined myself, with one or two trifling exceptions, to the revision of the text and textual notes, feeling sure that it was in these directions that my aid was worst needed and most desired. Yet when the sheets left my hands they positively looked as though they were in the eruptive stage of scarlet fever, so frequent had been the calls for the reviser's pen. On receipt of the corrected sheets, Prof. Knight wrote to me as follows (February 14, 1895):

"Words fall me to thank you adequately for the great services you have rendered to me, and to this new edition of Wordsworth. It is more than kind. I wish I could make you some adequate return; all I can at present do is to thank you de profundis."

Perhaps it is this despair of making me some adequate return that has so crushed and, as it were, paralysed Prof. Knight's energies as to disable him from making what was, after all, the only return that the exigencies of the case demanded, namely, the very trifling courtesy of a public acknowledgment.

Shortly after this I sent Prof. Knight a table drawn up so as to exhibit the poet's many successive alterations in the text of "Simon Lee." (This table I now find printed on page 336 of vol. i., though without any indication of the source whence the editor obtained it.) In reply, Prof. Knight again refers to "the assistance so generously rendered" by me, "and intrinsically so very valuable" [the italics are his]; and announces that the printer will shortly send me proofs of vol. iii. in slip form. From that time—March, 1895—to this neither proof nor any word of explanation has reached me from printer or professor. Those who know anything of Prof. Knight's earlier edition of Wordsworth will not need to be told that, of the errors in the textual notes, about four-fifths are contained in vols. i. and ii. These volumes once corrected, the back, so to speak, of the recension is broken. When I had accomplished for him the revision of some four-fifths of his errors, I take it Prof. Knight conceived that he and his friends would probably find themselves together capable of dealing with the remainder, and that the humble sponge, having under deft squeezing yielded up all that was needed, might now be put away out of sight. Hence, no doubt, this conspiracy of silence on the parts of the Moral Philosopher and his printer.

I do not for a moment question the amount or value of the aid which the editor assures us he has obtained from Prof. Greenwood, Mr. Tutin, the Rev. Mr. Hutchinson of Kimbolton, and the rest. I would only point out—and this is a matter which must be clearly understood—that, even with the combined assistance of these gentlemen, the editor nevertheless somehow failed, without further help, to bring his proof-sheets up to the requisite pitch of accuracy. Else, how—if the corrections supplied by the persons whom he enumerates, together with his "own detection of errors" in the earlier edition, indeed formed the sole, or even the principal, means employed by the editor in the final detestation of these volumes—how did it happen that the sewn proof-sheets reached me in so faulty and imperfect a condition? On this point, I repeat, let there be no ambiguity. When, something more than a year ago, Prof. Knight's proof-sheets came into my hands, they beyond all question fell—while showing in several respects a marked improvement on the execrable blundering of the former edition—very far short indeed of the standard of correctness which, at this time of day, we have a right to demand in a critical edition of Wordsworth. By a fortunate accident I have in my possession a duplicate set of the sheets of vol. ii., of which, should the truth of my assertion be called in question, I shall hold myself at liberty to afford an opportunity for inspection to any student interested in the matter. When the sheets were returned to Prof. Knight, they bore upon them, in the shape of my marginal notes, the result of many days' arduous and irksome labour—the task of collating the Poems of 1793 in their several editions proved, I remember, especially intricate and fatiguing—and were as near as need be to absolute correctness. But I am not able to say, without a detailed examination of the notes to each poem, whether all my MS. alterations have been adopted in these published volumes or not; for since I parted with the sheets in February, 1895, I have never been favoured with the sight of an emended proof!

In revising I confined myself, as I have said, to text and textual notes. To this rule there were, however, a few exceptions, one of which I shall now particularise, if but to show to what ingenious flights Prof. Knight, when soaring on untrammelled wing, can rise. In going through vol. ii., I found a note by the editor on the lines, "The Cock is Crowing," &c., and ventured to counsel its removal. My suggestion was followed. The note ran as follows:

"The Fenwick note tells us that this poem was a favourite with Joanna Baillie. It might be a companion to her own—

The chough and the crow
To roost must be gone."

[The italics are mine.]

How admirably the poetess' rhythm and measure are here improved upon! And how profound, how penetrative must be the critical sagacity that can trace a resemblance between the elaborate simplicity of her delightful "Outlaws' Song," and the halting straggle of Wordsworth's least fortunate improvisation.

After all, it does not seriously concern either myself or my interests that my name should not appear among those to whom acknowledgment of aid is given in Prof. Knight's preface; and indeed it is a fortunate circumstance, and one over which I freely and unreservedly rejoice, that the textual notes at least of this, which for many reasons seems likely to be during years to come the standard edition of the poet, are, so far as vols. i. and ii. extend, both accurate and complete. But the fact of my personal indifference does not lessen Prof. Knight's culpability in this matter; and I have felt it to be my duty to bring his proceedings coram populo, and publicly to record my earnest protest thereagainst.

THOMAS HUTCHINSON.

THE "PRENZIE" ANGELO.

Oxford: April 6, 1896.

In the ACADEMY for April 4 Prof. Skeat suggests that the word prenzie in Shakspeare's "Measure for Measure" (III. i. vv. 94 and 97) is a misprint for preuzie, and that this is a word formed by adding the suffix -y to the "adjective or substantive" preus, which is an "English spelling of the French preux," and is found in Dan Michel's "Ayenbite of Inwit." The word preuzie, he goes on to say, was either existent in English or coined by Shakspeare himself.

First as to an English preus. There is as yet no evidence for it. In fact, the passage cited by Prof. Skeat from the "Ayenbite" makes it likely that Dan Michel did not know such a word. For his work, which is a literal rendering of Frère Loren's "Somme de Vices et de Vertus," shows very conclusively that the translator's knowledge of Old French was limited; and one of his peculiarities (see R. W. Evers's Beiträge zur Erklärung und Textkritik von Michel's "Ayenbite of Inwit," Erlangen, 1887, p. 5) is that

"he takes French words bodily into his text, or leaves a gap, putting the French word in the margin marked with a cross, when the proper translation does not immediately occur to him."

Preus and proux ("Ayenbite," p. 83) are instances of this, and are thus marked with a cross in the MS. (Evers, p. 87, notes 3 and 7).

So much for the adjective. There is a corresponding substantive in English, namely, N.E. "prowess," which Dan Michel uses a few lines above, in the passage quoted by Prof. Skeat; but it scarcely need be said that preuzie could not have been formed from this word.

But granting that an adjective preus did exist in English, it would be necessary to explain the voicing of the -s in a derivative adjective formed by the addition of the suffix -y. And by Shakspeare's time the final -s of the French adjective was heard only when the following word began with a vowel, so that any English adjective made from it would probably have no s at all. As to the meaning of the French word preus, it has never had the signification "prudish," which was a late development of the feminine form, prude, only.

The only possible connexion between this hypothetical preuzie and French preux would be through the fact that Shakspeare had coined the word out of the French phrase Les neuf preuses, intending to stigmatise Angelo as the "like-one-of-the-nine-female-worthies Angelo." But what would "in preuzie guards" mean?

MARK LIDDELL.

BERBER NAMES.

Jerusalem: March 24, 1896.

In the review of Mr. Harris's book on Taflelt [Taflelt] in the ACADEMY of March 7, Prof. Keane discusses the origin of this name; but I would like to add a suggestion. Some years ago, when investigating the topography of the Moorish Empire, I raised the question as to the prevalence of initial and final t in the Berber names, in the inquiry column of the Times of Morocco, then in my charge. Many other instances might be quoted, but to take two of the better known—Ta-Filet-t and Ta-Rudán-t—as specimens, of which the corresponding adjectives are Fileli and Rudáni—man or thing of Taflelt or Tarudant—it is evident that the meaning of the names is "the place of the Fileli and Rudáni," or "the-Fileli-Place," and "The Rudáni-Place." The same is the case with the name by which the Berbers know their tongue, Ta-Mazigh-t, "the Noble Thing," or language, calling themselves Amazgh (pl. I'mazighen), or Noble. The initial Ta is here plainly equivalent to an article, the final t being but the feminine suffix to agree with the "place" or "thing" implied. In the dialect of Barber spoken in the Rét province, between Centa and Algeria, the only one which I have attempted to learn, there is unquestionably an article tha, as may be seen from the Gospels issued in that tongue,* the only available literature, though this article appears to be unknown in Algeria.† It is possible that other names in Morocco beginning with T—as Tangier and Tetuan—whatever fanciful derivations are handed down from writer to writer, owe their form to this article before a masculine noun.

* Translated recently by William Mackintosh (British and Foreign Bible Society).

† According to Prof. René Basot's Grammar, which was brought forward by the Marquis of Bute, after I had read a paper on the Berbers at the Cardiff British Association meeting (published by the Anthropological Society), to question my statement about this article, but which does not deal with the Morocco dialects. Whence, then, did one section only get an article?

I should like at the same time to ask for further light on the connexion and influence of the Phœnicians on the Berber language, or at least upon its nomenclature on the coast. Take, for instance, the original name of Cadiz, Agadir (or Aghadir), whence Gadeira and Gades. This word, in Southern Morocco, Berber, or Susi, only means an entrenched camp or other strong place; and though chiefly known on maps in connexion with the port south of Mogador, called by the Spaniards Santa Cruz, it is common throughout that province, but always in conjunction with the actual name of the locality. This is the case with the port referred to, the real name of which I am sorry not to have at hand at this distance, and it is only spoken of as "The Agadir" par excellence. The inscription on a Phœnician coin found at Cadiz is M'BAALI AGADIR; may it not be that it was the Agadir of Baal? It strikes me that clues may yet be found to Phœnician problems among the Berbers, along whose coasts the citizens of Tyre had colonies.

J. E. BUDGETT MEAKIN.

THE BASQUES.

Sare: April 12, 1896.

Mr. T. L. Phipson, Ph.D., in an article on "The Basques: their Country and Origin," in the Gentleman's Magazine for April, has made the astounding discovery that the Basque language is "really a hideous mixture of Spanish patois (Spanish more or less adulterated with French) and Moorish or Arabic," and that this Basque patois was developed during the Moorish occupation of Spain "from 756 to 1492." Dr. Phipson has studied the vocabulary only, and knows not a word of the grammar. He is evidently unaware that this theory was put forth by M. Pierquin de Gembloux in his Histoire Littéraire Philologique, et Bibliographique des Patois (Paris: Techener, 1841), second edition ("Suivie de la Bibliographie Générale des Phonopismes Basques" (Paris: Aubrey, 1858), and was, so to say, laughed out of court nearly half a century ago. The fact that from 70 to 80 per cent. of the actual Basque vocabulary is borrowed from one or other of the races with whom they have been in contact is patent to every philologist. The odd thing is how Mr. Phipson can have imagined that philologists like W. von Humboldt, Prince L. L. Bonaparte, Prof. Vinson, Schuchardt, Van Eys (to name no others), could have overlooked so evident a fact. It is almost like a writer on the origin of the horse discovering that it is a quadruped.

WENTWORTH WEBSTER.

BASQUE TOMBSTONE DECORATION.

Hôtel Central, Biarritz: April 12, 1896.

A chapter of decorative art might well be dedicated to the tombstones of the French Basques. So far as books go, it appears that no origin for anything that is distinctive on them, when compared with those of their neighbours, has been indicated. Last Tuesday, I had the pleasure of finding in the Museum at Burgos three Roman tombstones from the ruined town of Clunia, in Castile. I at once mentioned to Mr. Henry Rose, an English architect, and Prof. Pierre Paris, of the University of Bordeaux, who were my companions, that the decoration of their tops, above the inscriptions, was exactly like that to be seen on many a Basque tombstone in the Labourd. The professor remarked that the design looked almost like a prophecy of the tracery of a Gothic rose-window, and was kind enough to photograph the three stones in order to compare them with their modern Heuskaldunik rivals.

E. S. DODGSON.

APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK.

SUNDAY, April 19, 7 p.m. Ethical: "The Ethics of Business Life and National Relations," by Mr. Augustine Birrell.
MONDAY, April 20, 4.30 p.m. Victoria Institute: a Paper by Dr. J. Cleland.
8 p.m. Society of Arts: Cantor Lecture, "Precious Stones," II., by Prof. Henry A. Miers.
8 p.m. Royal Institute of British Architects.
TUESDAY, April 21, 3 p.m. Royal Institution: "Child-Study and Education," II., by Prof. James Sully.
5 p.m. Statistical: "Notes on the History of Pauperism in England and Wales from 1850, treated by the Method of Frequency-Curves, with an Introduction on the Method," by Prof. G. Udny Yule.
8 p.m. Civil Engineers: Discussion, "The Thirmer Works for the Water-Supply of Manchester," and "The Vyrnwy Works for the Water-Supply of Liverpool."
8 p.m. Toynbee Library Readers: "De Quincey," by Mr. A. Loewenstein.
8.30 p.m. Zoological: "A Collection of Mammals from Ecuador," by Mr. W. E. de Winton; "The Anatomy of a Grebe (Acromyrmex major), with Remarks upon the Classification of some of the Schizognathous Birds," by Mr. F. E. Beddard; "The Butterflies of St. Vincent, Grenada, and Adjoining Islands," by Messrs. F. D. Godman and O. Salvin.
WEDNESDAY, April 22, 8 p.m. Society of Arts: "The Perfected Photochromoscope and its Colour Photographs," by Mr. F. E. Ives.
THURSDAY, April 23, 3 p.m. Antiquaries: Anniversary Meeting.
3 p.m. Royal Institution: "Recent Chemical Progress," II., by Prof. Dewar.
8 p.m. Chemical: "The Temperature of Certain Flames," by Prof. W. N. Hartley; "Halogen Additive Products of Substituted Thiocinnamides," by Dr. Augustus E. Dixon; "The Constitution of Cereal Celluloses," by Messrs. C. F. Cross, E. J. Bevan, and Claud Smith; "An Apparatus for the Detection of Boric Acid," by Mr. W. M. Doherty; "Etheral Salts of optically active Malic and Lactic Acids," by Prof. Purdie and Dr. S. Williamson.
8 p.m. Mathematical: "An Algebraical Operation considered by Cayley," and "Symmetrical Partitions in Three Dimensions," by the President; "The Division of the Lemniscate," by Prof. G. B. Matthews; "The Isomorphism of a Group with Itself," by Prof. W. Burnside; "The Stability of a Frictionless Liquid-Theory of Critical Planes," by Mr. A. B. Bassett.
8.30 p.m. Society of Arts: "The Deserted City of Vijayanagar," by Capt. Charles Rolleston.
FRIDAY, April 24, 5 p.m. Physical: "Symbolism in Thermodynamics," by Mr. R. A. Lehfeldt; "Adjustment of the Velox Bridge," by Mr. R. Appleyard; "The Effect of Waveform on the Alternate Current Arc," by Mr. J. Frith.
9 p.m. Royal Institution: "The Circulation of Organic Matter," by Prof. G. V. Poore.
SATURDAY, April 25, 3 p.m. Royal Institution: "The Vault of the Sixtine Chapel," II., by Prof. W. B. Richmond.
3.45 p.m. Botanic: General Fortnightly Meeting.

SCIENCE.

THE SERMONS OF BUDDHA.

Die Reden Gotamo Buddho's. Von Karl Eugen Neumann. Erste Lieferung. (Leipzig: Friedrich.)

This is the first instalment of what should prove to be a most important undertaking. It is nothing less than a literal translation of the sermons and sayings of Sâkja Muni, Gautama, the Budd'a, whom the translator, in his zeal for Pâli forms, prefers to call Gotamo Buddho. The work is to consist of five parts, and will comprise the whole of the middle collection of the Pâli canon known as the Mag'gimanikâja.

According to Goethe, translation is of three kinds—prosaic, parodistic, and identical; but only the third, which approximates to an interlinear version, is altogether satisfactory. Dr. Neumann adopts this view, and brings to his task not only the two requisites which he himself considers indispensable—namely, a knowledge of, and repeated occupation with, the best Sanskrit texts, and a practised study of the Pâli documents extending over years—but also, from long residence in Ceylon and personal daily contact with the heads of the Noble Order of the Yellow Robe, an intimate acquaintance with the life and thought of the Southern followers of the great Ascetic of the North.

Thanks to the labours of the Pâli Text

Society, we shall soon possess, in excellent editions of the text, which hitherto has been scattered on pasohs and palm-leaves, the whole Baudd'a canon, and there will then be a vast field of accessible Oriental thought which the Pâli scholar will do well to open up to Western students. In the Mag'gimanikâja we have a compendium of Buddhism which is valuable alike to the historian, the philologist, and the philosopher; and our author is to be congratulated upon the well-fitting Teutonic dress in which he has begun to present it to the cultured European public. It consists of 162 discourses which, as regards the length of the address, hold the mean between the longer dissertations of the Dig'anikâja and the numerous shorter communications, sometimes only single sayings, of the Kudd'akanikâja. These, together with the Nikâjas called Anguttara and Samjutta, constitute the Suttapitakam or canon of analects, as distinct from the Vinajapitakam, that of conduct. To the Dvīpitakam, the twofold canon, was afterwards added the Ab'id'ammāpitakam, the scholastic or philosophical canon, and so the Three Baskets or Baudd'a Biblia Sacra were formed. At the time of Gautama's death, about 480 B.C., it is most likely that the only collection known was the Suttapitakam, and that in the course of time, as Buddhism spread and developed, it was found necessary to add the other two. The word pitakam, "basket," as applied to the whole thought of doctrine is first found in the third century after Gautama, about 200 years after the fixing of his sayings on a stūpa of As'oka at Barahut. And for the first time in a literary form we meet with Pitakattajam in the Milindapanho, afterwards in the Dipavamsa and Mahāvamsa.

The significance of these authentic documents of pure Buddhism becomes manifest step by step. The bands of 'Sravakas and Upāsakas increase. We see Brahmins and householders, nobles and citizens, the learned and the ignorant, the rich and the poor, joining the ever-widening circles of discipleship. We pass from speech to speech, and pick up the red thread which runs through them all as we grow familiar with the sharply defined individuality of the master. Keen wit, apt illustration, noble and beautiful utterance are here; the only drawback being what seems to Western readers an unnecessary amount of repetition.

Let us hope that Dr. Neumann may be able to finish the work which he has so well begun.

HERBERT BAYNES.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE RESTORED PRONUNCIATION OF GREEK.

Liverpool: March 21, 1896.

The last group with which I have to deal are the three signs, o, eu, ou. These are associated historically with six sounds: namely, the four types which are created by making o long or short, and open or close, respectively; the long u (= Fr. ou or Eng. oo); and the diphthong ou, which is compounded of o and this u. We have good examples of open o, both long and short, in Eng. "caught," "cot"; and a less good example of long close o in Eng. "coat," "cote." Its defect is that it generally contracts to a u, or even a w, towards the end, thus forming an incipient diphthong ( $\delta + u$ ) or ( $\delta + w$ ). A better example of close o is French au, which can be made either long or short; but the short value is foreign to English, except in a certain Scotch pronunciation of  $\delta$ . I name these things particularly, because Profs. Conway and Arnold do not seem to use the terms open o and close o in their accepted meanings—the meanings which all the authorities intend to convey when they use those terms. To avoid confusion, I will adopt the signs  $\delta$  and aw to represent the long close o and the long open o respectively, and will signify the quality of the short  $\delta$  by the addition of an adjective. The pronunciations prescribed by the professors are  $\omega = aw$ ;  $o =$  close  $\delta$ ;  $ov = u$ . But the pronunciations of  $\delta$  and  $\omega$  are illustrated by key-words, which are far from harmonising with these instructions. The English examples of close  $\delta$  are the words "cannot," "consist," the  $\delta$  of which is no close  $\delta$  at all, but an ordinary English open  $\delta$ , somewhat spoiled and obscured in the pronunciation by the adjacent strong syllable. The key-word given for aw ( $= \omega$ ) is Eng. "oar" or "ore"; and the authors are elsewhere careful to say that it is the normal pronunciation of these words which they desire to indicate. Now we know that at Putney an oar is an aw, and is wielded by an *aw*man, but this is not normal English outside the Thames valley and some neighbouring places. A large majority of the English-speaking world repudiates this long open o, and pronounces both "oar" and "ore" with a long close o. I do not deny a certain difference between this long close o and that of "coat": the former o tends to terminate in a more openly, the latter in a more closely, articulated vowel than itself. But the main body of the sound is in both cases a close o. I therefore find, in the case both of o and  $\omega$ , a direct contradiction between the precepts of the professors and their examples. I will indicate later which I prefer to follow.

* See Rawlinson's Phœnicia ("Story of Nations"), pp. 290 and 67, 68.

I will indicate later which I prefer to follow. The case of ou, like that of e, demands historical explanations. The sign e, like ε, had at first no less than five different values, δ, au, open and close δ, and sometimes ou. But the open and close δ never occurred in the same dialect simultaneously, and the diphthong ou was generally represented by ev. The long values δ and au, however, existed side by side in most dialects, and from the early part of the sixth century (Kirchhoff, op. cit.) attempts are made in the inscriptions to indicate this difference. It is the Ionic form for aw which survives to us as ω. This left but one ambiguity: o, like α, ι, υ and contemporary ε, was both long and short (close o). But now a phonetic change, partly like and partly unlike that which levelled ε with long ε, set in. Its full effect was not reached in Attic until about the middle of the fourth century B.C.: it had then levelled the long close δ and the ou diphthong, not under either of the original values, but under that of long close υ—a value which has been retained until the present day. As to the steps of this remarkable change, Brugmann and Blass give discordant explanations; but the latter adduces very strong inscriptional evidence, and his theory also seems to me to be phonetically more feasible. He believes that the δ first became (like our Eng. o) diphthongal, then coalesced with inherited original ou, and that then the second element of the diphthong gradually grew at the expense of the first, until at last it ousted it altogether. Under any hypothesis the history of ev and ε strongly supports my theory that the conditions of phonetic change were specially strong in Athens in 500-300 B.C. In our literary texts the difference between original δ and ou is now concealed under the common spelling ou. As instances of radical ou, supported by early, chiefly Attic, inscriptions, Blass gives οὔ, οὔτος, τούτε, τοιούτος, τασούτος, τηλικούτος, σπουδή, ἀέλουθος, βούς, δούλος, Σούνιον, ξουός, στρουθός, ἄρουρα. But, wherever ou stands for oo, as in λόγος (for λόοος) or δηλούμαι, or stands for a lengthened o, as in λόγους (for λόγοος) (see Brugmann, Grundriss, ii., p. 584, 672), its value in the early fifth century was not ou, like those above, but o. This leads me to remark that, if Profs. Arnold and Conway are going to stick to the fifth century through thick and thin, it will be necessary for them to go through all their texts and mark what words have ou = o, and what words have ou = ou, seeing that the levelled u pronunciation of the fourth century will hardly be admissible.

But the rhetorical niceties of this kind must necessarily give way to tutorial possibilities; and from this point of view I must express a very decided opinion that to teach o with any other value than that of the ordinary short open English o is impracticable in England. As to u, it is equally easy for English students to acquire it as aw or o; but it is distinguished by length in any case. If we say aw, we destroy the convenient equivalence of u and Lat. o in our reformed pronunciation. I do not know whether any academic body outside England uses the aw pronunciation. In these days of international study, international intelligibility is some consideration. As to ov, I rejoice that the professors have adopted the pronunciation z, although they have adopted it for a reason which I think unfounded: namely, that it is Periclean. It is, at any rate, a good classical value; it is also the modern Greek value; it has a very serviceable equivalence with Lat. z, so that we shall no longer pronounce the same identical name as Yon-dass in Latin and Eve-ov-dass in Greek.

Little need be said about the diphthongs with long first element. The students should be taught to add to these long vowels the u subscript or v in the briefest possible form. I have been asked what is to be done with the grave accent. It seems to me that the value of the grave sign is chiefly negative. It directs the speaker not to raise his voice on the given syllable, but to run on in pretty even tone to the next accent. The professors think (ACADEMY, March 14) that I have not rightly interpreted their instructions about accent. They tell the student in their pamphlet (p. 18) that, if he cannot give a purely musical value to the Greek accents, he had better disregard them altogether, and that each word ought to be pronounced as far as possible with an even degree of stress on all syllables. Now this even stress seemed to me to be just equivalent to no stress at all; and the neglect of tonic accent seemed to me to mean either (1) the use of tone at random, and therefore generally wrong, or (2) the abstention from variations of tone altogether. The latter seemed to be the more favourable interpretation; and therefore I spoke of "reading out the masterpieces of human speech in monotone and without accent." But the professors object to this; they say:

"Dr. Lloyd falls into a double confusion—between stress and tone, and between word-accent and sentence-accent. Nothing we have suggested would prevent any passages of a Greek author from being recited with the fullest and most appropriate variation of tone, and of stress also as between different words in a sentence."

Now there is confusion here, no doubt, but to my thinking it is on the other side; for the professors speak as if we had here four independent phenomena to deal with, whereas we have really only two separate physical phenomena, applied to two different linguistic purposes. Our physical resources are lung-force and tone; and we can apply each of them to give distinction either to a syllable in a word or to a word in a sentence. The professors have taken up the notion that we can study and apply these uses separately—i.e., that we can apply either lung-force or heightened tone to whole words, and yet not to any special syllable of each word. So we can, in theory; and also, no doubt, by an effort, in practice. We can even express the result in Greek notation, so far as tone is concerned; and it comes out in the following remarkable form (the circumflex, being a compound tone, is banished ex hypothesi):

Ὁὐ μὴν οὐδ' ἔκεινός γ' ὑμᾶς ἀγώνει δει, ὦ ἄνδρες Ἀθηναῖοι, ὅτι ψηφισμα οὐθένός ἄξιον ἔστιν, εἰαν μὴ πρόσγενήται το ποιεῖν ἐθέλειν τα γε δοξάντα πρόθυμός ὑμᾶς.

Let the reader only recite the accented words each on a high tone, and the unaccented words each on a low one, and he will be hardly charmed with the effect.

I owe apologies to Demosthenes for this profanation of his text; but it shows exactly what the professors' rules result in, and how utterly vain it is to attempt the proper use of tone in the Greek sentence while ignoring its proper use in the Greek word. To introduce the latter is doubtless a difficult business, and it can only be done by steps. I think the first step is to distinguish the Greek accent by slight stress; the student will automatically give it tonic distinction at the same time. The next step will be to see that this tonic distinction is a rise, not a fall, of musical pitch. Whether it is then worth while to make the musical distinction between the acute and the circumflex must be left to the discretion of the teacher. But nothing could be a more decided case of ὕψιστον πρότερον than the attempt to intone our sentences before we know how to intone our words. The one must always influence the other profoundly; and the same is true of the two uses of lung-force or stress.

I have now finished my criticisms, which I admit I have made as trenchant as possible, because this reform is an important one, and it ought to be done at one stroke thoroughly. A course of successive tinkering will only bring the reforming movement into disrepute and disfavour. My advice to students has always been to have nothing whatever to do with any reformed Greek pronunciation, unless backed by some body strong enough to give it initial currency in this country. The time is ripe for discussion, but hardly for action. The right body to deal with it eventually in England seems to be the Headmasters' Conference. In Wales, no doubt the Welsh University is the right body; and if their scheme is open to amendment, so that it may afterwards, as a whole, command English imitation, the new University will have done a signal service to classical learning, but hardly otherwise.

R. J. LLOYD.

SCIENCE NOTES.

THE evening discourse at the Royal Institution next Friday will be delivered by Prof. G. V. Poore, of University College, on "The Circulation of Inorganic Matter."

AT a meeting of the Society of Arts, on Wednesday next, Mr. F. E. Ives will give a lecture on "The Perfected Photochromoscope and its Colour Photographs."

THE council of the Royal College of Surgeons has awarded the Walker prize—for the best work in advancing the knowledge of the pathology and therapeutics of cancer, done within the last five years—to Mr. Harold J. Stiles, of Edinburgh; and the Jacksonian prize to Dr. A. A. Kanthack, of Bartholomew's, for an essay on "Tetanus."

LORD RAYLEIGH has been elected a foreign member of the Copenhagen Academy of Science.

MESSRS. SWAN SONNENSCHEIN & Co. have in the press a little work, which will appear at an early date, under the title of Thoughts on Evolution, by P. G. F. Its leading idea is that, as evolution is the method of the Creator—firstly, in developing man from the lower animals, and secondly, in developing the ideal or perfect man from humanity as it now exists—a study of the first period, which is completed, will throw much light on the second, in which we are now involved.

A CHEAP edition of Home Nursing and How to Help in Cases of Accident, by Mr. Samuel Benton, will be published next week by Messrs. Abbott, Jones & Co.

At the last meeting of the London branch of the British Association for Child-Study, Dr. Colman gave an account of the various classes into which cases of marked mental defect are usually grouped. He referred to the more characteristic signs of mental defect—such as the shape of the head, form of features, &c.—but reminded the members that it was impossible to give any definition of what was mental defect: there was every gradation, from the normal child to the complete idiot. The general mental characteristics of abnormal children were next described. The most noticeable are awkwardness of attitude, and clumsiness in performing any fine movements; irritability of temper, often alternating with impulsive affectionate demonstrations; slight abnormalities in various features and in the general expression of the face, and the blunting of the senses, especially the sense of touch. Special attention was drawn to the frequency with which many defective children from a very early age exhibit fondness for animals. Dr. Colman insisted strongly upon the necessity of care on the part of parents and teachers, so that mental defects should be detected early. Anything wrong with the sense organs, such as abnormality of the eye requiring the use of glasses, or deafness from enlarged tonsils or from growth at the back of the nose, prevent the early education of the mind; and attention to them is generally followed at once by improvement in mental condition. The lecturer pointed out that in cases of pronounced mental weakness much good could be done before children reach an age at which they are received into special institutions by firmness and mild discipline; by seeing that the children are not left alone but are constantly with watchful friends; and by using every means, such as their love of animals and their interest in objects around them, to draw out and improve their defective mental powers.

PHILOLOGY NOTES.

THE April number of the Classical Review (David Nutt) opens with an article by Prof. Lewis Campbell, on "The Place of the Parmenides in the order of the Platonic Dialogues." Beginning with the evidence of diction, he first shows that the Parmenides belongs to the same group as the Phaedrus, Republic, and Theaetetus, written in the middle period of Plato's life. Then, taking up other considerations, he concludes that the Phaedrus is the earliest of these four Dialogues; and that the sceptical pair, the Parmenides and Theaetetus, are a little later than the Republic. Finally, in opposition to the opinion of M. Lutoslawski, he inclines to think that, of the sceptical pair, the Parmenides was composed slightly earlier than the Theaetetus. Mr. J. G. C. Anderson discusses the geographical names contained in Arabic accounts of the campaign of Basil I. against the Paulicians in 872 A.D. Prof. Tucker, of Melbourne, contributes critical notes on the Poetics of Aristotle; while Mr. Herbert Richards concludes his on the Oeconomicus of Xenophon. Mr. E. Poste—in continuation of former papers, and with the help of passages in the Ἀθηναίων Πολιτεία, now restored by the acumen of Prof. Blass—attempts to reproduce the day's service of an Athenian juror, incidentally criticising some of the views proposed by Gilbert. Mr. C. D. Chambers examines part of Prof. Goodwin's view regarding the origin of the construction ὅτι  $\mu\eta$ : especially (1) whether his theory of the direct descent of the Platonic  $\mu\eta$  + subj. from the Homeric  $\mu\eta$  + subj. is supported by facts; and (2) whether the prefixing of ὅτι to such independent clauses would give the required meaning of strong denial or prohibition. Among the reviews—which are lighter than usual—we must be content to notice a very elaborate one of L. Havet's edition of the Fables of Phaedrus, by Prof. Robinson Ellis; Sidney Hartland's "Legend of Perseus," by Mr. F. B. Jevons; and Prof. de Mirmont on Naval Construction in the Argonautica of Apollonius Rhodius, by Mr. R. C. Seaton. Under Archaeology, the blunders in an English translation of Boissier's "Promenades Archéologiques" are severely advertised on.

PROF. EDUARD ZARNCKE has reprinted from the Biographisches Jahrbuch für Altertumswissenschaft the Nachruf he devoted to his father, the distinguished Germanist, Prof. F. Zarncke. He has accomplished a difficult task with great tact and judgment, and has furnished a truthful picture of the activity and learned achievements of his father.

REPORTS OF SOCIETIES.

VIKING CLUB.—(Friday, March 20.)

THE REV. A. SANDISON, president, in the chair.—Mr. P. M. O. Kermode read a paper entitled "Illustrations of the Sagas from Early Monuments in the Isle of Man," in which he related the discovery of scenes from Sigurd Fafnir's Bane, sculptured on three cross slabs in the Isle of Man. The first, discovered by him at Andreas, in the north of the island, ten years ago, was recognised by Prof. G. F. Browne, now Bishop of Stepney, as bearing carvings similar to those at Gök and Ramsundberg, in Sweden, and on church door pillars in Norway. It had been figured and described by Mr. G. F. Black in the Proceedings of the Society of Antiquaries of Scotland, June, 1887, and by Mr. J. Romilly Allen before the British Association in the same year. The other two were found at Jurley in the north and Malew in the south of the island in 1890, and have not been described except in the author's Catalogue of Manx Crosses (2nd edit., 1892). All these pieces set forth the slaying of the dragon Fafnir, and Sigurd roasting and tasting his heart, the steed Grani, and the Talking Birds. The Jurley and Malew pieces showed for the first time Sigurd concealed in the pit. The Andreas piece showed also the figure of Loki bound, and the Malew one a conventional representation of the Otter, the slaying of which, by Loki, was the origin of all the trouble. Other Manx monuments bear figures which might represent Loki seized by the gods. Heimdall, porter of the gods, blowing the Gjallar horn to awaken the gods, and to warn them to prepare for the last great battle; the Hart Eikthyrnir which bites the Yggdrasil Ash, and from whose horns drop dew, the source of all fountains, and other figures. Having quoted extracts from the Sagas bearing on these illustrations, the speaker referred to other instances of Saga subjects on Christian monuments, and concluded with some historical references from the Chronicon Manniae, but, owing to the loss of the inscriptions, found it impossible to identify these monuments with any historical personage. Having exhibited for comparison a number of other Scandinavian crosses from Man, he suggested that all of these (including the Saga pieces), about fourteen in number, had been sculptured by one hand, that of Gaut Björnson, who, in an inscription at Michael, claimed to have carved all the crosses in Man; that they dated between 1075 and 1150; and that, if there were any historical characters less unlikely than others to whom they might have been erected, these might be Godred Sygtrigson and his son Fingall, the last of the earlier dynasty of Manx Scandinavian kings. The lecture was illustrated with full-size diagrams of the three sculptures specially dealt with, and with a series of magic-lantern slides from photographs of other crosses in Man, &c.—Mr. J. Romilly Allen congratulated the society on its good fortune in having induced Mr. Kermode to travel from the Isle of Man to handle the subject of Manx crosses, of which he had such an intimate knowledge, and to show the splendid drawings and photographs he had collected. Since Oumming issued his Runic Remains, many additional stones had been discovered, and also the meaning of ancient symbolism and the origin of the decorative patterns were now much better understood than they were half a century ago. Among other points a new feature had come to light in what Dr. Colley March had styled "the Pagan-Christian overlap." He himself had originally studied ancient symbolism entirely from the Christian point of view, and had doubted if any pagan influence intruded itself; but owing to the study of the Manx crosses he had changed his views on that point. It was the fragment from Kirk Andreas that had first attracted his attention. He had been shown representations of the Sigurd story for the first time on carved wooden doorways of churches in Norway by the present Bishop of Stepney. Upon again studying the Kirk Andreas stone after seeing these a new light broke in upon him, and he recognised subjects from the Volsunga Saga which also appeared in the Norwegian carvings. The Isle of Man was a specially interesting field for study on account of the mixture of styles to be found there, the Celtic-Norse art of the island showing strong resemblances in some respects to that of Scotland, and in others to that of Wales. He hoped one result of this lecture would be to hasten the production of Mr. Kermode's promised work on the Manx crosses.—Mr. A. F. Major, hon. sec., asked the lecturer whether it was not possible that some of the crosses in question might date from heathen times. The cross was not a purely Christian symbol, but was widely known in all Aryan lands, and the sign of Thor's hammer, a form of cross, was in use among the Norsemen. Finding the emblem used by the Celtic dwellers in Man as a memorial of the dead, might not the invaders have adopted it? With regard to the interpretation of the emblems, he thought that members present who had only looked for a few moments at the drawings or lantern slides could not give much assistance to Mr. Kermode, who had given the designs hours of patient study. But with regard to the figure of a man attacked by an eagle, he would remind him that there was a story in the Prose Edda, in which the giant Thlasi, in the form of an eagle, carries off Loki, which might possibly be here represented. Also the scene, which Mr. Kermode thought was merely a hunting scene, had struck him forcibly as representing possibly the incident in the last fight at Ragnarök, described in the Prose Edda, where Vidar rends in twain the wolf Fenrir. Certainly the so-called hunter seemed to have one leg in the beast's mouth, while he grasped his upper jaw in his hands. Vidar is described as setting one foot on Fenrir's lower jaw, while grasping his other jaw he tore and rent him till he died.—Mr. G. M. Atkinson wished to know whether all the crosses shown by Mr. Kermode were by Gaut. The interlacing or vertebral pattern, as the lecturer styled it, appeared also on the magnificent cross at Gosforth in Cumberland, and it had been suggested that it was derived from the interlocking rings of chain-mail.—Mr. F. T. Norris was inclined to dissent from the lecturer's view, that the crosses with purely heathen forms on them, derived from the old mythology, were the work of Christianised Norsemen. The use of such heathen forms appeared to him proof positive that those who had them carved were still believers in the old lore and uninfluenced by the new faith, whatever might be the particular means they might adopt to set forth their belief.—The president agreed with the other speakers, that the cross was not exclusively a Christian symbol, for it was found in all parts of the world, and in pre-Christian times. It was therefore conceivable that pagans might have employed it. With regard to the lecturer's suggestion that the introduction on a monument of scenes from the Volsung legends indicated that the person to whom it was set up claimed to be a descendant of Sigurd, he doubted whether such a deduction could invariably be drawn. Might not a fashion have sprung up of carving such scenes on monuments to the dead in general, even if the descendants of Sigurd set the example? With regard to the introduction of scenes from the heathen mythology on Christian monuments, it must be remembered that the mythology in later times was run, so to speak, into Christian moulds. The Norsemen when they first met with Christianity were quick to recognise its strength; and its influence leavened their beliefs in the form in which they have come down to us.—Dr. J. G. Garson thought there was little doubt that the monuments were not pagan only. The anthropological history of religion shows it to be an invariable rule that, when a new religious cult is adopted by a nation or people, it is grafted on to the older or pre-existing one, of which some portions are retained; and so it doubtless was in the Isle of Man also. Besides this, the crosses shown were all of the later and more complex forms which the symbol took, and on that ground alone they must be assigned to a date later than the re-introduction of Christianity into the island, in the ninth or tenth century. If the lecturer did not already know it, he should like to direct his attention to a monograph on crosses by General Pitt-Rivers, in which the various forms taken by the symbol are traced out.—The lecturer in reply thanked the members for their remarks and criticisms on his paper, but said that nevertheless, as the result of his study, he was most strongly convinced that these monuments were Christian. The purely pagan monuments in the Scandinavian peninsula were of a very different character, and he did not think the heathen Norsemen would have adopted this form, the history and evolution of which were known. The probable date of the crosses was also against the pagan theory, as the Norsemen in general began to accept Christianity from the ninth century onwards, and in Man, surrounded by Christian lands, the conversion doubtless took place earlier than elsewhere. He did not imagine all the crosses whose photographs he had shown were by one hand; but in respect to many of them, and to those three especially which formed the main theme of his paper and of which he had shown full-sized drawings, there were details in the treatment of the decoration which showed that they were by one artist, and he had little hesitation in saying that that artist was Gant. As to the period, the Kirk Andreas cross, which showed peculiarly Scandinavian treatment, was, he thought, the earliest. Generally it might be judged that a purely geometrical pattern was Celtic, a purely dragonesque treatment Scandinavian. The latter was met with on the two cruciform pieces at Braddan, probably the latest of the series; but in this case the limbs of the cross were occupied by a geometrical pattern, which he thought was due to the fact that the artist had followed in this portion of his work the Celtic model, confining his original work to the shaft. The date of the Andreas piece, he thought, was about 1080, and the date of all these crosses between that and 1150. He thought Mr. Major's suggestion for the identification of two of the crosses, which he had not traced, very probable; and, before he had done with the subject, he would again carefully consider all the sculptured figures, and might find yet more having reference to the old Norse legends and myths.

ARCHAEOLOGICAL INSTITUTE.—(Wednesday, April 1.)

E. GREEN, Esq., hon. director, in the chair.—Mrs. A. Kerr exhibited a model of an Etruscan tomb found near Orvieto; and Mr. Henry Wilson exhibited sketches of churches round Cheltenham.—Mr. H. St. John Hope read a paper on "The Monastic Buildings of the Benedictine Abbey of St. Peter at Gloucester," describing the buildings and contrasting the arrangements with those at Canterbury and other Benedictine establishments. The close similarity with those at Canterbury was very marked. By the aid of the Ordnance Survey and other plans, Mr. Hope was able to trace the limits of the ancient monastery.

FINE ART.

In the National Gallery. By Cosmo Monkhouse. (Innes.)

THIS book is delightful, not alone for its felicity of phrase, but because the author has obviously enjoyed writing it, and manages to convey to the reader no small share of his enjoyment. It is valuable, because it treats a subject dear to so many—the vast and absorbing subject of Italian art—not only with knowledge and enthusiasm, but with singular moderation and restraint. It is addressed neither to "the ignorant stranger" nor to "the connoisseur," but to the man who, having made no special study of art, when he worships, worships ignorantly. For him, Mr. Monkhouse has sought—

"to provide a clue to the National collection, teaching him how to take an intelligent interest in the pictures, to put himself in sympathy with the painters and their subjects, and to obtain, at the same time, a general grasp of the growth of Italian art."

Mr. Monkhouse, however, will surely obtain acceptance from a far wider public. His fellow-students, at any rate, will read him gladly, seeking, and not in vain, to find "doubt cleared and faith confirmed," and not the less because they may reject some of his assumptions, may sometimes think his favouritism less justified than their own. For, of course, Mr. Monkhouse has favourites: painters whom he loves a little beyond their strict merits, whose faults he pardons a little too readily, just because they abound in some subtle quality of beauty to which he himself is peculiarly sensitive. But this is as it should be; for a man who, having had the privilege of intimacy with the early Italians, yet remained quite impartial, was never guilty of unconscious favouritism—such a one, to use George Elliot's phrase, "would be a monster, not a faithful man."

Mr. Monkhouse's guidance in the Gallery commences on the staircase at the entrance. His comparison between the portraits that hang there (which come from the Hawara tombs) with the work of Margaritone and the Praegiotiques is highly suggestive. The contrast between the joyousness of the later paganism and the sternness of medieval Christianity is of the sharpest. The painter of these Gorgos and Praxinoses (for one naturally associates them with the inimitable Adoniasusae of Theocritus) had a message for us, perhaps, as important as that of Fra Angelico. Their extraordinary individuality, moreover, suggests that the Memphite tradition of "soul deceiving" portraiture still, after 3000 years of decadence, swayed the Hellenic-Egyptian artist of the second Christian century. But the Byzantine eikon-maker had no such inspiration; and it is Italian genius, not Byzantine tradition, that glorifies the "Annunciation" of Duccio. Giotto, of course, stands apart, a god-like figure, the Dante of painting, towering above the heads not only of his contemporaries but his successors, and, in some ways, unsurpassed to this day. But his followers were a feeble folk; and his wide human sentiment, his dramatic force, his penetrating insight, were not for them. They copied him, as his predecessors had copied the Byzantines, till, in their hands, his art became a dead convention: "The followers were too feeble," says Mr. Monkhouse, "or the spell of the Church too strong." Surely this latter alternative is not fair on the Church, the great nursing mother of man's intellect in that dark world of brutal force. Was not the Church, too, the patron of St. Francis, dead forty years before Giotto's birth, whose message Vernon Lee correctly describes as "the message of loving joyfulness, of happiness in the world and the world's creatures"?

Nothing can be more attractive than Mr. Monkhouse's manner with the Primitives, with Fra Angelico, who belonged to the generation that was gone, and of Benozzo Gozzoli, who belonged to that which was to come. So, also, of his handling of Lippo Lippi, "who made the face the window of the soul," and of Botticelli, his pupil, and of Filippino, his son. He is a true Perugian, too, declaring that "in all Umbrian pictures, when permeated by the true spirit of the locality, there is a hush as of the country and no common country, but of a land of sacred beauty and peace, a paradise on earth."

As might be expected, Mr. Monkhouse has much that is interesting to say of the great Florentines, though in his enthusiasm for Botticelli he is carried into what we cannot but think is a most unjust judgment on the elder Ghirlandajo. He judges him to have been the possessor of "one of the most phlegmatic of temperaments"—a painter of externals, "who could tell us little of the character which lay below." He, of course, cannot properly be seen in the National Gallery. Reticent of violent action and poignant emotion he undoubtedly is; but when Mr. Monkhouse writes that of subtlety and intensity of character he could tell us little, he was for the moment forgetting the "Adoration" in the Museo at Florence. Surely the face of that kneeling shepherd (obviously a portrait, and by tradition the painter's own) who points to the Divine Child, has everything that ever was or could be of intimate character and subtle individuality. But here, of course, the personal equation comes in, and this may be the reviewer's favouritism. No one can quarrel with Mr. Monkhouse's estimate of Andrea, nor with his admiration of the delicate sfumato of his shadows, of his melting colour learnt from Leonardo, but carried beyond the teacher by the pupil. In London we must judge him not by one of his great masterpieces, but by the portrait of the handsome melancholy man, silvery in tone, romantic in feeling, and the arm very weakly drawn. Mr. Monkhouse rightly rejects the theory that this is the portrait of the "sorry little scrub," as Michael Angelo is made to call him. Truly it is, as he says, not without a struggle that one gives up the cherished notion, that this is his own presentation of himself, so perfectly does it seem to fit the character of the weak but gifted artist, so perfectly does it match the tone of Browning's poem. Mr. Monkhouse conjectures that it is the portrait of a sculptor, and the block held by the sensitive and nervous hands may be a brick of modelling clay. This may well be, though there is less doubt that the face is that of the handsome St. John in the Madonna of the Harpies.

To the catholicity of Mr. Monkhouse's taste we owe no small part of our enjoyment of his book. After all, admiration for the greatest men can only differ in direction and degree, but this is not so in regard to the men of smaller talent. He is never insensible to their appeal, and ever anxious to do them the fullest justice. Never, probably, has an artist like Crivelli been subjected to such kindly and discriminating analysis. One rises from his description of this Veneto-Paduan Mabuse convinced, or nearly convinced, that he was a painter of engaging personality, "refined almost to fastidiousness, delighting in all things dainty and beautiful, a lover of animals and of his kind."

What Mr. Monkhouse has to say of the Venetian golden age, though compressed into fifty pages, constitutes a complete résumé of that glorious school. He accepts some doubtful pictures, like the exquisite miniature of St. Jerome attributed to Antonello, and the Zazzera version of Giorgione's St. George at Castelfranco: but, everywhere, he brings to bear an insight which is not less subtle for being so uniformly sympathetic. One cannot quote as largely as one could wish, but here are the few words in which the charm of the greatest of the Venetians is defined:—

"With Giorgione begins the true language of the brush, in which every touch is like a word recording spontaneously—almost unconsciously—some quite personal feeling of the artist. With an unusually perfect perception and enjoyment of sensuous beauty, but with a noble disposition and unsullied mind, no one felt more than he the full delight of existence. Formed by nature for a lyrical and idyllic poet, rapt with the essential loveliness of the world, his great artistic gifts enabled him to express his sensations with a directness and simplicity seldom, if ever, equalled. It may be safely said that no one has ever set down so freshly, and yet so completely, the impressions of sight upon the mind. His art was so concealed, that it has every appearance of artlessness, without a trace of anxiety as to the result of his labour. Unconsciousness on the part of the artist and his human subjects is perhaps the keynote of his work."

The author's last chapter of all is a very full one, for there he has to speak not only of Caliari and Tintoret, who made the Indian summer of Venetian art, but of the painters of Milan, of Lombardy, and of the Emilia. He tells us here of Borgognone and "his shy, sweet Madonnas, with their long-lashed eyes"—the earliest, greatest influence in the making of Luini; of Luini himself; of Andrea Solario; of Leonardo's pupils; and of Correggio. Him he describes as the master whose gifts include

"the utmost beauty of colour, the most graceful rhythm of line, the softest effects of shadow . . . He felt and expressed, as few artists except Giorgione have done, the innate sweetness and beauty of human nature and human existence at its best and most refined."

As I have said elsewhere, Correggio's mission was to assert once and for all the sufficiency of animal happiness and earthly beauty, and, for or against this, religion and morality have no word to say. Thus, in the churches of Our Lady and of St. John at Parma, he shows us a heaven of angels in rapture; but it is the tumultuous rapture of birds in their flight. His Madonnas are the incarnation of the pure animal delight of motherhood, his little Christs are all that is most playful and winning in children, but in no wise divine. Nor is he more stirred, or differently, by the myth of Greece than by the Christian legend. The inspiration is all one, whether it be the happiness of Mary with her little romping Jesus (in the National Gallery), or the naive surprise of Daniel (in the Borghese picture), or the rapturous self-abandonment of Io, or the innocent delight of Leda. So, too, with the mature artist, grief is not allowed to deform the beauty that he paints, not even in the faces of the thorn-crowned Christ or the fainting Madonna. It is only in his early works which, like the "Parting with Mary," still show the influence of Costa and Francia, and before Mantegna is forgotten, that we catch the devout note at all.

In conclusion, it is but right to mention that Mr. Monkhouse's scrupulous fairness is conspicuous. For instance, where in the text he has chidden the curtain-like background of our portraits by Piero della Francesca, he hastens in a note to warn the reader that he too was a master of landscape, and recalls the delicious prospect, soft atmosphere, and aerial distance which stretch behind the harsh profile of the truculent Guidobaldo in the Uffizzi. We learn from the Preface that the contents of the volume have already seen the light in the Monthly Packet, but there is nothing in its even flow and studiously observed proportion to indicate any concession to the exigencies of serial publication.

REGINALD HUGHES.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

THE following exhibitions will open next week: (1) a loan collection of water-colour drawings in the Guildhall Art Gallery—to be formally opened to day (Saturday) at 2 p.m. by the Lord Mayor; (2) a collection of paintings brought over from Paris by M. Charles Sedelmeyer—including examples of Munkacsy, Brozik, Von Pettenkofen, Charlemont, Jettel, and Lessi, besides four hundred photogravures after Rembrandt—at the Grafton Galleries; (3) a collection of water-colour drawings of Greek landscape and architecture, by Mr. John Fulleylove, at the Fine Art Society's; (4) pictures by Mr. William Stott of Oldham, at the Goupil Gallery; (5) the annual spring exhibition of English and continental pictures at Messrs. A. Tooth & Sons, in the Haymarket; (6) sketches in oils, by Mr. José Weiss, illustrating the valley of the Arun, at Messrs. Henry Graves & Co., Pall Mall; (7) one hundred water-colour drawings of Australian wild flowers, by Mrs. F. C. Rowan, at the Dowdeswell Galleries; and (8) etched work and some water-colour drawings by Mr. Oliver Hall, at the Rembrandt Head Gallery, in Vigo-street.

SIR JOHN MILLAIS has given permission to Messrs. Cassell & Co. to reproduce his new Academy picture, "The Forerunner," as a photogravure plate in their forthcoming issue of Royal Academy Pictures.

THE anniversary meeting of the Society of Antiquaries will be held, in their rooms at Burlington House, on Thursday next at 2 p.m.

MR. RALPH RICHARDSON is preparing a supplement to his work George Morland, Painter, which will give a list of possessors of pictures by the artist. With a view to make the list as complete as possible, owners of examples are requested to forward reports, enumerating the titles or subjects of the pictures, their measurement in inches, and the signatures and dates, if any, also (if the painting has been engraved) the engraver's name and date of publication. These particulars should be sent to the care of the publisher, Mr. Elliot Stock, Paternoster Row.

THE Committee of the Oldham Corporation Art Gallery have just purchased for their permanent collection the following pictures: "The Last Furrow," by Mr. H. H. La Thangue; "The Children of Charles I," by Miss M. I. Dicksee; and "Seeking Sanctuary," by Mr. G. Sheridan Knowles.

PART 47 of Archæologia Aeliæna, published by the Society of Antiquaries of Newcastle-upon-Tyne (Andrew Reid & Co.) contains an article by Dr. Thomas Hodgkin on "The Literary History of the Roman Wall." All the documents—as opposed to inscriptions, coins, &c.—are printed in an appendix, and subjected to a critical analysis, with the result of proving how little evidence of value they yield. Dr. Hodgkin appraises the worth of Dion Cassius as abstracted by Xiphilinus, and the authority to be assigned to the different lives in the Historia Augusta, while he condemns as legendary the statements of Gildas and Baeda. Incidentally, he gives bold character-sketches of the emperors concerned. Dr. Hodgkin further contributes an obituary notice of Prof. George Stephens, which is illustrated with a portrait. The other papers in this part—which begins the eighteenth volume—deal with such subjects as the walls of Newcastle, the castle of Tynemouth, the monuments in St. Andrew's Church at Newcastle, and the now extinct family of Hebburn of Hebburn.

Repertorium für Kunstwissenschaft, XIX., 1. This number contains an interesting communication from Max Friedländer, in which he calls in question, not without some good reasons, the authenticity of the Sion House portrait of Dürer's father. He holds that all three versions of this picture (Munich, Frankfurt, and Sion House) are copies of lost originals. He further identifies in convincing fashion a drawing in the Albertina, variously ascribed to some fifteenth-century Flemish artist, as an early drawing by Dürer, and a portrait of his father in his goldsmith's working dress. In point of date it can be little later than the well-known self-portrait of 1484. A reproduction of the drawing accompanies the article.

THE STAGE.

STAGE NOTES.

THE Playgoers' Club, at its Sunday lectures and discussions, has a way of starting interesting subjects: and if the things said about them are not always the whole truth by any means, they are ingenious at all events, and sometimes suggestive. The smart paradox is a little too apt to have its own way in the talk, and (to judge from our own most limited experience of the institution) each speaker at the Playgoers'

Club seems to like to "go one better" than the last; but still, occasionally things are said which have interest and some value. Mr. Herbert Waring, the very sterling and intelligent actor, who held forth on "Audiences" last Sunday, is not among the recklessly and irretrievably smart; and he seems, according to the report in a daily newspaper, to have had something to say that was worth hearing, though he, too, surely exaggerated—in deference, it may be, to the mental atmosphere of the place—when he said that the average playgoer did not distinguish between good and bad acting. Now that is the one thing which the average playgoer does. In proof of his statement, Mr. Waring adduced the fact that the representative of a hero is applauded to the echo, while the gifted representative of the villain is received either with hisses or solemn silence. This is so, doubtless, in suburban melodrama; but we can hardly accept that audience as an audience of the average playgoer. Besides, a playgoer may surely be allowed to applaud a sentiment or a character as well as an art. Mr. Waring was more clearly right, as to his facts at least, when he declared that only a very small proportion of the audience knew or cared anything about the author of a play. But with the average play, is this, indeed, so very wonderful? It is not in theatrical writing that an author of proved individuality often disports himself. The two or three foremost men who write in England for the theatre are (even with a sincere love of their art) constantly obliged to sacrifice what might be their finer qualities and their more delicate effects, to the necessary conditions of the stage. Unlike the highest writers of fiction, they cannot afford to appeal to the best alone. There is the ignorance of the gallery to recollect, and the obtuseness of the upper-boxes, and even the dulness of the dress-circle. The author of the long and would-be popular drama must, on the whole, learn to content himself with the pecuniary rewards of serving a public which, since it is bound to be large, is almost bound also to be uncultivated. After all, the author of the popular novel of romantic adventure or of sham French Bohemian life, or of smart and artificial or commonplace "dialogue," does much the same thing. And, verily, he, too, has his reward; and while in reality he only keeps his shop, is glad to call himself an artist, and to persuade the inartistic public that an artist he is.

THE Duke of York's Theatre, which has been unlucky hitherto under more managements than one, and with everything from Ibsen problem plays to comic opera, has scored a sudden success with Mr. Ivan Caryll's light musical piece, "The Gay Parisienne." We saw it on its third night—a dull and empty night, generally—and the house was crowded. The literary merit of the piece is not exactly overwhelming, nor is the interest of the story; but an amusing after-dinner entertainment is provided for the wearied. The music, of course, is tuneful, and the show is a brilliant one. As usual in light opera, one or two ladies have more, perhaps, to do with the success of the entertainment than any other performers. The two at the Duke of York's in "The Gay Parisienne" are amazingly different—they are Miss Ada Reeve and Miss Louie Freear. Miss Ada Reeve has come from "the halls," with her method of the halls a good deal modified to suit the better-class entertainment of which she is now a principal attraction. She looks well, sings well, acts with spirit and discrimination. It is Miss Louie Freear, however—with her singularly dry humour—who is the surprise of the performance. So quaint is she that she is almost pathetic—like a dwarf of Velasquez. Of beauty and of grace—at all events as her present performance reveals her—she has absolutely none. But the gods have not withheld from her the gift of humour, and she is most humorous when she is most grave. Her song, called "Sister Mary Jane's Top Note," is already famous, though it is not yet a fortnight since it was first heard in London. Whatever else fails this season, "The Gay Parisienne" will certainly succeed.

MR. GUS ELLEN has a new song at the music-halls, and sings it every night at several places, and it is, we are told, clever. His popularity, which has been for some time established, does not appear to be at all upon the wane. Where is Mr. Cliff Ryland, whom we heard lately at the Royal in Holborn, enunciating quite tolerable witticisms, with a slightly Irish accent, in an equal voice and with an unmoved manner? At the Tivoli, with its "gigantic programme," are Mr. Dan Leno and Mr. Eugene Stratton. But the halls known as the "halls of the syndicate"—the Palace, the Tivoli, the Oxford—are not the only ones where there is wont, under the improved conditions of the music-hall, to be a sufficiently large display of agreeable talent. At the Metropolitan in the Edgware-road (where, when we last visited it, it was to witness the finished art of Mr. Albert Chevalier), there has been this Easter what is called "everybody," from Miss Marie Lloyd, admittedly the leading lady of the music-hall stage, to a comparatively new comer, very young, very winning—Miss Gwennie Hasto—already a remarkable adept in dance and in expressive pantomime. Miss Hasto is a success at the Halls, and can doubtless continue to be; but, notwithstanding that, she has much in her of artistic flexibility and evident sensitiveness, for which, as we conceive it, the theatre proper is the more fitting field.

MUSIC.

M. LAMOUREUX gave the first of his three orchestral concerts at Queen's Hall on Monday evening. His concerts in Paris have acquired well-deserved fame; the programmes are interesting, and the performances excellent. The success of the French conductor here was decided; but one might safely have predicted it. He has brought his whole orchestra with him; for though our players would have been quite able to bend themselves to his will, the effects would not have been so vivid as those which he obtained with his own men. Next week we shall notice the series as a whole.

M. SAPPENNIKOFF gave the first of two pianoforte recitals at St. James's Hall on Tuesday afternoon. His reading of the "Waldstein" Sonata was intelligent and refined; in the Allegro, indeed, there was a tendency to over-refinement. Of late this pianist seems to us to be striving to show less of the virtuoso and more of the artist; and though he may not have revealed the full daring of the music, he certainly erred in the right direction. With such a fine technique as M. Sappennikoff possesses, the temptation to more than use his gifts is great, especially in the "Waldstein," where technical difficulties abound. The commencement of the Rondo, seeing that it is marked Allegretto moderato, was somewhat hurried; the neat glissando octaves in the Coda were an immense improvement on the usual two-hands scramble. M. Sappennikoff played three pieces of Chopin. The "Berceuse" was given with extreme delicacy; but neither in the Mazurka nor in the Ballad did the player bring the music home to the hearts of his audience. A Mozart Gigue and a Scarlatti Sonata were played in clear, crisp style.

JUST PUBLISHED, crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

ENGLISH LITERARY CRITICISM.

With an Introduction by C. E. VAUGHAN, M.A., Professor of English Literature at University College, Cardiff.

Being the New Volume of THE WARWICK LIBRARY of ENGLISH LITERATURE, Under the General Editorship of Professor C. H. HERFORD, Litt.D.

PREVIOUSLY PUBLISHED VOLUME OF THE SERIES:

ENGLISH PASTORALS. With an Introduction by EDMUND K. CHAMBERS, B.A. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

"A volume from cover to cover full of beauty and delight. Every lover of what is best in English poetry is bound to cherish the volume."—Notes and Queries.

LONDON: BLACKIE & SON, LIMITED, 50, OLD BAILLY.

ESTABLISHED 1861.

BIRKBECK BANK
Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane, London.
TWO-AND-A-HALF per CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS repayable on demand.
TWO per CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, on the minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.
STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.

For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposit and allows interest monthly on each completed £1.

BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE
FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH.

BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY

HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND
FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.

The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post free.
FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

BREAKFAST—SUPPER.

EPPS'S
GRATEFUL—COMFORTING.
COCOA.
BOILING WATER OR MILK.

THE ZOOLOGICAL SOCIETY'S GARDENS, Regent's Park, are OPEN DAILY (except Sundays) from 9 a.m. till sunset. Admission, 1s.; on Mondays, 6d.; children, 6d. Amongst the recent additions are a young Manatee from the Amazons and a Lion presented by Rowland Ward, Esq., F.Z.S.

WM. & GEO. LAW.

COFFEE—SUGAR—TEA.

104, NEW OXFORD STREET, W.C.

VINOLIA GUARANTEED
HARMLESS.
FOR ITCHING, FACE SPOTS, CREAM
ROZEMA. 1s. 1½d. a box.

CLARENDON PRESS LIST.

THE OXFORD ENGLISH DICTIONARY.

NEW SECTION. Now ready. 4to, paper covers, 2s. 6d.

A NEW ENGLISH DICTIONARY ON HISTORICAL PRINCIPLES.

Founded mainly on the Materials Collected by the Philological Society.

FIELD—FISH. Edited by Mr. Henry Bradley, M.A.

TIMES.—"Contains twice as many words as those contained in the corresponding portions of other recent dictionaries, and the number of words illustrated by quotations is four to five times greater."

Just published, Vols. III. and IV. Second Edition. Demy 8vo, cloth, with Maps and Illustrations, 30s.

ITALY and her INVADERS. By Thomas HODGKIN, D.C.L., Litt.D.

Also, recently published, Vols. I. and II., Second Edition, 42s. Vols. V. and VI., 38s.

"Mr. Hodgkin has faced a great task with increasing zeal and devotion, and his work bids fair to fill a real want in our historical literature."—Athenaeum.

"A great work which increases in merit as it goes on."—Guardian.

BY THE SAME AUTHOR.

THE DYNASTY of THEODOSIUS; or, Eighty

Years' Struggle with the Barbarians. By THOMAS HODGKIN, D.C.L., Author of "Italy and her Invaders." Crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, 6s.

"As a popular account, it leaves little to be desired."—English Historical Review.

Just published, paper boards, small 4to, 8s. 6d. net cash. With 1 Plate.

AN ALEXANDRIAN EROTIC FRAGMENT,

and other Greek Papyri, chiefly Ptolemaic. Edited by BERNARD P. GRENFELL, M.A., sometime Craven Fellow in the University of Oxford, Fellow of Queen's College, Editor of "The Revenue Laws of Ptolemy Philadelphus."

"A result of the excellent work carried on during the last two years in Egypt by Mr. Grenfell and Professor Mahaffy. The highest praise is deserved for the care bestowed on the text, the explanatory notes, and the classified indexes at the end of the volume."—Times.

SACRED BOOKS OF THE EAST.

Vol. XXXVIII.—Demy 8vo, cloth, 12s. 6d.

Edited by F. MAX MÜLLER.

VEDĀNTA-SŪTRAS. With the Commentary by

SANKARAKRAYA. Translated by GEORGE THIBAUT. Part II., Containing a Full Index by Dr. M. WINTERNITZ to Parts I. and II.

A Complete List of the Series will be sent post free on application.

Just published, Parts I.-V., 4to, 21s. each.

A CONCORDANCE to the SEPTUAGINT, and the other Greek Versions of the Old Testament (including the Apocryphal Books). By the late EDWIN HATCH, M.A., and HENRY A. REDPATH, M.A., assisted by other Scholars.

"This is, and will remain, the Concordance to the Septuagint, and not to the Septuagint only, but to all the Greek versions of the Old Testament and the Apocrypha."

Expository Times.

THE STUDY of MEDIAEVAL and MODERN

HISTORY. Lectures by WILLIAM STUBBS, D.D., Lord Bishop of Oxford, late Regius Professor of Modern History, Oxford. Second Edition. Crown 8vo, cloth, 8s. 6d.

"Of altogether exceptional value."—Times.

CHESTERFIELD.—LETTERS of PHILIP

DORMER, FOURTH EARL of CHESTERFIELD, to his GODSON and SUCCESSOR. Edited from the Originals with a Memoir of Lord Chesterfield, by the late EARL of CARNARVON. Second Edition. With Appendix of Additional Correspondence. Royal 8vo, cloth extra, 21s.

Just published, crown 8vo, cloth, price 7s. 6d.

AN HISTORICAL GRAMMAR of the FRENCH

LANGUAGE. From the French of AUGUSTE BRACHET, Lauréat de l'Institut de France. Rewritten and Enlarged by PAGET TOYNBEE, M.A., Balliol College, Oxford, Editor of "Specimens of Old French."

From the PREFACE.

"It is hoped that Book I., which was formerly very incomplete, may now serve as an efficient introduction to French Phonetics, and thus supply a want that has been long felt in England, there being no work in English on the subject."

Just published, Vol. IV., demy 8vo, cloth, price 12s. 6d.

STUDIA BIBLICA ET ECCLESIASTICA.

Essays chiefly in Biblical and Patristic Criticism. By MEMBERS of the UNIVERSITY of OXFORD.

Already published, Vol. I., 10s. 6d.; Vol. II., 12s. 6d.; Vol. III., 16s.

NOTICES ON VOL. III.

"The volume shows what vigorous roots the study of textual criticism has struck in our Universities, and is highly creditable to the Oxford Press."—Saturday Review.

"Valuable to students, and much of it will be found interesting to the general reader."—Westminster Review.

Just published, Second Edition, Revised, demy 8vo, cloth, 14s.

The LAW and CUSTOM of the CONSTITUTION.

PART II. THE CROWN. By Sir WILLIAM R. ANSON, Bart., D.C.L., of the Inner Temple, Barrister-at-Law, Warden of All Souls' College, Oxford.

"A valuable and comprehensive treatise."—Times.

"Every student of law and history, and every citizen who desires to know how we are governed, should procure a copy of this work."—Manchester Guardian.

"The book fulfils a want which no one had supplied, and there can be no doubt that it merits all the success it will obtain."—Scotsman.

PART I., PARLIAMENT. Second Edition. 8vo, 12s. 6d.

AN INTRODUCTION to GREEK SCULPTURE.

By L. E. UPCOTT, M.A., late Scholar of Corpus Christi College, Oxford: Assistant Master in Marlborough College. Crown 8vo, cloth, 4s. 6d.

"Mr. Upcott is thoroughly in love with his subject, and puts his ideas into good literary form."—Cambridge Review.

"The idea of this little book is excellent."—Pall Mall Gazette.

THE ANCIENT CLASSICAL DRAMA: a Study

in Literary Evolution. Intended for Readers in English and in the Original. By R. G. MOULTON, M.A. Crown 8vo, cloth, 8s. 6d.

"A popular yet scholarly presentation of the main ideas which underlie the ancient classical drama."—University Extension Journal.

A HANDBOOK of PICTORIAL ART. By the Rev. R. ST. JOHN TYRWHITT, M.A., formerly Student and Tutor of Christ Church. With a Chapter on Perspective by A. MACDONALD, School of Art, Oxford. Second Edition. 8vo, half-bound, with Illustrations, 18s.

THE MELANESIANS. Studies in their Anthropology and Folk-lore. By R. H. CODRINGTON, D.D., late of the Melanesian Mission, sometime Fellow of Wadham College, Oxford. 8vo, cloth, 16s.

"Probably no better book concerning the manners, customs, beliefs, and arts of a barbaric people has ever been written than Dr. Codrington's 'Melanesians.'"

Saturday Review.

THE TREASURY of SACRED SONG. Selected

from the English Lyrical Poetry of Four Centuries. With Notes, Explanatory and Biographical. By F. T. PALGEAVE, M.A., Professor of Poetry in the University of Oxford. Extra fcap. 8vo, cloth, bevelled boards, 4s. 6d.

"A standard volume."—Pall Mall Gazette.

"An admirable representation of all that is best in the field of literature which it covers."—Globe.

"A more delightful collection it would be difficult to conceive, and the fascination of infinite variety carries us on from page to page."—Times.

* An edition is also issued printed on Oxford India Paper, superfine cloth, 7s. 6d.; and in various superior leather bindings.

A CATALOGUE OF THE CLARENDON PRESS PUBLICATIONS WILL BE SENT POST FREE ON APPLICATION.

LONDON: HENRY FROWDE, CLARENDON PRESS WAREHOUSE, AMEN CORNER, E.C.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 1251.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, APRIL 25, 1896.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

M R. M U R R A Y ' S L I S T .

A NEW WORK BY THE DUKE OF ARGYLL, K.G., K.T.

THE PHILOSOPHY of BELIEF; or, Law in Christian Theology.
8vo, 16s.
"They reveal on every page the working of a mind, penetrating, unweariedly inquisitive, acute, and many-sided."—Times.

SECOND EDITION, with Maps, Illustrations, &c., medium 8vo, 21s.
THE HEART of a CONTINENT: a Narrative of Travels in Manchuria, the Desert of Gobi, Turkestan, the Himalayas, the Hindu Kush, the Pamirs, &c. From 1884 to 1894. By Captain FRANK YOUNGHUSBAND, C.I.E., Indian Staff Corps, Gold Medallist Royal Geographical Society.
"It is not only a credit to its author, it is also worthy of the noble service in which Captain Younghusband has won distinction."—Daily News.
"We can only send our readers to a book which seems to us the most fascinating of all recent books of travel."—Spectator.

A NEW UNIVERSITY EXTENSION MANUAL.

SHAKSPERE and his PREDECESSORS. By Frederic S. Boas, M.A., formerly Exhibitioner of Balliol College, Oxford.
Crown 8vo, 6s.
* This book is sold either as one of the Volumes of the University Extension Series, Edited by Professor KNIGHT, of St. Andrews University (crown 8vo, 6s.), or as a Library Book (large crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.).

NOW READY, 8vo, 6s.

THE QUARTERLY REVIEW, No. 366.

CONTENTS.

1. THROUGH SCIENTIFIC DOUBT to FAITH.
2. THE POETRY of the DE VERES.
3. FATHER JOSEPH.
4. CHILDREN YESTERDAY and TO-DAY.
5. THE LOYALTY of CANADA.
6. BIRDS of DEVON and CORNWALL.

7. MEDIÆVAL UNIVERSITIES.
8. THE SEPTUAGINT VERSION of the OLD TESTAMENT
9. PHOTOGRAPHY of the INVISIBLE (with Illustrations).
10. THE QUEEN'S PRIME MINISTERS.
11. OUR RELATIONS with GERMANY.

With Map and Etchings by M. Manasse, 2 vols., crown 8vo, 12s.
THE BIBLE in SPAIN; or, Journeys and Imprisonments of an Englishman in an Attempt to Circulate the Scriptures in the Peninsula. By GEORGE BORROW. A New Edition, carefully Revised, with Notes and a Glossary, by the late ULICK RALPH BURKE, Author of "A History of Spain."
"Nothing better than the type, or than Mr. Ulick Burke's brief Notes and Glossary, could be desired by the most enthusiastic Borrowian."—Times.

With Maps and Portraits, 8vo, 16s.

THE LIFE of ADMIRAL SIR JOHN FRANKLIN. Based on Private and hitherto unpublished Documents. By H. D. TRALL.
"A worthy memorial of the intrepid explorer who did more than any man to stimulate interest in the frozen North and to develop the geography of the Arctic regions."—Morning Post.

Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

METHODS of SOCIAL REFORM. Essays, Critical and Constructive. By Thomas Mackay, Author of "The English Poor," Editor of "A Plea for Liberty," &c.
"Mr. Mackay handles the subject with great ability.....He writes moderately and sensibly, and shows a thorough grasp of the subject."—Spectator.

With Portrait, crown 8vo, 9s.

WITH an AMBULANCE: a Narrative of Personal Experiences during the Franco-German War, 1870-1871. By CHARLES E. RYAN, F.R.C.S.I., M.R.C.P.I.
"Dr. Ryan, who voluntarily joined an ambulance at Paris, went through the whole of the Sedan horrors as a member of the Anglo-American Ambulance. He was a medical student, fresh from Dublin, and he was in the thick of battles, murder, and sudden death before he had worn his uniform for many days. The picture which he unfolds is fascinating in the extreme, and no detail is left out to give a complete insight into the truth about war."—Westminster Gazette.

With Map and Illustrations, crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

A WANDERING SCHOLAR in the LEVANT. By David G. Hogarth, Fellow of Magdalen College, Oxford.
"The little book is one of the liveliest, brightest, and most informing accounts of travel in the near East that we have seen for many a day; and though one hesitates to compare with the immortal 'Eöthen,' it is only true to say that Mr. Hogarth's pages have something of the same air of fresh, first-hand experience, and something of the same vividness of literary style."—Times.
"The spell of the East pervades this little book—written by a ripe and many-sided scholar and master of style. No better book of its kind has appeared since 'Eöthen.'"—Daily News.

8vo, 16s.

LETTERS and VERSES of ARTHUR PENRHYN STANLEY, D.D., late Dean of Westminster.
Edited by ROWLAND E. PROTHERO, Author of "The Life and Letters of Dean Stanley."

With Facsimile of her Drawings and a Portrait, 2 vols., crown 8vo, 21s.

JOURNALS and CORRESPONDENCE of LADY EASTLAKE. Edited by her Nephew, Charles EASTLAKE SMITH.

With Portrait, Illustrations, and Maps, 8vo, 16s.

LIFE and LETTERS of the LATE ADMIRAL SIR B. J. SULLIVAN, K.C.B. Including Personal Narratives of Active Service during the Parana Campaign in 1846, and with the Baltic Fleet during the Crimean War in 1854-5, &c. By his Son, H. N. SULLIVAN. With Personal Reminiscences by Admiral Sir G. H. RICHARDS.

With Portrait and Illustrations, 8vo, 16s.

THE BIOGRAPHY of HARVEY GOODWIN, late Bishop of Carlisle. By H. D. Rawnsley, Hon. Canon of Carlisle.

Fcap. 8vo, 5s.

THE JOURNAL of a SPY in PARIS. From January to July, 1794. By Raoul Hesdin.

Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

LATIN LITERATURE. By J. W. Mackail, Balliol College, Oxford. Forming a New Volume of the "University Extension Manuals," Edited by Professor KNIGHT, of St. Andrews University.

Crown 8vo, 2s.

TRANSLATION at SIGHT; or, Aids to Facility in the Translation of Latin. Passages of Graduated Difficulty, carefully selected from Latin Authors, with Explanations, Notes, &c. By Professor T. D. HALL, Author of "The Students' Latin Grammar," &c.

JOHN MURRAY, ALBEMARLE STREET.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

	PAGE
LOCKER-LAMPSON'S CONFIDENCES, by T. HUTCHINSON	337
THE VOYAGE OF BRAN, by G. NEWCOMEN	339
AN EMISSARY OF CROMWELL IN FRANCE, by R. SNEYMOUS LONG	340
BRENN'S FROM NORTH POLE TO EQUATOR, by the Rev. M. G. WATKINS	341
NEW NOVELS, by GEORGE COTTERELL	342
TWO BOOKS ON ROMAN HISTORY	343
NOTES AND NEWS	343
THE FORTHCOMING MAGAZINES	344
UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS	344
ORIGINAL VERSE: "HEINRICH PREISINGER," by C. E. T.	345
CORRESPONDENCE—
The Children Actors in "Hamlet," by W. Hall Griffin;
The Sw-Enter in Wales, by J. P. Owen; Berber Names, by Prof. Keane; The "Prensis" Angelo, by
Prof. Skeat and Walter Worrall	345
APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK
THE CRAWFORD CHAMBERS, by HENRY BRADLEY	347
CORRESPONDENCE—
When was the Farsi Calendar Invented? by Dr. E. W.
West	348
SCIENCE NOTES	348
REPORTS OF SOCIETIES	348
BREKSON'S FLORENTINE PAINTERS OF THE RENAISSANCE, by COSMO MONKHOUSE	349
NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY	350
THE LAMOUREUX CONCERTS, by J. S. SHEDLOCK	350
MUSIC NOTES	351

CATALOGUES

FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS
promptly supplied on moderate terms.
CATALOGUES on application.
DULAU & CO., 27, SOHO SQUARE.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE,
IMPORTERS OF FOREIGN BOOKS,
14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN,
20, SOUTH FREDERICK STREET, EDINBURGH,
AND
7, BROAD STREET, OXFORD.
CATALOGUES post free on application.

TH. WOHLLEBEN,
FOREIGN BOOKSELLER,
45, GREAT RUSSELL STREET
(Opposite the British Museum),
Supplies all Foreign Books and Periodicals at the most moderate prices.
Catalogues on application.

On application for one stamp.
THE INTERNATIONAL BOOKMARKET.
Monthly List of the most important Publications issued by
H. GREVEL & CO.,
Importers of Foreign Books,
33, King Street, Covent Garden, W.C.

AGENCY FOR AMERICAN BOOKS.
G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS, PUBLISHERS
and BOOKSELLERS, of 27 and 29 West 23rd Street, New York, and 24, BEDFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C., desire to call the attention of the READING PUBLIC to the excellent facilities presented by their Branch House in London for filling, on the most favourable terms, orders for their own STANDARD PUBLICA-TIONS and for ALL AMERICAN BOOKS and PERIODICALS—
CATALOGUES sent on application.

IMPORTANT.—PRINTING AND PUBLISHING.
NEWSPAPERS, MAGAZINES, BOOKS,
&c.—KING, SELL & RAILTON, Limited, high-class Printers and Publishers, 12, Gough Square, 4, Bolt Court, Fleet Street, E.C., have specially-built Rotary and other fast Machines for printing
illustrated or other Publications, and specially-built Machines for fast folding and covering 8, 16, 24, or 32-page Journals at one operation.
Advice and assistance given to anyone wishing to commence New Journals.
Facilities upon the premises for Editorial Offices, free. Advertising and Publishing Departments conducted.
Telephone 65121. Telegraph "Africanism, London."

THE AUTHOR'S MANUAL. By PERCY
RUSSELL. With Prefatory Remarks by Mr. GLADSTONE.
Crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d. net. (EIGHTH and CHEAPER EDITION.)
With Portrait.
"Mr. Russell's book is a very complete manual and guide for journalists and authors. It is not a merely practical work—it is literary and appreciative of literature in its best sense.... We have little else but praise for the volume."—Westminster Review.

DIET, Loke & Co., 18, Boulevard Street, London, E.C.

BREAKFAST—SUPPER.

E P P S'S
GRATEFUL—COMFORTING.
C O C O A.
BOILING WATER OR MILK.

MASON COLLEGE, BIRMINGHAM.

FACULTY OF SCIENCE.

RESEARCH SCHOLARSHIPS.

(Founded by the late T. Aubrey Bowen, Esq., of Melbourne, Australia.)
The object of these SCHOLARSHIPS is to encourage higher work
and research in scientific professional engineering and in chemical and metallurgical science.
APPLICATIONS, supported by details of educational training and references to former teachers and others, should be sent in to the Registrar on or before the 1st of June, 1896. The Awards will be made in September next, and the Scholarships will be tenable during
the Session 1896-97.
(a) THREE BOWEN SCHOLARSHIPS in ENGINEERING of
the value of £100 each.
(b) ONE BOWEN SCHOLARSHIP in METALLURGY of the
value of £100.
(c) THREE PRIESTLEY SCHOLARSHIPS in CHEMISTRY
of the value of £100 each.
Further particulars may be obtained on application to the Registrar.

ST. BARTHOLOMEW'S HOSPITAL and COLLEGE.

The SUMMER SESSION will BEGIN on FRIDAY, MAY 1, 1896.
The Hospital contains a service of 750 beds (including 75 for Convalescents at Swanley). Students may reside in the College, within the Hospital walls, subject to the Collegiate regulations.
Scholarships and prizes of the aggregate value of over £800 are awarded annually, and Students entering in May can compete for the Entrance Scholarships in September.
For full particulars apply to the WARDEN of the College, St.
Bartholomew's Hospital, E.C.
A Handbook forwarded on application.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE, LONDON.

Professor W. P. KER will give SIX PUBLIC LECTURES on "CRITICISM," on WEDNESDAYS, at 4 o'clock, beginning on APRIL 22. These Lectures are open to the public without payment of tickets.
J. M. HOSKINSON, M.A., Secretary.

MCGILL UNIVERSITY, MONTREAL.

CLASSICAL DEPARTMENT.

It is intended to make Two Additional Appointments to the Staff of the above Department in the course of the summer—one a PROFES-SORSHIP or ASSOCIATE PROFESSORSHIP, the other a LECTURESHIP.—For particulars apply to J. W. BRANKENRIDGE,
B.C.L., Acting-Secretary.

ST. EDWARD'S SCHOOL, near OXFORD.

OXFORD.—Public School, founded 1863, to provide Education
for Gentlemen's Sons in Preparation for Universities, Army, &c., on definite Church principles. Fees: £45 per annum (Sons of Clergymen, £60); Day Boys, 21 guineas. Classical and Modern sides.
Scholarships, July 29th.—Rev. T. F. HOSKINSON, M.A., Warden.

ST. PAUL'S SCHOOL.—An EXAMINATION FOR FILLING UP VACANCIES on the Foundation will be held on the 8th MAY NEXT.—For information apply to the Bursar, St. Paul's School, West Kensington.

CLIFTON COLLEGE.—An ORGANIST and DIRECTOR OF MUSIC will be appointed in June. Duties to commence in September. Preference will be given to candidates under 30 years of age, who are graduates of Oxford or Cambridge.—For particulars apply to the Secretary.

THE IRRELIGION OF SHAKESPEARE.

—A LECTURE by Mr. G. W. FOOTE, President of the National Secular Society, at ST. JAMES'S HALL (Banqueting Hall), on SUNDAY EVENING, APRIL 28, at 7.30 p.m. Questions and Discussions allowed.—Tickets 1s. and 2s., obtainable at Tuss's Ticket Office, Piccadilly, or at 25, St. Pancras Street, E.C.

I. WALTER THEODORE WATTS

DUNTON, heretofore called and known by the name of WALTER THEODORE WATTS, of the Pines, Putney Hill, in the County of Surrey, Esquire, hereby give PUBLIC NOTICE that I have assumed and adopted the surname of Dunton in addition to my surname of Watts. And that by a Deed Poll, dated the 17th April, 1896, and duly enrolled in the Central Office of the Supreme Court of Judicature, I formally declared that I had assumed and adopted the said additional surname of Dunton, and that I intended thenceforth upon all occasions whatever to subscribe myself by the name of WALTER THEODORE WATTS DUNTON instead of Walter Theodore Watts, so that I and my heirs lawfully begotten might not thereafter be called or known by the said surname of WATTS, but by the surname of WATTS DUNTON.

A LADY highly RECOMMENDS a
HOME in SWITZERLAND where four Girls are received Exceptional educational advantages combined with refined home-comforts and individual care. Beautiful position. Moderate terms.—
Prospectus, Miss HENRI, Bienna, Switzerland; or Mrs. DICKINS, Chertington, Shipston-on-Stroud.

THE EDINBURGH EDITION OF STEVENSON'S WORKS with privilege of subscribing for additional seven volumes. Can be secured by appointment. Offers invited.—Apply CAMERA, Wimbledon News Office, Wimbledon.

TO INVALIDS.—A LIST OF MEDICAL MEN in all parts, willing to RECEIVE RESIDENT PATIENTS, giving full particulars and terms, sent gratis. The list includes private asylums, &amp;c.; schools also recommended.—Address Mr. G. B. BROOKER, 8, Lancaster Place, Strand, W.C.

TYPE-WRITING.—MSS. of every
description COPIED. Special attention to work requiring care.
Examination Questions, Notices, &c., by DUPLICATING process.
Usual terms.—Miss THOMAS, 8, Cautley Avenue, Clapham Common
S.W.

LONDON LIBRARY, ST. JAMES'S SQUARE, S.W.

PRESIDENT—LESLIE STEPHEN, Esq.
VICE-PRESIDENTS—Right Hon. W. E. GLADSTONE, the Very Rev.
the DEAN of LLANDAFF, HERBERT SPENCER, Esq., Sir HENRY BARKLEY, K.C.B.

TRUSTEES—Right Hon. Sir M. GRANT DUFF, Right Hon. Sir JOHN LUBBOCK, Bart., M.P., Right Hon. EARL of ROSEBURY.

The Library contains about 170,000 Volumes of Ancient and Modern Literature, in Various Languages. Subscription, £3 a year: Life-Membership, according to age. Fifteen Volumes are allowed to Country, and Ten to Town Members. Reading-Room Open from 10 to 5 half-past 6. CATALOGUE, Fifth Edition, 2 vols., royal 8vo, price 21s.; 10 Members, 18s.
C. T. HARRISON WRIGHT, Secretary and Librarian.

ROYAL LITERARY FUND.

The EARL of CREWE, President of the Corporation, will preside at the 100th ANNIVERSARY DINNER, to be held at the WHITE-HALL ROOMS, HOTEL METROPOLE, E.W., on WEDNESDAY,
May 6th, at 7 for 7.30 p.m. precisely.

STEWARDS.

THE LORD AMHERST OF HACKNEY.
P. E. ARMITAGE, Esq.
W. A. BAILWARD, Esq.
ALFRED BALDWIN, Esq., M.P.
EDWARD BELL, Esq.
RICHARD BENTLEY, Esq.
SIR WALTER BESANT.
HENRY L. BISCHOFFSHEIM, Esq.
JAMES TAIT BLACK, Esq.
J. ALEXANDER BLACKIE, Esq.
HON. GEORGE C. BODRICK, D.C.L. (Warden of Merton).
T. R. BUCHANAN, Esq., M.P.
C. F. CLAY, Esq.
C. A. CRIPPS, Esq., Q.C., M.P.
W. E. DARWIN, Esq.
AUSTIN DOBSON, Esq.
H. ARTHUR DOUGLASS, Esq.
FRANCIS GALTON, Esq., F.R.S.
JOHN P. GASSIOT, Esq.
F. W. GIBBS, Esq., C.B., Q.C.
RUDOLPH GLOVER, Esq., F.S.A.
PROFESSOR F. S. GRANGER, LITT.D.
FREDERICK HARRISON, Esq.
ALEXANDER HENDERSON, Esq.
OTTO KYLLMANN, Esq.
RAFE LEYCESTER, Esq.
RIGHT HON. SIR JOHN LUBBOCK, Bart., M.P., D.C.L., F.R.S.
SIR JOHN EVERETT MILLAIS, Bart., P.R.A.
PROFESSOR F. W. MAITLAND, LL.D.
HARRY H. MARKS, Esq., M.P.
EDWARD MARSTON, Esq.
SIR THEODORE MARTIN, K.C.B., LL.D.
SIR JOHN EVERETT MILLAIS, Bart., P.R.A.
LUDWIG MOND, Esq., F.R.S.
JOHN MURRAY, Esq., F.R.S.
J. C. PARKINSON, Esq.
E. H. PEMBER, Esq., Q.C.
R. E. PROTHERO, Esq.
SIR T. WEMYSS REID.
CHARLES ROBERT RIVINGTON, Esq., F.S.A.
ALFRED DE ROTHSCHILD, Esq.
LEOPOLD DE ROTHSCHILD, Esq.
FLEETWOOD SANDEMAN, Esq.
HUGH STOWELL SCOTT, Esq. (Henry Seton Merriman).
FREDERICK SEMBOLD, Esq.
A. MURRAY SMITH, Esq., Q.C.
HENRY VATES THOMPSON, Esq.
HON. LIONEL A. TOLLEMACHE.
MR. ALDERMAN P. TRELOAR.
RIGHT HON. SIR G. O. TREVELYAN, Bart., M.P.
T. FISHER UNWIN, Esq.
W. FRUING WARNE, Esq.
C. KNIGHT WATSON, Esq., F.S.A.
CAPTAIN F. YOUNGHUSBAND, O.I.E.

APPLICATIONS for DINNER TICKETS, price One Guinea each, should be sent not later than MAY 1 to
A. LLEWELYN ROBERTS, Secretary.
7, Adelphi Terrace, W.C.

A. BAIRD CARTER'S GALLERY,

61, JERMYN STREET.—ON VIEW, RAMBLES in
DEVONSHIRE, Water-colour Drawings by Arthur H. Enock, during
APRIL, 10 to 6. Admission and catalogue free.

MR. D. Y. CAMERON'S New Set of

NORTH ITALIAN ETCHINGS NOW ON VIEW at Mr. B.
GUTHRIE'S GALLERY, 14, KING STREET, ST. JAMES'S, E.W.
Open from Saturday, April 18th, till May 2nd, 10 to 6 daily. Admission free.

PICTURE PRESERVATION &amp; RESTORATION

—For advice and full particulars address C. H. MIDFOOTS, Studio, 208, Devonshire Road, Honor Oak Park, S.E.

WANTED, to PURCHASE, fine PIC-

TURES, in OIL, by Old Masters of the Dutch, Flemish, and British schools.—DUNDELL, 109, New Bond Street, W.

ROYAL SOCIETY of PAINTERS in

WATER-COLOURS ANNUAL EXHIBITION will OPEN on MONDAY NEXT, APRIL 27th, 54, Pall Mall East.
SAMUEL J. HODGSON, R.W.S., Secretary.

ARTISTS' GENERAL BENEVOLENT INSTITUTION,

For the Relief of Distressed Artists, their Widows and Orphans.
President: Sir JOHN EVERETT MILLAIS, Bart., P.R.A.

The ANNIVERSARY DINNER will take place at the WHITE-HALL ROOMS, HOTEL METROPOLE, on SATURDAY, MAY 9th, at half-past 6 o'clock.

The Right Hon. CHARLES STUART WORTLEY, Q.C., M.P., in the Chair.

Dinner Tickets, including wines, One Guinea.

DONATIONS will be received and thankfully acknowledged by ALFRED WATERHOUSE, R.A., Treasurer.
WALTER W. OULESS, R.A., Hon. Secretary.
DOUGLAS GORDON, Secretary, 19, St. James's Street, S.W.

THE AUTHOR'S HAIRLESS PAPER-

PAD.
(The LEADENHALL PRESS, Ltd., 50, Leadenhall Street, London, E.C.)

Contains hairless paper, over which the pen slips with perfect freedom. Sixpence each. 5s. per dozen, ruled or plain.

WM. &amp; GEO. LAW.

COFFEE—SUGAR—TEA.

104, NEW OXFORD STREET, W.C.

JARROLD &amp; SONS' NEW NOVELS

NOW READY AT ALL LIBRARIES.

THE POWER of the DOG. An

Entirely New Novel. By ROWLAND GREY, Author of "In Sunny Switzerland," "By Virtue of his Office," "Linden-Blumen," "Chris." Crown 8vo, art linen, gilt top, 6s.

"A novel of very considerable power. The story is worked out in a clear and agreeable way, and very skilfully as retaining the reader's interest throughout."

Aberdeen Daily Free Press.

THE HEART of a MYSTERY. By

T. W. SPEIGHT, Author of "The Mysteries of Heron Dyke," "Quittance in Full," "The Grey Monk," "Wife or No Wife." Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

"The Heart of a Mystery" is a cleverly written and well constructed story. There is a capital underplot with a strong love interest, for the attractive detail of which we must refer our readers to Mr. Speight's singular able and fascinating romance."—Daily Telegraph.

HARUM SCARUM. By Esme Stuart,

Author of "A Brave Fight," "Cast Ashore," "Miss Fenwick." Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

"Harum Scarum" is a capital story. Miss 'Toney,' the heroine of the tale, is a delightfully breezy and entertaining young Australian, flung on the hands of a starched and unsympathetic aunt, whose life is made a burden to her by Colonial pranks. Toney's fine nature is evident through all, and she ultimately wins respect from her harassed English relatives."—Globe.

LINDSAY'S GIRL. By Mrs. Herbert

MARTIN, Author of "Britomart," "Her Début," "Bonnie Leslie," "A Country Mouse," "Cast Adrift," &amp;c. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

"Lindsay's Girl" is a lively story for the novel-reading woman, by a writer who sketches her characters clearly, keeps up a brisk narrative, and preserves a healthy tone."—Sheffield Independent.

BRENDA'S EXPERIMENT. An

Indian Marriage Story. By Surgeon-Major H. M. GREENHAW, Author of "The Bow of Fate," &amp;c. Crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.

"Stirring scenes are brilliantly portrayed, and while they are in progress one almost forgets the perils of the heroine. Her life has been rescued and her life again brightened is a very interesting episode, which the reader will have pleasure, we are sure, in finding out for himself."—Leeds Mercury.

London: JARROLD &amp; SONS, 10 and 11, Warwick Lane, E.C.; and of all Booksellers.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY.

Recent Issues of Permanent Autotype Reproductions.

THE NATIONAL GALLERY, LONDON.

A completely New Series of the Chief Works in this Collection. Each print measures about 18 by 15 inches, and is sold separately, price 12s.

VELASQUEZ and MURILLO.

A Selection of the Works of these Painters, included in the Spanish Exhibition at the New Gallery. The same size and price as the above.

ALBERT DÜRER.

A Series of Autotype Facsimiles of the Finest Proofs of this Master's Work in the Department of Prints and Drawings, British Museum. The copies are in all cases of the exact size of the original copperplates.

Now Published for the First Time in Autotype.

WORKS by DANTE GABRIEL ROSSETTI,

Sir EDWARD BURNE-JONES, and ALBERT MOORE. Including the "Blessed Damsel," "Proserpine," "The Lamp of Memory," "Venus's Looking Glass," "Wine of Circe," &amp;c., &amp;c.

NOW READY.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY'S FINE-ART

CATALOGUE, of 184 pages, and REVISED ILLUSTRATED SUPPLEMENT, containing 86 Miniature Reproductions of Selected Autotypes, price, post-free, One Shilling.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY,

74, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON, W.O.

WHAT MUST I DO TO GET WELL,

AND HOW CAN I KEEP SO? By Mrs. ELMA STUART, Tontley Hall, Wokingham, Berks. Twelfth Edition, Rewritten and greatly Enlarged. Handsome volume, 320 pp., price 5s. net, or post free from herself, 5s. 6d.

Sole Trade Agents: SIMPKIN, MARSHALL &amp; CO., Ltd., London, E.C.

The Duke of ARGYLL writes: "I now feel that all other remedies I have ever taken were addressed to the symptoms alone, not to the causes and sources of disease. The Salisbury Treatment... as clearly explained in your book, makes a direct attack upon those causes, on principles which seem to me to be as sound and simple in theory as I have found them to be successful in practice."

EFFINGHAM WILSON'S LIST.

Just published, crown 8vo, price 6s. net.

HANDY GUIDE to PATENT LAW and PRACTICE.

By G. F. EMERY, LL.M.

"Well conceived and carefully executed."—Manchester Guardian.
"Will be found useful for study and reference in the offices of patent agents and of solicitors with practice in that field of litigation."—Scotsman.

Price 10s. 6d. net.

DIAGRAM for CALCULATING the YIELD on REDEEMABLE STOCKS.

By A. A. BOOTH and M. A. GRAINGER.

By means of a small ruler and a table of lines the true yield on a stock or bond purchased above par can be obtained at once without calculation of any kind.

Demy 8vo, price 5s. net.

LAW RELATING to LITERARY COPYRIGHT and the AUTHORSHIP and PUBLICATION of BOOKS.

By DANIEL CHAMIER, of the Inner Temple.

"The work may be conscientiously recommended to any one requiring a cheap and trustworthy guide on the subject."—Athenaeum.
"The book will be found extremely useful by authors."—Whithall Review.

"Deserves a welcome from those who are concerned with the question dealt with."—Morning Post.

SECOND EDITION, REVISED AND ENLARGED.

Just published, demy 8vo, price 6s. net.

THE SCIENCE of MONEY.

By ALEX. DEL MAR.

"Mr. Del Mar will find no lack of supporters in the views he upholds... a storehouse of reference... recommended both to student and master."—Glasgow Herald.

"Mr. Del Mar has the faculty of dealing with a subject, generally regarded as intricate and unattractive, in a lucid and rightly interesting manner, and those who desire a knowledge of the scientific aspect of money cannot do better than acquire it from this able treatise."—Liverpool Courier.

Crown 8vo, price 2s. net.

A SKETCH of the CURRENCY QUESTION.

By CLIVE CUTHBERTSON, B.A.

EFFINGHAM WILSON, 11, Royal Exchange, E.C.

MESSRS. J. C. DRUMMOND &amp; CO., ART REPRODUCERS,

14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C.

Are the sole representatives in Great Britain of HERR HANFSTAENGL of Munich, the well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAPHURE now patronised by the leading London Art Publishing Firms. A large Collection of Important Plates always on view.

Process Blocks for the purpose of Ordinary Book Illustrations.

Messrs. DRUMMOND &amp; CO. supply the cheapest and best Processes in the market, which are specially adapted to meet the wants of Antiquarians, Archaeologists, and those engaged in the investigation and publication of Parochial and Diocesan Records.

J. C. DRUMMOND &amp; CO. invite attention to their Improved Rapid Photo-Mechanical Process

For the Reproduction of Works of Art, Original MSS., Designs, Lace Manufactures, Photographs, Views, Book Illustrations, Artistic Advertisements, Catalogues, &amp;c., &amp;c., at a moderate cost. Specimens and price list on Application.

Offices: 14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, LONDON

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK,

Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane, London.

TWO-AND-A-HALF PER CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS repayable on demand.

TWO PER CENT. ON CURRENT ACCOUNTS, on the minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.

STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.

For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposit and allows interest monthly on each completed £1.

BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE

FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH.

BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY

HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND

FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.

The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post free. FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

365

SHAVES

A Stick of

FOR 6D.

VINOLIA SHAVING SOAP is said to last a year.

Stevens &amp; Sons' New Law Works.

NOW READY, No. 46 (APRIL), price 5s.

Subscription for 1896, post free, 12s. 6d.

THE LAW QUARTERLY REVIEW.

Edited by Sir FREDERICK POLLOCK, Bart., M.A., LL.D., Corpus Professor of Jurisprudence in the University of Oxford.

Contents.
NOTES: Assessment of Profits to Income (Tax)—Rights of Vendor of Goodwill—Burden of Proof in Actions for Negligence—Gas Buys and Salvage—Marriage under Compulsion, &c.THE RIGHTS of a SUZERAIN. By MALCOLM MCILWRAITH.
THE WATER-CARRIER and his RESPONSIBILITY. By J. B. C. STEPHEN.

THE HISTORY of the PATENT SYSTEM UNDER the PREROGATIVE and at COMMON LAW. By E. WYNDHAM HULME.

SCOTTISH LAND LAW. By EDWARD JENKS.

INDICTMENTS. By H. L. STEPHEN.

"EXECRABILES" in the COMMON PLEAS. By F. W. MAITLAND.
BOOK REVIEWS.

Just published, Sixth Edition, in Two Parts.

PALMER'S COMPANY PRECEDENTS for USE in RELATION to COMPANIES SUBJECT to the COMPANIES ACTS, 1862 to 1890.

PART I.—COMPANY FORMS, Arranged as follows:—Promoters, Prospectuses, Underwriting, Agreements, Memoranda and Articles of Association, Private Companies, Employers' Benefits, Resolutions, Notices, Certificates, Powers of Attorney, Debentures and Debenture Stock, Banking and Advance Securities, Petitions, Writs, Pleadings, Judgments and Orders, Reconstruction, Amalgamation, Special Acts with Copious Notes, and an Appendix containing Acts and Rules. Sixth Edition. By FRANCIS BEAUFORT PALMER, assisted by CHARLES MACNAGHTEN and ARTHUR JOHN CHITTY, Esq., Barristers-at-Law. Royal 8vo, cloth, 1s. 16s.

PART II.—WINDING-UP FORMS and PRACTICE. Arranged as follows:—Compulsory Winding-up, Voluntary Winding-up, Winding-up under Supervision, Arrangements and Compromises, with a Chapter on Debentures, and Copious Notes, and an Appendix containing Acts and Rules. Sixth Edition. By FRANCIS BEAUFORT PALMER, assisted by FRANK EVANS, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. Royal 8vo, cloth, 1s. 10s.

"In company drafting it stands unrivalled."—Law Times.
"The reputation of this book is universal. No company lawyer can afford to be without it."—Law Journal.
"It is certain that nothing lubricates legal business better than considered forms like Mr. Palmer's."—Law Quarterly Review.

Now ready, Third Edition, royal 8vo, cloth, 1s. 12s.

ODGERS on LIBEL and SLANDER—A

Digest of the Law of Libel and Slander, with the Evidence, Procedure, Practice, and Precedents of Pleadings, both in Civil and Criminal Cases. By W. BLAKE ODGERS, Esq., B.C.

"The general opinion of the profession has always accorded a high place to Mr. Blake Odgers' learned work, and the new edition cannot but enhance that opinion."—Law Journal.

STEVENS &amp; SONS, LIMITED,

119 AND 120, CHANCERY LANE, LONDON.

NEXT WEDNESDAY and THURSDAY, APRIL 20th and 30th, 7,000 rare Old Engravings and Etchings, English and Foreign, in arranged Collections, 2,000 Old European Books in arranged subjects, 347 Old Water-Colour and other Drawings, Oil Paintings by Great Old Masters, Print Collections on numerous Universal, National, and other subjects, Piano by Collard, Old French Clock, the Fittings of the Library and Two Print Rooms, Old English Sideboard, China, numerous Art and Antiquarian Items, rare First Edition of the Othello Press, Heraldry, &amp;c. The Engravings by Albert Dürer will be sold in one lot.

MR. C. RAWLEY CROSS, F.I.A., will

SELL the above by AUCTION, on the premises, CHICHESTER HOUSE, 12, ROCKLEY ROAD, SHEPHERD'S BUSH GREEN, LONDON, W., on WEDNESDAY and THURSDAY NEXT, APRIL 20th and 30th, at 1 o'clock punctually each day. Catalogues of AUCTIONEER, Ilchester House, Uxbridge Road Station, W.; and at Neal's Library, Rue de Rivoli, Paris. Private view, by cards only, this Saturday and next Monday, and public view next Tuesday (day before sale).

BLACKWOOD'S MAGAZINE.

No. 967.—MAY, 1896.—2s. 6d.

CONTENTS:—THE SOUTH AFRICAN PROBLEM.—HILDA STRAFFORD: A CALIFORNIAN STORY, by Beatrice Harraden.—AN OLD OXFORD COMMON-ROOM, by P. A. Wright-Henderson.—FATE IN THE FACE, by Louis Robinson.—AN UNCROWNED KING: A ROMANCE OF HIGH POLITICS.—THE WEST OF IRELAND.—RECENT CELTIC EXPERIMENTS IN ENGLISH LITERATURE.—DREAM-TRACKED IN THE TRANSVAAL.—LECKY'S "DEMOCRACY AND LIBERTY."—AS THE SEASONS CHANGE, by "A Son of the Marshes."—WHAT DOES THE OPPOSITION MEAN?

WILLIAM BLACKWOOD &amp; SONS, EDINBURGH AND LONDON.

THE NEW REVIEW.

Edited by W. E. HENLEY.

ONE SHILLING MONTHLY. CONTENTS—MAY.

MR. RHODES and the CAPE PARLIAMENT.
By A TEN YEARS' RESIDENT IN THE CAPE COLONY
MR. CHAMBERLAIN'S INHERITANCE. By E. B. IWAN MULLER
A CONTEMPORARY ..... By GEORGE FLEMING MADE IN GERMANY.—V.

THE CINEMATOGRAPH ..... By O. WINTER

BEN JONSON ..... By T. E. BROWN

THE PRIVILEGE of the PATIENT ..... By L. H.

AN IRISH PEASANT WOMAN ..... By KATHARINE TYRAN HINKSON

THE DEMON LAMP ..... By HARRY MARILLIER

THE AGRICULTURAL MUDDLE ..... By P. ANDERSON GRAHAM

THE MOTHER of JOHN ..... By EDWIN PUGH

London: WM. HEINEMANN, 21, Bedford Street, W.C.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S LIST.

THE TEMPLE BAR MAGAZINE.

Now ready, price One Shilling.

CONTENTS FOR MAY, 1896.

- I. LIMITATIONS. Chaps. VII., VIII.
- II. ARTHUR HUGH OLOUGH.
- III. THE PAINTER.
- IV. LOVE on the ROAD.
- V. CAMBRIDGE, the EVERYTHING.
- VI. A LONDON SPARROW.
- VII. PAMPHLETS.
- VIII. ON the CHILTERN.
- IX. A BLACK FOREST LORELEI.
- X. A ROYAL PLAYTHING.
- XI. THE MISADVENTURES of an AMERICAN PRINCESS.
- XII. IN THOMAS HARDY'S COUNTRY.
- XIII. THE PAINTERS of ROMANTICISM.

IMMEDIATELY.

RICHARD BRINSLEY SHERIDAN.

A BIOGRAPHY.

By WILLIAM FRASER RAE.

Largely derived from New Sources.

With an Introduction by Sheridan's Great Grandson, the MARQUESS of DUFFERIN and AVA, K.P., G.O.B.
With Portraits. 2 vols., demy 8vo, 28s.

IMMEDIATELY.

WOMEN IN ENGLISH LIFE.

By GEORGIANA HILL,

Author of "A History of English Dress," &c.

With Frontispieces. 2 vols., demy 8vo, 28s.

NEW NOVELS AT ALL THE LIBRARIES AND BOOKSELLERS.

NOW READY.

LORD HEVER.

By PERCY HURLBURD,

Author of "The Romance of Shere Mote," &c.

In 2 vols., crown 8vo, 12s.

NOW READY.

GIFTS AND WEIRDS.

By LILY PERKS,

Author of "A Late Springtime," &c.

In one vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

"A readable tale."—Globe.

"There is not a little skill in the presentment of character. Orkney scenery is well done, and the conversation is bright."—Manchester Guardian.

"An agreeable and pleasantly written story."—Scotsman.

NOW READY.

THE INDIAN UNCLE.

By LESLIE KEITH, Author of "Lisbeth," &c.

In one vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

"A novel of healthy sentiment and of a quiet, well-sustained interest that makes it always enjoyable."—Scotsman.

NOW READY.

MISS DRUMMOND'S DILEMMA.

By R. RAMSAY.

In one vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

"An interesting story. The book amply repays reading."—Full Mail Gazette.

W. H. MALLOCK'S WORKS.

IN an ENCHANTED ISLAND.

A Visit to Cyprus in 1889. Third Edition. Crown 8vo, with Frontispiece, 6s.

THE OLD ORDER CHANGED.

New and Cheaper Edition, with Frontispiece, crown 8vo, 6s.

SOCIAL EQUALITY.

A Short Study in a Missing Science. Second Edition. Crown 8vo, 6s.

ATHEISM and the VALUE of LIFE.

Crown 8vo, 6s.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington Street
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

FROM A. & C. BLACK'S LIST.

CHRISTIANITY and HISTORY.

By ADOLF HARNAOK.

Translated, with the Author's sanction,

By THOMAS BAILEY SAUNDERS,

With an Introductory Note.

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 1s. 6d. net.

THE GREAT DIDACTIC of JOHN AMOS COMENIUS.

Now for the First Time Englished.

With Introductions, Biographical and Historical,

By M. W. KEATINGE.

Large crown 8vo, cloth, price 7s. 6d.

ARTISTIC and SCIENTIFIC TAXIDERMY and MODELLING

A Manual of Instruction in the Methods of Preserving and Reproducing the Correct Form of all Natural Objects, including a Chapter on the Treatment of Foliage.

By MONTAGU BROWNE, F.G.S., F.Z.S.,

Curator of the Leicester Corporation Museum and Art Gallery.

With 22 Full-page Illustrations and 11 Illustrations in Text.
Demy 8vo, buckram, price 21s.

CLASSES AND MASSES;

Or, Wealth, Wages, and Welfare in the United Kingdom.

A Handbook of Social Facts for Political Thinkers and Speakers.

By W. H. MALLOCK.

Crown 8vo, cloth, Illustrated, price 3s. 6d.

STRIKES AND SOCIAL PROBLEMS.

By J. SHIELD NICHOLSON, M.A., D.Sc.,

Professor of Political Economy in the University of Edinburgh.

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 3s. 6d.

FATHER ARCHANGEL OF SCOTLAND,

And other Essays.

By R. B. CUNNINGHAME GRAHAM,

Author of "Notes on the District of Menteith," and

GABRIELA CUNNINGHAME GRAHAM,

Author of "Santa Teresa, her Life and Times."

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 4s. 6d.

A WOMAN WITH A FUTURE.

By Mrs. ANDREW DEAN,

Author of "The Grasshoppers."

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 3s. 6d.; paper covers, price 2s. 6d.

OH, WHAT a PLAGUE is LOVE!

By KATHARINE TYNAN,

Author of "An Isle in the Water."

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 3s. 6d.

GOBELIN GRANGE.

By HAMILTON DRUMMOND.

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 6s.

A QUESTION OF DEGREE.

By CAROLINE FOTHERGILL,

Author of "The Comedy of Cecilia."

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 3s. 6d.

AN ODD SITUATION.

By STANLEY WATERLOO,

Author of "A Man and a Woman."

Crown 8vo, paper covers, price 2s. 6d.; cloth, price 3s. 6d.

LONDON: A. & C. BLACK, SOHO SQUARE.

MACMILLAN & CO.'S NEW BOOKS

8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

PERSONAL CHARACTER-

ISTICS from FRENCH HISTORY. By Baron FERDINAND ROTHSCHILD, M.P. With Portraits. DAILY CHRONICLE.—"His 'biographical sketches' are, in fact, 'character sketches' that would do honour to a practical illustrateur. His portraits of Louis XIV. and XV. are masterly."

THREE NEW NOVELS.

Crown 8vo, 6s. each volume.

The Successful Romantic Story by a New Writer.

The COURTSHIP of MORRICE

BUCKLER. A Romance. By A. E. W. MASON, Author of "A Romance of Wastdale."

Mr. H. D. TRAILL, in the GRAPHIC of March 21, says: "A fine stirring narrative it is.....A gallant and chivalrous story cast in a period and among scenes of which I, at least, am never tired of reading."

NEW NOVEL BY F. MARION CRAWFORD.

ADAM JOHNSTONE'S SON.

By F. MARION CRAWFORD.

NEW NOVEL BY SARA JEANNETTE DUNCAN.

HIS HONOR and a LADY.

By SARA JEANNETTE DUNCAN. Illustrated by A. D. M'CORMICK.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.—"The story is full of admirable character-drawing.....Sara Jeannette Duncan's brilliant story."

Fourth Thousand.—8vo, 30s. net.

The LIFE of CARDINAL MAN-

NING, Archbishop of Westminster. By EDMUND SHERIDAN PURCELL. In 2 vols. With Portraits.

8vo, buckram, 10s. 6d.

THE BAMBOO GARDEN. By

A. B. FREEMAN-MITFORD, C.B. Illustrated by ALFRED PARSONS.

EVERSLEY SERIES.—New Volumes.

THE POETICAL WORKS of

WILLIAM WORDSWORTH. Edited by WILLIAM KNIGHT. To be completed in 16 volumes. Vols. I. and II. Globe 8vo, 6s. each.

GLOBE.—"There appears to be no doubt that, when finished, this issue of the works of Wordsworth will, for fulness and accuracy, hold the field."

32mo, 3s.

ART and HUMANITY in HOMER.

By WILLIAM CRANSTON LAWTON.

32mo, 3s.

THE VOICE and SPIRITUAL

EDUCATION. By HIRAM COORSON, LL.D., Professor of English Literature in the Cornell University.

ENGLISH CITIZEN SERIES.

Second Edition, crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

THE STATE in its RELATION to EDUCATION.

By HENRY CRAIK, C.B.

Crown 8vo, 10s. 6d.

DOCUMENTS ILLUSTRATIVE

of ENGLISH CHURCH HISTORY. Compiled from Original Sources by HENRY GEE, B.D., F.S.A., and WILLIAM JOHN HARDY, F.S.A.

Demy 8vo, 21s.

STUDIES in ANCIENT HIS-

TORY. The Second Series. Comprising an Inquiry into the Origin of Exogamy. By the late JOHN FERGUSON M'LENNAN. Edited by his WIDOW and ARTHUR PLATT.

Demy 8vo, 12s. net.

THE THEORY of SOUND. By

JOHN WILLIAM STRUTT, BARON RAYLEIGH, Sc.D., F.R.S., Honorary Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge. In 2 vols. Vol. II. Second Edition, Revised and Enlarged.

Demy 8vo, 16s. net.

A DICTIONARY of CHEMICAL

SOLUBILITIES, INORGANIC. By ARTHUR MES-SINGER COMEY, Ph.D., formerly Professor of Chemistry, Tufts College.

ENGLISH CLASSICS.—New Volumes.

Globe 8vo, 2s. 6d.

CHOSEN ENGLISH: Selections

from Wordsworth, Byron, Shelley, Lamb, Scott. Prepared, with Short Biographies and Notes, for the Use of Schools, by A. ELLIS, B.A.

MACMILLAN & CO., LIMITED, LONDON.

SATURDAY, APRIL 25, 1896.

No. 1251, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

My Confidences. An Autobiographical Sketch addressed to my Descendants. By Frederick Locker-Lampson. (Smith, Elder & Co.)

It has been known for some time past that Mr. Augustine Birrell was engaged upon the production of a volume of autobiographic and other fragments, entrusted to him by the late Mr. Locker-Lampson, for publication in behoof of the writer's posterity. In the prevailing dearth the announcement was felt to be exhilarating: indeed, "a thing to thank God on." Those of us whose palates were still reminiscent of the flavour of "My Guardian Angel," "Mr Doo's Chamber of Horrors," and other choice morsels of a certain delectable olio of prose and verse published under the title of Patchwork by Mr. Locker-Lampson in 1879, could not but look forward with a pleasant impatience to the appearance of a literary banquet of rare and exquisite quality—a veritable feast of fat things full of marrow, and of wines on the lees well refined. And now that flagon and dish stand before us to be tasted and judged à discrétion, the present writer at least is fain to confess that his largest expectations are here realised to the uttermost, and that the dainties displayed are such as must satisfy even the fastidious and seasoned epicure. My Confidences is, indeed, a book wherein an affluent humour, now sportive, now gravely tender, blends with a shrewd, kindly wisdom, and a keen though unvenomed wit, to form a style of unique idiosyncratic charm. Its pages brim and run over with delicious laughter—a laughter none the less sweet because of its occasional neighbourhood to tears. In his Lyrics Frederick Locker had revealed himself as the poet of society, singing the hearts of London folk out to their face; here, as in Patchwork, he shows at once as the humorist who, with a stroke of his wizard's rod, turns to favour and to prettiness the dull follies and ugly foibles of his fellow-men, and as the steadfast lover and bold, persuasive advocate of all that is true, honest, pure, lovely, and of good report. In the words of the old Guardian:

"There are mixed in his talk so many pleasant ironies, that things which deserve the severest language are made ridiculous instead of odious, and you see everything in the most good-natured aspect it can bear."

It has been well said (Chambers' Encyclopædia, s.v. Irony) that

"the calm retrospect of an unembittered age, no longer disturbed by the passions of the actor, is ever tinged with a genial sense of the dumb irony of things, as it recognises at last that life has been little more than a vain pursuit of the phantoms of youth."

But if this be so with old age in general, how much more true is it of those who, owing to the peculiar mixture of the elements within them, have all their life long been haunted with a sense, often overwhelming in its force, that

"we are such stuff
As dreams are made on, and our little life
Is rounded with a sleep"?

That such was Frederick Locker's case we might fairly conjecture from his writings, had not he himself removed all room for doubt upon the point. This is how he describes what he was during his first year at school:

"I had always been rather queer, and morbid, and introspective; but about this time [his ninth year] these tendencies had become more apparent. At school I would get away from my playmates and sit alone, while they jeered at me for doing so, and said I was mad. . . . Even at that time I lived in a little world of my own—the dells and valleys of dreamland, where my blue devils danced very funnily, but in an elfish sort of way. . . . Yes, before I was nine years old I had become pretty well acquainted with the raw-head-and-crossbones feeling. Even then a mystery and a burden oppressed me. . . . the sense of tears in mortal things and of the transitory nature of everything took, and has ever since kept, possession of me. The Veiled Figure with his reversed torch was a presence, though a fitful one and a shadowy. . . . Even then the little child would have been able to appreciate the heart-piercing pathos of that passage where the poor heathen contrasts the revival of the woods and fields after seeming death with the sleep of man that knows no waking:

"Ah, me! the mallows, dead in the gardens
drear!

Ah, the green parsley, the thriving tufts of dill!—

These again shall rise, shall live in the coming year.

"But we men in our pride, we in wisdom and strength—

We, if once we die, dead in the womb of earth,
Sleep the sleep that wakes not—sleep of infinite length."

And yet there was a mocking spirit in my sad thoughts. And you, my dear son, or son's son, who may kindly read these pages, must understand that, with all this morbidity and inclination for reverie, I was in some ways an exceptionally lively little boy, interested in many things. The child was father of the man in his appreciation of jest and whim and nonsense, and yet in having an imperfect sense of the ridiculous."

This sense of the irony of life was accompanied, in the case of the growing youth, with a habit of keen, unsparing observation of his fellow-men, joined with a humorous lenity and long-sufferance born of introspection. Frederick Locker belonged by nature to the class described by Hazlitt as "moral historians rather than moral philosophers": that is to say, he shrank from dogmatizing as to what human life ought to be, preferring simply to observe and inquire, both from around him and within, what that life is and has been.

"The philosophy of life," he writes (p. 144), "has always been my favourite cult. . . . The observation of my fellow-creatures—their fancies, their peculiarities, their virtues and their weaknesses—has, almost unconsciously to myself, been one of my favourite diversions in life, and one of my most remunerative, for I do not like my species the worse for it."

Locker's faculty of observation was keen: he had a devouring eye. Moreover—and the like is true of all humorists—its activity does not seem to have been checked by any tenderness which he might happen to feel for the object of his study. Flaws, foibles, and frailties, in one and all alike, were scrutinised by him with strictness and registered with fidelity. Not a little in these Confidences reminds us of the uncompromising touches in Charles Lamb's portrayal of his brother John, or of Edward Fitzgerald's speculations as to what feature in his "mother's fine face betrayed what was not so good in her character." We remember, as we read, how in the depths of George Eliot's observant eye there might, it is said, occasionally be discovered a cold, subtle, and unconscious cruelty of expression. However, this operation of waking eye and prying mind was, in all four instances alike, if not suspended, at least tempered and mitigated by the stirring heart within them, or, in other words, by the human sympathy that comes of an introspective habit; and thus, instead of breeding sheer thin-lipped wit and satire—cold, insolent, and lacerating—it bore fruit in gracious laughter and gentle irony—παραινέσις ὕβρις—that chastened or disciplined insolence in which, Aristotle tells us, εὐπραγελία or urbane humour consists. Surveying "the twists and cracks in our poor earthenware," these writers were the more readily touched, as not being themselves the finest Parian, to conscious fellowship with their coevals*; whence friendly smiles and unembittered tears. A sample of Frederick Locker's refined irony must now be quoted:

"In the days I am treating of a good many of the more orthodox members of the Church of England held a sure and certain opinion as to eternal punishment. During early-middle life my mother went very far indeed in this direction, for she believed that only a few people would be saved, that the road to everlasting punishment was extremely broad and very crowded; yet, wonderful to say, she did not seem dissatisfied that her children should increase in number. I believed she consoled her benevolent self, in an illogical way, with the idea that her acquaintances—Mrs. A's, or Mrs. B's, or Mrs. C's—numerous broods would probably be all lost, and that the necessary average would thus be kept up. What made it most curious was, that the natural woman was strongly opposed to all this. However, it was only during her last years that she changed her opinions. She did entirely change them, and probably, like many other good people, would have argued as unreasonably on the one side as she had done on the other. My mother had always had a strong human feeling, and this broadened as she aged. I well remember, when her poor speech was affected and the range of her vocabulary very much restricted, her saying that, such was the infinite mercy of the Eternal, she firmly believed that every human being would ultimately be saved; and then she haltingly added: 'Yes—even—Lord—Hertford!' Just at that time Lord Hertford was the typically wicked nobleman; and my dear mother had a great interest in and consideration for the aristocracy of her own country. My mother's worldliness was one of the many forms of her ingenuousness."

* See "George Eliot: A Minor Prophet."

Frederick Locker was born at Greenwich Hospital in 1821. His father, Edward Hawke Locker, was educated at Eton, and had been successively a clerk in the Naval Office, Under-Secretary to the Board of Control for India (and subsequently to the Board of Naval Inquiry), Civil Secretary to the Fleet (1804) in the East Indies and the Mediterranean, and, lastly, Secretary (1819) and shortly afterwards Civil Commissioner of Greenwich Hospital; where Frederick's grandfather also, Captain William Locker, Nelson's revered instructor and friend, had lived as Lieutenant-Governor during the latter years of his life. Frederick Locker's mother was Eleanor, daughter of Jonathan Boucher, the well-known Vicar of Epsom, who had passed much of his youth in America, and while there had formed a close friendship with George Washington—a friendship dissolved owing to political differences in 1774. "I have several of Washington's letters to my grandfather," says Mr. Locker-Lampson, "which I lent to Thackeray when he was writing Esmond." [The Virginians is, of course, the novel meant.] The Lockers were an old stock, long settled at Bromley, in Middlesex, who had lost their property by their loyalty to the Stuart cause. A love of letters was hereditary in the family. John Locker, Barrister and Commissioner in Bankruptcy, "a gentleman eminent for curiosity and literature," according to Dr. Johnson, left behind him a fine edition of Bacon's works almost ready for press; and Edward Locker, besides printing accounts of his Spanish tour and mission to Elba—he had carried despatches to the Duke and to Napoleon—began a history of George III.'s reign, and also a biographical history of the navy, which latter he curtailed and published as a single volume, entitled Memoirs of Naval Commanders. Captain William Locker, too, though no writer, had, during fifty years' seafaring, contrived to acquire considerable acquaintance with literature, for which he inherited a reverence not only from father but from mother, a sister of Benjamin Stillingfleet, the original "bluestocking." This brave, simple-minded man was universally beloved. One Sunday in 1833, when William IV. was passing through the Painted Hall at Greenwich Hospital, he stopped before the picture of Captain Locker, and, turning to Sir Richard Keats, the Governor, said: "There's the best man I ever knew." "Many years before, when the King was Prince William Henry, the Captain had the temerity to reprove him for swearing, at which accomplishment his Majesty was first rate, even for an admiral." In his father's apartment at the Hospital Frederick Locker grew up amid refined and delightful surroundings—many books, choice water-colours by Lawrence, Wilkie, Turner, Paul Sandby, and others, some good statuary and artistic furniture, and a number of portraits in oil, including an admirable picture, by Hogarth, of David and Mrs. Garrick. Mr. Locker-Lampson lingers fondly over his recollections of "the snug little nest where his affections were fledged"—over the nursery ("Powder'em Castle"), where hung a mezzotint of Puck on a toadstool, said to be the image of pretty, freakish little Freddy; the schoolroom or "skullery"; the colonnade, where he used to play fives with Hobbes, the Liliputian sentry; the chapel, with its indescribable and penetrating atmosphere of fust diffused by the pensioners; the terrace, the five-foot walk, and the abounding river. He recalls the garden, a wild-grown, weedy place, transmuted by childish memories into a paradise; the poultry-yard, where dorkings and bantams led a life chequered with many vicissitudes—perils from paddy (rice in the husk), and perils from "pip, roup, gapes, bumblefoot and other pestilences"; also the laundry-yard, where dwelt Strawberry the donkey with its foal Dustyfoot; Rough and Tough the pony; and Argus (flos canum), the big black and white Newfoundland. He describes sundry notabilities of the Hospital—Tom Flanders the pensioner, alias "Harry the Eighth," "vif, mdo et flamboyant"; Captain Orlando Felix, his father's friend, who would play at being a showman in Wombwell's menagerie; and the hospital chaplain, Dr. Coke, R.N., "a man of purple cheer—a rosy man, right plump to see," who had on one occasion been overheard to allay after this fashion the ghostly scruples of a dying captain: "Don't concern yourself about that, my dear sir—that's my affair!" Nay, best of all, he relates the story of his first love affair, even confiding to us the name of his goddess—"Miss Adelaide Amy Trefusis, of Ferrer's Court, St. Mary Oray"—with an amorous precision reminding us of Rousseau and his "Louise Eléonore de Warens, demoiselle de la Tour de Pil, noble et ancienne famille de Vevai." Over this entanglement and its tragic dénouement at the ball—when calling distractedly for brandy, he is plied with negus and offers of "a leetle mossal o' biled fowl" by a bleary-eyed and knock-kneed but fatherly waiter—over this, and many another sorrow and joy of his youth, we would fain tarry awhile, did not imperious exigencies of time and space hurry us rapidly ahead.

After seven desolating years of pupildom, during which he passed through no fewer than six schools, each more dismal than the last, Frederick Locker found himself upon a counting-house stool in Mincing Lane, only, however, to be removed therefrom after a twelvemonth as hopelessly inefficient. At length, in November, 1842, having served previously for a while at Somerset House, he was transferred to the Admiralty, and placed as a junior in Lord Haddington's office. Here he worked under three successive chief clerks, known officially as "Barabbas," "Judas," and "Ananias," and was appointed by Sir James Graham (First Lord in the Aberdeen Ministry) to the responsible offices of deputy reader and précis-writer to the Board. Rising by seniority to the second class, however, he found himself relegated to the Pension branch, where the work was mere dull routine; and, his health soon after failing, he retired. Meanwhile, in May, 1849, being ill, he obtained long leave from the office and went to Paris, where he met Lady Charlotte Bruce, daughter of the collector of the Elgin Marbles. Her he married on July 4, 1850; and while she lived—she died in 1872—he moved constantly in brilliant society at home, and in Rome and Paris. In 1857 he published a thin volume—"certain sparrow-flights of song called London Lyrics." In 1874 he remarried, his second wife—whose name he adopted—being Hannah Jane, only daughter of Sir Curtis Miranda Lampson, of Rowfant, Sussex. Lyra Elegantiarum, his famous collection of verses d'occasion, had appeared in 1867; and it was now (1879) followed by Patchwork, a miscellany of verse and prose, original and selected. Sir Curtis, dying, left Rowfant to his son-in-law; and here Frederick Locker passed the quiet evening of his days, and died on May 30, 1895.

Up to the event of their author's first marriage these Confidences observe a sequence more or less historical; but at this point the thread of the story abruptly breaks off, and we find instead a series of brief essays, eighteen in number, founded most of them on some incident, usually trivial, in the life of the writer. The diverse character of these essays may be gathered from their titles, a few of which we give here: "My Mother-in-Law," "Poetry—a Confession," "Bric-à-Brac," "The Shakspeare Folio," "The Philobiblon," "The Barbarians" (a diatribe on the ways of smart people), "Mrs. Branaghan," "Two Suburban Graves (giving an account of the Sayers-Heenan fight)," "A Charity Breakfast," "Travelling Fifty Years Agone," and "Silvio's Complaint": the last a triumph of sly ironic humour, in which the elderly poet announces his need of a female companion—a sort of uxorial supplement—complaisant, self-denying, devoted, and meekly responsive, and sets forth at large the rare qualifications indispensable to the position. Following the essays come twelve "Biographical Sketches"—of Thackeray, George Eliot, Dickens, Anthony Trollope, Leigh Hunt, Dean Stanley, Carlyle, Hayward, Lady William Russell, Whyte-Melville, Sir Curtis Lampson, and Mr. James Gibbs, bookbinder and printseller. Thus it will be seen that there is in My Confidences an abundance not only of self-portraiture and autobiographic detail, but of criticism as well—admirable criticism, both of life at large, and of authors and their books.

In endeavouring to give a taste of the quality of these pages, we find ourselves embarrassed by the wealth of material at our disposal. Of Anthony Trollope Mr. Locker-Lampson writes:

"Hirsute and taurine of aspect, he would glare at you from behind fierce spectacles. His ordinary tones had the penetrative capacity of two people quarrelling, and his voice would ring through and through you, and shake the windows in their frames, while all the time he was most amiably disposed towards you under his waistcoat. To me his viso sciolto and bluff geniality were very attractive, and so were his gusty denunciations, but most attractive of all was his unselfish nature. He may quite well have been the most generous man of letters, of mark, since Walter Scott.

"Trollope had a furious hatred of shams, and toadyism, and he sometimes recognised and resented these weaknesses where they would hardly have been detected by an ordinary observer. He resembled in this respect the Prince de Ligne, who, after making strenuous, but almost fruitless, endeavours to create a piece of water in his demesne, was told that a man had drowned himself in it. 'Bah!' exclaimed he, 'c'était un flatteur!'

Of Abraham Hayward we read:

"He was not a personage of prodigious importance, but merely a man of mark—not a man of great mark. He was not a genius, or a distinguished scholar, nor was he politically eminent, but he had an assured position in the great literary and social world. His aspirations were not lofty, but still they must have been difficult of attainment. It was his desire to live with the great, and at the same time to be a thorough man of letters; and he succeeded in both ambitions.

"Hayward had a vigorous, but not an original, mind. He had little wit and less humour; but he had much mental energy, a great faculty in the use of his very powerful memory, a marked individuality, and last, not least, a passion for society. Then he had some fine qualities: he was a plucky little fellow; he was honourable to his opponents and faithful to his party and friends.

"Hayward was disliked by the bulk of the members of the Athenæum Club; indeed, he was a man generally abused. There is no doubt that he was sometimes as unattractive as his imperfect condition here below permitted him to be; yet I really liked him, when he allowed me to do so, and his friends liked him. As I have already said, puny little Hayward showed a good deal of pluck on more than one occasion, and this made many people exceedingly angry. Nothing annoys us so much as to hear of a fine trait in any one whom we cordially dislike.

"Hayward was not without his foibles: who is? You might have gathered from his conversation that he was an ardent worshipper of female beauty—that he had suffered; also that he had had his substantial consolations. As a sardonic and senile Adonis, he spoke mysteriously of 'Caroline Norton' and other fair ones, not forgetting Mrs. Langtry. He had an idea that in London mere literary distinction was no passport to good society, and he enforced his opinion with a reference to himself. 'I am now in the best society, but it was only by breaking one of the Ten Commandments that I got there.'

Lastly, take this pretty little idyll, so gracefully told. The writer attends the burial of James Gibbs's wife at Barnstead:

"It was a walking funeral, about a quarter of a mile to the churchyard. I was paired off with a slim niece, who was general servant to the apothecary—a taciturn little girl, with an obliquity of vision—a 'silent nymph with curious eye,' who made a curtsy every time I spoke to her. She was very meanly clad, her old and soiled garments skimpy yet baggy, and looking all the shabbier from their admixture and contrast with crisply new crape trimmings. She carried a prayer-book, a clean and neatly folded pocket handkerchief, and a broken parasol, which she would have been glad to use, but that it did not open. I remember the handle was roughly carved into the effigy of a very beaky bird. As we passed slowly along the dusty lane a pair of thrushes were singing their hearts out, and I whispered, pointing to her parasol handle: 'A bird in the hand is not worth two in the bush.' She looked up at me, made her little bob, and her grave young face relaxed at once; she smiled with timorous archness, as any little princess might have smiled, but she betrayed her cockney bringing-up when she murmured something about the sparrars. This was not nearly all, for a day or two afterwards I received a small box packed with hay, containing a little old earthenware mug of the most primitive manufacture, decorated in colours, with a picture of a country inn and the sign, 'The Bird in the Hand.' You may suppose I was much pleased with her little present. If the next Sunday happened to be her Sunday out and a bright day, she need not have suffered from the glare. It has not been my lot to share the same dog's-eared hymnal with so many lasses that I do not feel a little sentimental about this poor girl."

"Try and think kindly of Pierrot"—so runs the closing appeal of My Confidences. It is surely a modest request. Kindly? nay, rather with affection and sincerest gratitude, for his tender and moving, no less than mirthful and witty pages!

THOMAS HUTCHINSON.

The Voyage of Bran, Son of Febal. An old Irish Saga. Now first edited, with Translation, Notes, &c., by Kuno Meyer. With an Essay upon the Irish Vision of the Happy Other-world, by Alfred Nutt. (David Nutt.)

WHEN the stray seeker after knowledge tries to learn, for the first time, some little about Irish literature, he finds himself in a state of strange perplexity; for, on the one hand, he will be told by some that no such literature exists, while others, whose erudition is commingled with patriotism, will insist that the Irish Saga compares in strength and beauty most favourably with the poetry of even Ancient Greece. These conflicting opinions cannot both be right; and the inquirer who has a respect for either is fain to conclude that neither is right, but that the truth lies somewhere midway between them.

I, certainly, have read with genuine enjoyment the eerie tale of Bran's voyage from his—and my own—country to a happy other-world, where want and sorrow and death have been pleasantly got rid of. Surely, if there is anything interesting at all in literature, it is this old-world striving of thought, like the song of an imprisoned bird, in notes none the less sweet because unavailing, towards a distant world other than that which hems it in. In southern climes and under bright skies that other-world was located in the firmament of the heavens; but in the little sea-girt land of Erin, where the sky is oftenest overcast with clouds, there was something grander and more beautiful than the heavens for men to wonder at—this was the great ocean lying westward, un navigated and unknown. Out over the far horizon the fancy of the old Irish poets pictured their happy other-world.

Concerning the antiquity of the poem, Prof. Kuno Meyer comes to the conclusion that it was originally written down—probably from far earlier orally preserved material—in the seventh century. This opinion is also held by Prof. Zimmer, and may now be considered as established almost beyond doubt.

"From this original," we are told, "sometime in the tenth century, a copy was made, in which the language of the poetry, protected by the laws of metre and assonance, was left almost intact, while the prose was subjected to a process of partial modernisation, which most affected the verbal forms. From this tenth-century copy all our MSS. are derived."

No trouble has seemed too much for Prof. Meyer in making his text, notes, and translation as perfect as possible. He has made rough paths easy for those who come after him. The old tale, which is now for the first time edited and fully translated, has come down to us, we are told, "in seven MSS. of different age and varying value." These treasures are deposited in various libraries: in the Bodleian, the British Museum, Trinity College, Dublin, and the Royal Irish Academy. The editor has consulted each of them, one supplying the most perfect reading of an isolated passage which was defective in the others, and from the whole has compiled as perfect a text as accurate knowledge combined with infinite care could accomplish. Perhaps, in the case of the translation, excessive accuracy is sometimes a fault; for one cannot help feeling that a little looseness might have sometimes resulted in clearer meaning—as, for example, in the following stanzas:

"An ancient tree there is with blossoms,
On which the birds call to the Hours.
'Tis in harmony it is their wont
To call together every Hour.

"The host race along Mag Mon,
A beautiful game, not feeble,
In a variegated land over a mass of beauty
They look for neither decay nor death."

Such renderings as these make one pause to offer up a prayer of thankfulness that the Psalms of David were not done into English in an era of too exact scholarship.

In the Irish text one cannot but be struck by the marvellous perfection of the rhythm and of the rhyme, which is far more developed than might be expected, considering the remote period in which it was written. The rhythm of ancient Irish poetry carries with it the same subtle undercurrent of mystery and sadness which is characteristic of Irish music.

The Imram Brain is supplemented by an appendix containing legends, taken from various MSS., with English translations, which tell of the conception and marvellous adventures of Morgain the Fair, the Irish Arthur—differing, however, from the English hero in the happy possession of a most loving and faithful wife, Dubh Lacha. These tales are interesting not only to the student of philology, but also to all lovers of literature; and it is a rare boon to have such an anthology of Irish poetry collected together now for the first time in one volume, with the advantages of reliable texts, careful editing, and exhaustive notes.

Having thus glanced briefly over the earlier portions of the volume, I turn with pleasure to the first section of Mr. Nutt's essay, "The Happy Other-world." The second section, which we are promised in a subsequent volume, will deal with "The Celtic Doctrine of Re-birth."

Mr. Nutt in his preface sets before us some of the difficulties which the student of Irish antiquities must encounter.

"There exists no history of Irish literature; but little of the preliminary work has been accomplished, and that little is mainly the work of one or two men, and lacks the sanction of a general consensus of expert approval. The student must thus form his own theory as to the date and mutual relation of the literary monuments whence our knowledge of that antiquity is derived."

In examining "the historical and literary historical background of Bran's voyage," the writer has been led probably into far wider fields than he originally intended; and if he has not actually now produced a history of Irish literature—an undertaking for which he is eminently fitted—he has made a most important contribution towards that work. His investigations are, as he tells us—

"based upon texts which cannot be later than the eleventh century of our era, and may be as early as the eighth or seventh century, in the form under which their substance has come down to us.

"They form part of an extensive literature, preserved to later ages under conditions which yield clues to its origin, nature, and mode of development."

An allusion has been made in The Voyage of Bran to a poem entitled "The Conception of Mongan," which tale is given, both in the Irish text and in translation, by Prof. Meyer. Mr. Nutt, is of opinion that Bran's visit to the other-world, as originally told, did not contain the Mongan episode, but that it is somewhat clumsily foisted in. But the question arises, when was this allusion originally made? With reference to this question, it is necessary to observe here that there is also in the poem a prophecy of the coming of Christ, and that the mention of Mongan is made almost in the same breath as that of "a great birth, that will not be in a lofty place." The proximity of the two interpolations is a very strong proof that they were inserted by the same person and at the same time; and it would seem to afford an interesting example of the blending of older traditions with a newer faith, in the mind of the scribe who has transcribed the poem in the form which has been handed down to posterity.

The following is Mr. Nutt's clear and concise summary of Bran's presentment to the happy other-world:

"It may be reached by mortals specially summoned by denizens of the land: the summons comes from a damsel, whose approach is marked by magically sweet music, and who bears a magic apple-branch. She describes the land under the most alluring colours—its inhabitants are free from decay and death, they enjoy in full measure a simple round of sensuous delights, the land itself is one of thrice fifty distant isles, lying westward of Ireland. Access to the whole group is guarded by 'Manannan, son of Lir.' The first island touched at is the Island of Joy (where one of the hero's companions is left behind), the second the land of women. The chief of the women draws Bran to shore with a magic clew, and keeps him with her for as it seems to him a year. Longing seizes one of the mortal band to revisit Ireland. All the warriors accompany him, but are warned against setting foot on land. On returning to Ireland they find they have been absent for centuries, and the one who, in defiance of the warning, touches earth is forthwith reduced to ashes. Bran tells his adventures, and disappears again from mortal ken."

In contradistinction to those poems, wherein the Irish Elysium lies over the seas, is another group in which the wonderland is assigned to the earth beneath the sid or fairy hills. Prof. Zimmer surmises that after the introduction of Christianity the Pagan deities were relegated to the sid, and, at the same time, "the scenery, accessories, and attributes of the magic island were transferred to the realm of the sid folk." Mr. Nutt, however, is of opinion that the idea of an underground realm for the dead may have developed from the act of burial, but that in Ireland, as in Greece, "the under- is as old as the outer-conception of a land dwelt in by wise, powerful, and immortal beings."

Of the under-world group the Eithra Connla rivals the Imram Brain in antiquity, and resembles the latter in many respects. There is a female temptress, of course, to charm the hero Connla to the other world; she gives him an apple, "and this was his sole sustenance for a month; yet nothing was diminished of it." Finally, Connla disappears with the maiden in a ship of glass, and is never seen more.

I see no reason why the over-sea and underground other-worlds should not be originally of equal antiquity; for it must be always borne in mind, in dealing with prehistoric times, that even in the case of a small country like Ireland, the various tribes which inhabited it were farther off practically from one another than the great nations of the world in modern days. Thus it is only natural to expect that different legends of the other-world would grow up simultaneously, each conditioned by the environment in which it grew.

Mr. Nutt goes very fully into the growth and development of these legends, differing from Prof. Zimmer as to the extent of Scandinavian influence. The student of comparative religion and folk-lore will here find ample food for reflection; and this work deserves no less praise for the information now imparted than for what it is certain to lead to in the future.

It would be impossible in the brief space of this review to attempt a detailed criticism of Mr. Nutt's arguments, nor do I consider myself at all competent for such an undertaking; but, in my necessarily rapid survey of the volume, I could not fail to be struck by a remarkable similarity between the Old Irish poetry and that of the Old Testament. Of this many examples might be given; but one will suffice:

"He will be in the shape of every beast, both on the azure sea and upon land; he will be a dragon before hosts at the onset; he will be a wolf of every great forest."

In passing, it may be noticed that Prof. Meyer's translation of fross, which literally means "in a shower," into "onset," is somewhat strained; and the words, when read along with the second line, with which they form a parallelism, might be more aptly rendered "in the spray of the sea." There are many instances of such reiteration of the same idea, which have a distinctly Hebrew ring about them. These resemblances ought to be specially interesting to those persons who believe in a pre-Christian migration of Jews into Ireland.

The authors are to be congratulated upon their most scholarly and interesting contribution to the "Grimm Library"; and I am certain I shall not be alone in eagerly looking forward for the second volume of this number, in which Mr. Nutt promises to explain "the Celtic doctrine of rebirth." The value of the whole work will doubtless be enhanced as a work of reference by the addition of an exhaustive index. Perhaps a complete glossary of Celtic words might be too much to expect.

GEORGE NEWCOMEN.

AN EMISSARY OF CROMWELL IN FRANCE.

The Journal of Joachim Hans, containing his Escapes and Sufferings during his Employment by Oliver Cromwell in France, from November, 1653, to February, 1654. Edited from the MS. in the Library of Worcester College, Oxford, by O. H. Firth. (Fisher Unwin.)

MR. FIRTH is well known to all students of the Commonwealth period as a specialist in the knowledge of that important epoch; and in the curious and interesting record which he has published for the first time we have a lively illustration of the perils of the secret service under Cromwell. The author of this journal was a German engineer, who first obtained professional employment in England in 1649, and was afterwards engaged in Cromwell's Scotch campaign. In 1653 he was removed "from his professional duties in Scotland to play a part in one of the obscurest and least known episodes of Cromwell's foreign policy."

The relations between France and England during the early years of the Commonwealth were in a very unsettled condition. As Mr. Firth says:

"It was still uncertain whether England would ally itself with Spain against France, or with France against Spain. Charles II. was a pensioner at the French court. In 1649 Louis XIV. had prohibited the introduction into France of all woollen stuffs or silks manufactured in England, and the Republic had replied by forbidding the introduction into England of wines, woollen stuffs, and silks from France. French corsairs had made prey of English merchantmen, and English ships armed with letters of reprisal had retaliated on French commerce."

The civil struggle known as the war of the Fronde was then being waged in France, and the contingency of English intervention seemed more than once to be not only possible but probable. Especially was this the case during the final period of the strife, in which the Prince of Condé was the leader of the insurgents, and the city of Bordeaux the headquarters of the movements. Envoys were sent from this great commercial port

"to demand of the Commonwealth of England, as of a just and powerful state, assistance in men, money, and ships to support the city and commons of Bordeaux, now united with our lords the Princes; and not only to shelter them from the oppression and cruel vengeance which is in store for them, but also to effect their restoration to their ancient privileges, and to enable them to breathe a freer air than they have hitherto done."

We cannot help thinking that memories of the old connexion between Aquitaine and England were by no means extinct at this date, though it was exactly two centuries since Bordeaux had, very much to its distaste, been brought under the rule of Paris. The language of an agent of Condé is still more startling, by reason of the strangely modern spirit which it seems to breathe:

"What a great honour will it be for the Commonwealth of England, after it hath so happily and gloriously established the precious liberty at home, to send their helping hands unto their craving neighbours for the same, whose obligation for that shall be eternal, and the acknowledgment of it real and perfect."

It is evident that we must considerably modify our conceptions of the slight impression produced on the continent by the events of the English civil war, which it has been the fashion sharply to contrast with the propagandism of the French Revolution. In fact, the earlier period was by no means without striking anticipations of the latter. In Mr. Firth's words:

"There was a wide belief that the foreign policy of the English Republic was influenced by a general hostility to monarchy, and a general desire to propagate republican institutions in Europe, which found expression in various of the sayings and the intentions of the heads of the Commonwealth."

This spirit was, however, that of such men as Scot and Vane rather than of Cromwell, and there are few indications of it in the acts of the English Government after the latter's assumption of supreme power. "What he cared about was the condition of the French Protestants and the propagation of the Protestant religion." He despatched several messengers to France to ascertain the attitude of the Huguenots with regard to Condé's movement, which it was found they were by no means disposed to favour.

The mission of Hane took place shortly after the surrender of Bordeaux to the royal authority, and the termination of the war in Guienne in the autumn of 1653. Its object appears to have been to communicate with the French Protestants; but the matter is involved in considerable obscurity, and Hane's own journal is completely silent on the subject. It will, however, well repay perusal from its graphic details of the writer's personal adventures. No one could tell that this German soldier of fortune was not a born Englishman; and it is curious to notice how completely, in the course of his long residence in England, he had adopted the characteristic religious phraseology of the Puritans.

Whatever was the real purpose of his mission, it is clear that he was regarded as a very dangerous man by the French authorities. Three times was he arrested, and as often succeeded in the most extraordinary manner in making his escape; and all the time he was at large the pursuit against him was hot and keen. His first arrest was brought about through the instrumentality of a Scotchman, who had seen him with the English army at Edinburgh. He gives the following vivid description of the taunts to which he was subjected by his captors while being conveyed in a boat on the Garonne to Bordeaux:

"They contrived as it were a comidy or rather a tragedie, whereby they laboured to set forth to the life my future sufferings, introducing severall persons, whereof some acted the hangman's part, some the condemned prisoners, some bore other officers' parts making the mast of the boate for a payre of gallows, while I perforce was the sad subject of their hopes, I was to undergo both in my torture and finall execution, making continuall repetition of such lamentable cries and dullfull exprecions as I should use if I came to feeles the unsufferable torments of racking."

However, he managed to give the authorities at Bordeaux the slip before this threat could be carried into effect, and, as has been said, was equally successful on two subsequent occasions. The number of hairbreadth escapes which he represents himself as having had from his pursuers is almost past recounting, and some readers of a sceptical turn of mind may possibly imagine that the picture has been a little over-coloured. On one occasion he was concealed behind a wine-press while the premises all about were being searched from top to bottom; another time he hid himself for some days in a huge tub or wine-fat. He made several attempts to enter a ship at Bordeaux, but without success. He gives a by no means flattering sketch of his quarters in this city and their occupants while he was waiting for an opportunity of getting out of the country:

"I should have been contented and have counted myself happye might I but have enjoyed withall a kinde looke of my landlady once a weeke, but she was such an inveterate and malicious woman, descended as I thought of an infernall progeny, as that I never knew the like of her. Her humour was such that she would maunder all the weeke like a cursed dog, and if a straw crossed her the whole house trembled at her indignation, none, not the good-man of the house himselfe, daring to come into her presence till her fury was spent; and when she wanted other matter of scolding my poverty was the maine subject of her malice, because she perceived the recommendation of my freinds to proceed from a coole affection she respected me no better than a beggar that is maintained for God's sake, upraiding me dayly with the poore entertainment she gave me and threatening oft to tourne me out of doores."

Ultimately, after a fresh series of perils and escapes, Hane contrived to make his way across France to Rouen, where he was able to get on board an English ship.

"Now the Lord had tourned my mourning into joy and gladnesse againe, in granting me the sight of that day whereof I had many hundred times dispaired of before."

R. SKYMOUR LONG.

From North Pole to Equator. By A. E. Brehm. Translated from the German, and edited by Margaret and J. Arthur Thomson. (Blackie.)

WITHOUT being known as a scientific ornithologist, Brehm was an enthusiastic observer and collector. He travelled far and wide, and made careful notes of all he saw. The words "North Pole," however, in the above title is somewhat of a misnomer. Brehm did not forestall Nansen, and "Arctic Circle" would have been preferable. He died in 1884, after having written much and lectured largely on bird and animal life.

The volume before us originally consisted of a set of Brehm's lectures, collected into a volume and highly esteemed in Germany. The translation reads admirably, and the book ought to be popular in England. It will unquestionably turn into naturalists and travellers all the bolder spirits among boys. Brehm's descriptions are fascinating, his breadth of view great, his sympathy with all forms of life extreme. It is difficult to name any other modern naturalist who so appreciates animals, and can reproduce so pleasantly the charm of the wild countries where he observed their traits. In turning over these interesting pages, the reader comes upon numberless dainty vignettes of scenery. The Arctic tundra is as familiar to Brehm as the equatorial forest, and he causes his readers to realise and enter into both as his graceful pen runs on. At times he is too fanciful, too apt to confound folk-lore with descriptions from the life. His words on Siberia might be more or less applied to much of the book: "Even the most serious and honourable forest-folk sometimes mingle truth and fancy when they tell of the forests and wood-craft of Siberia." It must surely be a beautiful fancy that, off the Norwegian coast "in mid-winter, after the breeding places have been long left desolate," when a sea-bird feels stricken with death, "he hastens as long as his strength holds out, that he may, if possible, die in the place where he was cradled." The translators also confess their inability to discover any authority for the statement that at the end of May or in June the she-bear seeks out her older children, of two or even four years' growth, and compels them to do service as nurses. These stories and the like are manifestly folk-lore, the inchoate efforts of Siberian morality.

Sometimes, too, partly owing to the discoveries which have been made since Brehm wrote, his facts are precarious. Thus, the annual migration of the buffalo in North America is sufficiently doubtful. Nor does he tell his reader that the incalculable thousands of buffaloes to be met in old days towards the Rocky Mountains are now all but, if not quite, extinct, through man's wanton destructiveness. Ornithologists will look in vain for any news of the breeding-place of that interesting bird, the Curlew Sandpiper, although it might have been expected when the author discourses at length of the Lapland and Siberian birds and their nesting habits. Brehm seems to be rather inclined, also, to believe that the Egyptian ascan "kill without biting, by spitting or shooting its venom at its enemy." This reminds naturalists of Buffon's notion that the porcupine could shoot its quills.

When the reader has once abandoned the hope of finding exact scientific accounts of birds and animals in this book, he can make up his mind to enjoy what remains. The numerous pictures of travel are graphic; and Brehm, with poetic sensibility, soon becomes on close terms everywhere with birds and beasts. The miseries of night in the Tropics, when life is rendered almost worthless by the number of reptile and insect foes, are skilfully painted, and bid the reader acknowledge with thankfulness that he lives in a northern clime. A good deal has been written of late about ostriches, but it is possible to read Brehm's account of them with interest. Their omnivorous character is particularly pointed out, and will probably lead many a boy who has access to these birds in confinement to make unpleasant experiments with broken glass and old iron upon their powers of digestion. Brehm's relations must have been intimate with monkeys, so characteristic is his account of their daily life and habits. The monkeys of the Old World seem to him much superior in instinct and mind to those of America. He corroborates Herodotus in his story of the Trochilus, which acts as the crocodile's friend by flying into its open jaws and picking its teeth. Turning to marine migrations, he dwells upon their regularity in the case of many fish and aquatic animals. His descriptions of passing the Cataracts on the Nile are not at present without general interest; while the latter part of the book dwells upon the manners of the Ostiaks, Kirghiz, and Siberians. This leads to a discussion upon the treatment of the political exiles in the last-mentioned country, and shows that their lot is not so hard as is generally imagined. Brehm concludes with a pleasant chapter on Danubian ornithology.

With German particularity this book possesses a preface, prefatory note, introductory essay on naturalists, bibliography, notes, and a capital index to the whole. There are also eighty-three excellent engravings, which lend greater charm to a pleasant volume. The traveller and naturalist will at once be attracted to Brehm's work, and it must be allowed that these bright pictures of travel have formed a book of singular interest. It is, in short, well written, well printed, and well illustrated. Perhaps none of the subjects here treated are altogether novel; but they are skilfully presented in fresh and eloquent guise, and are worthy of the author's reputation. With Brehm it is possible to enjoy travel and animated nature in an armchair, without the trouble of searching for them in lands visited by the extremes of heat and cold, and haunted day and night with insect terrors.

M. G. WATKINS.

NEW NOVELS.

The Madonna of a Day. By L. Dougall. (Bentley.)

A Foreigner. By E. Gerard. (Blackwoods.)

A Point of Conscience. By Mrs. Hungerford. In 3 vols. (Chatto & Windus.)

Persis Yorke. By Sydney Christian. (Smith, Elder & Co.)

The Imagination of their Hearts: an Impression. By Michael Dure. (Henry.)

Nobody's Fault. By Netta Syrett. (John Lane.)

A Financial Atonement. By B. B. West. (Longmans.)

The Creed of Philip Glyn. By the Hon. Mrs. Alan Brodrick. (Ward & Downey.)

MISS DOUGALL'S The Madonna of a Day attracted much attention as it appeared from month to month in Temple Bar; and now, when one sees it for the first time as a whole, one's impression of its value as a work of art is both heightened and deepened. From an entirely new standpoint, and with a subtlety all its own, it lights up one aspect of the great vexed, unsettled, unseizable woman question. There is in it not a word of the abuse which generally gives flavour to stories dealing with this subject, not a word of preaching, not an indication of the writer's view. It merely places a certain situation before the reader, on which he must perforce reflect and meditate: and all this with a charm of style, and a power of realising and presenting a scene or a character, which grow stronger with each book Miss Dougall produces. The description of the vast snowy solitudes of the mountains, and of the impression they make on the eager, unrestful mind of Mary Howard, who is lost among them, is an achievement that will have its place in literature. But everything in the book is subordinate to the wonderful conception of Mary's influence on the dwarf—her half-romantic and half-tragic, half-artificial and half-real relations with that singular creature—into whose vicious life the simple, reverent character she has assumed comes as a revelation and an ideal.

There is much skill in Miss Gerard's aptly named story. We call the people of all other nations foreigners, even when we go alone among them. Through the first half of the book it is Phemie's Austrian husband who is undoubtedly the foreigner. Then all at once one realises that she, and not he, is the stranger; that it is she whose ways are outlandish, and whose manners are criticised as foreign by her husband's people. Very entertaining is the account of her reception, and most interesting the faithful portraiture of the German mind, with its characteristic child-like exhibition of all the emotions, its simple and open transition from joy to sorrow, from endless regret to new love. At first the book appears a little heavy and uninviting; but Miss Gerard's name buoys one up, and is an earnest of good things to come; and by the time one has met even the first Baron Leopold Wolfsberg, one is thoroughly captivated. Phemie's rush across Europe is irresistible: it will carry every reader along with the same breathless interest.

A Point of Conscience begins with a tea-party. At p. 60, or thereabouts, the tea-party is still going on; and one by one all the characters of the story put in an appearance at it, and receive their labels, and fix upon your memory the little tricks and idiosyncrasies by which you are afterwards to recognise them. Throughout the three volumes there is the same tendency to lengthiness—many a little speech and joke are chronicled (some of the jokes, alas! all too familiar)—but Mrs. Hungerford's bright, easy style gives life to the book. This time, in Maden and her passionate story, she has ventured on more dangerous ground than one is accustomed to tread with her; but with Cecil Fairfax, Anthony Verschoyle, and even with charming Carrie, despite the novelty of her knickerbockers, it is possible to feel that we are among old and welcome friends. One recognises also the old and pleasing art of harrowing the feelings and delighting the emotions with very slight material well worked up.

Sydney Christian's heroine combines in herself two types—the long-suffering heroine upon whose devoted head woes are heaped without stint, and the later development with modern mind and heaven-questioning spirit. A mocking, conscienceless, handsome father, a beautiful and equally conscienceless, though stupid, sister, are one part of Persis Yorke's trial; the other part consists of her own unrelenting conscience, a condition of utter pennilessness, and a bitterly bought distrust and horror of men. The story is told at length, with much faithful detail, and a marked intention to portray the inner as well as the outer life of a woman as subjectively as it may be possible for a man to do it. And yet it is with the men in Persis Yorke that Sydney Christian has succeeded best. The worthless father; the bad but redeemable Bristow; Dave Heron, the strong, simple preacher to the fishers; and Adrian Lyster, the sweet-natured cripple, who is destined to brighten Persis's life—all these, roughly sketched in as they are, live and move before the reader, while with all its elaboration, and possibly because of it, the heroine's own character is not half so strong and effective.

It seems necessary to say to the author of The Imagination of their Hearts that the jotting down of sentences as paragraphs, especially in a more or less detailed description of a scene or situation, is not smart or artistic writing. Such a practice only serves to baffle the reader, who always hopes to enter upon a new idea with a new paragraph. Nevertheless, Mr. Dure's book is clever, though with that hard, soulless, semi-epigrammatic, and entirely disillusioned cleverness of which the wise reader is becoming so weary—a cleverness which nothing can surprise or enchant. There are moments when the players on Mr. Dure's little stage appear to be real people, but mostly they are vapoury and intangible beings, engaged in very questionable transactions. In Marion, whose charms are her own ruin and bring ruin to one of her lovers, one can find very little life and no fascination. The end is distinctly unsatisfactory and hardly likely.

No "Keynotes" volume is ever dull. The stories in that entertaining series do not profess to be suited to everybody's taste; but they are bright, out of the common, and in some way or other striking. All these distinctions belong to Nobody's Fault, in which Miss Netta Syrett depicts the career of a young woman who took her life in her hand, after the fashion of young women in fiction, and made rather a hash of it. But Bridget Ruan's fate was really determined for her by her strong character, and by the education which gave her powers free play. Born in a humble position, she was educated above it, and when she returned from school to her old surroundings she found them unendurable. It is in this part of the book that Miss Syrett is most successful. Her insight into the lower middle-class life of a small provincial town, in which the bank-clerk is a type of the aristocracy, and the wives and daughters of the tradesmen of the place have their own very pronounced views on social status, is remarkable. Here an individual note is struck, and the satire is as keen as the observation is true. In the subsequent parts of the story, where the situations are stronger, one feels—or fancies—that Miss Syrett's grasp of her subject is less firm. But every reader of the book will be prepared to testify that there is no real lack of power in any part of it.

Those readers of A Financial Atonement who appreciate the genuine humour of it may not have any comprehension of Mr. Arthur Brigges's financial operations; and those who are capable of following these will probably fail to see where the humour comes in. The story resembles in its vividness, and its somewhat empirical quality, the same writer's Sir Simon Vanderpetter. An idea has taken hold of the author and the characters are made to bend their necks to it. Mr. Arthur Brigges is a kind of reversed Monte Christo. His passion, too, is to pay back—but literally and in coin, and for the wrongs he himself has done to the innocent shareholders in his innumerable companies.

The Creed of Philip Glyn is a very pleasing little story; and the characters, being ordinary lay people actuated by religious motives, have nowadays the charm of novelty. The plot is not new, and even Philip Glyn with his Gospel of Love has appeared before; but he is the kind of hero one is always glad to meet again, and we should never be tired of seeing the guilty uplifted and purified after their temptation and fall. The creed of Philip Glyn, if it were only practised, would unquestionably make the world cleaner and lovelier than it is.

GEORGE COTTERELL.

TWO BOOKS ON ROMAN HISTORY.

"CAMBRIDGE HISTORICAL ESSAYS"—No. VIII., The Reign of Antoninus Pius. By E. C. Bryant. (Cambridge: University Press.) It is a singular thing that of a reign placed in the midst of a brightly lighted historical period, a reign, too, in which (if Gibbon was right) the happiness of the human race was at its highest, there should be as yet no exhaustive chronological sketch. Such, however, is the case with regard to the principate of Antoninus Pius. Neither Schiller nor Lacour-Gayet, as Mr. Bryant complains, has made any serious attempt to arrange the facts which are known, and it is primarily this deficiency which Mr. Bryant sets himself to fill up. By the aid of inscriptions and coins (so fully used that we might almost call his essay a numismatic commentary on Capitolinus) he has reached a very considerable measure of success. Of course difficulties remain at points where historians, coins, and inscriptions alike fail us. Thus

"it is practically hopeless . . . from the beginning of 140 to the middle of 144 A.D. to attempt to set down any event as taking place in any particular year." But for most of the principate either certainty or high probability in dating seems to be attained—if, that is, our present information be not upset, if no inconvenient coin with a troublesome legend turn up. But the essay is also something wider than this; for it discusses the relations of the emperor with various individuals and bodies in the Roman state, and finally examines his attitude to religion. "He was attempting to set up a reaction in favour of the old and truly Roman religion as against the newly imported deities of the East"; and it is impossible to doubt that this fact had something to do with the Roman verdict on Antoninus being cast into precisely the shape which Capitolinus reports, comparing his reign with that of Numa not only for its prosperity, but also for devoutness of spirit and care for religious details. We do not gather from Mr. Bryant how far he thinks his hero a great man. The general feeling about Antoninus, at least in these days, is respectful without being enthusiastic. That he had an excellent and even a lovable character, no one will question: to satisfy so shrewd a judge as Marcus Aurelius, and to have said of one even half the good things which Marcus said of his adoptive father, are proofs enough of any one's excellence. But the modern judgment seems to be "amiable, but second-rate"—perhaps only because the good emperor was never seriously tried. His wars were few, no Marcomanni and no plague tested the discipline and the science of his subjects. Yet it is chiefly a good system which ensures "that there shall be no serious trial"; and, if the existing Roman system was in part at least created by his predecessors, it was carried on as well as modified by Antoninus. He was up to his work, and he was not pessimist; both points must be remembered when we judge him. At all events, Mr. Bryant claims, and reasonably, for Antoninus more personal activity than Capitolinus was willing to allow him; nullas expeditiones obit can hardly be right. "Nothing was too trivial [or too distant] for his investigation." Yet he had method, and was too wise for the spasmodic liberality of a Haroun Alraschid, a sultan who knows no political economy. But did he really deport the Brigantes to the north of the Forth and Clyde? It might have been policy to do so, but we cannot see that he did from the simple summotis barbaris of our authority. The story told in his Life, and repeated by Mr. Bryant, of how he asked Homullus whence he got his porphyry columns, and how he was snubbed for his pains, requires to be supplemented, if we are to duly admire his patience, by a hint that Homullus could not very well get the columns from anywhere but certain imperial quarries. On p. 117 n., for "Pliny, Epp.," read "Pliny, H.N."

Les Assemblées Provinciales de la Gaule Romaine. Par E. Carette. (Paris: Picard.) How extraordinarily alike is the doing of official business all over the world! This is one of the first impressions from reading the minute study which M. Carette has consecrated to the native councils of the Roman provinces of Gaul. It is not easy at first sight to say whence our knowledge of these institutions is to come. The classical authors allude but rarely to anything of the sort, and the inscriptions which bear on the subject are not very numerous and are often incomplete or inconclusive. But by degrees we see under M. Carette's guidance how the little bits of evidence supplement each other; how a broken line in an inscription suggests a question about the flamen provinciae which can be answered from the analogy of the flamen Dialis at Rome; and how the known usage of some other province fills up a hole in what we know of those under examination. While the evidence remained unincreased, it was perhaps not possible to get much beyond the point at which Messrs. Guirand and Marquardt had left the subject; but the discovery at Narbonne, in 1888, of a new and considerable fragment of a bronze tablet (since presented to the Louvre by an uncle of M. Carette), has made it possible to answer several more questions about provincial councils. Containing part of a law (probably a lex data of Augustus) on the assembly or council of Gallia Narbonensis, it determines for instance the point that the meeting-place was the town of Narbo. It shows, too (with reasonable probability of inference), that the voting in the council was generally not per tabellas; it makes it more probable, though not certain, that the governor had a right of veto in most business, but not in all; that the council met annually, not (as seems likely to have been the case in Asia) every five years. Unhappily, too many questions are still matters of "des batailles de nuages dans les ténèbres"; but the discovery of the Narbonne fragment is encouraging. It helps us forward now, and there may be more engraved laws to find presently. After setting forth as fully as he can the state of our knowledge about the elections, the composition, the powers, and the president of the assembly, and after marking with equal care the gaps in our knowledge of how things stood under the early empire, M. Carette goes on to a parallel examination of the assemblies under the later empire; and he gives finally a complete nomenclature of the persons known to us as having taken part in the provincial assemblies of Roman Gaul. We have to thank him for careful and searching work, set forth in logical development and agreeable style. But there are two or three little things which have struck us while we read his book. He does not mention, in the few pages which he devotes to the question of Gallic assemblies before the Roman conquest, the assertion of Livy (21. 20) that in or about 219 B.C. the Gauls "armati—ita mos gentis erat—in concilium venerunt." On p. 39 we read that there were eight Gallic provinces under the early emperors, but the items given amount to nine. On p. 121 we cannot adjust his reckoning of the Gallic civitates as sixty to the number sixty-four as given in the Annals (3, 44) by Tacitus (whom he does not name), and apparently by Ptolemy. What new light makes him adopt the form Durocorium instead of the familiar Durocor-torum? M. Carette regards it as only possible ("il se pourrait que . . .") that the sacerdos, or flamen provinciae, was elected some time before he actually entered on office; but, if persons who wished to escape the charge might, as he shows from an inscription of the time of M. Aurelius, appeal to the emperor, this seems to us to make a considerable interval of time certain. We are sorry to find M. Carette lending even a provisional assent to "a new theory of Müllenhoff," supported by M. d'Arbois de Jubainville, that Caesar borrowed his description of Gallic customs from Posidonius. Surely this is a case of Quellenforschung leaving

"Not even Lancelot brave, nor Galahad clean."

NOTES AND NEWS.

MESSRS. LONGMANS & Co. have in the press a volume by Sir Benjamin Ward Richardson, to be called Memories and Ideals. Besides the memories of sixty years of professional life and the ideals which the author has been led to form, the book will also contain a number of chapters on scientific and philosophical subjects.

MESSRS. WILLIAM BLACKWOOD & SONS announce a new volume by Mr. Walter B. Harris, the author of several books of travel in Mohammedan countries, describing a recent journey from Batum to Baghdad, via Tiflis, Tabriz, and Persian Turkestan, with illustrations and a map.

MESSRS. GEORGE BELL & SONS will publish shortly a memoir of Dr. Hawtrey, formerly head-master of Eton, by the Rev. F. St. John Thackeray. The book will have illustrations, and also a selection from Hawtrey's metrical translations.

MESSRS. CHATTO & WINDUS announce for early publication Kingsclere: the Story of a Trainer, by Mr. John Porter, with twenty-two full-page illustrations.

MESSRS. MACMILLAN & Co. will publish immediately a volume of selections from the writings of Christina Rossetti, arranged as a birthday book.

AMONG the writers associated with Mr. Laird Clowes in the preparation of the History of the Royal Navy, which is to be published by Messrs. Sampson Low & Co., are Capt. A. T. Mahan, U.S.N.; Mr. Clements R. Markham, president of the Geographical Society; Mr. Theodore Roosevelt, author of "The Naval War of 1812"; and Mr. H. W. Wilson, author of "Ironclads in Action." Many hitherto unknown documents and pictures, including some from abroad, have been placed by private owners at the disposal of the editor. The naval events of the past half century are being, for the most part, described by officers and others who took part in them.

MESSRS. SMITH, ELDER & Co. have in the press The Memoirs of General Baron Thiebault, with recollections of the Republic, the Consulate, and the Empire, translated from the French and condensed by Mr. A. J. Butler, who likewise introduced Marbot to the English public.

MESSRS. CHAPMAN & HALL will publish in the course of next month Moko, or Maori Tattooing, by Major-General Robley, with upwards of 150 illustrations drawn by the author.

THE original illustrated edition of Ainsworth's Novels is about to be reprinted in sixteen monthly volumes by Messrs. George Routledge & Sons, who are not only the owners of the copyrights, but also the proprietors of the illustrations. The edition will be limited to 250 numbered copies, with reproductions in photogravure of the original steel-plate engravings by Cruikshank, Phiz, and others.

MR. GEORGE ALLEN, of Ruskin House, announces a cheap edition of Fors Clavigera, in four volumes, with all the original illustrations.

MESSRS. GEORGE BELL & SONS will add during May to "Bohn's Standard Library" a cheap edition of Burton's Anatomy of Melancholy, in three volumes, as edited by the Rev. A. R. Shilleto, in handsome form, three years ago, with an introduction by Mr. A. H. Bullen, a portrait, and a full index.

MR. T. FISHER UNWIN will publish about Whitsuntide Here and There Memories, by an anonymous author, who was in former times well-known as a contributor to the magazines.

MESSRS. ARCHIBALD CONSTABLE & Co. announce for early publication Tales of South Africa, by Mr. H. A. Bryden, author of "Gun and Camera in South Africa."

MESSRS. HUTCHINSON & Co. have in the press for early publication a story of the Mutiny, entitled The Great White Hand, by Mr. J. E. Muddock, who states in his preface that it was his lot to be in India at the time; and also a novel treating of life in Holland, by Mr. Sutcliffe Marsh, who is described as a new writer.

MR. ELLIOT STOCK announces a work of fiction, entitled The Carisford Tablets; or, the Adventures of Simram of Babylon. The narrative purports to have been deciphered from cuneiform tablets, written by a traveller who visited Britain in search of tin mines, and was made captive by a British prince. The incidents are founded on history, and furnish vivid pictures of early life in many parts of the ancient world.

MESSRS. A. D. INNES & Co. announce for publication next week a new novel by XL, author of "Diabolus aut Nihil." It will be entitled The Limb; and the central figure in the story is a Russian Jew, possessed with the belief that he is the saviour of his downtrodden race foretold by Scripture.

MESSRS. SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, & Co. announce the publication next week of a work entitled Stock Exchange Investments: Theory, Methods, Practice, Results, and Counsels, by Dr. W. H. S. Aubrey, Author of "The Rise and Growth of the English Nation." It will contain historical and statistical information on the increase of the national wealth, and on different classes and methods of investment.

MESSRS. GINN & Co., of Boston, announce a Guide to the Study of American History, written by two professors of history at Harvard, Mr. Edward Channing and Mr. Albert Bushnell Hart.

MR. JOHN HODGES has nearly ready for issue, in his "Catholic Standard Library," a new edition of Simpson's Life of Edmund Campion, which has been long a scarce book. It will be reprinted from a copy corrected by the author shortly before his death.

THE name of the translator of M. Gaston Boissier's book on The Country of Horace and Virgil, mentioned in the ACADEMY of last week, is Mr. D. Havelock Fisher.

AT a meeting of the English Goethe Society, to be held on Friday next, in the hall of the Medical Society, Chandos-street, Cavendish-square, Prof. Edward Dowden, of Dublin, will deliver his presidential address, on "The Case against Goethe." Mr. James Bryce has consented to take the chair.

WE quote the following from the obituary column of the Times for Wednesday:

"On the 17th inst., at Richmond, Surrey, aged ninety-six, Helen, widow of Hugh McCordquodale, Esq., and daughter of the late Lord Edward Fitzgerald, and Pamela, his wife."

To read such an entry is like being transported back to the stormy close of the eighteenth century, when the supposed daughter of Mme. de Genlis and Egalité was the cynosure of all eyes in Paris, and the "sainted Edward" the darling of Irish ballads. It is, perhaps, right to add that Debrett knows nothing of the lady, though he does mention a daughter of a son of Lord Edward, also called Pamela; and that there seems something wrong about her age, for Lord Edward certainly died on June 4, 1798.

THE FORTHCOMING MAGAZINES.

SIR W. W. HUNTER will contribute to the Fortnightly Review for May an article entitled "A Forgotten Oxford Movement." It describes, from MS. sources in the Bodleian Library and the India Office, a scheme proposed between 1681 and 1700 by Dr. Fall, bishop of Oxford and dean of Christ Church, for the propagation of Christianity in India. The East India Company was induced to take up the matter, to raise a public subscription, and to charge itself officially with the direction of the movement and the management of the funds. This curious discovery puts back the beginning of British missionary organisation in India by more than a century.

THE Fortnightly Review for May will also have an article by Dr. Karl Blind on "Czar and Emperor," on the occasion of the coronation of Nicholas II., giving some curious details of ancient Russia. The essay will prove, from Muscovite, German, and English sources, that the imperial title had not, as is usually stated even by distinguished historians, been assumed for the first time by Peter the Great, but that, more than a century before, it had once been claimed and borne by Russian Czars, although not generally recognised.

MR. FREDERIC HARRISON will contribute an article on Pierre Lafitte to the May number of Cosmopolis; M. le Vicomte de Spoelberch de Lovenjoul will furnish an interesting account of the relations between Alfred de Musset and Georges Sand under the title of "Elle et Lui"; and Herr A. von Boguslawski will write on the German soldier in an article entitled "Die Selbständigkeit."

NEXT week's number of Chums will contain the opening chapters of a new serial story by Mr. Harry Collingwood, entitled "In the Grip of the Anarchists."

THE Roxburghe Press will issue, on May 16, the first number of the Wheelwoman and Society Cycling News, a weekly illustrated journal for lady cyclists.

UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS.

THE Rev. J. E. H. Murphy, rector of Rathcoore, has been appointed to the chair of Irish in the University of Dublin, vacant by the death of Prof. Goodman, for whom he has been lecturing as deputy during the last seven years. He has also been engaged, jointly with Prof. Goodman, in revising the Irish translation of the New Testament for the British and Foreign Bible Society.

MR. JOHN MURRAY will be the publisher of the Life of Jowett, which is being written by Mr. Evelyn Abbott and Prof. Lewis Campbell.

MESSRS. SWAN SONNENSCHEIN & Co. will shortly add to their "Social Science" series a volume on University Extension, by Mr. M. E. Sadler, of Christ Church, some time secretary at Oxford for the establishment of lectures and teaching in large towns.

THE Wilson travelling fellowship in Aberdeen University was founded about thirty years ago by Dr. Robert Wilson; but conditions of so unpractical and eccentric a character were laid down in the founder's will that it was impossible to make any election. Recently the Scottish Universities Commission revised this "dormant foundation," and remodelled the conditions. The first election will be made in July. The chief condition is that the fellow must be a graduate of Aberdeen. He is expected in sending in his application to sketch the work which he proposes to perform, if elected. The value of the fellowship is £200 a year; but the trustees may make an additional grant for the performance of some special work.

IT is proposed to commemorate Prof. Robertson Smith's connexion with the University of Aberdeen by placing a stained glass window in the chapel of King's College, after a design by Sir E. Burne-Jones.

THE late James Jamieson has bequeathed £1000 to the University of Aberdeen, towards the endowment of a chair in the faculty of law.

WE have received the programme of the tenth meeting of the Summer School of Art and Science, to be held at University Hall, Edinburgh, during the month of August. We may specially mention two courses of lectures, to be given—apparently in German and in French—by Prof. Wilhelm Rein of Jena, on "Herbart's Life and Teaching"; and by M. Elise Reclus, on "The History of Rivers and their Influence on Civilisation." No less than eight geographical excursions have been arranged, with the special aim of familiarising students with the relation between the physical features of a district and its history.

THE two-hundred-and-sixtieth lustrum of the University of Utrecht is to be celebrated by the students during the last week of June with a series of historical processions.

WE quote the following from the New York Nation:

"On March 4 the faculty of the University of Heidelberg conferred the degree of Doctor of Philosophy magna cum laude on Fräulein Anna Gebser, who presented an historical thesis on 'The Importance of Queen Cunigunde to the Reign of Henry II.' On March 6 the same university conferred the same academic distinction on Miss Alice Luce, who, after graduating at an American university, devoted herself to philology at Leipzig and Heidelberg. Several other women, mostly foreigners, have also announced themselves as candidates for examination and promotion. Quite recently the diploma of Countess Marie von Linden, the first woman who ever took a degree at Tübingen, was affixed to the official 'blackboard' of that university. This young lady, the daughter of the Württemberg Chamberlain, Count Eduard von Linden, made a speciality of natural science and was 'promoted' cum laude. Her thesis was on the structural evolution and characteristics of marine snails."

ORIGINAL VERSE.

IN MEMORIAM—HEINRICH PREISINGER.

THE blue waves dance in southern glee,
The purple mountains clasp the strand;
Shines all around, on shore and sea,
The splendour of the sunny land.

They gambol, these gay southern waves;
With them my heart would fain be gay:
But, ah! I see a field of graves
Beside a northern city grey.

For there he sleeps, the friend I knew,
The tender heart, the gracious mind:
A soul more generous, just, and true
I have not found, I shall not find.

Oh, true and tried, be sound thy sleep
And sweet! Perchance thy lot is best:
Yet I in thought must stand and weep
Beside the mansion of thy rest.

Malaga. C. E. T.

CORRESPONDENCE.

FACTS AND FANCIES CONCERNING THE CHILDREN ACTORS IN "HAMLET" II. 2.

Queen's College, London: April 18, 1896.

The passage relating to the children actors has long proved an interesting "crux"; and dissatisfaction with previous explanations—particularly with that which would associate the word "innovation" with the armed rising of Essex—has suggested the following addition to the "guesses at truth." The passage, as is known, appears in three distinct forms—in the pirated Quarto of 1603 (q. 1); in the authorised Quarto of 1604 (q. 2) and its reprints; and in the first Folio of 1623 (f. 1). Each of these calls for separate consideration.

The 1623 Folio.—The thirty-seven lines of the received text (II. ii. 343-379, "Globe" ed.) were first printed in the Folio of 1623, although nine of these had previously appeared in the Quarto of 1604, and, as will be seen, all must have been written by this date. In them two reasons are assigned for the players travelling—an inhibition in l. 346, and the popularity of young actors in ll. 353-379. The latter passage deals in a strain of exaggeration with a real question, but it is based upon facts much in the same general way as the description in IV. iii. 60-65 represents the relations really existing between Denmark and England. These facts are, that children actors were for a time very fashionable in London; that personalities do mark some of the plays of the day; that although there are no plays known which deal with any such question as children-actors versus men-actors, yet there had been a "war of the theatres" in which Jonson, Dekker, and others took part, and that the children did perform some of these plays.* The passage, therefore, would certainly have been suggestive to an audience of the day.

The 1603 Quarto.—The text of Q. 1 differs wholly from that of Q. 2 and F. 1. It has no reference whatever to an "inhibition"; it has distinct and pointed reference to the children. The brief passage, except for the italics, runs thus:

"Ham.: How comes it that they travell? Do they grow restless?"

"Gil.: No, my Lord, their reputation holds as it was wont."

"Ham.: How then?"

"Gil.: Yfaith, my Lord, noveltie carries it away, For the principall publike audience that Came to them, are turned to private playes, And to the humour of children."

In one sense the acting of plays by children was no new thing; it was over two hundred years old, and the "children of Pauls" (i.e., the cathedral choir-boys) had given the very first recorded Court performance in Elizabeth's reign, on August 7, 1559.† What was new was that, in 1600, a company of children entered into direct competition with the older actors by regularly performing in a licensed theatre. This was at "the private house" situate in the precincts of Blackfriars, which Richard Burbage had purchased on May 4, 1596, "at extreme rates, and made it into a playhouse with great charge and trouble." Afterwards he leased it "out to one Evans that first sett up the boyes commonly called the Queene's Majesties Children of the Chappell."‡ The Greenstreet Papers, printed in extenso by Mr. Fleay,§ show that Evans took possession from Michaelmas, 1600. The lease, "for the terme of xxij<sup>y</sup> yeres," had been signed four weeks earlier, for on "the second daie of September in the xliij<sup>y</sup> yere of the Raigne of our late Sovereigne Lady Queene Elizabeth [i.e., in 1600] Richard Burbydge . . . demysed the said great hall . . . unto . . . Henry Evans," "whoe intended then presentlie to erect or sett vpp a Companie of boyes . . . in the same." Evans soon attracted attention to himself by purloining boys for his theatre; while the young actors speedily became exceedingly popular. In 1604—the very year of the second Hamlet Quarto—"Father Hubbard's Tale"|| speaks of them as "a nest of boys able to ravish a man"; while a little later, the highest praise a writer can give to other actors is "that they seemed to surpasse the boyes of Black-fryers."

The allusion in 1603, therefore, is distinctly to the audiences of the "public" theatres—of which London then had seven—running after the "private" plays acted by "children" in Blackfriars, this being one of four private theatres. In 1602-3 such an event would be a "novelty."

The Second Quarto.—The 1604 Quarto (Q. 2) omits all distinct reference to the children (i.e., lines 352-379), but it contains the nine lines of the Folio (343-351) which mention the "inhibition" and "late innovation." Inhibitions were frequent, but no exactly contemporary event of this kind is known, except that due to the terrible visitation of the Plague in 1603. This led James in July—when 825 people died in one week in London alone—to curtail the Coronation ceremonial, and afterwards to delay the state procession for eight months, until March, 1604; while in February of this latter year the Revels' accounts inform us that Burbage, the manager of Shakspeare's company, was allowed £30 "for the maintenance and relief of himself and the rest of his company, being prohibited to present any plays publicly in or near London by reason of great peril that might grow." If, therefore, anyone desires to seek a distinct reference, it might be found in the fact that this inhibition would naturally lead to the players "travelling" in the provinces.

The probable meaning of the words "late innovation" is connected with the significant omission in the 1604 Quarto of all distinct reference to the children. Such omission might well be due to the fact that on January 30 of this year the chapel children had been re-organised under the direct patronage of James I.'s Queen as "the Children of Her Majesties Revels"; just as, within ten days of the arrival in London of King James—in May of the previous year—the company to which Shakspeare belonged had become "His Highness' Servants." The number of difficulties which arose about this time in connexion with various allusions—real or supposed—in other plays seems to suggest a sufficient motive for the present case. In 1602, Jonson had been "restrained . . . by authority" from printing in the Quarto of the "Poetaster" the concluding dialogue which appeared later in the Folio edition of 1616. In 1603, the same writer was summoned before the Council for his "Sejanus," apparently simply owing to the ill-will of Lord Northampton. This play moreover, was acted by Shakspeare's company—the poet among them; while trouble was brewing for the same company in 1604 for representing the Gowry Conspiracy. S. Daniel, official licenser though he was, had to appear before the Council for supposed political allusions in his "Philotas." Jonson's "Volpone"—acted 1605—gave offence; and the same year Jonson, Chapman, and Marston were within prison walls for a few lines reflecting on the Scots in "Eastward Ho!" When the air was so full of thunder and passing showers for the actor and dramatist, does it not seem likely that it would be deemed both more politic and discreet that a play issued by a member of the "King's Company" should, in its first authorised edition (for that of 1603 was pirated) omit even the appearance of a reflection on a rival company to which the Queen had so recently given her name?

One point still remains. "About August in the sixth yere of his Majesties raigne (i.e., 1608) . . . the interest of the said Henry Evans in the said Playhouse by vertue of the said lease [of 1600, for 21 years] was fullye and whollye determynd," for it was repur-* E.g., Jonson's "Cynthia's Revels" (1600) and the "Poetaster" (1601).

† Nichols's Progresses, i. 74.

‡ Halliwell's Outlines, 7th ed., 1887., i. 317.

§ Chronicle History of the London Stage (1890). These papers, discovered by Mr. Greenstreet, relate to the Chancery suit—Evans v. Kirkman (temp. James I.).

|| Quoted by Prof. Hales in "Notes and Essays" (p. 238).

¶ Cf. the "eyases" and "aery" of "Hamlet" II. ii.

* Into his Transilles, by Wm. Fennor.

chased by Burbage; and though the children still continued to act for a time, yet by the end of 1609 the King's players were established at the Blackfriars, three of the "children" being adopted into the company. Henceforth this theatre and the Globe were under one management; no reference, therefore, such as that in the Folio could have any point if written after 1609. Not only so, but the whole passage, and the practical retention from Q. 1 of the comparison between the sudden favour of the children and the equally sudden rise of Claudius (ll. 380-384) make it clear that the lines first printed in 1623 were written soon after the children became popular; the omission and later publication being comparable to what is known to have taken place with regard to "Richard II." with its political reference, and "The Poetaster" with its personal allusions.

May we not, then, suppose that the twenty-eight lines (352-379) which refer to the children actors were originally written for the 1604 Quarto as a development of the brief passage of 1603; but that, as it was suddenly considered best to suppress them, they were replaced by nine new lines (343-351), in which there was aptly substituted the mention of an inhibition—an expression familiar enough in the stage history of the day as a reason for "travelling," but not necessarily having immediate application—while the delicate question of the children was simply glanced at in the words "late innovation"? In 1623, when like Shakspeare himself the whole subject was "dead and buried," both passages were printed together from the theatre copy, where, doubtless, they had peacefully slumbered side by side for nearly twenty years. W. HALL GRIFFIN.

THE SIN-EATER IN WALES.

London: April 8, 1896.

My only excuse for writing again on this subject in the ACADEMY is the belief that I have now run the Welsh "Sin-eater" to earth, and that, too, in the very parish understood to have been referred to by Moggridge at Ludlow.

In 1844, Miss Anne Beale, the well-known writer of numerous tales and novels depicting various phases of life in Wales, published a small volume of sketches under the name of The Vale of the Towey. At that date Miss Beale was governess to the daughters of Mr. Williams, vicar of Llandefaisant, a small parish almost entirely swallowed up by Dynevor Park, where the church is situated. Practically, Llandefaisant may be looked upon as belonging to the parish of Llandilo; and, in the early forties, the southern end of that huge parish included a great portion of the "lawless mountain valley" of Cwmamman.

The sketches of Welsh manners and customs to be found in The Vale of the Towey are drawn from life, a little idealised, no doubt, but, apart from the slender thread of fiction on which they are strung, absolutely trustworthy. They were republished, I should add, by the Religious Tract Society in 1886, with the title altered into Seven Years for Rachel.

So much being premised, I now proceed to give a few extracts from the fourteenth sketch, which is named "The Ivorite's Funeral":

"Pally . . . is accordingly busily engaged in serving out a beverage that was once common at funerals, but is now comparatively seldom used. It is called abeilon, and is composed of the juice of the elderberry, rosemary, and other herbs, well spiced, and poured into hot ale, which is distributed to the mourners, and drunk, notwithstanding the circumstances, with evident satisfaction. All the assembly . . . partake of the reeking drink, eat cake with it, and talk meanwhile of many things far removed from the solemn subject of death, though it would seem impossible to forget it in the presence of the corpse. When the party had drunk a sufficient quantity of abeilon, one of them, a tall, lank man, arose. . . . This was the Dissenting minister.

. . . . After quietly delivering the text, he pours forth at once a flood of words. . . . He then gives out a verse of a hymn, in which most of his congregation join. . . . The hymn being finished, the minister descends from his pulpit, and again enters the house. He is immediately attended by Rachel's uncle and Pally, the former of whom slips five shillings into his hand in payment for his sermon, whilst the latter offers a second glass of abeilon. Both are received with thanks. . . . and the preacher takes his departure. . . . The preparations for bearing the body to its last resting-place now began. . . . At the turning of the lane another procession was seen approaching in an opposite direction. It was composed of the members of the Ivorite Club, consisting of between two and three hundred persons, who joined the funeral, and preceded the coffin. Each individual wore a black scarf and hatband, and the general effect was very imposing. They wound their mournful way through the park until they reached the little church I have already attempted to describe. There they were met by the clergyman, and the solemn service began. The coffin rests in the aisle, and the church is filled with mourners. The first part of the service over, they proceed to the churchyard and surround the grave. . . . The sunbeams fall upon the dark forms of the mourners, and rest upon the coffin. . . . A few lumps of earth fall heavily upon the coffin. . . . The Ivorites now surround the grave. Hand in hand they encircle it, whilst each takes from his bosom a sprig of rosemary and drops it upon the coffin. The last act completed, they stand for a few moments solemnly silent, then disunite and form into pairs."

Moggridge, it may be remembered, in his letter to Canon Silvan Evans (January 1, 1876), said that the only written account of the custom mentioned by him at Ludlow was Aubrey's. If, therefore, somebody who had read the above account in Miss Beale's book had told him of the "tall lank man" who poured forth "a flood of words," received "five shillings," drank a glass of abeilon, and then departed—all this "ritual" being quite distinct from the church service; or if, which is still more probable, he had heard the tale, with inevitable variations, at third or fourth hand, he may be excused for having seen in it a confirmation of Aubrey's fable of the Sin-eater.

The term abeilon, which is italicised in the republished sketch but not in the original one, is unknown to me. It is not to be found, nor anything like it, either in Owen Pughe's Dictionary or in Silvan Evans's. If the initial, however, is the definite article "y," then we have (I now quote from Lewis's Welsh Dictionary, 1805), meilaid, "a dishful," "a bowlful"; meiliedyn, "a small bowl"; meilio, "to put in a bowl," "to dish"; meilon, "powder," "dust," "flour"; meiloni, "to reduce to powder," "to become dust"; mail, "a hollow vessel of wood; a vessel to hold milk; a bowl or basin."

May I, in conclusion, make an ingenuous confession? I was a little disappointed at finding this meilio derivation; for before I came upon it I had constructed a very pretty theory, by conjecturing that it was a form of ymbilion ("earnest entreaties") degraded and disguised beyond recognition.

J. P. OWEN.

BERBER NAMES.

London: April 20, 1896.

An interesting point is raised in the ACADEMY of April 18 by Mr. Budgett Meakin, in connexion with my proposed derivation of the word Tafilelt (ACADEMY, March 7). In such place-names he treats the final t as the feminine suffix to agree with the "place" or "thing" implied, and regards the initial t (tha) as "plainly equivalent to an article," adding that there is unquestionably an article tha in the Rîf (Riff) dialect of North Morocco. Then he suggests that other names in Morocco beginning with T—as Tangier, Tetuan—may possibly "owe their form to this article before a masculine noun." Although there is no article in the Algerian and Saharan (Tuareg) sister dialects, it is not impossible that one may have been developed in the North Moroccan. In Egyptian, which belongs to the same Hamitic group, the article is a distinct feature, and has even a masculine (p) and a feminine (t) form. This t also becomes θ euphonically; but being feminine it cannot be cognate to Mr. Meakin's tha, which he takes to be masculine, placing it "before a masculine noun." To this view there are two formidable objections. In the first place, it is difficult to understand how, in such place-names as Tafilelt, Tarudant, and many others, the initial t can be a masculine article and the final t "a feminine suffix." In the second place, t is the universal feminine element of the noun, pronoun, and verb in all the Berber dialects of which Grammars have been published. It also prevails largely in Egyptian and Tibu (though here voiced to d), and in the Semitic group (Arabic, Hebrew, &c.). It must consequently be regarded as common to the primeval Hamito-Semitic form of speech, antecedent to the divergence of the two stems, and persisting down to the present day. It would therefore be more than surprising to find that tha had become a masculine particle in the Rîf dialect of North Morocco. With all deference to Mr. Meakin's authority, I should myself venture to suggest that there is no true article in Rîf, and that the tha in question is simply the formative feminine element, which may be prefixed, suffixed, or both. Then its origin and apparently redundant use may perhaps be explained. In Tuareg, purest form of Berber speech, the separate 3rd pers. pron. fem. is entat, which as a verbal suffix becomes tet, as in enran-tet—"they-killed-her." It would therefore seem obvious that this dental element is of pronominal origin. Again, these Berbers say: innaha-s itti-s nabarad—"he said to him to father of him of young man"—i.e., "He said to the young man's father," where the pronominal element is repeated, as in so many other primitive languages. The object in such repetition is not emphasis but clearness, the meaning being thus eked out at low stages of structural development. Hence, t-akli-t originally—"she-negro-she"—negress; ta-zzun-t—"that-division-that" (root zzvn); as Ta-filal-t—"that-filal-land-that," and so on.

A. H. KEANE.

THE "PRENZIE" ANGELO.

Cambridge: April 20, 1896.

Mr. Liddell has not even taken the trouble to read my letter through. I argued that the word prenzie, occurring twice, must either be a real word or a slight alteration of one. I also identified it with the Lowland Scotch prossie or prowzie, "vexatiously nice"; which suits the context very well, and is a real word, with an etymology which needs to be accounted for. If I accounted for it wrongly, it does not destroy the argument.

But I can see no origin for prossie except some form of the French preux; and I do not see why the last letter of this word was always ignored in the sixteenth century, though usually written. If the suffix -y were added, it would surely be more natural to sound the final letter than to leave an awkward hiatus. However, I do not care to discuss the matter further. I ly offered the suggestion for what it is th; and it is quite as good as any that has an offered hitherto.

* This fact forms a comment on ll. 362-368, with their reference to children ultimately becoming "common players."

WALTER W. SKEAT.

London: April 21, 1896.

Prof. Skeat has been anticipated in his suggestion by Mr. A. A. Adee, in Shakespeariana, vol. ii., p. 109 (Philadelphia, 1885). Mr. Adee explains his conjecture "preuzie" as a coinage from the French adj. preuz or preuz, after the analogy of "vast" and "huge" (from the adjectives "vast" and "huge"). Its meaning he takes to be a combination of the two ideas—
"brave" or "valiant" and "pure" or "blameless": "Angelo, that preuz chevalier," is his paraphrase. If the conjecture is to be accepted, this explanation seems preferable to Prof.
Skeat's.

In the second passage ("in preuzie gardes")
Mr. Adee would read "princely" or "priestly," accounting for the repetition of "preuzie" as a compositor's blunder.

These conjectures, with their author's name and a reference to Shakespeariana, are recorded in their place by Dr. Aldis Wright in his last edition.

WALTER WORRALL.

APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK.

SUNDAY, April 26, 7 p.m. Ethical: "The Education of Women," by Mrs. B. Bosanquet.

MONDAY, April 27,

8 p.m. Society of Arts: Cantor Lecture, "Applied Electro-Chemistry," I., by Mr. James Swinburne.

8 p.m. Aristotelian: Symposium, "Are Character and Circumstance Co-ordinate Factors in Human Life, or is either Subordinate to the other?" by the President, Miss F. E. C. Jones, Dr. Gildes, and Mr. A. F. Shand.

8.30 p.m. Geographical: "Journeys in the Native Malay States," by Mr. Hugh Clifford; "A Journey round Siam," by Mr. J. S. Black.

TUESDAY, April 28, 3 p.m. Royal Institution: "Child-Study and Education," III., by Prof. James Sully.

8 p.m. Civil Engineers: Discussion, "The Thirlmere Works for the Water-Supply of Manchester," and
"The Vyrnwy Works for the Water-Supply of Liverpool."

WEDNESDAY, April 29, 4 p.m. Zoological: Anniversary
Meeting.

8 p.m. Society of Arts: "Fruit Drying or Evaporation," by Mr. E. W. Badger.

THURSDAY, April 30, 3 p.m. Royal Institution: "Recent Chemical Progress," III., by Prof. Dewar.

8 p.m. Electrical Engineers: "Railway Telegraphs, with special reference to Recent Improvements," by Mr. W. Langdon.

8.30 p.m. Antiquaries.

FRIDAY, May 1, 5 p.m. Royal Institution: Annual Meeting.

8 p.m. Civil Engineers: Students' Meeting, "Swing-Bridge over the River Nene at Sutton Bridge," by Mr.
Edward S. McDonald.

8 p.m. Goethe Society: Presidential Address,
"The Case against Goethe," by Prof. Edward Dowden.

8 p.m. Geologists' Association: "The Physical Geology of Purbeck," by Mr. A. Strahan; "Mollusca from the Skiddaw Slates," by Mr. J. Postlethwaite.

9 p.m. Royal Institution: "Chronographs and their Application to Gun Ballistics," by Col. H. Watkin.

SATURDAY, May 2, 2 p.m. Camden Society: Annual Meeting.

3 p.m. Royal Institution: "The Vault of the Sixtine Chapel," III., by Prof. W. B. Richmond.

SCIENCE.

"ANECDOTA OXONIENSIA."—*The Crawford
Collection of Early Charters and Documents now in the Bodleian Library.* Edited by
A. S. Napier and W. H. Stevenson.
(Oxford: Clarendon Press.)

THIS volume contains 35 pages of charters and 117 pages of notes. The proportion of commentary to text is large, but the editors cannot be justly accused either of fussiness or of triviality. So little has herto been done for the philological and historical illustration of old English charters that many points of a general nature, which might have been assumed as matter of common knowledge if previous editors of similar documents had done their work more thoroughly, have needed to be explained at length. Without travelling beyond the limits of what was necessary for the full elucidation of their own texts, Prof. Napier and Mr. Stevenson have produced a book which will be of the highest value to all future students of early English records.

The seventeen documents here printed form part of a collection acquired five years ago by the Bodleian Library. Ten of them are ostensibly prior to the Norman Conquest.
Of these, however, two are forgeries of the twelfth century, though by no means destitute of historical value when their character is understood; the remaining seven are assigned to about the year 1150. Of the pre-Conquest charters, three are in English, four in Latin with boundaries in English, and the rest, as well as the later documents, wholly in Latin. Eleven of the documents, and the boundaries in another, have never before been printed; and in the remaining cases, with one exception, the Crawford copy is the oldest known to be in existence.

The earliest document in the collection is dated 739, but the MS. was written in the middle of the eleventh century. It is the grant by King Æthelheard of lands for the foundation of Crediton monastery. There is no sufficient reason for doubting the genuineness of the document, the historical interest of which is well brought out in the notes. The evidence afforded by the abundance of English place-names in Devon at the date of the charter shows that that region had already for a considerable time been occupied by the English, and thus supports Freeman's arguments in favour of the conquest of Exeter having taken place before the end of the seventh century. Incidentally the editors dispose satisfactorily of Kemble's objections to the current view, that the use of the era of the Incarnation is due to Bæda.

A Crediton charter of Æthelstan dated 930, now printed for the first time, is remarkable, among other things, for the presence of half a dozen Norsemen among the nobles who sign as witnesses. It is more than ordinarily full of the bombastic Latinity which abounds in many other documents of the same period. A good example of this may be seen in the following sentence, which occurs in other charters in a somewhat less elaborate form:

"Hujus namque a deo dominoque Jesu Christo inspiratae atque inventae voluntatis aedula
... virgineo atterimi lacrimas liquoris forcipe in plantitum tetragonum campuli albertem destillante perscripta est."

Forcipes, it should be explained, means a pen, so that the purport of the sentence is merely that the charter is written in ink on white parchment. Even the eloquent author of the Variae never rose to anything like this elaboration.

The alleged charter of Eadgar to the monastery of Westminster, hitherto known from copies made late in the thirteenth century, is here printed from a MS. of about 1100. The document has long been known to be a forgery, but it has been reserved for the present editors to show the process of its fabrication. The other spurious charter in the collection, Cnut's grant of the port of Sandwich to Christ Church, Canterbury, stands on a different footing. Although the Crawford copy is of the twelfth century, the document exists in MSS. written before 1100; and the editors think that it is probably a falsified version of a genuine grant of Cnut, whether relating to Sandwich or some other place. The rights conceded are to extend over the land as far as a

"taper-axe" can be thrown from a ship, and seaward as far as a man can reach with a pole ("called in English spreot") at low tide. A clause enjoining that, if any seemingly ancient charter contradicting this is ever produced, it is to be thrown to the mice, or, "still better," destroyed by fire, looks like a rather naïve attempt on the forger's part to preclude a dangerous contingency;
but it seems that a similar formula is found in genuine charters written on the Continent. The occurrence of the names of "Eglaf dux" and "Yric dux" among the witnesses to this charter gives occasion for elaborate and valuable biographical notes on these two Norsemen, whose importance in English history has been generally overlooked.

One of the documents now first printed is an English letter of Dunstan to King Æthelred, preserved in a nearly contemporary copy. Apart from the interest attaching to its authority, it is important as clearing up several obscure points in the ecclesiastical history of Cornwall. It mentions a place called Cellwic, which is probably the modern Callington (Domesday Calwestone), and almost certainly to be identified with the Celliwick mentioned in the Welsh Triads as the site of Arthur's Cornish palace.

The will of Leofwine, son of Wulfstan, dated in 998, has been several times printed;
but the present editors have been the first to perceive that the testator's father must be the Wulfstan, son of Ceola, who fought under Byrhtnoth at the battle of Maldon.
Another of the original charters in this collection, hitherto known only from a transcript made in the eighteenth century, is attested by Byrhtnoth himself. A person of some note in a different way—
the ealdorman Æthelweard, the chronicler and the patron of Ælfric—is identified by the editors, apparently on good grounds, with one of the witnesses to a grant by Æthelred of lands in Warwickshire, which is now published for the first time.

This incomplete account of the contents of the volume will be sufficient to show that the documents which it contains possess more than ordinary historical interest. From the philological point of view, also, they are of considerable value, as they contain many words not found in our Old English dictionaries. The editors have done their part with a thoroughness and accuracy unequalled in any English work of a similar nature. The notes on linguistic points, which are mainly due to Prof.
Napier, leave no difficulty unattempted, and remove many current misapprehensions in the interpretation of the diction of Old-English charters. The historical illustration, which is chiefly the work of Mr.
Stevenson, is equally admirable. The persons and places mentioned are identified with masterly skill; the dates, where necessary, are rectified; and the references to historical events are explained with a completeness that leaves nothing to be desired. The only improvement that I am able to suggest in the book is the addition of a detailed table of contents, giving the date of each charter and of the MS. from which it is printed, and distinguishing the inedited documents by a special mark.

HENRY BRADLEY.

CORRESPONDENCE.

WHEN WAS THE PARSI CALENDAR INVENTED?

Maldenhead: April 6, 1896.

It is generally known that the Parsi year consists of twelve months, each containing thirty days, with five extra days added at the end of the year; and that this number of 365 days never varies, so that the beginning of this year retreats one day in the Christian year whenever a leap-year occurs in our calendar. There is, however, a difference of exactly one month between the reckoning of the Parsis in India and of those in Persia, which the former did not publicly notice till 1720 A.D. And it was not until June 17, 1745, that a few Indian Parsis adopted the Persian reckoning, according to which the beginning of the Parsi year has retreated thirty days farther in the Christian year than the Indian reckoning assumes. The great majority of the Indian Parsis still adhere to the Indian reckoning; and they explain that the difference of a month must have been occasioned by their own ancestors having intercalated an extra month in some year about the time they left Persia, in accordance with an old custom of their former kings, for the purpose of counteracting the retreating defect in their calendar. This is a plausible explanation of what was probably an unfortunate error; but it certainly points to the Persian reckoning as the true descendant of the old Persian calendar. It is not my intention, on the present occasion, to examine the very interesting question of Persian intercalations, because the Persian reckoning leads to the same result in a simpler manner.

The Persian reckoning of the Parsi year gives us the date to which the beginning of that year has retreated down to the present time; the annual amount of that retreat is easily ascertained; and we only require to know further the exact season when the year originally commenced to determine approximately the date of that commencement. The Indian Bundahish (chap. xxv.) states that "in the five extra days at the end of the twelfth month the day and night are equal," that from the first day of the first month to the last day of the seventh month is the summer, and the first three months are the spring; from which statements it is clear that the year referred to always began at the vernal equinox. It was not the ordinary year, because its days and months are frequently termed vêhichakîk, "rectified" (literally, "for what is really good," and meaning that they belong to the intercalary year). As the object of intercalation is to rectify the year and restore it to its original state, it follows that if the intercalary year begins at the vernal equinox the original year must have done the same.

I have been kindly informed, from the Greenwich Observatory, that the length of the tropical year is 365.2422 days, and that it diminishes at the rate of 0.595 of a second in a century; also that the vernal equinox of 1865 occurred very near noon of March 22 by Greenwich time,

Supposing we take this vernal equinox as a datum (although it must have occurred at about 3.30 p.m. by Persepolis time) we shall find that the first day of the Parsi year had then retreated as far as August 24, 1864, according to Persian reckoning; a distance of 210 days from the vernal equinox of 1865, after having previously retreated through a complete cycle of the year of 365 days. So that the difference between the Parsi year of 365 days and the correct tropical year of 365.2422 days had then accumulated to a total of  $365 + 210 = 575$  days. We have, therefore, only to divide this accumulated error of 575 days by the annual increment of 0.2422 of a day to ascertain the number of years this calendar had been existing before the vernal equinox of 1865. This division gives a quotient of 2374 years, including 1865 A.D.; and these carry us back to 510 B.C. as the approximate date of the establishment of the Parsi Calendar, with the first day of the year coinciding with the vernal equinox.

We have now to consider some of the possible sources of error in this calculation. It is evident that the very small alteration in the length of the tropical year may be safely neglected, because its accumulated effect in 2400 years, if it were uniform, would not amount to three minutes. How nearly the ancient Persians could ascertain the exact time of the equinox is a much more serious question, because every day's error in the date of the original equinox would affect the calculated date of the establishment of the calendar to the extent of nearly four years. So far as accidental errors are concerned—those which are as likely to be made in the one direction as in the other—I think a competent observer, without any instruments of precision, ought to have been able to ascertain the date of an equinox within a day or two, if allowed time and place for a suitable series of observations. But the ignorance of the ancients with regard to refraction would lead to an error wholly in one direction, for which allowance must be made. The constant effect of refraction is to make the night seem shorter than it really is, and this would lead an observer, who was ignorant of this effect, to antedate the vernal equinox by rather more than a day; so that he would observe an apparent equinox in 505 B.C. on the same day in the Parsi year as that on which the real equinox occurred in 510 B.C. The most probable date of the establishment of the Parsi Calendar is therefore 505 B.C., with the margin of four to eight years in either direction for accidental errors of observation.

This date is about the earliest that could be expected, as it brings us to the time when Darius Hystaspes had consolidated his empire, through the early conquests which he recorded upon the rock of Bisutûn. In that record he mentions about a score of dates, taken from an earlier calendar which he certainly inherited from his predecessors. If that calendar wanted reformation, Darius would be likely to seize the opportunity of his extended rule to carry out any improvement which his advisers reported necessary. And, as he was a believer in Auramazdâ, his most influential advisers, in such matters, would be Zoroastrian priests, who would probably give a Zoroastrian character to their recommendations; so that the strictly Zoroastrian names of the months and days, which we find in the Parsi Calendar, might be reasonably expected. If they were introduced at a later date than the establishment of the calendar, we should require positive historical evidence of the alteration, as well as some information about the names originally given to the months by Darius, before admitting the probability of so unusual a change.

E. W. WEST.

SCIENCE NOTES.

DR. A. G. VERNON HARCOURT, Lecturer in chemistry at Oxford, has been re-elected president of the Chemical Society for a second term. At the anniversary meeting it was stated that the number of fellows now amounts to 2019, showing an increase of 40 during the year; and that the total receipts were £5347, as against a total expenditure of £4407.

THE annual meeting of the Royal Institution of Great Britain will be held, at the house in Albemarle-street, on Friday next at 5 p.m. The evening discourse on the same day will be delivered by Colonel H. Watkin, on "Chronographs and their Application to Gun Ballistics."

THE anniversary meeting of the Zoological Society for the election of council and officers for the ensuing year will be held at their house in Hanover-square, on Wednesday next at 4 p.m.

ON Monday next Mr. James Swinburne will begin a course of four Cantor Lectures, at the Society of Arts, on "Applied Electro-Chemistry."

THE scene of the excursion of the Geologists' Association next Saturday will be the neighbourhood of Dorking and Leith Hill, under the direction of Mr. T. Leighton, with the special object of studying the lithological change in the so-called Hythe beds of the Lower Greensand from south to north.

MESSRS. W. H. ALLEN & Co. announce for immediate publication the eleventh volume of their "Naturalist's Library," being the second volume of Butterflies, by Mr. W. F. Kirby, with thirty-two coloured plates, besides woodcuts.

AT Mr. J. C. Stevens's sale-room on Monday a specimen of the egg of the Great Auk (Alca impennis)—slightly fractured on one side—fetched 160 guineas; an egg of Aepyornis maximus—slightly cracked, but otherwise in excellent condition—40 guineas; and an egg of Aepyornis Grandideri—the first ever offered for sale in this country—35 guineas.

THE French Academy of Medicine has divided the prize of 250,000 francs (£10,000)—founded by M. and Mme. Victor Saint-Paul, as a reward for the discovery of a serious remedy for diphtheria—between Dr. Roux, of the Pasteur Laboratory, and Dr. Belwing, of Berlin.

REPORTS OF SOCIETIES.

OLIFTON SHAKESPEARE SOCIETY.—(Saturday, March 28.)

ARTHUR S. WAY, Esq., president, in the chair.—Miss Louisa Mary Davies, in a paper entitled "The Life and Death of Sir John Falstaff," said that in Sir John Falstaff, affectionately styled Old Jack, we have a typical mixture of characteristics, each individual element, however, being of somewhat unusual strength, and forming together a compound of dominating proportions. In his biography there are no materials for the orthodox chapter dealing with his childhood and youth. We know, from his possessing a seal and coat of arms, that he was of gentle birth, and from his own lips we learn that he made his first appearance on the stage of life about three o'clock in the afternoon with the marks of premature age upon him, and that in his youth he was a slender young fellow and page to Thomas Mowbray, Duke of Norfolk. Our first personal introduction him shows us a man with ready wit, invulnerable good-humour, some maudlin sentimentality, — after heavy drinking — a feeble hanker after a better way of living, which is perished at the first breath of temptation. Chief incident of the Gadshill robbery Falstaff's unblushing lies growing more man and wildly impossible every time he opens his mouth, and his masterly evasion of the di-in which he had involved himself. His versatility caused the Prince to procure him a charge of foot; and although this was levied with a keen eye to the main chance, and composed of materials which were not in their nature very durable, yet their gallant commander must have led them into a warm corner on the field of Shrewsbury. It was a venial offence afterwards, in reference to Douglas to give himself safety; but in his desecration of Hotspur's corpse his worse side came immediately to the fore. His diversions at Windsor are writ large, too large some of us might think; but his well-deserved humiliations in the royal borough were, to his irrepressible buoyancy, only like a shower on a duck's back. Yet we do not doubt they taught him a wholesome lesson of caution for the future; for we do not learn that he ever again made the mistake of imagining that well-born and virtuous wives and mothers were of necessity infatuated, not to say slain outright, by his charms. His offering Bardolph's name as security when he was trying to buy twenty-two yards of satin on credit was certainly a colossal stroke of humour; and when even-handed justice is dogging his footsteps he was able, by his inimitable drollery, to turn Sir William Gascoigne's threatening voice and wrathful words into a hearty benediction on his northward expedition. On the way he visits Justice Shallow, and although, of course, we reprobate his conduct on the occasion, yet when we read his clear-sighted after-judgment of Shallow, and consider the wonderful insight into character which enables him to play upon almost everyone with whom he associates, as skillfully as a good musician on a harp, admiration comes and takes her place by the side of disapprobation. It is almost always so where Falstaff is concerned. Justice gives judgment against the defendant, and another of the abstract virtues—name not identified—adds, "Damages, one farthing." Arrived on the field Sir John Coleville gives himself up to Falstaff as to a knight of known powers to whom it would be no disgrace to yield. When Falstaff receives the news of the King's death and the Prince's accession his joy knows no bounds. And we can see his joy is not all selfish. He is glad and proud for the Prince's sake, he is glad and proud for himself, and gladder and prouder still in the thought of dispensing the royal favours that, alas! were never to come within his reach. Where, after his repudiation and banishment by the King, the hoary old sinner and corrupter of youth lived out the remnant of his days we do not know. He lived less than two years after, and his "conversations" must have mended somewhat, for he died in London. His friends were unanimous as to the King's treatment of him being the cause of his death. He was affectionately mourned by all his comrades. The manner in which Falstaff dominates any play in which he appears is a clear indication that the delineation of his person and character is a masterpiece. His character is complex. He was not all animal; he had a splendid intellect, the virtue of which we cannot doubt; he possessed a large influence over the Prince. This intellect seems to have been utilised simply for his own advancement. He loved his Prince, but he sunned himself right gloriously in the high rank of his friend; and the particularly sinuous and elastic quality of his mental power was continually in exercise to extricate himself from crooked or tight places. The only instance in which it played him false was when it blinded him to the virtual difference between himself and Prince Hal. He thought he was altogether such a one as himself, hence his bitter humiliation and broken heart when he found his mistake. He has been called a coward, but it is evident his youth had been without fear, if not without reproach; and if with the advent of age and physical infirmity he lost some of his old courage, and found it easier to lie or jest himself out of a difficulty than to fight his way out, we should not come down too hard upon the old man, especially if courage is, as so many contend, chiefly an affair of physical condition. His faults were many, and we need no microscope to perceive them. In spite of his unbounded good-humour he was bitterly selfish, as we see in his conduct towards Shallow; and it is perhaps not too much to say he seems to have been entirely destitute of moral sense either in the direction of right or wrong. Still, in defiance of our own impeachment, we should all doubtless say, if put to the test, in the spirit of Prince Henry, "We could better spare a better man."—Mr. Arthur S. Way read a paper on "The Character of Henry V." He called attention to the characteristics of the time when, in 1599, the play of "Henry V." was first acted. At no time could men so fitly be told of their country's heroic past, be reminded that their fathers had left them an example which it needed no common energy and devotion to emulate, and behold risen one who was as a king the counterpart of that image of a queen which was enshrined as the saint of his deepest devotion in each man's breast. And never since that day when Athens, laurel-wreathed from Marathon and Salamis, gazed on the stately pageantry and hearkened to the rolling music of "The Persians," had worthier audience gathered to mark the unfolding of a noble drama than these that are murmuring in high-wrought expectation before the black curtain of the Globe. There would be found England's noblest sons, wise statesmen, bluff sea-dogs, venturesome merchants, poets and dramatists. The play is one continuous pean of triumphs long past; and yet as men look and listen there is something strangely familiar in the story: it seems the history of the last twelve years retold. And the central figure and hero of it all is the noble prototype of those who have wrought his mighty deeds again, a chief whom they would have loved to follow, a character they can understand, one of themselves, a man, a thorough Englishman. The first thing that would strike that audience would be that a changed man stood before them—the same yet not the same. The same elasticity of spirit and buoyancy of mood, the same readiness of resource and keen enjoyment of life; but the old wildness that plunged into dissipation or reckless frolic, careless of law or public opinion, is utterly gone; it dropped from him like a discarded cloak when he stood up strong, steadfast, and serious to take on him the burden of a nation's fate. There was something in this that would appeal to the sympathy of every man there. The audience would recognise Henry's fixity and oneness of purpose as an English trait. Dear to these Englishmen also was his practical conscientiousness. The hearts of the audience warmed towards Henry in that scene wherein he talks with men of the people, and as true English traits again they would hail his frankness and trust-begetting trust. Dear to their souls would be his English coolness and self-control. The men who played out the game of bowls on the Hoe at Plymouth could well appreciate Henry's English pluck; and in his hour of triumph there is no self-gratulation. There is a world's width between Marlowe's Tamburlaine and this man, who, five times over in the scene after the battle, repeats in words which vary but to emphasise his meaning, "Not unto us, but to Thine arm alone ascribe we all." Of a peculiarly English type, too, is the manliness of Henry. And his wooing was a hero's wooing. So the spectators gazed with kindling eyes and hearts that swelled within them; and the pulse of manhood in each man quickened and the patriot fire glowed as they hung upon the music that rang with triumphs even such as themselves had won—as they saw unfolded even such a royal, manly character as each man might make his own ideal, whose realisation depended not on rare gifts of fortune, but on the fostering of instincts that stir within us all, on the development of traits which we are wont to claim as peculiarly English, the common heritage of peasant and prince, which have added dignity to the triumph of a Wellington and turned into something better than victory the failure of a Gordon.—Miss Julia Gillard read some "Notes on the Allusions to Music and Song in 'Henry V.," especially mentioning part-singing (I. ii. 181-183), a notice of which occurs in the year 671—the earliest accredited piece for several voices in any country is the English six men's song, "Summer is a-cumen in"—plain song (III. ii. 6); the pipe of Hermes (III. vii. 18), which is strange, as Hermes is usually represented with a lyre and Pan with the pipe; the Tucket sonance (IV. ii. 35). The Flemings ruled the musical world of the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries; but with the burst of glorious poetry that flooded the golden age of good Queen Bess "the service high and anthem clear" were ennobled by the choral music of Tallis, Farrant, Byrde, and Gibbons; and Morley's madrigals helped to swell "the concord of sweet sounds." The Archbishop of Canterbury, in eulogising his sovereign, endows him with a musical voice and a charm of diction, yet the King, in wooing Katharine, disclaims such gifts.

PHILOLOGICAL.—(Dictionary Evening, Friday, April 17.)

PROF. SKRAT, vice-president, in the chair.—Dr. Murray said that, by reason of the recent loss and illness of assistants, and the consequent heavy pressure of work, the strain of which had begun to tell upon himself, it had been impossible for him to devote any time to the preparation of a detailed report of work done during the year. He had, in consequence, requested that the "Dictionary Evening" should be omitted this year; but as, through some misunderstanding, it had nevertheless been announced, he had come from Oxford simply to prevent disappointment, and to make a verbal statement. A good deal of reading had been done during the year. In connexion with this he had specially to mention the great work done for the Dictionary by Dr. W. C. Minor; also valuable contributions received from Dr. W. R. Gowers, F.R.S. In volunteer sub-editing most of the letters had now been done, but small portions of N, O, P, T, and W were still in hand; the letters G, H, I, M, were also being revised by experienced workers. The assistance thus received was valuable, but had its limitations. Thus, few of their volunteer helpers could do much to add to the materials entrusted to them, so as to complete the history of the words or sense: this demanded sources of information within the reach of few, and much of the work of the staff in the Scriptorium consisted in a systematised effort to complete the evidential history of words and senses, for which the numerous quotations collected by their readers supplied only a general rough indication. The same scholars as before had continued to assist them by revising the work in proof, and he had again especially to mention the priceless help given by Dr. Fitzedward Hall. As to the progress of the D part during 1895, they had, by strenuous efforts, succeeded in turning out 240 pages—the greatest amount ever produced since the staff was divided, and they had sent in copy to the end of Dec., and prepared it to the end of Dr. But to do this he had to work eighty to ninety hours a week from September to Christmas; and this had left him not in the freshest of condition to tackle the verb "do," the most appalling piece of work he ever had to face, the materials for which were a yard thick, and amounted to 12,000 separate quotation slips—and these, he added, were for the ordinary uses of the word far too few, though for curious and obsolete uses much more than ample. The word was now in type, and he was sorry to say, with its transitive, intransitive, and causal senses, and its periphrastic, auxiliary, and idiomatic uses, made sixteen or seventeen columns. As each column of the Dictionary contains as much matter as three ordinary octavo pages this article alone would thus make a pamphlet, say a German doctoral dissertation, of fifty pages. They had now advanced in proof as far as "dolorous"—half way through Do—and he was very anxious to finish D, and with it (E being already done by Mr. Bradley) vol. iii., by the end of the year; but the retarding causes which he had mentioned had already thrown him three weeks behind, and made the accomplishment less certain. They had published on January 1 last up to "diffuency," and had printed off to "ditty," so that all the three sections due on July 1, October 1, and January 1 next were ready, and they were actually working at what was not due till mid-summer or autumn of 1897. It might thus be said, as was sometimes said of the light of the fixed stars, that if he and his staff were all extinguished at this moment it would take a year and a-half for their disappearance to be practically observed. He then read the prefatory note to the section to be published on July 1 next, "Diffuent" to "Disburden," and proceeded to enumerate some of the words of special interest that would be included in that and the two following sections, briefly epitomising those on which the Dictionary would give fresh information. Among the words noticed were "Diggers," a body of Communists who arose in 1649 and began to dig and occupy the commons; "dilettante," "dine," "dinner" (certainly from late Latin dis(je)junare; "Dine with Duke Humphrey," the Scotch form of which was to "dine with St. Giles and the Earl of Murray (buried in St. Giles's)"; "dilligout," the jocular tenure of Addington; "dimity"; "diocese," of which the historical English spelling was diocess; "diphtheria" (the history of which had been worked out for them by Dr. W. Sykes of Gosport); "diploma," and its curious connexion with "diplomacy"; "dismal" and "the dismal days," the full history of which would be for the first time given and proved; "dispatch," with the origin of the recent blundered spelling "despatch"; "distribution" as a logical term (traced back to the Schoolman Petrus Hispanus), with a criticism of the extraordinary treatment of this by Dr. B. G. Latham in his edition of Johnson.—Dr. Murray was warmly thanked for his services to the Dictionary.

FINE ART.

The Florentine Painters of the Renaissance.
By Bernhard Berenson. (G. P. Putnam's Sons.)

MR. BERENSON rightly describes this book as an essay. After a good deal of consideration, he has come to the conclusion that "the essential in painting as an art" is "to stimulate our consciousness of tactile values, so that the picture shall have as much power as the object represented to appeal to our tactile imagination." Of this essential he considers Giotto as supreme master.

"This," he continues, "is his everlasting claim to greatness; and it is this which will make him a source of highest aesthetic delight for a period at least as long as decipherable traces of his handiwork remain on mouldering panel or crumbling wall."

Mr. Berenson argues that, by the exercise of this power, Giotto raises us to a higher plane of reality, and communicates to us the "material significance" of objects. Having established to his satisfaction that this power of stimulating the tactile imagination implies "a genius for grasping and communicating real significance," he again defines Giotto's claim to everlasting appreciation as an artist. This time he tells us that his thoroughgoing sense for the significant in the visible world enabled him so to represent things that we realise his representations more quickly and more completely than we should realise the things themselves, thus giving us that confirmation of our sense of capacity which is so great a source of pleasure.

To tell the truth, I feel incompetent to criticise this theory. I know that there is a third dimension, and that to create the illusion of roundness and hollowness and solidity is one of the special tasks of the painter; but I am not convinced that the man who does this most completely is the greatest painter (even as a painter), nor should I welcome the confirmation of my sense of capacity as a high aesthetic pleasure. I confess I do not quite understand what Mr. Berenson means by "material significance," as distinguished from other phrases used by him, such as "real significance," and "spiritual significance." I very much fear that I have neglected my

"tactile imagination," as I certainly have not experienced those sensations in the palms and fingers, which apparently are the true test, whether a Florentine figure-painting is a real work of art, or not. We are told that when we look upon Giotto's "Madonna Enthroned," in the Florence Academy,

"our palms and fingers accompany our eyes much more quickly than in the presence of real objects, the sensations varying constantly with the various projections represented, as of face, torso, knees; confirming in every way our feeling of capacity for dealing with things—for life, in short."

Such passages as these—and they occur occasionally throughout the essay—only confirm my sense of incompetence to deal with his theory; and I am relieved when I gather from other passages that it applies only to figure-painting, and perhaps only to Florentine figure-painting. As Mr. Berenson has two other volumes in preparation—one on the Central Italian Painters of the Renaissance, and another on the North Italian Painters of the Renaissance—it will perhaps be juster as well as wiser to defer further consideration of his views as to the true sources of enjoyment in painting (as painting) until he has had these further opportunities for their exposition.

Meanwhile, whether his theory be right or wrong (and I do not think the matter of so much importance as he does), it is only right to say that the essay is ingenious and stimulating, and that it shows a vivid appreciation of those great Florentine artists, Giotto, Masaccio, Botticelli, Leonardo, Michelangelo, and the few others with whom it is principally concerned.

COSMO MONKHOUSE.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

THE private view of the Royal Academy is fixed for Friday next, May 1, though—as already announced—the usual banquet on the Saturday will not be given this year, as a sign of respect for the memory of the late Lord Leighton.

THE exhibitions to open next week are—a collection of paintings by modern artists, at Messrs. Henry Graves & Co's galleries, in Pall Mall; and antiquities, &c., found during 1895 in the excavations at Silchester, in the apartments of the Society of Antiquities, Burlington House. The latter will be open for two weeks, from 11 a.m. to 4 p.m.

ON Friday and Saturday next, Messrs. Sotheby will sell the collection of old playing cards of various ages and countries formed by the late Lady Charlotte Schreiber, the author of a handsome work on the subject recently published by John Murray. We do not observe in the catalogue any example of the Indian circular cards of ten suits, each marked with one of the Avatars of Vishnu.

AT the general meeting of the members of the Art Union of London, held on Wednesday, it was stated that the subscriptions for last year enabled the council, after setting aside £1479 for the works of art presented to subscribers, to appropriate £966 for prizes to be drawn for. For next year the annual presentation plate will be a reproduction of Mr. E. J. Poynter's "Horae Serenae," which was exhibited at the Royal Academy in 1894.

THE sale of the Roman gold coins in the Montagu collection began in Paris last Monday. The total number of lots is 1291, not less remarkable for rarity and fineness of condition than the Greek series.

THERE is now on view, at the Boston Museum of Fine Arts, a collection of the etched work of Sir Francis Seymour Haden, which may fairly be described as unique; for it consists of the trial proofs and proofs which the artist laid aside at the time for himself, but sold in 1889 to a New York merchant, the late Mr. Hermann Wunderlich. The catalogue—which has been compiled by Mr. S. R. Koehler, with his usual laborious minuteness—will be valued by collectors as a supplement to Sir W. R. Drake's "Descriptive Catalogue" (1880). Not only does it include some thirteen plates executed after that date, but it also contains proofs from four earlier plates not known to Drake, and describes several impressions that were likewise unknown to him. Another valuable feature of the catalogue is that it records verbatim the remarks that were jotted down by the artist on the proofs at the time they were printed. The total number of impressions is no less than 561. As an example of the earlier plates unknown to Drake, we may mention a self-portrait of the artist in the act of drawing, which is dated 1862—the only example of that year; as an example of the later plates, "Breaking up of the Agamemnon" No. II., with a pinnace alongside the old ship near her stern, of which there are eight different impressions, five being trials.

WE quote the following from the Athens correspondent of the Times:

"An important report on the condition of the Parthenon has been sent in to the Ministry of Public Instruction by Mr. Penrose, the eminent architect, who had been invited by Government to inspect the building. The report states that no serious damage was caused to the structure by the earthquake of 1894, and that the cracks which then appeared in the walls have not become wider. It is suggested, however, that, as a measure of precaution, certain repairs should be made in the opisthodomos, in the northern corner of the peristyle, and in the lintel of the western door. Mr. Penrose does not favour the proposal to raise the fallen columns, on the ground that the perfection of fitting which characterises the other columns could not be attained, and that the damaged portions would present an unsightly appearance."

MUSIO.

THE LAMOUREUX CONCERTS.

MR. ROBERT NEWMAN may congratulate himself on the success of his somewhat bold venture in persuading M. Lamoureux to come with his whole orchestra from Paris, while the latter will certainly not regret that he accepted the invitation. The number of high class orchestral concerts is ever on the increase in London; for the more the public hears the more it wants. The Lamoureux undertaking was, nevertheless, a bold one, for the first season, though an artistic success, might not have proved so financially: our public is apt to wait to hear whether a thing is good.

In the scheme for the three concerts last week at the Queen's Hall, prominence was naturally given to French music. Berlioz was represented by the "Pilgrim's" March from his "Harold" Symphony, the "Radoczy" March from "Faust," a movement from "Roméo," and the "Chasse et Orage" from "Les Troyens"—all four thus consisting of excerpts. M. Lamoureux, no doubt, wished to make his programmes as varied as possible, yet surely one complete work, the "Harold" or the "Fantastic" Symphony, might have been given; space, it may be remarked, was found for a whole Symphony by M. Saint-Saëns. And, again, the selection from "Roméo" was certainly not the best. Why was not the "Queen Mab" Scherzo chosen? It is one of Berlioz' most characteristic compositions, and it would have displayed the merits of the conductor and his men to the best advantage. The "Chasse et Orage" was extremely interesting: the fine music, however, apart from the stage, does not produce its full effect. But though we cannot altogether approve of the Berlioz selections, we must render full justice to the intelligence, delicacy, and verve with which they were interpreted. M. Lamoureux is a born conductor, and to his natural gifts he adds long experience. His orchestra is composed of eminent players, who by constant practice have attained wonderful ensemble, and not mere military precision; indeed, they display enthusiasm. In all matters of detail, and in balance of tone, the orchestra is admirable; the excellence of the wood-wind players deserves special mention. M. Saint-Saëns, as stated above, was represented by a Symphony, the one in C minor (Op. 78), for orchestra, organ, and pianoforte, originally produced by the London Philharmonic Society in 1886. The workmanship is extraordinarily clever, though the thematic material may not be very original; and, further, the noise of the second part scarcely compensates for unimportance in the subject-matter. The slow section is the most pleasing. The performance, with M. Lacroix at the organ, was magnificent; and this, rather than the music, may account for the applause which followed. The pianoforte part, played in duet form by MM. Chevillard and Cohn, is quite ineffective; the idea of introducing it was possibly suggested to the composer by Berlioz' "Fantaisie sur la Tempête." Two other compositions by M. Saint-Saëns were given at these concerts. One was the very clever and attractive symphonic poem, "Le Rouet d'Omphale," interpreted with the utmost delicacy; the other was the graceful and effective "Rondo Capriccioso" for violin and orchestra, the solo part being delivered in finished and brilliant manner by M. Houfflaek, the accomplished leader of the Lamoureux orchestra. By way of novelty the overture to the late E. Chabrier's opera "Gwendoline," said to be his finest work, was produced at the first concert. The music, French in character, with a strong touch of Wagner, shows skill and power; but as the thematic material is derived from the opera, it does not, as absolute music, convey full meaning.

The second concert opened with "Wallenstein's Camp," the first portion of a Symphony by M. Vincent d'Indy, inspired by Schiller's trilogy "Wallenstein"; the two remaining sections are entitled "Max and Thécla," and "The Death of Wallenstein." We have referred to the excerpts from Berlioz, and here again we were given only a section of a work. In the case of Berlioz the excerpts were from compositions fairly familiar; the Symphony of M. d'Indy is, however, quite new to us, and the first section is sufficiently interesting to create a desire to hear the whole work. "Wallenstein's Camp" is programme music of the higher kind; not the details, but the spirit of the poem is reflected. The thematic material is bright and varied, the working out clever and often humorous—as, for instance, in the fugato for four bassoons—and the orchestration piquante and picturesque. M. d'Indy has a strong feeling for contrast, which shows itself both in the music and in the scoring. At the close of the fine rendering there was hearty applause. A scène from an Orchestral Suite by M. G. Charpentier, one of the younger members of the French school, and, moreover, a "Prix de Rome"—a quaint little piece, with dainty, we had almost said tricky scoring—also won great favour.

At the third concert a Symphonic Poem entitled "Tamara," by Balakireff, was performed for the first time in England. The composer is one of the most prominent members of the new Russian school, to which, especially since the death of Tchaikowsky, attention has been drawn. It is quite impossible after a single hearing to sum up a composition lasting over twenty minutes, and one written to illustrate a weird poem by Lermontoff, though without any special clue. The music is imaginative, and, in a way, impressive, although as regards the latter quality, much may be due to the quaint tonality, the marked, nay violent contrasts, the melodic and harmonic surprises, and the brilliant and strongly coloured orchestration—to the manner, in fact, rather than to the matter. Be this as it may, M. Lamoureux deserves thanks for having introduced the music to our notice, and for having given us a fine interpretation; and we hope that at his next, and already announced, visit he will repeat it.

It remains to speak of M. Lamoureux as an interpreter of Beethoven and Wagner. Beethoven only figured once in the three programmes, but that was with his C minor Symphony. The highest test to which a pianist or violinist can submit himself is Beethoven, and so is it also with a conductor. The intelligence, care, and enthusiasm which M. Lamoureux bestows with such excellent results on composers who, by the side of Beethoven, must be named second or some other rate, are raised to their highest power when the Bonn master is in question. The performance of the Symphony, notably of the Scherzo, was exceedingly fine: the Allegro was given with spirit, the Andante with charm, the Scherzo with rare finish and mysticism, and the Finale with vigour. And yet there were moments, especially in the opening movement, when one felt that Beethoven was not revealed in his full strength and glory. By wonderful attention to letter, it seemed as if the conductor lost something of the spirit of the tone-poem. To judge M. Lamoureux by anything but the highest standard would be absurd, for he ranks among the foremost conductors of the day; and as an interpreter of Beethoven he challenges comparison with them. In Wagner's music he has again to face comparison not only with eminent men, but with such as have sat at the very feet of the master. M. Lamoureux has taught us nothing new about Wagner, but the subdued rendering of the "Good Friday" (as the Charfreitag is uncomfortably rendered in English) music, and the delicate playing, particularly of the woodwind, in the "Waldweben" from "Siegfried," deserve special mention. The careful, historical, and thoughtful analytical notes in the programme-books were from the pen of Mr. E. F. Jacques. M. Lamoureux knows that the English are a loyal nation, and he not only commenced but concluded his series of concerts with the National Anthem. He returns to England, as mentioned, in the autumn, and he may be sure of a hearty reception.

J. S. SHEDLOCK.

MUSIC NOTES.

THE Plain-song and Medieval Music Society are about to publish the Ordinary of the Mass, as a first instalment of an adaptation to the English text of the plain-song of the thirteenth century Graduale Sarisburiense which they have already issued in facsimile to members. The address of the hon. secretary is 14, Westbourne-terrace-road, W.

MME. MENTER appeared at the third Philharmonic Concert on Wednesday evening, and played M. Saint-Saëns' Pianoforte Concerto in C minor, a work which shows that the French composer considers a Concerto to be, above all, a show piece for the solo performer. Mme. Menter's interpretation of the solo part was brilliant, though the closing section was scarcely given with sufficient breadth; her style of playing is now more subdued, her touch more sympathetic. Her reception was most enthusiastic; but she wisely refused the encore for which the public sought so persistently. M. Johannes Wolff may also be congratulated on his rendering of Viouxtemps' not over exciting Violin Concerto, No. 4 in D minor. He played with marked skill, vigour, and intelligence. The Symphony was Beethoven's No. 7 in A., but the performance was a tame one; and yet after the visit of M. Lamoureux Sir A. Mackenzie and his men ought to have been specially on their mettle. Mr. Bispham sang Wagner's "Les Deux Grenadiers," an interesting dramatic setting of Heine's poem. The composer wrote it for voice and pianoforte; but the latter part has been scored, and most effectively, by Mr. Clarence Lucas.

MISS CLARA BUTT, who wisely intends to continue her studies, in Italy, gave a successful farewell concert at St. James's Hall on Tuesday evening. Mme. Albani, just back from an American tour, was one of the chief vocalists, and shared with the concert-giver the honours of the evening.

At his second recital, on Thursday afternoon, M. Sapellinkoff played Bach's Organ Toccata and Fugue with skill, intelligence, and feeling; and yet he could not persuade us that organ music sounds well on the pianoforte. He gave an admirable reading of Schumann's Sonata in G minor: the slow movement was rendered with rare charm and tenderness. The pianist's third piece was Schubert's Fantasia in C, of which he gave a pure, poetical interpretation. There was no excess, unless occasionally on the side of delicacy; no display of individuality at the expense of the composer; and, happily, there were no meretricious ornaments, such as those with which Liszt and Tausig were wont to adorn the great masters. M. Sapellinkoff scored a genuine success.

"A BOOK THAT IS BOTH ORIGINAL AND SUGGESTIVE."—ALFRED RUSSELL WALLACE in NATURE.

THE PRESENT EVOLUTION OF MAN. By G. Archdall

REID. Demy 8vo, 7s. 6d.

MR. ALFRED RUSSELL WALLACE CONTINUES:—"Mr. Archdall Reid's volume is full of original ideas and acute reasoning. The larger part of it is devoted to a discussion of the general subject of organic evolution. This is exceedingly well done, and it contains a very forcible argument against the possibility of the inheritance of acquired characters in the higher animals, derived from the facts of cell-division and specialisation in the development of the individual. This argument has not, within my knowledge, been so clearly and forcibly set forth by any other writer. There are also some very acute criticisms of the writings of Herbert Spencer and others on evolution. .... A very interesting and well-written volume."

H. MARTYN KENNARD'S NEW WORK.

THE VEIL LIFTED: a New Light on the World's History.

By H. MARTYN KENNARD. Demy 8vo, 6s.

[This day.

CHAPMAN & HALL, LD., LONDON.

MESSRS. LONGMANS & CO.'S LIST.

NEW BOOK BY MR. E. F. KNIGHT.

MADAGASCAR in WAR TIME: the Experiences of The Times Special Correspondent with the Hovas during the French Invasion of 1895. By E. F. KNIGHT, Author of "Where Three Empires Meet," &c. With 16 illustrations and Map. 8vo, 12s. 6d.

THE BADMINTON LIBRARY.—New Volume.

Edited by the DUKE of BEAUFORT, K.G., and A. E. T. WATSON.

BILLIARDS. By Major W. Broadfoot, R.E. With Contributions by A. H. BOYD, SYDENHAM DIXON, W. J. FORD, DUDLEY D. PONTIFEX, RUSSELL D. WALKER, and REGINALD H. R. RIMINGTON-WILSON. With 29 illustrations by Lucien Davies, R.I., and from Photographs and numerous Diagrams and Figures. Crown 8vo, 10s. 6d.

NEW BOOK BY MR. LECKY.

DEMOCRACY and LIBERTY. By William Edward Hartpole

LECKY. 2 vols., 8vo, 36s.

"These volumes are not an indictment of democracy. But they are an unsparing criticism of its shortcomings, a frank proclamation of the disillusion of its apostles. In many ways Mr. Lecky's latest work is worthy of his reputation. It is a veritable encyclopedia of information."—Times.

NEW BOOK BY SIR EDWIN ARNOLD.

EAST and WEST. Essays by Sir Edwin Arnold, K.C.I.E., C.S.I.

With 41 illustrations by R. T. Pritchett. 8vo, 18s.

"The mingling of the light and the grave, the reflections of many moods and scenes, the contrast of the splendour and the havoc, the mystery and the glamour of the East, with the pictures taken from Western society, and knowledge drawn from Western science, will be felt by most readers to be the great charm of the book."—Scotsman.

NEW NOVEL BY H. RIDER HAGGARD.

HEART of the WORLD. By H. Rider Haggard, Author of

"She," "Allan Quatermain," &c. With 16 illustrations. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"We have not enjoyed a tale by Mr. Haggard so much since he used that mighty hunter, Mr. Selous, as his hero in 'Allan Quatermain.' The adventures are continuously romantic; the writing is vigorous and picturesque."—Sheffield Independent.

THE FLOWER-SELLER: a Book of Poems. By Lady Lindsay.

Crown 8vo, 6s.

INDIAN IDEALS.—No. I.

NĀRADA SŪTRA: an Inquiry into Love (Bhakti-Jijnasa).

Translated from the Sanskrit, with an Independent Commentary, by E. T. STURDY. Fcap. 8vo, 2s. 6d. net.

Now ready, price Sixpence.

LONGMAN'S MAGAZINE.—May, 1896.

CONTENTS.

- |   |  |
|---|--|
| OLD MR. TREDGOLD. By Mrs. OLIPHANT. Chapters XLV.-XLVIII.     | VÆ VICTIS. By HENRY NEWBOLT.                         |
| THE SICK NURSE. By Sir BENJAMIN WARD RICHARDSON, M.D., F.R.S. | THE MAN of BATH. By ARCHIBALD BALLANTYNE.            |
| THE LITTLE LEGACY. By L. B. WALFORD.                          | FLOTSAM. By HENRY SETON MERRIMAN. Chapters XVII.-XX. |
|   | AT the SIGN of the SHIP. By ANDREW LANG.             |

THE EDINBURGH REVIEW.—No. 376.—April.

CONTENTS.

- |  |                                      |
|--|--------------------------------------|
| 1. THE RIGHTS and DUTIES of GREAT BRITAIN in SOUTH AFRICA. | 6. HORSELESS CARRIAGES.              |
| 2. ENGLISH LETTER-WRITING in the NINETEENTH CENTURY.       | 7. THE EARLY HISTORY of ENGLISH LAW. |
| 3. THE ART of MOVEMENT.                                    | 8. WESTMINSTER and ST. JAMES'S.      |
| 4. PUBLIC WORKS in IRELAND.                                | 9. JOHN STUART BLACKIE.              |
| 5. EMMA, LADY HAMILTON.                                    | 10. RECENT POETRY.                   |
|  | 11. DEMOCRACY and LIBERTY.           |

THE ENGLISH HISTORICAL REVIEW.—No. 42.—April.

Royal 8vo, price 6s.

Edited by S. R. GARDINER, D.C.L., LL.D., Fellow of Merton College, Oxford, and REGINALD L. POOLE, M.A., Ph.D., Lecturer in Diplomatic in the University of Oxford.

American Editor—JUSTIN WINSOR, LL.D., Librarian of Harvard College, Cambridge, Massachusetts.

- Articles:—
A BRIEF SURVEY of DOMESDAY. By Sir FREDERICK POLLOCK, Bart., LL.D.
THE DUTCH POWER in BRAZIL.—I. The Struggle for Bahia, 1624-1627. By the Rev. GEORGE EDMUNDSON.
WILLIAM PATERSON. By W. A. STEEL.
THOMAS WARTON and MACHYN'S DIARY. By the Rev. HERBERT E. D. BLAKISTON.
- Notes and Documents—3. Reviews of Books—4. Periodical Notices—5. List of Recent Historical Publications.

LONGMANS, GREEN & CO., LONDON, NEW YORK, AND BOMBAY.

DAVID NUTT, 270-271, Strand.

THE CLASSICAL REVIEW.

Vol. X., No. 3, APRIL, 1896, 1s. 6d. net.

CONTENTS.

- L. CAMPBELL. On the Place of the Parmenides in the Order of the Platonic Dialogues.
J. G. C. ANDERSON. The Campaign of Basil I. against the Paulicians.
T. G. TUCKER. Notes upon the Poetics of Aristotle.
H. RICHARDS. Notes upon the Oeconomicus of Xenophon.
E. POSTE. Attic Judicature.
C. D. CHAMBERS. On the Origin of the Construction ὁ ἄν.
W. G. RUTHERFORD. Hesychiana.
Short Notes.
Havet's Phædrus. R. ELLIS.
Pauli on the Lemnian and Etruscan Languages. E. W. FAY.
Hartland's "Legend of Perseus," Vol. II. F. B. JEVONS.
De Mirmont on Naval Construction in Apollonius. R. C. SEATON.
Harris's "Plato as a Narrator." Z.
Hayley on Terentian Metres. J. C. ROLFE.
Fisher's Translation of Boissier's "Rome and Pompeii." A. S. W.
Monthly Record—Summaries of Periodicals—Bibliography.

JUST OUT.

The SAGA BOOK of the VIKING

CLUB, or Orkney, Shetland, and Northern Society. Part II., containing Proceedings for 1895. Dr. KANT BLIND, SHETLAND FOLK-LORE—W. G. COLLINGWOOD, VIKINGS in LAKE-LAND (illustrated)—Dr. PETER RAMBLER in ICELAND (illustrated)—EIRA MARGRÖSSON, EDDA. Small 4to, 6s. net.

Part I. (issued in 1894) may be had at the same price.

The LEGENDS of the WAGNER

DRAMA. By JESSIE L. WESTON. Crown 8vo, 388 pages, printed by Constable on Hand-made Paper, cloth, bevelled boards, top gilt, 6s.

"There exists no work in English from which the student of Wagner's art, the theatre-goer, or the general reader interested in mediæval romance can obtain accurate information respecting the legends upon which Wagner based his Musical Dramas, their origin, mythical significance, development in mediæval literature, and the manner in which Wagner reshaped and reanimated them. The present work supplies this want."

THE JEWISH SCRIPTURES.

The Books of the Old Testament in the light of their origin and history. By A. M. FISKE. Crown 8vo, 380 pp., cloth, 6s.

"Extracts from Preface: 'The purpose of this volume is to present the history and literature of the ancient Hebrews, as contained in the Old Testament, in a clear, concise, and candid way, accepting the benefit of the light revealed by modern research and learning.'"

THE JEWISH STATE. An attempt at a Modern Solution of the Jewish Question. Translated from the German of Dr. THEODOR HERZL, by S. d'AVIGDOR. Demy 8vo, 102 pages, sewed, 1s. net.

Pleas for the reconstruction of an independent Jewish State. This pamphlet has created wide interest, and commanded a large sale in Austria and Germany.

LEGENDS of FLORENCE, collected from the People and Retold by CHARLES GODFREY LELAND (HANS BRITMANN). Second Series. Crown 8vo, 278 pp., cloth, gilt top, 6s.

The First Series of "Legends of Florence" was published last year. Some press notices follow.

DAILY CHRONICLE.—"Mr. Leland adds to the qualifications of a practical collector and sifter of popular legends and antiquities that of a charming literary style, singularly adapted to his subject-matter. There is, in fact, no page at which the present book may be opened that will not afford new points of interest to the general reader as well as the student of folk-lore."

WESTMINSTER GAZETTE.—"A charming collection of legends, obtained for the most part from the folk-lore library in the head of a certain Maddalena, a native of the Romagna Toscana, versed in witchcraft."

SCOTSMAN.—"Folk-lore and general reader alike will pore over this collection with huge delight."

MORNING POST.—"In 1896 the author made the acquaintance of a woman of Florence skilled in fortune-telling and mystical cures, who not only exhausted her own stock of stories, but hunted up her acquaintances for more. Mr. Leland has also been 'free' of the 'community of witches,' who are the repositories of Italian folk-lore, for some years."

BOOKMAN.—"His book and its general spirit are fascinating."

LIVERPOOL REVIEW.—"Mr. Leland is always delightful."

THE REALM.—"A fascinating mélange."

SUNDAY TIMES.—"Full of interest."

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 1252.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, MAY 2, 1896.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS.

MISSALE S. AUGUSTINI (Missal of St. Augustine's Abbey, Canterbury). Edited, from the MS. at Corpus Christi College, by MARTIN RULE, M.A. Royal 8vo, 16s. 6d. net to Subscribers before publication, 30s. after publication. [Nearly ready.]

HULSEAN LECTURES, 1895.

THE ATTITUDE of the CHURCH to some of the SOCIAL PROBLEMS of TOWN LIFE. By the Rev. W. MOORE EDE, M.A., Rector of Gateshead, Hon. Canon of Durham. With a Preface by the Right Rev. the LORD BISHOP of DURHAM. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d. SPEAKER.—"The book is marked by a happy union of lofty vision, manly courage, and frank common sense."

THE RISING in EAST ANGLIA in 1381. With an Appendix containing the Suffolk Poll-tax Lists for that year. By EDGAR POWELL, B.A. Demy 8vo, 6s. net.

A GRAMMAR of the ARABIC LANGUAGE. Translated from the German of Caspari, and Edited, with numerous Additions and Corrections, by W. WRIGHT, LL.D., late Professor of Arabic in the University of Cambridge. Third Edition, Revised by W. ROBERTSON SMITH and M. J. DE GOEJE, Professor of Arabic in the University of Leyden. Vol. I., demy 8vo, 12s. 6d.

HERMAS in ARCADIA, and other Essays. By J. Rendel Harris, M.A., D.Litt. (Dubl.), Fellow of Clare College. Royal 8vo, 5s.

THE TRIUMPHS of TURLOGH. Edited, with Translation, Glossary, and Appendices, by STANDISH HAYES O'GRADY, Hon. Litt.D. [In the press.]

STUDIES in the HEGELIAN DIALECTIC. By J. E. McTaggart, M.A., Fellow of Trinity College. Demy 8vo, 8s.

THE PARALLEL HISTORY of the JEWISH MONARCHY in the TEXT of the REVISED VERSION, 1885. Part II. THE DIVIDED MONARCHY. 1 Kings xii. to 2 Kings xxv.; 2 Chronicles x.-xxxvi. Arranged by R. SOMERVILLE, M.A., Assistant Master and Bursar of Harrow School. With an Introduction by S. R. DRIVER, D.D., Regius Professor of Hebrew, and Canon of Christ Church, Oxford. Demy 8vo, 2s.

TEXTS AND STUDIES.—Contributions to Biblical and Patristic Literature.

Edited by J. ARMITAGE ROBINSON, B.D., Norrisian Professor of Divinity.

Vol. IV., No. 1.—THE ATHANASIAN CREED, and its EARLY COMMENTARIES. By A. E. BURN, M.A., Trinity College, Cambridge. 5s. net.

Vol. IV., No. 2.—COPTIC APOCRYPHAL GOSPELS. Translations, together with the Texts of some of them. By FORBES ROBINSON, M.A. 9s. net

THE CAMBRIDGE HISTORICAL SERIES.

General Editor—G. W. PROTHERO, Litt.D., Fellow of King's College, Cambridge, and Professor of History in the University of Edinburgh

THE UNITED STATES of AMERICA, 1765-1865. By Edward Channing, Assistant Professor of History in Harvard University. Crown 8vo, with Maps, 6s.

TIMES.—"It is a true pleasure to read a book marked by so sincere a desire to be fair to friend and foe, countrymen and 'kin beyond the sea,' and to speak the truth without regard to so-called patriotic conventions. The value of the volume is increased by the maps, bibliographical notes, and constitutional documents in the appendices."

IRELAND: to the Year 1868. By his Honour Judge O'Connor Morris. [Nearly ready.]

CAMBRIDGE HISTORICAL ESSAYS, No. IX.

THE THEORY of the DIVINE RIGHT of KINGS. By J. Neville Figgis, M.A., Lecturer on History in St. Catherine's College, Cambridge. Prince Consort Dissertation, 1892. Crown 8vo, 4s. 6d.

PITT PRESS SERIES.—New Volumes.

MICHELET'S LOUIS XI. et CHARLES LE TEMERAIRE. Edited by Arthur R. Ropes, M.A., late Fellow of King's College, Cambridge. 2s. 6d.

SCOTT.—LAY of the LAST MINSTREL. Edited, with Introduction, Notes, and Glossary, by J. H. FLATHER, M.A. 2s.

GUARDIAN.—"It is one of the very best edited school texts ever placed before the public."

SCOTT.—THE LADY of the LAKE. Edited, with Introduction, Notes, and Glossaries, by J. H. B. MASTERMAN, B.A. 2s. 6d.

SCOTT.—A LEGEND of MONTROSE. Edited by H. F. M. Simpson, M.A. 2s. 6d.

POPE.—ESSAY on CRITICISM. Edited, with Introduction and Notes, by A. S. West, M.A., Trinity College, Cambridge. 2s.

EDUCATIONAL TIMES.—"Mr. West's book is not only useful as a 'text with notes'; it is also scholarly and interesting. He has worked with the true literary instinct, and his treatment of the 'Essay on Criticism' is, in this respect, notably above the level of what we are accustomed to in school editions of isolated works."

LONDON: C. J. CLAY & SONS, CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS WAREHOUSE, AVE MARIA LANE.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

	PAGE
LECKY'S DEMOCRACY AND LIBERTY, by J. A. HAMILTON	357
FOURTEEN'S LIFE OF DUNDONALD, by J. A. BLAISE	358
JOWETT'S COLLEGE SERMONS, by the Rev. RONALD BAYNE	359
WILLIAM MORRIS'S OLD FRENCH ROMANCES, by H. OELSHOFER	360
TWO ESSAYISTS, by PERCY ADLERSHAW	361
NEW NOVELS, by FRANK RINDEN	361
TWO "TIMES" CORRESPONDENTS	363
NOTES AND NEWS	363
UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS	364
TRANSLATION: "THE LAST PRAYER OF DAVID STRAUSS," by A. W. BENN	366
MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS	366
ON BOOKWORMS	365
CORRESPONDENCE—
The Author of "The Cuckoo and The Nightingale," by Prof. Skeat; The Rhone called Rose in Provence, by Dr. F. Chance; Prof. Knight and Mr. T. Hutchinson, by Prof. Knight and Thomas Hutchinson; The Sin-Eater in Wales, by W. Ellis Evans; Pamela's Daughter, by J. G. Alger	365
APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK	367
KITTEL'S TEXT OF CHRONICLES IN HEBREW, by Prof. CHEYNE	367
CORRESPONDENCE—
Epigraphic Discoveries at Mathurā, by Prof. Bühler	367
SCIENCE NOTES	368
PHILOLOGY NOTES	368
REPORTS OF SOCIETIES	368
ERNEST GARDNER'S HANDBOOK OF GREEK SCULPTURE	369
LETTER FROM EGYPT, by Prof. SAYCE	370
NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY	370
STAGE NOTES	370
RECENT CONCERTS, by J. S. SHEDLOCK	371
MUSIC NOTES	371

A LADY highly RECOMMENDS a HOME in SWITZERLAND where four Girls are received. Exceptional educational advantages combined with refined home-comforts and individual care. Beautiful position. Moderate terms.—Prospectus, Miss HEISS, Bienne, Switzerland; or Mrs. DICKINS, Cherington, Shipston-on-Stour.

TO INVALIDS.—A LIST OF MEDICAL MEN in all parts, willing to RECEIVE RESIDENT PATIENTS, giving full particulars and terms, sent gratis. The list includes private asylums, &c.; schools also recommended.—Address Mr. O. B. STUCKER, 11 Lancaster Place, Strand, W.C.

TYPE-WRITING.—MSS. of every description COPIED. Special attention to work requiring care. Examination Questions, Notices, &c., by DUPLICATING process. Usual terms.—Miss THOMAS, 5, Cautley Avenue, Clapham Common, S.W.

CAMBRIDGE GRADUATE, of scientific training and philosophic tastes, wishes to meet with Mau of letters as PAYING GUEST. Would assist in Literary Work if desired, and can offer any rooms needed in a large, well-situated London house.—Address Box 21, Wilton's 162, Piccadilly, W.

TO EDITORS.—WANTED, on Weekly or Monthly Journal, the post of ART or DRAMATIC CRITIC. Specimen MSS. sent on application.—LADY ARTIST, care of G. F. Cook, 103, Gower Street, W.C.

ON THE FOUNDATION of the HIBBERT TRUST.—On WEDNESDAY and FRIDAY, May 8th and 9th, at 5 p.m., M. JEAN REVILLE (Professor of Ecclesiastical History in the Ecole des Hautes Etudes de Paris) will deliver, in MANCHESTER COLLEGE, TWO PUBLIC LECTURES, on "THE BEGINNINGS of the ROMAN EPISCOPATE"—I. The Historical Data. II. The Traditional Data: their Value and Origin. The Lectures will be delivered in French.

ST. EDWARD'S SCHOOL, near OXFORD.—Public School, founded 1863, to provide Education for Gentlemen's Sons in Preparation for Universities, Army, &c., on definite Church principles. Fees: £60 per annum (Board of Clergymen, £80); Day Boys, 21 guineas. Classical and Modern sides. Scholarships, July 29th.—Rev. T. F. HOMER, M.A., Warden.

ST. PAUL'S SCHOOL.—An EXAMINATION for filling up VACANCIES on the Foundation will be held on the 5th MAY NEXT. For information apply to the BURSAR, St. Paul's School, West Kensington.

THE AUTHOR'S MANUAL. By PERCY RUSSELL. With Prefatory Remarks by Mr. GLADSTONE. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d. net. (EIGHTH and CHEAPER EDITION. With Portrait.

"Mr. Russell's book is a very complete manual and guide for journalist and author. It is not a merely practical work—it is literary and appreciative of literature in its best sense.... We have little else but raise for the volume."—Westminster Review.

DIGBY, LONG & CO., 18, Boulevard Street, London, E.C.

Post 8vo, strongly bound, price 7s.
CAREYS "GRADUS ad PARNASSUM," with the English Meanings. Revised, Corrected, and Augmented by a Member of the University of Cambridge. London: Published by the Stationers' Company, Stationers' Hall, Ludgate Hill.

TO PLAYWRITERS.—Mr. CHARLES GREY Playwrights' Agent, RECEIVES and GIVES EXPERT OPINION upon PLAYS, and will use his utmost influence and energy to get any play well reported on by his readers, accepted by the Manager of a Theatre, and produced. He will also undertake for the author the management of all business in connection with their plays, such as the collecting of royalties, the proper keeping of accounts, &c. Plays to be addressed to Mr. CHARLES GREY, Avenue Mausson, Piccadilly Circus, W.

THE AUTHOR'S HAIRLESS PAPER. PAD. (The LEADENHALL PRESS, Ltd., 50, Leadenhall Street, London, E.C.)

Contains hairless paper, over which the pen slips with perfect freedom. Sixpence each. 5s. per dozen, ruled or plain.

DEBENHAM &amp; FREEBODY'S GALLERIES

WIGMORE STREET, W.
EXHIBITION OF OLD EMBROIDERIES, BROCADES, and VELVETS.
Of the XVI. and VII. CENTURIES.
Admission and Historical Catalogue free.

OLD EMBROIDERIES and BROCADES.
—An EXHIBITION of EARLY SPANISH, ITALIAN, FRENCH, POLISH, and INDO-SPANISH Hangings, Valances, Panels, Quilts, Coverlets, Borders, &c.
Admission and Historical Catalogue free.
DEBENHAM & FREEBODY, Wigmore Street, W.

OLD CHURCH EMBROIDERIES.
—An EXHIBITION of Hangings, Panels, Altar Frontals, Cloths and Covers, Chalice Vails and Covers, Dalmatics, Chasubles, Stoles and Maniples, dating from 1500 A.D.
Admission and Historical Catalogue free.
DEBENHAM & FREEBODY, Wigmore Street, W.

OLD VELVETS, TAPESTRIES, &C.
—The above EXHIBITION includes BOKHARA Velvets; BROUSSA Velvet Carpets; Cut Velvet Curtains, &c.; Hangings of Tapestry and Cloth of Gold; Persian Silk Mats, &c.
Admission and Historical Catalogue free.
DEBENHAM & FREEBODY, Wigmore Street, W.

ROYAL ACADEMY of ARTS.—The EXHIBITION will OPEN on MONDAY, May 4th. Admission (from 8 a.m. to 7 p.m., except on the first day, when it opens at 10 a.m.), One Shilling. Catalogues, 1s. and 1s. 6d. Season Tickets, 5s.

ROYAL SOCIETY of PAINTERS in WATER-COLOURS, 6A, PALL MALL EAST.—The ANNUAL EXHIBITION NOW OPEN, 10 to 6. Admission, 1s.
SAMUEL J. HOBSON, R.W.S., Secretary.

PICTURE PRESERVATION & RESTORATION
—For advice and full particulars address C. H. MIDFORTH, Studio, 288, Devonshire Road, Honor Oak Park, S.E.

WANTED, to PURCHASE, fine PICTURES, in OIL, by Old Masters of the Dutch, Flemish, and British schools.—Dowdswell, 100, New Bond Street, W.

ARTISTS' GENERAL BENEVOLENT INSTITUTION.

For the Relief of Distressed Artists, their Widows and Orphans.

President: Sir JOHN EVERETT MILLAIS, Bart., P.R.A.
The ANNIVERSARY DINNER will take place at the WHITE-HALL ROOMS, HOTEL METROPOLITAN, on SATURDAY, May 9th, at half-past 6 o'clock.

The Right Hon. CHARLES STUART WORTLEY, Q.C., M.P., in the Chair.

Dinner Tickets, including wines, One Guinea.
DONATIONS will be received and thankfully acknowledged by ALFRED WATERHOUSE, R.A., Treasurer, and WALTER W. OULESS, R.A., Hon. Secretary, DOUGLAS GORDON, Secretary, 19, St. James's Street, S.W.

ROYAL LITERARY FUND.

The EARL of CREWE, President of the Corporation, will preside at the 100th ANNIVERSARY DINNER, to be held at the WHITE-HALL ROOMS, HOTEL METROPOLITAN, S.W., on WEDNESDAY NEXT, May 8th, at 7 for 7.30 p.m. precisely.

The LORD BISHOP of PETERBOROUGH will respond for the Toast of "Literature."

Dinner Tickets, One Guinea each. Members and others wishing to attend are requested to notify their wish at once to the Secretary.

7, Adelphi Terrace, W.C. A. LLEWELYN ROBERTS, Secretary.

PALL MALL.—Theatrical Portraits and others, Pictures, Clocks, Brasses, Old China, Byron Relics, &c.—By direction of the Executors, of the late Mr. Henry Harrison.

MESSRS. FOSTER respectfully announce for SALE by AUCTION, at the GALLERY, 54, PALL MALL, on WEDNESDAY, 13th May, at 1 o'clock precisely, a number of THEATRICAL PORTRAITS, many of which have been warehoused for nearly 50 years, including several of David Garrick and Edmund Kean, in character; also portraits of Miss Farren, Mrs. Jordan, Mrs. Pritchard, Mrs. Robinson, and others, by Mary Beale, Brummond, Gainsborough, Sir J. Reynolds, T. Bouch, W. Gill, Hall, Wheatley, Danco, Sir T. Lawrence, Hoppper, Zoffany.
Also Early English landscapes, modern Italian pictures, and a few examples of the old Dutch school. Also several Louis XVI. black bouille bracket clocks, Empire clocks, French bronzes, cabinets, old china, including an old Lowestoft dinner service, cabinet objects, &c. Also Byron relics, viz., a bracelet with miniature of Lord Byron and four panels of hair (named), two other miniatures of the family, and four gold fob seals engraved with coats of arms.
May be viewed two days prior to the auction, when catalogues may be had.—54, Pall Mall.

MONDAY NEXT.

The Valuable MICROSCOPICAL and SCIENTIFIC LIBRARY formed by the late Capt. Chas. Tyler, F.L.S., F.Z.S., F.U.S., &c.

MR. J. C. STEVENS will SELL the above by AUCTION, at his GREAT ROOMS, 38, KING STREET, COVENT GARDEN, on MONDAY NEXT, May 4th, at half-past 12 precisely.
On view the Saturday prior, 12 till 4, and morning of Sale, and Catalogues had.

ZOOLOGICAL SOCIETY of LONDON.

ZOOLOGICAL LECTURES, 1896.

A COURSE of TEN LECTURES will be delivered in the LECTURE ROOM in the Society's Gardens, Regent's Park, on SATURDAYS, at 4 p.m., commencing SATURDAY, May 2nd, by Mr. F. E. BEDDARD, M.A., F.R.S., Professor to the Society.
Fee for the Course (including Admission to the Gardens on the day of Lecture), 10s.

The Course will be free to all Fellows of the Society. Tickets for the Course may be obtained on application at the Society's Office, No. 3, Hanover Square, W. No one can be admitted without a Ticket.
F. L. SCLATER, Secretary.

CATALOGUES

FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS

promptly supplied on moderate terms.
CATALOGUES on application.
DULAU & CO., 27, BOND SQUARE.

WILLIAMS &amp; NORGATE, IMPORTERS OF FOREIGN BOOKS,

14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN
20, SOUTH FREDERICK STREET, EDINBURGH,

AND
7, BROAD STREET, OXFORD.

CATALOGUES post free on application.

TH. WOHLLEBEN, FOREIGN BOOKSELLER

45, GREAT RUSSELL STREET
(Opposite the British Museum),
Supplies all FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS at the most moderate prices.

Catalogues on application.

On application for one stamp.

THE INTERNATIONAL BOOKMARKET.

Monthly List of the most important Publications issued by
H. GREVEL & CO.,
Importers of Foreign Books,
33, King Street, Covent Garden, W.C.

LITURGICAL BOOKS.

Just ready, to be had post free on application.

CATALOGUE XIV., BIBLIOTHECA LITURGICA.

LITURGICA. Early Missals—Breviaries—French Livres d'Heures, printed on vellum—fine Bindings, &c.
JACQUES ROSENTHAL, Dealer in Old and Rare Books, Munich (Bavaria), Karl Str. 10.

BIBLES.

Just ready, to be had post free on application.

CATALOGUE X., BIBLIOTHECA BIBLICA.

BIBLICA. Manuscripts and Old Printed Editions of the Bible in all Languages—Commentaries, &c.
JACQUES ROSENTHAL, Dealer in Old and Rare Books, Munich (Bavaria), Karl Str. 10.

SOTHERAN'S PRICE CURRENT of

LITERATURE, No. 553, just published, contains among the usual good selection of General Literature at moderate prices, a copy of THACKERAY'S exceedingly rare GOWNSMAN; several rare books in Sixteenth Century Literature; a complete set of the Arundel Society's Publications; an unusually fine copy of Purchas's Pilgrimes; and a collection of Mr. Gould's Ornithological Works, marked exceptionally cheap, besides other Ornithological Books.

Post free on application to H. SOTHERAN & Co., Booksellers, 140, Strand, W.C., and 27, Piccadilly, W., London.

FIRST EDITIONS of MODERN

AUTHORS, including Dickens, Thackeray, Lever, Almsworth; Books illustrated by G. and R. Cruikshank, Philp, Rowlandson, Leech, &c.—The largest and choicest Collection offered for Sale in the World. Catalogues issued and sent post free on application. Books Bought.—WALTER T. SPENCER, 27, New Oxford Street, London, W.C.

AGENCY for AMERICAN BOOKS.

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS, PUBLISHERS

and BOOKSELLERS, of 27 and 29 West 23rd Street, New York, and 24, BEDFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C., desire to call the attention of the READING PUBLIC to the excellent facilities presented by their Branch House in London for filling, on the most favourable terms, orders for their own STANDARD PUBLICATIONS and for ALL AMERICAN BOOKS and PERIODICALS—CATALOGUES sent on application.

IMPORTANT.—PRINTING and PUBLISHING.

NEWSPAPERS, MAGAZINES, BOOKS,

&c.—KING, SELL & RAILTON, Limited, high-class Printers and Publishers, 11, Gough Square, 4, Bolt Court, Fleet Street, E.C., have specially-built Rotary and other fast Machines for printing illustrated or other Publications, and specially-built Machines for fast folding and covering 8, 16, 24, or 32-page Journals at one operation. Advice and assistance given to anyone wishing to commence New Journals.

Facilities upon the premises for Editorial Offices, free. Advertising and Publishing Departments conducted.

Telephone 65121. Telegraph "Africanism, London."

McGILL UNIVERSITY, MONTREAL.

CLASSICAL DEPARTMENT.

It is intended to make Two Additional Appointments to the Staff of the above Department in the course of the summer—one a PROFESSORSHIP or ASSOCIATE PROFESSORSHIP, and the other a LECTURESHIP.—For particulars apply to J. W. BRACKENRIDGE, B.C.L., Acting-Secretary.

THE VICTORIA UNIVERSITY.

The following EXAMINATIONS will be held at Owens College, Manchester; University College, Liverpool; and Yorkshire College, Leeds, in June:—

An ENTRANCE EXAMINATION in ARTS (introductory to the Faculty of Medicine), on MONDAY, JUNE 15th, and following days.

An ENTRANCE EXAMINATION in ARTS (introductory to the Faculty of Music), on MONDAY, JUNE 15th, and following days.

A PRELIMINARY EXAMINATION (introductory to the Faculties of Arts, Science, and Law), on THURSDAY, JUNE 11th, and following days.

The Examination Fee (£2), accompanied by a list of the subjects presented, must be sent to the Registrar, from whom conditions of entrance and further particulars can be obtained, on or before May 14th.
Manchester, April, 1896.

JARROLD &amp; SONS' NEW NOVELS

NOW READY AT ALL LIBRARIES.

THE POWER of the DOG. An

Entirely New Novel. By ROWLAND GREY. Author of "In Sunny Switzerland," "By Virtue of his Office," "Linden-Blumen," "Chris." Crown 8vo, art linen, gilt top, 6s.

"A novel of very considerable power. The story is worked out in a clear and agreeable way, and very skillfully as retaining the reader's interest throughout."

*Aberdeen Daily Free Press.THE HEART of a MYSTERY. By

T. W. SPEIGHT, Author of "The Mysteries of Heron Dyke," "Quittance in Full," "The Grey Monk," "Wife or No Wife." Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

"The Heart of a Mystery" is a cleverly written and well constructed story. There is a capital underplot with a strong love interest, for the attractive detail of which we must refer our readers to Mr. Speight's singular able and fascinating romance."—Daily Telegraph.

HARUM SCARUM. By Esmé Stuart,

Author of "A Brave Fight," "Cast Ashore," "Miss Fenwick." Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

"Harum Scarum" is a capital story. Miss 'Toney,' the heroine of the tale, is a delightfully breezy and entertaining young Australian, flung on the hands of a starchy and unsympathetic aunt, whose life is made a burden to her by Colonial pranks. Toney's fine nature is evident through all, and she ultimately wins respect from her harassed English relatives."—Globe.

LINDSAY'S GIRL. By Mrs. Herbert

MARTIN, Author of "Britomart," "Her Début," "Bonnie Leslie," "A Country Mouse," "Cast Adrift," &c. Crown 8vo, cloth 3s. 6d.

"Lindsay's Girl" is a lively story for the novel-reading woman, by a writer who sketches her characters clearly, keeps up a brisk narrative, and preserves a healthy tone."

Sheffield Independent.

NOW READY, FIRST VOLUME in
THE "IMPRESSIONIST" SERIES,
BY A NEW AUTHOR, entitled
DUST IN THE BALANCE.

By GEORGE KNIGHT.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

With Title-page and cover design by Laurence Housman.

London: JARROLD & SONS, 10 and 11, Warwick Lane, E.C.; and of all Booksellers.

UNIVERSITY of WALES.

THE SECOND MATRICULATION EXAMINATION will commence on TUESDAY, JUNE 18th, 1896. Particulars from the Registrar, Town Hall Chambers, Newport, from whom forms of entry can be obtained. Entries must be made not later than May 19th.

WHAT MUST I DO TO GET WELL,

AND HOW CAN I KEEP SO? By Mrs. ELMA STUART, Tontley Hall, Wokingham, Berks. Twelfth Edition. Rewritten and greatly enlarged. Handsome volume, 320 pp., price 5s. net, or post free from herself, 5s. 6d.

Sole Trade Agents: SIMPKIN, MARSHALL &amp; CO., Ltd., London, E.C.

The DUKE OF ABERCROMBIE writes: "I now feel that all other remedies I have ever taken were addressed to the symptoms alone, not to the cause and source of disease. The Salisbury Treatment... as clearly explained in your book, makes a direct attack upon those causes, on principles which seem to me to be as sound and simple in theory as I have found them to be successful in practice."

A SHROPSHIRE LAD.

By A. E. HOUSMAN.

Fcap. 8vo, 2s. 6d.

"Mr. Housman strikes a decidedly original note.....His gift of melodious expression is genuine."—Times.

"Fresh, spontaneous, vigorous poetry."—Sketch.

"A true poet.....There is a fine, manly swing about his verses."—Daily Courier.

London: Kegan Paul, Trench, Truener &amp; Co., Limited.

ESTABLISHED 1881.

BIRKBECK BANK,

Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane, London.
TWO-AND-A-HALF PER CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS payable on demand

TWO per CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, on the minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.

STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.

For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposit and allows interest monthly on each completed £1.

BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE

FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH.

BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY

HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND

FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.

The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post free.
FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

NOW READY.

THE YELLOW BOOK.

VOL. IX.

Small 4to, 256 pages, and 17 Illustrations by members of the Birmingham School, Title-page and Cover Design by Mrs. DEARMER, 5s. net.

The LITERARY CONTRIBUTIONS by

"THE YELLOW DWARF"
FRANCIS PREVOST
HENRY HARLAND
NORA HOPPER
STANLEY V. MAKOWER
LAURENCE ALMA TADEMA
BARON CORVO
MRS. J. E. H. GORDON
R. V. RISLEY
ALMA STRETTELL

FRANK ATHELSTANE SWETTENHAM
CHARLES CATTY
ELLA HEPWORTH DIXON
RICHARD GARNETT, LL.D., C.B.
MAX BEERBOHM
OLIVE CUSTANCE
JOHN BUCHAN
T. BARON RUSSELL
DOLLIE RADFORD, and RICHARD LE GALLIENNE.

The ART CONTRIBUTIONS by

EDWARD S. HARPER.
E. H. NEW
MARY J. NEWILL
FLORENCE M. RUDLAND
H. ISABEL ADAMS
CELIA A. LEVETUS
J. E. SOUTHALL

C. M. GERE
E. G. TREGLOWN
EVELYN HOLDEN
A. J. GASKIN
BERNARD SLEIGH
SYDNEY METEYARD, and
MRS. A. J. GASKIN

By CALDWELL LIPSETT.

WHERE THE ATLANTIC MEETS THE LAND.

Keynotes Series. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. net. (Formerly published April 28th, in compliance with the Copyright Act.)

JOHN LANE, THE BODLEY HEAD, VIGO STREET, W.

Edition limited to one thousand copies, of which a large portion is bespoken for America, &c.

Now ready, in Two Quarto Volumes, bound in stout vellum.

BY COMMAND DEDICATED TO THE QUEEN-EMPRESS.

HISTORY of the HORN-BOOK

By ANDREW W. TUER, F.S.A.,

Author of "Bartolozzi and his Works," &amp;c.

WITH 300 ILLUSTRATIONS

BY

ROBERT W. ALLAN, FRANCIS D. BEDFORD, SIR ARTHUR CLAY, Bart., AMBROSE DUDLEY, Miss FRANCE (Mrs. Gaskin), EVERARD HOPKINS, JOHN LEIGHTON, Wm. LUKER, Jr., PERCY MACQUOID, PHIL MAY, LINLEY SAMHOURNE, Miss SAMHOURNE,
HENRY S. TUKE, J. WALTER WEST, AND OTHER ARTISTS

AND TWO COPPERPLATE FRONTISPICES

Price 42s. net.

Seven real Horn-Books and Battledores are recessed in the insides of the Covers.

LONDON: PUBLISHED BY THE LEADENHALL PRESS, LIMITED, 50, LEADENHALL STREET, E.C.

365

SHAVES

FOR 6D.

A Stick of

VINOLIA SHAVING SOAP is said to last a year.

WM. &amp; GEO. LAW.

COFFEE—SUGAR—TEA.

104, NEW OXFORD STREET, W.C.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S LIST.

Now ready, price One Shilling.

Notice.—THE TEMPLE BAR MAGAZINE for MAY, 1896, contains, among other contributions of interest: LIMITATIONS. Chaps. VII., VIII. By the Author of "Dodo."—ARTHUR HUGH CLOUGH.—CAMBRIDGE, the EVERYTHING.—PAMPHLETS.—ON the CHILDREN.—A ROYAL PLAYTHING, and IN THOMAS HARDY'S COUNTRY.

NEW WORKS.

NOW READY.

Richard Brinsley Sheridan.

A BIOGRAPHY.

By W. FRASER RAE.

Including much information derived from New Sources. With an Introduction by Sheridan's Great Grandson, the MARQUESS of DUFFERIN and AVA, K.P., G.C.B.

In 2 vols., demy 8vo, with Portraits, and other Illustrations, 28s.

"A biography of Sheridan which for authority and intrinsic interest is little likely to be superseded." Daily News.

NOW READY.

Women in English Life.

By GEORGIANA HILL,

Author of "A History of English Dress," &c.

With Frontispieces. 2 vols., demy 8vo, 28s.

NOW READY.

THE YOUNGER SONS' COOKERY BOOK.

By A YOUNGER SON'S DAUGHTER.

With Illustrations.

In one vol., demy 8vo.

NEW NOVELS AT ALL THE LIBRARIES AND BOOKSELLERS.

NOW READY.

LORD HEVER.

By PERCY HURLBURD,

Author of "The Romance of Shere Motte," &c.

In 2 vols., crown 8vo, 12s.

NOW READY.

HONOR ORMTHWAITE.

By the AUTHOR of "LADY JEAN'S VAGARIES."

In one vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

NOW READY.

GIFTS AND WEIRDS.

By LILY PERKS,

Author of "A Late Springtime," &c.

In one vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

"A readable tale."—Globe.

"There is not a little skill in the presentment of character. Orkney scenery is well done, and the conversation is bright."—Manchester Guardian.

"An agreeable and pleasantly written story."—Scotsman.

NOW READY.

MISS DRUMMOND'S DILEMMA.

By R. RAMSAY.

In one vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

"An interesting story. The book amply repays reading." Fall Mart Gazette.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington Street
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

IMPORTANT NOTICE.

Messrs. CASSELL & COMPANY

have the pleasure to state that Sir JOHN MILLAIS, P.R.A., has given them permission to reproduce his new Academy Picture, entitled "The Fore-runner," as a SPECIAL PLATE in the forthcoming Edition of "ROYAL ACADEMY PICTURES." The Picture will be issued with Part V., and will form the Frontispiece to the Complete Volume.

To be published in 5 Parts, 1s. each; or in 1 vol., handsomely bound in cloth, price 7s 6d.

Royal Academy Pictures, 1896.

Part I. ready May 4th, and the remaining Parts as soon thereafter as practicable.

To still further improve the very high standard of excellence already attained in the production of ROYAL ACADEMY PICTURES, the Publishers have determined to print the issue for 1896 on paper of even superior quality to that which has hitherto been used. It will be stouter in texture than heretofore, and of a beautiful tone specially prepared to give the best artistic results.

*.* In view of the large additional demand anticipated for Royal Academy Pictures by reason of the various improvements introduced this year, the Publishers think it well to suggest to intending subscribers that they should at once give their orders for the 5 Parts (or the Complete Volume), as each year some of the Parts have gone out of print at an early date, and disappointment has been experienced by those desirous of completing their sets.

The following SPECIAL PLATES appear in

The Magazine of Art

For MAY.

Now ready, price 1s. 4d.

1. An Exquisite ETCHING, "THE TOP of the HILL." By W. DENDY SADLER. Etched by R. W. MACBETH, A.R.A.
2. A Charming PHOTOGRAVURE, "SIR JOHN." By Madame RONNER.
3. A Beautiful MONOCHROME, "STUDY of a HEAD." By T. O. GOTCH.

CASSELL & COMPANY, LIMITED,
LUDGATE HILL, LONDON.

MR. LEONARD SMITHERS' LIST.

THE SAVOY.

The New Illustrated Quarterly.

Edited by ARTHUR SYMONS.

No. I. JANUARY, 1896, 170 pages, 18 Full-Page Illustrations.

No. I. contains Literary Contributions by G. Bernard Shaw, Frederick Wedmore, Paul Verlaine, Max Beerbohm, Ernest Dowson, Aubrey Beardsley, Havelock Ellis, W. B. Yeats, Rudolf Dircks, Mathilde Blind, Joseph Pennell, Humphrey James, Selwyn Image, and the Editor. The Illustrations include work by Charles H. Shannon, Charles Conder, Joseph Pennell, Louis Oury, W. Rothenstein, F. Sandys, J. McNeill Whistler, Max Beerbohm, Jacques E. Blanche, J. Lemmen, and 11 Drawings by Aubrey Beardsley.

No. II. APRIL, 1896, NOW READY, upwards of 200 pages, 20 Full-page Illustrations.

No. II. contains a Story entitled, "A Mere Man" (by a New Writer), and Literary Contributions by Cesare Lombroso ("A Mad Saint"), Paul Verlaine ("My Visit to London"), Edmund Gosse, W. B. Yeats, Havelock Ellis ("Friedrich Nietzsche"), Frederick Wedmore, Selwyn Image, Ernest Dowson, John Gray, Vincent O'Sullivan, Leila Macdonald, Aubrey Beardsley, and the Editor. The Illustrations include work by Joseph Pennell, C. H. Shannon, W. T. Horton, W. Rothenstein, Ph. Carasso, Albert Sterner, Walter Sickert, Lemmen, Max Beerbohm, and Aubrey Beardsley.

Crown 4to, bound in new pictorial cover, 2s. 6d. net.

THE ONLY RELIABLE WORK ON THE SUBJECT
IN THE ENGLISH LANGUAGE.

DU BARRY (MADAME), LIFE

and TIMES of. By R. B. DOUGLAS. With Engraved Portrait. Demy 8vo, cloth, 16s. net.

ÉDITION DE LUXE OF AN ENGLISH CLASSIC.

THE RAPE of the LOCK.

By POPE. Printed at the Chiswick Press, with Nine elaborate Drawings by AUBREY BEARDSLEY. Crown 4to, specially designed cover, cloth gilt, Limited Edition, 10s. 6d. net.

Twenty-five Copies on Japanese Vellum, 22 2s. net.

NOCTURNES and PASTORALS

Poems by A. BERNARD MIALL. 400 Copies, printed at the Chiswick Press. Large post 8vo, cloth, 6s. net.

LONDON NIGHTS. Poems by

ARTHUR SYMONS. 500 Copies, printed at the Chiswick Press. Large post 8vo, cloth, 6s. net.

Fifty Large-Paper Copies, £1 1s. net.

SILHOUETTES. By Arthur

SYMONS. Second Edition. With Nineteen New Poems. 400 Copies, printed at the Chiswick Press. Large post 8vo, cloth, 6s. net.

Fifteen Large-Paper Copies, £1 1s. net.

ORCHIDS. Poems by Theodore

WRATISLAW. 250 Copies, printed at the Chiswick Press. Fcap. 8vo, art linen, 5s. net.

Ten Copies on Japanese Vellum, £1 1s. net.

EFFINGHAM HOUSE, ARUNDEL STREET,
STRAND, W.C.

SATURDAY, MAY 2, 1896.

No. 1252, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

Democracy and Liberty. By W. E. H. Lecky. (Longmans.)

THE debt we already owe to Mr. Lecky is greatly increased by the publication of this book. Here is a man who brings to the criticism of the present the trained judgment and habits of research of an accomplished student of the past. He has been no recluse, yet he has taken no such part in public life hitherto as must muzzle him now. He is not tempted to justify on reflection what he has advocated on impulse, or to defend his party's past merely because it happens to be his party to-day. His judgment of contemporary events is thus as impartial as such a judgment can ever be: it has been formed upon careful observation and extensive reading. He has earned fame as a historian, and has no need to pose as a prophet. Be he right or wrong, he has made a more important contribution to political thought than any we have seen for a long time. Mr. Lecky's moral courage, too, increases one's appreciation of his work. It was written before he entered Parliament, his opinions are definite and outspoken, and on occasion he has ventured upon forecasts. Thus he has committed himself to fortune. The opponents of Mr. Lecky, the statesman, may often find their armoury against him in the work of Mr. Lecky, the author; but he has allowed the book to appear for all that. He did not even stoop to modify the passages in which he had written of university members that "they represent, in an eminent degree, intelligence and knowledge, diffused throughout the country," and "are almost certain to be men of political purity and independent character," merely because it now happens that he is the Parliamentary representative of the University of Dublin.

Mr. Lecky is a staunch Whig, of a type fast disappearing. Time has disillusionised him; his confidence in the good sense of the English people modifies his distrust of English democracy more by an act of faith than by any convincing process of reason. "It does not appear to me," he says, "that the world has ever seen a better constitution than England enjoyed between the Reform Bill of 1832 and the Reform Bill of 1837," a position which he ingeniously contrives to support on the authority of Shakespeare. "The evil of evils in our present politics is that the constituencies can no longer be fully trusted, and that their power is so nearly absolute that they have an almost complete control over the well-being of the Empire." Both parties share the blame of this. "Few pages in our modern political history are more discreditable than the story of the 'Conservative' Reform Bill of 1867." But the evil result is not to be disguised. "Parliamentary government has entered on its period of decadence." A remnant of great men remain, it is true, and great have been the things that they have done, when they have escaped from the "interference" and the "contagion" of a democratic Parliament.

"A country which has produced such men and such works does not seem to be in a condition of general decadence, though its constitution is plainly worn out, though the balance of power within it has been destroyed, and though diseases of a serious character are fast growing in its political life. The future only can tell whether the energy of the English people can be sufficiently roused to check these evils, and to do so before they have led to some great catastrophe."

No doubt there are remedies to be suggested. The House of Commons is far too big: Mr. Lecky would make a beginning by reducing the number of Irish members, and by abolishing the seats thus vacated. It is also a great deal too near omnipotence. Little as Mr. Lecky likes America—to which country, however, he is scrupulously courteous and fair—he would be glad to see introduced into England "that distinction between constitutional questions and ordinary legislation which in America and in nearly all continental countries not only exists, but is maintained and fortified by the most stringent provisions. In the days when the balance of power between the different elements in the constitution was still unimpaired, when the strongly organised conservative influences of class and property opposed an insuperable barrier to revolutionary change, such a distinction might be safely dispensed with. In the conditions of the present day, no serious thinker can fail to perceive the enormous danger of placing the essential elements of the Constitution at the mercy of a simple majority of a single Parliament, a majority perhaps composed of heterogeneous and discordant fractions, combined for a party purpose, and not larger than is required to pass a Bill for regulating music-halls or protecting sea-birds' eggs."

Mr. Lecky does not forget the Irish Land Act of 1881, which to him was not only "dishonest," but, as "impairing the obligation of contracts," would have been beyond the competence of the Congress of the United States. Hence he is for the Referendum, by which such a distinction might be established; nor does he hesitate to say:

"Another objection is that the Referendum would have the effect of lowering the authority of the House of Commons, which is now in effect the supreme legislative authority in the Empire. This is undoubtedly true, and, in my own judgment, it would be one of its great merits."

Then there is the House of Lords. He dwells on its "essentially representative character," he condemns the "insolent abuse" launched at it whenever it exercises its constitutional functions, and for its utilisation and reform he, too, has his plan. There is proportional representation, for which he entertains a covert affection; and there is female suffrage, of which he is at least a platonic admirer. Mr. Lecky has composed, in support of women's rights, an argument of faultless logic, considerable length, and impenetrable seriousness. That women—aye, and married women—of property will have the vote presently is what he expects. He regards the prospect with dispassionate goodwill. "By the natural law of selection," he says a little pawkily, "wives are, on the whole, the flower of their sex."

"They acquire an extent and kind of experience much greater than that of other women; and if their time is more occupied, their judgment is usually much saner, more moderate, and more mature. No careful observer can fail to be struck with the tendency of the married life to reform the extravagances of judgment and feeling to which unmarried women are especially prone."

This is all very well. The defence is based, no doubt, on the highest principles of justice and psychology; but one cannot help surmising that the real reason why Mr. Lecky would vote for female suffrage is to be found in this somewhat Machiavellian paragraph:

"The establishment of female franchise on a property basis would probably have the great incidental advantage of imposing a real and powerful obstacle to the further degradation of the suffrage. Many who would advocate manhood suffrage would shrink from universal suffrage. It may, I think, be safely assumed that the British nation would not acquiesce in government by a Parliament in which female influence was preponderant; and women in Great Britain largely outnumber men. If, however, the suffrage of women were once admitted, it would not be easy to make a fresh anomaly by making male suffrage universal and that of females dependent on a property qualification."

Controversial all these topics are. Mr. Lecky shows that he has become, with time, a highly adroit controversialist. He hits hard, and he hits straight. True, his tone is a trifle lofty. Speaking of the decrease in the morality, and even the common honesty of the members of a democratic Parliament, as compared with the high level of the members of a literary and exclusive club, he graciously observes: "It would be unreasonable to expect from a body elected under such stormy and contentious conditions as the House of Commons—a standard as high as that in the Athenaeum Club." Still, when he warms to it—and on Irish land and Irish priests, and the growth of expenditure and the incidence of taxation, there is something more than a polar glow about his writing—he can deal a swashing blow with another. Having sketched the attitude of leading Nonconformists towards the public and the private obliquities of the late Mr. Parnell, he asks grimly:

"Can those who witnessed this grotesque exhibition wonder at the charge of pharisaism and hypocrisy which foreign observers so abundantly bring against English public opinion? Can they be surprised that 'the Nonconformist Conscience' is rapidly becoming a by-word in England, much like the 'moral sentiments' of Joseph Surface?"

He dwells on the "incontinence of speech" and "the dreary torrent of idle, diffusive, insincere talk that now drags its slow lengths through so many months at Westminster"; and, having compared it with the terseness of Congress in the days of Jefferson, and of the House of Commons under Palmerston, he adds :

"The scenes of violence, anarchy, and deliberate obstruction that have been so frequent during late years have done much to destroy that respect for the House, that timidity in appearing before a fastidious audience, which once weighed heavily on nearly all new members, and imposed a useful restraint on idle speaking. At the same time, the development of the provincial paper has made it an easy and desirable thing for each member to be reported in full in his own constituency as a prominent speaker, and the vast increase of stump oratory by Members of Parliament in every town and almost every village has given nearly all members a fatal facility. Something, also, has been due to the fact that the House of Commons was led or profoundly influenced during many years by a very great orator, who possessed every form of eloquence except conciseness, and who could rarely answer a question without making a speech."

It is in his admirably lucid and condensed chapter on recent Irish agrarian legislation that Mr. Lecky is most conspicuously strong, indignant, and clear. He is scarcely less outspoken when he writes of "the nature and causes of a priestly despotism in Ireland, which probably, on the whole, exceeds that in any other European country," and of the "enormous, scandalous, ostentatious clerical coercion that is in the present day practised in Ireland."

"Nor is this all that can be truly said. Under the teaching of the Catholic clergy the moral sense of great masses of the Irish people has been so perverted that the most atrocious murders, if they have any agrarian end, carry with them no blame, and their perpetrators are sedulously sheltered from justice. It is impossible to disguise the significance of the fact that nearly all those murderers who have been brought to justice have been Catholics, that nearly all of them have gone to the gallows fortified by the rites of their Church and professing the most complete and absolute submission to its commands; and yet that scarcely in a single instance have they made the only reparation in their power, by publicly acknowledging their guilt and the justice of their sentence. I do not suppose that any English Minister would venture to propose that a murderer who sent his victim into another world 'unhousel'd, disappointed, unanel'd,' with all his sins upon his head and with no possibility of obtaining spiritual consolation or assistance, should himself only be allowed to receive such consolation up to the moment of his conviction. But it may be doubted whether any other single measure would do so much to strengthen criminal law in Ireland."

In the mouth of a temperate scholar, still more when they are deliberately written and published, there is a white-hot vehemence about these words that is almost terrible.

In dealing with those whose opinions he disapproves, Mr. Lecky wields a pleasing and downright sarcasm. Of the Saint Simonian Church he remarks: "There were elaborate dresses and ceremonies manifestly aping Catholicism, the usual combination of intoxicating vanity and deliberate imposture, the usual very dubious sexual morality and financial transactions." The Comtist revolutionary party in Brazil he calls "a small group of pretentious philosophical pedants, of a sect which modestly claims for itself the government of the world," and proceeds: "Their State papers are a curious study, and have, I suppose, seldom been surpassed in grandiloquent absurdity."

"Every one knows," he remarks, "how large a proportion of the public business of the upper and middle classes in England is transacted in hotels. But in the Parish Councils Act, which conferred on electors who are chiefly very poor men enormous powers of taxation, administration, and control, a special clause was inserted to prevent the councils from meeting, except in case of absolute necessity, in premises licensed to sell intoxicating liquors. The provision was probably a wise one; but it illustrates curiously the position which modern democracy assigns to the working classes—so largely trusted to govern others, so little trusted to govern themselves."

But it is what he calls the "professional politician" that most stirs Mr. Lecky's indignation and fear. The phrase at times recurs almost every ten pages: the person is the symbol for all that is most flagitious and corrupt in modern public life. To him is due that tendency which leads rival parties to make constitutional changes on the principles of a cheap auction-room. It is he who has learnt in the name of a lofty morality to save the expense of bribing the people out of his own pocket, by promising them lavish expenditure for their own benefit out of the pockets of other people.

"Intriguers and demagogues playing successfully on the passions and the credulity of the ignorant and the poor form one of the great characteristic evils and dangers of our time. . . . This 'generosity,' which impels legislators, without the smallest sacrifice to themselves, to seek to conciliate one class by handing over to them the property of another, is likely to be a growing virtue in English politics."

Mr. Lecky makes, perhaps, too big a bugbear of what is no doubt a very unlovely class of persons. Their vice lies less in their being "professional" than in their being "politicians." Amateur politicians would do no less mischief; professional statesmen would be free from most of their special defects. These persons, who give up their whole time to a calling in which they play with edged tools at the expense of the Empire, and take their wages in local notoriety and applause, are more a symptom than a cause of democratic corruption. They attend democracy inevitably; but statesmen can make them useful, and national common sense can keep them harmless. No doubt they do a good deal of mischief; but on the whole, and in moments of national crisis, though they are very noisy, they are not a great deal heard.

In a non-political journal criticism of Mr. Lecky's opinions would be out of place: they are best dealt with by being fairly stated. The reader must judge them for himself. No doubt those whose politics are not Mr. Lecky's will come to the conclusion that little has been lost by not reading his History of England in the Eighteenth Century, since this is what he writes of the nineteenth; and those who agree with him already will think that the weight of his argument is indeed great, because it is for their own side. Some of us are by nature Radicals, and some Tories, and some are now the one and then the other; and some only try to make the best of a bad world as they find it, and, leaving principles to philosophers, strive to do as little mischief as may be. Mr. Lecky was once, perhaps, something of the first, and is now not a little of the second class: need we wonder if he should end a convinced member of the last? But to whichever of these kinds a man belongs, he cannot but benefit by reading, and reading carefully, these two volumes, bulky and discursive though they be. Their clear and attractive style, their honest, honourable purpose, their facts, skilfully marshalled if not very new, their pungent and suggestive observations, would enlarge the thinking even of a "professional politician." The opponent who has forced himself to find the best answer he can to the things he disagrees with will indeed have swept up the dusty corners of his mind; and the sympathiser will find his views lifted into a higher atmosphere of public, not party, good, and of outspoken avowal, whether it square with party notions or not. There is a manly simplicity about Mr. Lecky's fundamental principles that will almost disarm the antagonism that his particular opinions provoke. He distrusts democracy, not on account of any antipathy to "the People," but because democracy pursues a theoretic equality which does not square with the facts of life, and is thus unfavourable to liberty. It is because he esteems so highly the national honour and well-being that to him a "political crime" is something more (rather than something less) criminal than a private crime. He has no great fear of Socialism in England, because "that curious Teutonic power of framing a picture of the world out of formulae and abstract reasonings is not an English characteristic."

"To me at least," he says, "the first and greatest service a Government can render to morals seems to be the maintenance of a social organisation, in which the path of duty and the path of interest as much as possible coincide, in which honesty, industry, providence, and public spirit naturally reap their rewards, and the opposite vices their punishment."

How can one fall out with the confessor of so upright a faith? Who would part from Mr. Lecky and lay down his book without adding one more tribute of admiration and regard to those he has long enjoyed?

J. A. HAMILTON.

Dundonald. By the Hon. J. W. Fortescue. (Macmillans.)

LATE though this publication occurs in the series of "English Men of Action," there is not one of the preceding volumes that deals with a more inspiring subject. The bare relation of Dundonald's deeds must read like some romance of the Heroic Age. Dragons and enchantment seem more proper to the story than First Lords and Admiralty Courts, which, indeed, one is almost disposed to resent as sorry anachronisms.

Were it justifiable in the biographer to regard Dundonald solely as the man of action in his own element—as the great warrior and the great seaman—no more engaging duty would fall to a writer. But Dundonald's character—simple as it appears, with much of the simplicity common to men of genius, when so regarded—was, in truth, strangely complicated; and it is even now no easy task to deal equably with all the controversial aspects of Dundonald's stormy and extraordinary career. Mr. Fortescue shows, in his able and admirably temperate book, that he has the qualifications peculiarly needed. His estimate of Dundonald is altogether the most acceptable that has been put forth, and one that is not likely to be challenged. While he has measured with the nicest discrimination Dundonald's responsibility for much of the ill fortune that befell him, his recognition of the disproportionate severity with which he was punished is not more ample than justice required. Mr. Fortescue rightly traces Dundonald's mishaps and errors to the singular lack of worldly wisdom that marked his contests with the administrative powers and other constituted authorities of his own country. The passion for reforming the world is perhaps the most dangerous that so insatiable a fighter could possess. In all those conflicts, in the early quarrel with Lord St. Vincent, as in the Gambier court-martial and the Stock Exchange trial, Dundonald showed little or nothing of the skill and foresight so conspicuous in his naval operations. By the exercise of a little ordinary prudence he might have steered clear of the ruinous quicksands of the trial. Yet, strange to say, the craft and daring he displayed upon the seas deserted him when warring with what he considered evils and abuses in high places.

In real war, as Mr. Fortescue remarks, he would never have made such mistakes. It is on the quarter-deck that the greatness of Dundonald, as a leader and as a seaman, is exemplified. Never was there a man of action with more "heart" in him, or with more of that quickening power that inspires the courage of others. No one could have less needed the advice that Nelson gave him at Palermo—"Never mind manoeuvres; always go at them." How competent he was to act on this counsel is shown by the wonderful series of exploits connected with the cruise of the Speedy, which form one of the most thrilling chapters in naval history. Not less brilliant were his services in command of the Pallas, and subsequently of the Impérieuse. The story of the famous action of Basque Roads, or Aix Roads, is very succinctly told; and with equal clearness and fairness Mr. Fortescue deals with Dundonald's unhappy attack on Lord Gambier, the admiral in command of the British squadron. There was only too good a basis for charging Lord Gambier with incompetency and apathy; but the House of Commons was not the place, nor the motion for a vote of thanks to the admiral and the fleet a fit occasion, for such an attack.

"If," says Mr. Fortescue, "on public grounds he disapproved (as he well might) of Lord Gambier's conduct on service, the straightforward course, however invidious, was to prosecute him before a court-martial; not to attack him before an inept body like the House of Commons, where the accused would have no opportunity of defending himself, and the tribunal was utterly incompetent to pronounce judgment."

The moment Lord Gambier heard of Dundonald's intentions he claimed to be put on his trial. The court-martial was held, and became, as Mr. Fortescue puts it, "a trial of strength between Cochrane and the Government." Naturally, the Government won. Dundonald had refused to act as prosecutor, and was thus deprived of the right of cross-examining witnesses. He went into the fight with his hands tied. He had no shadow of grievance with the Government. His gallantry at Aix Roads had been handsomely rewarded by the Ministry, and he had been highly complimented in the Admiral's despatch. Yet he chose at the outset to invest the case with a political colouring, by threatening the Government, in his capacity as member for Westminster, with his opposition to an inevitable and customary vote of thanks with regard to a great naval action in which he himself was the victorious principal concerned.

From the date of Lord Gambier's acquittal, Mr. Fortescue thinks, Dundonald's "prospects in the service were ruined." Not altogether ruined, perhaps, if he could have learned the value of compromise, and have become a political as well as a naval member of Parliament. Four years later, when the fatal year of the Stock Exchange scandal dawned, he was appointed flag-captain under his uncle, Sir Alexander Cochrane, then in command of the North American fleet. Unfortunately he had spent these years, with characteristic energy and wrongheadedness, in making enemies, both civil and professional, and there were those among them not likely to forget when the time came for reprisals. As to the Stock Exchange trial, Mr. Fortescue wisely decides that it is unnecessary to deal with the case in detail. Dundonald's innocence of fraudulent conspiracy need not be asserted, since it has long been "accepted by public opinion and endorsed by public authority." It is natural now to regard the sentence passed against him as monstrous. The degradation of standing in the pillory was a punishment that such a man should not be made to suffer, as Napoleon remarked to Lord Ebrington at Elba. It was remitted on the recommendation of the Government; but that it was part of the sentence was scarcely less disgraceful than its execution would have been.

Dundonald was barely forty when, a few weeks after the verdict, his name was struck off the Navy List. Four years later he left the country and entered upon the marvellous course of action and adventure in South American waters, which outshone even his earlier brilliant exploits against the Spaniards and French. His splendid, and indeed unparalleled, exploits as the liberator of Chili and Brazil fill three chapters of Mr. Fortescue's book, and are inevitably but a summary of Dundonald's extraordinary services in the cause of those young and extremely ungrateful republics. But the summary is a most admirable and skilful example of the art of abridgment. Nothing could be better told than the story of such feats as the cutting out of the Esmeralda from under the guns of Callao, or the surprise and capture of Valdivia, or the almost incredible operations of Dundonald with his single ship against the Portuguese fleet in the Atlantic.

Passing to other matters, Mr. Fortescue deals fully with the facts of the tardy reparation made to Dundonald when he was restored to rank. But, late though it was, the restitution was complete, and marked by every circumstance of grace and honour. No one, I think, will dissent from the judgment Mr. Fortescue gives in the last page of his excellent biography: "The fame of Nelson overshadows all others in British naval history; but as a naval genius Nelson himself stands hardly higher than Dundonald."

J. ARTHUR BLAIRIE.

College Sermons. By the late Benjamin Jowett. Edited by the Very Rev. the Hon. W. H. Fremantle. (John Murray.)

To have been at Oxford while Dr. Jowett was Master of Balliol, to have seen and heard him in the flesh, ought to help a critic of his sermons to estimate their permanent value; but, in fact, this private and personal knowledge serves chiefly to convince a reviewer of the impertinence and impossibility of his trade, and to confuse his vision. There was no man at Oxford fifteen years ago whose personality impressed itself more clearly on the undergraduate of average sensibility than Dr. Jowett's. It is specially difficult, therefore, for such an one to read these sermons dispassionately, apart from the recollection of their author, and to discover how much of that personality the next generation will be able to detect in their mere style and thought. To most readers, we suspect, the first impression will be that these discourses are unemphatic, scrappy, bald, and often commonplace. To read them after Maurice or Newman is like turning from Plato to Aristotle. None of the trappings and adornments of the ordinary sermon are here, to distract us from the preacher's bare and naked statement of his own belief—and nothing more than his own belief—on the subject under discussion. The reader who heard Jowett in the flesh twenty years ago in Balliol College asks himself, "Was this all?" and fears that the living presence was the essential part of his former impression.

But a little perseverance will dissipate this fear. We cannot by reading the sermons recover the exact piquancy which the preacher's delivery and presence originally gave them, but this piquancy obscured rather than revealed their essential character. The oddity of the preacher's manner was not vital. Without it we perceive more readily the total and final effect of the preacher's style, the bald sincerity and conscientious simplicity which give the sermons their power. In Sermon xi., upon study, we are warned against "fine writing, which of all kinds of writing is the worst," and in Sermon v. against "the temper of alarm and exaggeration" which so easily besets enthusiasts and religious teachers. To cultivate "the temper of mind which sees things as they truly are" is this preacher's conclusion of the whole matter. He observes his own rules most religiously. His sermons do not flow: they come drop by drop. He refuses to give them any illusive appearance of dealing exhaustively or even consecutively with his text. The thoughts are put down because the preacher felt them, not because they coalesce, or form a convincing chain of reasoning. In some points, therefore, Dr. Jowett recalls the manner of Robertson of Brighton. Both preachers give us themselves: the one strenuously, the other carefully. There is, therefore, a radical difference between them, as well as a resemblance. Dr. Jowett conceives that "to see things as they truly are" we must be cool. He will not wrestle with God. It is because his sermons are not, in the true sense, sermons at all that they impress us. We meet with no fierce gush of self-assertion, no ecstasies, no abandonment either of self or of self-control. The preacher conscientiously refuses to allow the strength and passion of a conviction to stand as a proof of its truth. Taken as a whole, therefore, the sermons do not warm or edify. Their exhortations follow the formula of Joseph Surface, "the man who," rather than Elijah's "thou art the man." But with singular faithfulness the dispassionate speaker explores and exposes our pretences and delusions. All the pleasant social fictions and conventions, by which we tolerate each other's sins and weaknesses and maintain an inflated estimate of our virtues, are detected with grave sincerity.

"We are all inclined to think ourselves much more exceptional beings than we really are," he tells us; and "all those of us who preach should be careful of saying more than we believe."

We are inclined to mistake the tumult of our soul for its depth.

"Prayer is a time for wishing and thinking, not, as some imagine, a mere enthusiasm or act of prostration, but requiring the highest exercise of the intellect as well as the deepest affection of the heart. God does not demand of us that we should lie down before Him like worms crawling in the sunshine."

This sentence is not the less striking because it is almost "fine writing." And it is not only the sins of the enthusiast that Jowett detects. He is aware that "the tendency of men in general is to stagnation rather than to movement." He sees clearly that, "instead of Christianity converting the world, the world has in part converted Christianity." Although the sermon on the use of money almost too studiously avoids extravagant abuse of riches, yet it is an obvious conviction of the preacher that "all that men have is nothing in comparison with what they are in themselves." The phrase, "Let us keep our minds above our bodies," is a favourite watchword.

These quotations may serve to indicate the spiritual tone and temper of the sermons. But they convey no adequate impression of the exact diagnosis of some of men's mental and spiritual maladies which the sermons contain. This is the result not so much of insight as of painstaking—of the careful watchfulness which persists in seeing things "as they truly are." Sermon xii., on conversation, is the finest example in the volume.

We cannot leave the sermons without saying a word on their religious position. Throughout they depreciate the importance of the miracles of the Gospels, and suggest that the superhuman Christ is less useful to our faith than the human. If the life of Christ is written again in our own age "it should not be as a history of wonders, but as a history of truths which seem to be always fading away before the eyes of men." And yet Christ is to the preacher of these discourses more than any man, and is worshipped by him with a peculiar homage. This religious position is familiar enough; but we are surprised that Jowett should fail to perceive what the loss of miracle means, and should minimise its importance. Every man has in him more morality than he can live up to, and his need is not for instruction but for strength. For the ordinary man always and everywhere the significance of Christ has been not in His moral teaching, but in the motives and the strength He gives for performing difficult duties. Christ helped the early Christian because He made the unseen friend God and the unseen home Heaven almost tangible realities. This fact must be granted, even if we deny that Christ rose from the dead and sent grace to His fainting disciples. One would have expected that Jowett would prick this bubble—that the miraculous is of no importance—and would justify St. Paul's use of the proverb, "Let us eat and drink, for to-morrow we die." If miracle is false, it must go; but the instinct of St. Paul and Browning is sane and just, that our loss is enormous. It is, in fact, impossible to read these sermons without marking in them a strain of wistfulness and of effort, which we shall be right in explaining by the preacher's conscientious refusal to receive all the articles of the Creed. He justifies the temper which goes softly and fears to rejoice, by a reference to Christ's tears over Jerusalem, and to St. Paul's complaint of Demas, as if these passages were in any sense characteristic of Christianity. The gospel of these sermons, that "the stars in their courses fight against no man," can never give the strength of the earlier Gospel, "Because I live, ye shall live also"; and nowadays more than ever we need strength rather than knowledge.

RONALD BAYNE.

Old French Romances. Done into English by William Morris. With an Introduction by Joseph Jacobs. (George Allen.)

It is always with especial pleasure that we welcome any attempt at making known a foreign literature that has been unduly neglected; and surely this is the case with the literature of medieval France in this country. Mr. William Morris deserves great credit for giving his countrymen some old French tales that are thoroughly steeped in the romance of the Middle Ages. Three of them ("The Tale of Coustans the Emperor," "The Friendship of Amis and Amile," and "The History of Over Sea") have already been issued from the Kelmscott

Press, in two luxurious volumes, while the fourth, "The Tale of King Florus and the Fair Jehane," is, we believe, new.

If Mr. Morris's renderings are not a complete success, his general aim is so excellent that we may well overlook any minor defects. Should he ever think of translating any more of these tales, such as the "Comtesse de Ponthieu," or those later ones so interesting to students of English literature—the "Histoire de Foulques Fitz Warin" and "Le Livre de Troilus"—we hope he will see his way to modifying the method he has adopted. When Mr. Lang did his "Aucassin," he said that, "as for style," he had "attempted, if not Old English, at least English which is elderly, with a memory of Malory"; and the result was eminently satisfactory. Now, Mr. Morris tries something more ancient than this, at least in part. He is presumably translating for the general public; but we think that people who know that "dight"="prepared," "astonded"="stunned," "bended of"="with a band of," "danger"="power," "stour"="battle"—people, in short, who must have some acquaintance with Middle English, would probably, being something of philologists, prefer to read the tales in the original. Is "he had gotten him more than three hundred pounds of garnishment out-taken his plenishing" much clearer than il gagna plus de C.C.C. livres de meuble, sans son harnois? It is a mistake to use the words "carles and queans" in the sense of "male and female," whereas they are to the average reader associated with the ideas of "churls and queens." Mr. Pater, once having occasion to render a passage from the "Amis and Amile," made part of it run as follows: "And they began to sound their rattles before the Court of Amile's house, as lepers are accustomed to do." Mr. Morris translates these words thus: "And there they fell to sounding on their tartavelles before the Court of Amile, even as mesel folk be wont to do,"—with the obvious disadvantage that very few people know the meaning of "mesel," and still fewer that of "tartavelle." Sometimes we come across a passage that reads very curiously: as where we are told that Sir Robin ran to his wife "with his arms spread abroad, and they clipped and kissed together dearly," "cluppen" being the Middle English for "embrace." In the last example, by the way, "dearly" as an equivalent for manement is not correct. On the whole, however, the renderings are remarkably free from mistakes of the kind, though there are a few slips such as "he was the best that knew arms" for he on seist us armes.

We have pointed out these things, because we consider that they disfigure a translation that is, in other respects, well done; nor do we wish for a moment to deny that, taken as a whole, there is much charm and quaintness in the style which Mr. Morris has invented for his purpose. The introductory remarks of Mr. Jacobs are both scholarly and suggestive.

Finally, a word as to the popularising of literature such as this. Mr. Morris has gone a step in the right direction, by making his tales more generally accessible than they have hitherto been. When will Mr. Lang and his publishers do likewise? It may be instructive to point out that a very fair German rendering of the "Aucassin and Nicolette" exists, of which there is an unlimited supply, and for which the price charged is twenty Pfennige. Without going so far as this, it ought to be possible to diffuse the knowledge of a little work that is well-nigh perfect in its way beyond a limited circle of 550, many of whom probably value the book rather than its contents.

H. OELSENER.

TWO ESSAYISTS.

The Unconscious Humourist. By E. H. Lacon Watson. (Elkin Mathews.)

Human Documents. By Arthur Lynch. (Dobell.)

"It is true," says Mr. Lacon Watson, "that the general essay is not over popular just now." At any rate, but few attempt to write one, unless it be after the manner of a glorified and expanded review. One grows a little restive after reading the usual false or meaningless platitudes concerning Byron and Wordsworth; nor is there any excitement to be got out of approved, unvarying quotations. Even the unanimity of critics is apt to irritate when it suggests a lack of thought. The habit of collecting together the results of his newspaper and magazine articles is, doubtless, a pleasant pastime to their writer. The detached paragraphs acquire for the moment an additional value: they have got on in the world, and, attired in cloth boards and gilt lettering, swagger for a week or two as literature. A careless public has a reason for applauding the mummery. Not to know the latest novel is to be indecorous, unfit for polite circles: therefore have books manufactured of scraps and snippets a certain vogue. They supply so easily, these literary Bradshaws, information, statistics, quotations. A reader who hastily scans their pages picks up enough knowledge to pass through a dinner party without disgrace if the courses are not too numerous, and may be even with considerable credit.

Mr. Lynch's book stands a better chance of popularity than Mr. Watson's, for his themes are more commonplace; but, fortunately, he seldom dallies with literature of the present or the past. Chiefly he endeavours to give us fairly critical sketches of the careers and characters of certain people of importance in our day. He is almost always entertaining, sometimes instructive, at others amazing. Dealing with practical men and affairs he is at his best: his studies of John Burns and Mr. Chamberlain are admirably convincing and really critical. Here is his summing-up of Birmingham's most famous statesman:

"How will he figure in history? Validly, he will not figure at all. Who would care to remember Mr. Chamberlain when he has lapsed out of the public arena? His friends must build their main hopes of his enduring fame upon a monument. What form should it take? Perhaps, that epigram reported of him from his schooldays, 'I'm Chamberlain, who are you?' And the passer-by will repeat the inquiry."

Of John Burns he writes:

"Jealousy, vanity, the combative spirit, the necessity of securing himself if only to further his ideas, are all motives that have pulled him hither and thither in his course, and the simplicity of stump oratory and agitation of the Tribune has given place to the more complex wire-pulling and intrigue of the political Boss. The great but rather bombastic Socialist has developed into the practical but not quite ingenuous Liberal."

Vigour is the distinctive quality of Mr. Lynch's style; he has few of the more subtle graces that make a great prose writer. His opinions, too, are stated with so gratifying a cocksureness that he deserves to be right always. But on the rare occasions when he volunteers verdicts upon philosophies and literature, he is "sadly to seek." A perverted instinct tells him that the Jungle Books are "the unique thing that Kipling only could have done." A remark that must annoy Mrs. Hawkesby, Terence, and their friends; and most justly. He solemnly ranks Mr. Herbert Spencer, prefacing his assertion by "a cautious if," as the third of the world's thinkers, whereat even the most flippant of us grow suddenly solemn. Yet the book, for all its defects, is a good one, and thoroughly interesting.

The graceful qualities lacking in Mr. Lynch's work, the delicate turns of fancy and humour, shine abundantly on Mr. Lacon Watson's pages. It is the best book of desultory essays given to us since the unapproachable master of this form was carried to his long rest on Vailima height. For Mr. Watson is a disciple of Stevenson, who surely was above all else an essayist. He touches on many subjects deftly. A note of pathos, a sly stroke of humour, a suggestion of philosophy deep enough to tickle one into momentary activity of thought, are his devices. The result is pleasing entertainment, and a storing away in the memory of not a few ingenious and happily inspired phrases. The following paragraph might, one almost thinks, have been discovered in Virginibus Puerisque:

"It is a poor solace to recall the accurate balancing of accounts or even fortunate speculations in the market, to remember that on this occasion you had the better of Jones, and on the other that you out-maneuvred Robinson. Or, at the best, it is a sordid mind that finds such reflections as these sufficient to cheer him when he is past his prime. There must be something in our lives of a more rosy hue than this to give care the go-by, and to cast a glow upon the paths of our later years. And to this end it were well to take what adventures we may, and when we may; not to put off the period of enjoyment until such time as we have attained the unattainable, lost for ever the eager zest of youth; but while the blood still runs freely to lay by some slight stock of pleasure that may sweeten our future existence and make us ready to greet even misfortune with a cheery smile."

The desultory essayist is your true crusader against such as "sow hurry and reap indigestion."

There is little in common between these two books, save that in both there is a return to an almost neglected form of literature. The defects of one, indeed, are the qualities of the other. Both volumes are seriously meant, conscientiously contrived. Both authors are unknown, or scarcely known. To each of them is due a substantial measure of success, though that accorded to Mr. Watson will probably be of the more lasting, if less speedily obvious, kind.

PERCY ADDLESHAW.

NEW NOVELS.

The Courtship of Morrice Buckler. By A. E. W. Mason. (Macmillans.)

Basil the Jester. By J. E. Muddock. (Chatto & Windus.)

A Sweet Disorder. By Norma Lorimer. (Innes.)

The 'Vangelist o' Zion. By Tom Elford. (Digby, Long & Co.)

Tregarthen. By G. Norway. In 3 vols. (Hurst & Blackett.)

A Woman with a History. By Weedon Grossmith. (White.)

Tales Told by the Fire-side. By the Rev. Chas. D. Bell, D.D. (Elliot Stock.)

An Engagement. By Sir Robert Peel, Bart. (Constable.)

The Rajah's Sapphire. By M. P. Shiel. (Ward, Lock & Co.)

The Second Opportunity of Mr. Staplehurst. By W. Pett Ridge. (Hutchinson.)

ALTHOUGH the courtship of Morrice Buckler took place two hundred years ago and more, the story of his staunch friendship for Sir Julian Harnwood, his betrayed comrade, of his love for the fair Countess Lukstein, and of his strange adventures, has a potent charm. The author, Mr. A. E. W. Mason, writes in a way admirably suited to his romantic theme, and the main incidents are strong and impressive. Morrice himself relates the events that chanced to him between 1685 and 1687: quaintly and distinctively he tells of his student life at Leyden; his hurried departure for London; his ride thence, in hot haste, by the quiet village of Knightsbridge, through Newbury and past the Half-way House at Wickham Heath to Bristol, where Sir Julian lay, in the Bridewell gaol, prior to his execution. Buckler's secret journey to the Tyrol, his surreptitious entry into the rock-bound Castle of Lukstein one midnight when the snow weighed down the branches of the pines and lay thick upon the jagged mountain peaks, together with the bloody events of that white night, are told dramatically, forcibly, and with reserve. Alike in conception and treatment, the tragic scene in the Tyrolean Castle is a fine piece of work. The author's description of life in London, although not destitute of many felicitous touches, is below the level of the first and last portions of the book: here the plot drags somewhat, and several of the incidents are treated at unnecessary length. Mr. Mason is evidently alive to the cumulative effect of appropriate language in a seventeenth century romance; in the main, he has achieved success in this direction, but words such as "enheartened" are blemishes. The gallants and adventurers of Monmouth's time and the environment in which they lived are vividly depicted. Morrice Buckler was a native of Cumberland; and his frequent allusions to his mountain-girt home will be fully appreciated by those who have read The Romance of Wasdale, to which the present book is a worthy successor. Every page bears evidence not of knowledge only, but of knowledge kindled into fire.

Mr. J. E. Muddock has written several good stories, but in his new historical romance, Basile the Jester, he is not seen at his best. The book is long—unwarrantably long, when the nature of the plot and the way in which it is treated be taken into account. The reader feels that Mr. Muddock has not lived with his characters: indeed, many of them have not taken shape in his mind, and he pulls them hither and thither in a very arbitrary way. Some of the descriptive passages, too, are overladen with detail, which blurs the picture and retards the movement of the story. On the other hand, the author has taken pains to represent truthfully and effectively the life and times of Mary Queen of Scots, the Court intrigues of the period, the plots and counter-plots of the nobles. Had Mr. Muddock digested his material with a little more care, and paid greater heed to the details of plot and characterisation, Basile the Jester, readable book as it stands, would have been a genuinely acceptable historical romance.

A Sweet Disorder is a sentimental title rather suggestive of weakness. If intended as a definition of the love finally aroused in the heart of Molly Collister by Colonel Dacre, that straightforward young woman would have been the first to protest against its inadequacy. The story which Miss Norma Lorimer has thus unfortunately named is, however, brightly and pleasantly told. If the conversations are not brilliant, they are never dull, sometimes they are clever. Although we do not find any flashes of extraordinary insight, several of the chapters might well be transcripts from life. The author has wisely taken account of her powers, and that which she has set herself to do she has accomplished simply and creditably. The central figure in A Sweet Disorder is a high-spirited young girl, half-Manx, half-Irish, who, with her friend Daisy, comes to London to earn her living as governess or journalist—occasionally, indeed, she appears at evening At Homes as a skirt-dancer, and at one time the severity of her struggle compelled her to accept the position of waitress in a Bond-street afternoon tea-shop. She is not the unnatural New Woman of the newspapers, though in her early days the idea of marriage was as gall to her. Nevertheless, it is not surprising to learn that in the end she “confessed to Dacre that love was almost as good as independence.”

Mr. Tom Elford has written twelve commendably brief chapters, which are published under the title of The Vangelist o' Zion. The unwrought plot is so shadowy as to be hardly distinguishable; the equally shadowy characters, or rather bundles of qualities loosely strung together, act and speak in a way that, to say the least, does not stimulate the reader's interest either intellectually or emotionally. Several scraps of East Anglian folk-lore are interpolated without apparent reason, and the author's style is undistinguished.

The number of Selbys introduced to the reader by Mr. Norway in the opening chapters of his book is prodigious. There are Miss Selby, Miss Letitia Selby, and Miss Rose Selby, the old maiden ladies; Mr. and Mrs. Selby and their ten children, Mabel and Horace, Stephen and Amanda, one or two sets of twins, a baby, “the tithe-offering,” and many more. In addition to this tribe of genuine Selbys, there is a host of other people who ought to bear that name; for the family likeness between the characters is unmistakable. Tregarthen, in the parish of Withiel, where these innumerable Selbys lived, is on the Cornish coast, within sight of bold headlands and gaunt cliffs, within sound of the voice of the sea. It were well if the author had caught some of the force of the endless sea-song, if he had permeated Tregarthen with something of the wildness and the grandeur of that western coast. But the beat of the ocean is never audible, and the book is sadly lacking in dignified thought. Little Selbys “stroll along the edge of the waves,” and throughout everywhere strolls along the edge of something.

Esme Harding, the heroine of Mr. Weedon Grossmith's little volume,

“was one of God's most beautiful structures. . . . She was tall and commanding-looking, and walked slowly into the room with an undulating grace all her own. Her great hazel eyes, half shaded by curling black lashes, gazed scornfully into the small angry ones of her husband. Her complexion was bright and glowing, and the gaslight lit up to perfection the splendour of her bronze hair that glistened like gold.”

This dream of loveliness has a past which stretches a very long way back, and her troubles are accentuated when the man she loves deserts her because he suspects that she is implicated in her husband's death. Finally, however, the clouds break, she is married to Harcourt, and “reviews the whole sad past as an unhealthy dream.” Universally admired, widely beloved, and adored by her husband, “she watches over his happiness as a good wife will, smoothing the crumpled leaves, and keeping herself well posted in all the current literature of the day so that she may be the chosen companion of his mind.” As will be seen, Mr. Weedon Grossmith has freely employed the theatrical paint in his descriptions as well as in the portrayal of the principal characters. A Woman with a History, as a sensational story, is distinctly readable, for it is happily conceived and racily written.

For the eight stories contained in the Rev. Dr. Bell's little volume, Tales Told by the Fireside, the author is indebted respectively to his father, his mother, his uncle, his aunt, his grandmother, his cousin, and the vicar. Each of the narratives is prefaced by a brief description of these personages, and their characteristic qualities; thus the reader becomes acquainted with a number of Dr. Bell's relatives. As the title indicates, the tales were first told round the family hearth by those to whom the events were very real experiences. It may well be that in such circumstances they were heard with pleasure and profit, for a moral is not far to seek in most of them. In print, however, they lack the charm of the spoken word, the convincing ring of the narrator's voice, the spell of his personality; and notwithstanding evident sincerity and genuine feeling, the author has not replaced what is thus lost by the literary quality necessary to secure the volume a ready welcome.

In An Engagement Sir Robert Peel proves that he can tell a short love-story succinctly and with considerable force. Arnold Hopetoun, a younger son of aristocratic parentage, who draws a paltry £500 a year for his arduous work at the Foreign Office, is secretly engaged to a heartless flirt beneath him in station. Notwithstanding all his persuasions, she refuses to marry Hopetoun on such a pittance; and in order to make his lazy old uncle bestir himself, Arnold enters into a sham engagement with his charming cousin, Kate Drillingham. Sir Robert Peel makes the most of the situation thus created, though we cannot agree with him that any ethical problem is presented. The conversations are brief and incisive, and the writer understands the value of reserve. An Engagement is a dangerous book to place in the hands of a Radical ratepayer, for Arnold Hopetoun's services to the nation seem to be nominal rather than actual.

The first page of The Rajah's Sapphire is sufficiently entertaining. On it the author describes the hero who “felt as if he lacked part of himself, like an animal whose tail has been decapitated.” He was love-sick, and according to his creator, “a frame without a heart is something like an egg without salt.” It is well that Mr. M. P. Shiel has interpolated the qualifying “something.” The heroine was “loveliness itself to see, and her nightly eyes, flashing scorn and anger, outshone all jewels whatever.” The “whatever,” if redundant, has a savour of Gaelic. The third important personage was seen with “utter distinctness” by the hero: “it was the lurid-lit face of the man who steered the Treaty into the vitals of the Nelf.” We are told that the plot of this story was given to the author by Mr. W. T. Stead. Unfortunately, the construction and characterisation do not rise above the level of the style exhibited in the passages we have quoted.

The moral of Mr. W. Pett Ridge's clever little fantasy is that journalists should beware of writing articles in which they take up the cudgels on Jove's behalf, especially if they proceed to add a few words in favour of his spouse Juno. In The Second Opportunity of Mr. Staplehurst, it transpires that, after the middle-aged man of letters had partaken of a Vagabond, or rather a Nomad, dinner, Jove rejuvenated him, and he plunged afresh into the heyday of life, having all his former experience to guide him. It must be admitted, however, that Jove played some unpleasant pranks on his protégé—pranks that were about to end in a prolonged visit, free of charge, to one of Her Majesty's prisons when, in the nick of time, Staplehurst found himself once more in his snug little Chelsea home, ready to welcome his wife on her return from abroad. The agreeable and facile style of the author is lighted up here and there by flashes of genuine humour.

FRANK RINDER.

TWO "TIMES" CORRESPONDENTS.

The Far Eastern Question. By Valentine Chirol. (Macmillans.) We gather from a prefatory letter addressed by the author to Mr. Arthur Walter that his book is founded on a series of letters lately written for the Times. Mr. Chirol, who was at Peking during the late war between China and Japan, is a capable and pleasant writer, who understands his subject thoroughly. He shows how the war has laid bare the immeasurable rottenness of China, hitherto concealed under a venerable cloak of an ancient civilisation, and has finally disposed of the once universally received idea that China had a vast though latent reserve of power.

"A more hopeless spectacle of fatuous imbecility, made up in equal parts of arrogance and helplessness, than the central government of the Chinese Empire presented after the actual pressure of war had been removed it is almost impossible to conceive."

So writes the author after describing an interview with Li Hung Chang at Tientsin, on his way back from Peking. The Viceroy inquired why he had remained so much longer than he had originally intended in the Chinese capital; the answer was, that he had been looking for some sign of the awakening of China. "I hope," rejoined the Viceroy with a grim smile, "that your time has not been wasted." As the war found the Government and governing classes of China, so it left them. The gigantic system of plunder carried on by the official class is sufficiently illustrated by a comparison of the revenue from customs at the ports under the charge of Sir Robert Hart and those under the charge of Chinese officials. Sir Robert has the control of four Chinese ports, which, under his able management, yield together a revenue of three million taels, while the forty ports where the customs are collected by native officials produce, or at least pay in, less than half a million taels! The chapter entitled "The Genesis of Missionary Outrage in China" is one of the most interesting in the book. Mr. Chirol attributes the hostility of the governing class in China to missionaries of all denominations alike not to any religious feeling, but to the civilising influences which radiate over the whole area of missionary operations.

"Herein lies," he writes, "to a great extent the secret of the hostility displayed, especially among the official classes in China, towards the missionaries. The influence of Western civilisation, in whatever shape it manifests itself, is an abomination in the eyes of the rulers of China, whose days would be counted were it ever to permeate the masses. The hatred directed against the missionaries is only a peculiarly virulent form of the hatred directed against Europeans generally; and it is easy to understand why it should be a peculiarly virulent one. Missionary work is practically the only agency through which the influence of Western civilisation can at present reach the masses. . . . The missionary alone goes out into the byways as well as the highways, and, whether he resides in a treaty port or in some remote province, strives to live with and among and for the people. The life which he lives, whether it be the ascetic life of the Roman Catholic missionary or the family life of a Protestant missionary with wife and children, is in itself a standing reproach to the life of gross self-indulgence led by the average mandarin. But in the eyes of the latter it becomes a public scandal when, in glaring contrast to every vice of native rule, the foreign missionary in his daily dealings with the people of his district conveys a continuous object-lesson of justice and kindness, of unselfishness and integrity."

All outrages on missionaries have their origin in the intrigues of the official class. It is that class which invents and propagates the horrible accusations levelled against the missionaries, and incites the lower orders against them. The author holds that all European Governments, and more especially our own, have been too remiss in exacting due punishment for these ever-recurring outrages. The highest officials of the provinces in which the outrage occurs must be held personally responsible. We think that the publishers should have been above putting into Mr. Chirol's book an old map prepared to illustrate the Life of Sir Henry Parkes. What is wanted is a map that will mark the course of the late war, and will show the advance of Russia in illustration of Mr. Chirol's political chapters.

Madagascar in War Time. By E. F. Knight. (Longmans.) We owe this delightful book to the author having been sent to Madagascar as war correspondent by the Times. The French Government having refused to allow any foreign correspondents to accompany their army, it was decided that Mr. Knight should make his way to Antananarivo and see the fighting from the Hova side. This was no easy matter, owing to the blockade of the coast maintained by the French. He landed at Fort Dauphin in company with a member of the London Missionary Society; and the two travelled together to the capital through a country much of it hitherto unvisited by any European. Of this country, its people, and its "kings" Mr. Knight gives an excellent account. Long before he reached Antananarivo his eyes were opened to the true character of the Hova Government:

"As corrupt as the worst of Oriental states, without possessing any of the inherent strength and capacity to cope with emergencies often displayed by the latter. It was a machine for robbing, not for fighting. It was ridiculously impotent in the hour of danger, and it was full time that the great Hova bubble was pricked."

It rarely happens that an independent nation is conquered without its misfortunes arousing some feelings of pity or regret, but for the Hovas one can feel nothing but contempt. Mr. Knight had ample opportunities of studying the characteristics of this once dominant race—he was with them at the most critical period of their history; and he found them false, cruel, cowardly, and corrupt. How could such a people, devoid of any strength of character, have become the dominant power they were? It seems certain that they were formerly possessed of some force of character, which they have since lost; and it would seem that the veneer of civilisation which is the result of missionary teaching has replaced stronger, if more savage, qualities. Mr. Knight considers Hova religion but skin deep, and he does not think much of the present generation of missionaries; he makes, however, a marked distinction between the old missionary and the new. Describing his companion, Mr. J. Pearse, he writes:

"He is a missionary of the old sort: that is, a man who honestly endeavours to do good, who speaks the truth about the people, neither exaggerating the results of the mission work among them nor veiling their faults; not the man to give a glowing but quite misleading description of 'Christian Madagascar' for the gratification of a suburban mission meeting; a Dissenter of broad views, and no narrow-minded bigot full of prejudices against all who do not agree with the tenets of his sect. There are, I am glad to say, other missionaries like him in Madagascar. There are others very unlike him."

Had the Hova Government possessed a modicum of patriotism, and the Hova people a little courage, the French must have been annihilated. Mr. Knight gives a pitiable picture of their sufferings; nothing could have been worse than the blunders committed by the French administration. Will the same blunders be committed in the event of an European war? On the other hand, the commander-in-chief, General Duchesne, deserves great credit for his conduct of the campaign. He preserved a rigorous discipline, and punished any soldier found looting with the utmost severity. The soldiers paid for everything they required, and their behaviour was admirable. It is hardly necessary to say anything in praise of Mr. Knight's style; everyone who has read Where Three Empires Meet will be certain to send for the present volume, and when they have it they will certainly enjoy it.

NOTES AND NEWS.

MESSRS. BRADBURY, AGNEW & Co. have made arrangements to issue The Political Life of the Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone, illustrated from Punch. The illustrations will nearly all consist of reproductions of cartoons and sketches that have appeared in our contemporary; while the historical record will be a continuous narrative, only partly drawn from the same source. The mode of publication is to be in twenty-one monthly parts, of which the first will appear on May 20. It will have for frontispiece a photograph of a portrait of Mr. Gladstone at the age of twenty-eight, by W. Bradley, which is now at Hawarden Castle.

MESSRS. CHATTO & WINDUS will publish shortly a new volume by Mr. Swinburne, to be called The Tale of Balen.

THE Rev. Charles H. Simpkinton, rector of Farnham, is engaged on a memoir of the late Bishop of Winchester, which will be published by Messrs. Isbister & Co.

MR. ANDREW TUEB's forthcoming History of the Horn-Book, from which in early days our ancestors learned their A B C, is dedicated by command to the Queen, and is the third book written by the author thus distinguished. He has been able to discover about 150 examples of horn-books still in existence, which are all described in his pages. The work will be in two quarto volumes, illustrated with two copperplate frontispieces, and 300 other engravings. Recossed in the inside covers are to be some facsimiles of horn-books from rare examples. The edition is limited to 1000 copies, of which a large portion have been disposed of to Messrs. Charles Scribner's Sons, of New York.

MESSRS. WILLIAMS & NORGATE will shortly publish a reprint, with appendices, of three letters which Mr. Herbert Spencer has lately written to the Times against the adoption of the metric system. In this pamphlet Mr. Spencer advocates the re-organisation of our system of numeration on the duodecimal system, in preference to re-organising our weights and measures on the decimal system.

MR. T. FISHER UNWIN announces a volume of English Studies, by the late James Darmesteter, with a preface by his widow, and a photograph portrait. The following are the subjects of some of the twelve chapters: "The French Revolution and Wordsworth," "Irish Literature and Ossian," "Oliver Madox Brown," and "The Poetry of Mary Robinson." It was by the last of these, we believe, that he won his introduction to his wife.

MESSRS. RICHARD BENTLEY & SON have in the press the Diaries and Letters of General Windham, of Redan fame, during the Crimean War.

UNDER the title of The Dawn of Modern Geography, Mr. John Murray will publish at an early date a book by Mr. Raymond C. Beazley, the biographer of Henry the Navigator, giving a history of travel and geographical science in the early middle ages. It is based mainly upon the writings of Viking explorers, Arab students, and Christian pilgrims; and will be illustrated with reproductions of the principal maps of the time.

MR. GEORGE D. LESLIE, R.A., has written a continuation to that charming volume "Letters to Maroo," to which he gives the more significant title of Riverside Letters. It will be published shortly by Messrs. Macmillan & Co., in handsome form, with illustrations by the author.

THE next volume of the "Cambridge Historical Series," which is now in the press, will be Ireland to the Year 1868, by Judge O'Connor Morris.

MESSRS. JAMES MACLEHOSE & SONS, publishers to the University of Glasgow, will issue early in May The Authorship of the King's Quair, a new criticism, from the pen of Mr. J. T. T. Brown, calling in serious question the laurel hitherto worn by James I.

MESSRS. G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS propose to add to their series of "Writings of the Fathers of the Republic" a collection of the works of President Monroe, in four volumes, to be edited by Mr. S. M. Hamilton, keeper of the MSS. in the State Department at Washington; and also the Constitutional Decisions of Chief Justice Marshall, with an historical introduction by Mr. Simon Sterne, of the New York bar.

The Jaws of Death, by Mr. Grant Allen, will form the first of a new series which Messrs. Jarrold & Sons will shortly publish under the title of "The Daffodil Library," in a dainty shape and tasteful binding.

MESSRS. ARCHIBALD CONSTABLE & Co. announce a new novel by Miss Fiona Macleod, entitled Green Fire.

MESSRS. HUTCHINSON & Co. will publish shortly a novel by Mr. Frederic Carrel, entitled The City, which deals largely with company promotion and so-called "finance."

MESSRS. JARROLD & SONS will shortly issue an authorised translation of Maurus Jokai's Black Diamonds, by Miss Frances A. Gerard.

Two new volumes of verse are announced for immediate publication by Mr. Elliot Stock: Lays of the Heather, by Miss A. C. Macdonald; and Loving Whispers, by Mr. E. M. Pledge.

MESSRS. GEORGE NEWNES & Co. will publish early in May New Ground in Norway, by Mr. E. J. Goodman, author of "The Best Tour in Norway," with illustrations from photographs taken by Mr. Paul Lange of Liverpool. These gentlemen travelled together last summer through the districts of Ringerike, Telemarken, and Saetersdalen, as well as along the south coast of Norway, ground but little known to English tourists—hence the title.

THE seventh and concluding book of the series of Historical Reading Books, which Mr. H. O. Arnold Forster has written, under the title of "Things New and Old," is issued this week. The volume contains the story of English history from the accession of George I. down to the present date, with numerous illustrations and authentic portraits.

A POPULAR Analysis of Poetry, dealing with its nature, power, and art, with exercises and examples, by the Rev. W. H. Stanley, will be issued by Messrs. Abbott, Jones & Co. in the course of a few days.

THE second number of the Savoy, to be published immediately by Mr. Leonard Smithers, will contain literary contributions from the late Paul Verlaine, Cesare Lombroso, Edmund Gosse, Frederick Wedmore, W. B. Yeats, &c.; while the illustrations will include work by Joseph Pennell, C. H. Shannon, Will Rothenstein, Walter Sickert, and Aubrey Beardale.

Chapman's Magazine of Fiction, which begins the second year of its life with the May number, will henceforth be somewhat increased in bulk. Besides a second instalment of the serial by John Oliver Hobbes, there will be short stories by Messrs. Henry James, W. L. Alden, F. C. Phillips, Eden Philpotts, Miss Violet Hunt, and Miss Clara Saville Clarke.

THE Bishop of Peterborough, Captain Younghusband, and Mr. Henry Craik, will be among the speakers at the Literary Fund dinner on Wednesday next, at which the Earl of Crewe takes the chair.

THE following have been elected by the committee to be members of the Athenaeum Club: Dr. James Little, late president of the Royal College of Physicians of Ireland; Dr. John Murray, editor of the reports of the Challenger expedition; and Mr. E. Linley Sambourne, the artist in black and white.

FROM Monday to Friday of next week, Messrs. Sotheby will be engaged in selling the library of the late Lord Coleridge, which is of interest as showing the personal tastes of its owner. It is especially rich in the publications of literary societies—Lord Coleridge even had the extra series of the Early English Texts bound in green morocco; and in the reprints of J. P. Collier, Grosart, Arber, Goldsmid, and Bullen. Modern poets are well represented, Browning having presented many of his volumes—one with the inscription: "To the Attorney-General, nisi quid tu, docte Trebati, dissenti! Trebatio gratias agens R. B."; and there seems to be a complete set of William Watson. Rarities dear to bibliophiles are not wanting: such as the Nuremberg Chronicle, Chapman's Homer, Gould's Humming Birds, Ruskin's Stones of Venice, Linton's Masters of Wood Engraving, and the Grillon Club portraits.

MR. GLADSTONE'S attention having been called to a mention of his name in a review of Dr. Baxter's Sanctuary and Sacrifice, that appeared in the ACADEMY of April 11, writes as follows:

"It gave me the first intimation I have ever had of remarks by [Mr. Benn] on some things said by me in reference to Wellhausen.

"I have given no opinion on Dr. Baxter's book, nor do I think myself competent to give one. But I gave an opinion on some tracts by him published about two years ago. Of these tracts I thought, and think, that—unless and until they be answered—Wellhausen has undergone in them nothing less than a disgraceful exposure.

"I believe they constitute the opening portions of Dr. Baxter's book."

UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS.

MR. STANLEY M. LEATHES, of Trinity, has been appointed assistant-registrary at Cambridge for a period of three years. Mr. Leathes is understood to be preparing for publication some of the earliest records of the university.

DR. A. A. KANTHACK, of St. John's, has been appointed deputy for the professor of pathology at Cambridge for a period of three months.

LAST week the following honorary degrees were conferred by the University of Durham, the Convocation being held, for the first time under the supplementary charter, at the Newcastle College of Science: the degree of D.D.

upon the new Bishop of Newcastle and the Armenian arch-priest, Sukias Baronian; and the degree of D.C.L. upon Sir David Dale, Prof. Arnison, Dr. Dallinger, and Principal Gurney.

SIR E. MAUNDE THOMPSON, principal librarian of the British Museum, proposes to deliver four lectures at Cambridge this term, in his capacity as the first Sanders reader in bibliography. Two lectures will deal with the history of Greek handwriting, from the third century B.C. to the third century A.D.; another with Latin handwriting down to the middle ages; and the fourth with early handwriting in England, showing its derivation from the Hiberno-Latin character. The lectures will be illustrated by means of lantern-slides.

PROF. EDWARD DOWDEN proposes to deliver a course of six lectures at Cambridge this term, as Clark lecturer in English literature at Trinity College. His general subject is "Eighteenth Century Men of Letters"; and he will deal more particularly with Swift, Pope, the English periodical essay, and Johnson as a critic of life.

AT Oxford Mr. E. de Sélincourt, of University, is lecturing this term for the professor of English, on "Elizabethan Non-dramatic Poetry"; while Prof. Napier himself lectures on "Old English Literature."

SIR JOHN STAINER will deliver a public lecture in the Sheldonian Theatre at Oxford next Monday, on "The Secular Compositions of Dufay (ob. circa 1400)."

ON Wednesday and Friday of next week M. Jean Réville (professor of ecclesiastical history in the Ecole des Hautes Etudes) will deliver two lectures, in French, at Manchester College, Oxford, on "The Beginnings of the Roman Episcopate," dealing separately with the historical and the traditional data.

Two public lectures were to be delivered at Oxford towards the end of this week: by Prof. H. H. Turner, on "The Total Solar Eclipse of August 9," illustrated with lantern-slides; and by Prof. F. Y. Edgeworth, on "The Use and Method of Statistics."

THE Rev. Dr. Edmund Warre, headmaster of Eton, and Prof. Alfred Marshall, of Cambridge, have been elected honorary fellows of Balliol.

THE accounts of the University of London for the financial year ending March 31, 1895, show that the total receipts from fees amounted to £18,410, of which £5912 was derived from matriculation, £5675 from Arts, £6035 from medicine and science, and £512 from law. Ten years ago the income from fees was £9515, and twenty years ago only £4203.

THE Rev. Dr. E. Moore, principal of St. Edmund Hall, proposes to deliver six lectures at University College, London, as Barlow Lecturer on Dante, on Wednesdays and Thursdays during May, at 3 p.m. The first of the course, to be given on May 13, will be on "The Geography of Dante," with special reference to passages in the Purgatorio. The remainder will consist of notes and comments on Cantos II. to IV. of the Purgatorio, in continuation of the course delivered last February.

MR. G. H. BLAKESLEY has been appointed to the lectureship in law at Gresham College, vacant by the resignation of Dr. Abdy.

THE catalogue of Lord Coleridge's library, to be sold next week at Sotheby's, contains a "fine and perfect copy" of Purchas His Pilgrims, with the following inscription on the frontispiece:—"Liber Collegii Omnium Animarum Fidelium Defunctorum de Oxon. prest. 15s. 1624." At what price will the college now be able to ransom it?

TRANSLATION.

THE LAST PRAYER OF DAVID STRAUSS.

[THE following verses, of which a translation has been attempted, were sent by David Strauss to a lady friend a few weeks before his death. They were written after he had long been suffering from a most cruel disease, borne with heroic cheerfulness and resignation. They will be found in the recently published correspondence of the eminent critic and biographer, edited by his friend, Prof. Ed. Zeller (Bonn, 1895). The second and third verses were quoted in an article by Sir Mountstuart Grant Duff, written not long after Strauss' death.]

"Wem ich dieses klage,
Weiss ich klage nicht;
Der ich dieses sage,
Fühlt ich zage nicht.
"Heute heisst's: verglimmen
Wie ein Licht verglimmt;
In die Luft verschwimmen
Wie ein Ton verschwimmt.
"Mühe schwach wie immer,
Aber hell und rein,
Dieser letzte Schimmer, Dieser Ton nur sein."

Let me not bewray it,
Call not this a wail;
She to whom I say it
Feels I do not quail.

As a spent note sighing
Breathes itself away,
As a low light dying,
Life goes out to-day.

Yet, though weak and weaker,
May my last note here,
May my light's last flicker
Still be pure and clear.

ALFRED W. BENN.

MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS.

THE April number of the English Historical Review (Longmans) contains an article entitled "Thomas Warton and Mackyn's Diary," which contains—we regret to say—a damnable impeachment of the whilom poet laureate, professor of poetry, and friend of Doctor Johnson. The author is the Rev. H. E. D. Blakiston, a fellow of Trinity College, Oxford, who has made a study of the archives of that house, of which Warton was also a fellow. On undertaking to write a memoir of Sir Thomas Pope, the founder, for the Dictionary of National Biography, he has naturally examined closely the Life of him by Warton, especially as he had already found reason to doubt Warton's accuracy. The present charge is one not of inaccuracy, but of deliberate falsification of documentary evidence. In his Life of Pope, Warton purports to quote from a specified document various stories about Elizabeth's stay at Hatfield during the reign of her sister Mary, in which Pope's name figures conspicuously. Doubt has already been cast upon the authenticity of these stories by a French student of English history, M. Louis Wiesener. Mr. Blakiston now subjects them to a searching analysis, with the result not only of demonstrating that they never existed in the document, but also of unravelling the tortuous devices with which Warton bolstered up his fabrication. The curious thing about the whole business is that Warton had nothing whatever to gain, except fictitious glory for the founder. The conduct of Chatterton or Psalmanazar one can understand; but this seems to be as futile a deception as the Shakspeare Folio of J. P. Collier. We may add that the same number of the English Historical Review has an elaborate study of all the facts recorded about Magister Vacarius, the first teacher of Roman law in England, by Prof. Liebermann.

ON BOOK-WORMS.

WE quote from the Nation, of New York, the following account of the recent finding of book-worms in the library of Cornell University, written by Mr. Willard Austin, the librarian:

"On the 7th day of May, 1893, while working in the catalogue department of the University library, there came to hand a copy of Dante's 'Divine Comedy,' printed at Venice in the year 1536. It had been received through the mails a short time before direct from Italy, and bore on the title-page a stamped device consisting of a crown and, underneath, the words ARCELLI M. CANINO. The old leather cover was perforated with many holes about the size of a pin-head, which is not an uncommon sight to those accustomed to handle old books. Many volumes come to hand during a year bearing such scars, but almost never is the insect found which does the boring. Examining the leaves of the volume, it was found that the worms had not done much damage. The title-page was pierced in eight places, but the holes extended through only a few leaves. Twenty-two holes were found through the back leaves, and they went somewhat deeper than those in the front of the book. Close down in the hinge of the book cover were found several little fat grubs, resembling those sometimes found in a hazel nut. These were taken to the entomological laboratory, where they were found to be alive and sufficiently interesting to be worth studying. From these larvae were developed small brown beetles, and further investigation proved them to belong to the genus known in this country as Sitodrepa panicea, and in Europe as Anobium paniceum. This species belongs to the family Ptinidae, or Death-watch, and the order Coleoptera. It was first described by Frisch in 1721. There are two other species of this genus, Anobium pertinax and Anobium eruditum, and in the larva state all three are so much alike as to be scarcely distinguishable one from another.

"The often-quoted account of the finding by M. Peignot of twenty-seven folios perforated by one insect is mentioned by Blades as an instance of the work of this insect, but it is not quite clear whether the boring was done by Anobium pertinax or Sitodrepa panicea. The Library Journal (vol. x., p. 131) mentions the finding of real book-worms by Richard Savage, librarian of Stratford-on-Avon, in April, 1885. These were the Sitodrepa panicea. F. J. Havergal, librarian of Hereford Cathedral, reported the finding of at least a dozen genuine book-worms during his eighteen years' experience, from 1853-71. In the year 1858 William Blades found in the Bodleian Library a book-worm which he showed to the librarian, who at once killed him with his thumb nail. As none of the insects in the above cases were scientifically studied, it is impossible to say to what species they belonged; but, from the general description given, they undoubtedly belonged to the genus Anobium.

"In this country one or two instances of the finding of book-worms have been recorded. In 1888 H. S. Kephart, at that time cataloguer in the Yale University Library, found some worms. After keeping them for about six months, he sent all that were left to Prof. Comstock at Cornell. Only one was found to be alive when they reached here, and so nothing could be done towards determining to what species they belonged. Recently, Mr. B. C. Steiner reported the finding of a book-worm about two years ago in the Enoch Pratt Free Library of Baltimore, but again not enough came to hand to enable any one to determine where in the book-worm family it belonged."

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE AUTHOR OF "THE CUCKOO AND THE NIGHTINGALE."

Cambridge: April 25, 1896.

Of this poem there are five extant MSS.—viz., F. (Fairfax 16), B. (Bodley 638), T. (Tanner 346), Ar. (Arch. Selden, B. 24), and Ff. (Ff. i. 6, in the Cambridge University Library). My observation that there is a sixth copy in MS., Harl. 7333, is a mistake, due to note 6 in vol. i., p. ix., of Morris's Chaucer, where his statement—"collated with Harl. 7333, and Bodleian Seld. B. 24" does not refer to "The Cuckoo and Nightingale," as one would naturally suppose, but to "The Assembly of Fowles," which happens to be mentioned immediately above.

I noticed long ago that at the end of Ff. is the colophon "Explicit Clanvowe," written with unmistakable clearness. But it is only lately that I have made out the meaning of this. When we find a name at the end of a poem, it refers, naturally, to the author or to the scribe. But there is a difference. The scribe generally gives his name only, or else prefixes to it the word "quod." There is an instance in this very MS., where Chaucer's "Parliament of Fowles" occurs, with the note "Explicit Parliamentum Avium, quod W. Calverley."

The word "quod" sometimes refers to the author; see my Chaucer, i. 359, last line. But when "explicit" is used, the following word naturally refers either to the poem (as above) or to the author, not to the scribe. We even have a case where the colophon is in English, "here endis Barbour," &c.

"Clanvowe" seems a strange name, but it was real enough in the time of Henry IV. and previously. Dr. Furnivall pointed out to me that in his preface to Hoccleve's Poems (p. x.), a Sir John Clanvowe is mentioned as having served in Scotland in 1385, but he is supposed to have died before 1390. But there was a Thomas Clanvowe who, in Wylie's History of Henry IV. (iii. 333), is mentioned as being a friend of Prince Hal, at a time when the Prince was still friendly to "freethinkers and Lollards." And this may have been the very man, as the poem alludes in a complimentary way to "the Queen at Woodstock."

For we can date the poem in this wise. The metre of it is copied from Chaucer's envoy to "The Complaint to his Purse"; and, whatever be the date of this complaint, the date of the envoy is known to be 1399. Again, the title "The Cuckoo and the Nightingale" is unauthorised, and due to Thynne. The only MS. title is that in MS. B.: namely, "The Book of Cupid, God of Love." This title is imitated from Hoccleve's poem, "The Letter of Cupid, God of Love," and the poem is in defence of true love as known to "every trewe gentil herte and free." That is why the first two lines of the poem quote (from Chaucer):

"The God of love! Ah, benedicite, How mighty and how grete a lord is he."

Clanvowe did not take the title of his poem from Christine de Pisan, because her title runs somewhat differently (omitting Cupid); and, moreover, chronology is against it. Christine's poem was not written till May, 1399, and must have taken time to get to England; and there was no Queen of England after September, 1399, till after Hoccleve's poem appeared in 1402. Henry IV. married Johanna of Navarre on February 7, 1403; and she held as a part of her dower the manor and park of Woodstock (Wylie, ii. 284).

The family home of the Clanvowes can be traced. I find, from the Inquisitiones post Mortem, that, in 1339-40 Philip de Clannowe (read Clanvowe) held Rodney manor in the marches of Wales under de Mortimer; and in 1398-9, John Clanvowe held tenements under the same family situate in the honour of Wigmore (Herefordshire). In 1424-5 another John Clanvowe had land in Herefordshire under Edmund de Mortimer; so that we can safely locate them near Wigmore. Hence it was fitting that Thomas Clanvowe should have accompanied Henry of Monmouth in the mountains of Wales, as seems to be implied by Wylie (iii. 333).

The language of the poem is that of the very beginning of the fifteenth century; it is one of the best and earliest of the poems that imitate Chaucer's versification. The finale is used with fair correctness; and the non-Chaucerian rimes are only two—viz., grene with been, and upon with mon (instead of man).

On the whole, the following hypothesis will suit the facts—namely, that the poem, imitating Chaucer's manner, and having a title imitated from Hoccleve's poem of 1402, was written by a Clanvowe, who may very well have been Thomas Clanvowe, who held Lollard opinions and was a friend (at one time) of Henry of Monmouth; and it was addressed to Henry's stepmother, Queen of England from 1403 to 1413, who held as a part of her dower the park and manor of Woodstock. If so, we should expect the poem to have been written before April, 1410, when Thomas Badby, the Lollard, was executed in the presence of the Prince of Wales.

I find another allusion to the name in Wylie's History (iii. 296):

"In Hereford and the far West, not Oldcastle alone, but the Actons, Cheynes, Clanvowes, Greindors, and many great gentlemen of birth, had begun to mell of Lollardy and drink the gall of heresy."

We further learn from the same (iii. 261) that Thomas Clanvowe was one of twenty-five knights who accompanied John Beaufort (son of John of Gaunt) to Barbary in 1390.

WALTER W. SKEAT.

THE RHONE CALLED ROSE (OR ROZE) IN PROVENÇAL.

Burleigh House, Sydenham Hill.

That this is so is shown by Mistral in his Dictionary of Modern Provençal, and by his use of Rose = Fr. Rhône in his Mireille (Paris, 1888), p. 100, &c. In Old Provençal the river was called Roze (see Bartsch's Chrestomathie Provençale, 4th ed., 1880, p. 392, 22). But Mistral, in his dictionary, tells us that it does not bear this name during the whole of its course. His words are: "La forme Rose est usitée entre Arles et Montélimar; on dit Roueis et Rouei devers Valence, Roune ou Rone devers Aubenas, et Ro du côté de Vienne." Rose is used, therefore, during the longest part of the river's southerly course, and is evidently considered by Mistral to be its chief Provençal name.

The O. or M.Fr. form of Rhône was Rosne; and how the Lat. Rhodanus, or rather Rhodanum, became Rosne is well shown by Schwan in his Gram. d. Altfr. (2nd ed., 1893), sects. 105*, 146, 181, 239 (note 1). Rhodanu [m] first became Rodne and then Roane, the d being changed into s as more easily pronounceable before n. Schwan does not pursue the changes beyond Roane, but he tells us (sect. 239, note 1) that in French the nasals n and m remain after all consonants. We see, then, how it was that the s had to give way: first, no doubt, ceasing to be pronounced, and finally disappearing, though leaving a circumflex accent behind to mark its disappearance. This would give us Rhône, and with the h after the R—reintroduced, I suppose, by some purist—Rhône.

In Southern Provençal, however, the n of Rosne seems to have been dropped and the s retained, and thus Rose was formed. The curious point about this is that the original Rhodanus, especially if put into Greek letters (ῥοδανός), must remind anyone knowing a little Greek of ῥόδον, "a rose"; and, indeed, Liddell and Scott give a doubtful adjective, ῥοδανός = ῥόδινος, "made of roses." Not that I think that the name of the river had anything to do with roses, though they are so very abundant in that part of the South of France, and Mistral tells us that Plutarch thought it had; still the coincidence of form, especially when Rhodanum has become Rose, is remarkable. I say coincidence, because I see no reason for believing that the change had anything whatever to do with the settlement of Greek colonists in Provence. And there are, moreover, two differences: Rose = Rhone has remained masculine; Roso (O. Prov. rosa, roza) = rose is feminine, so that the gender is different, as well as the final vowel.

It is curious also, that, if Prof. Skeat is correct when he says that the Latin rosa "is not a true Latin word, but borrowed from Gr. ῥόδον," here also, and quite independently, a med. d became an s.

F. CHANCE.

PROF. KNIGHT AND MR. T. HUTCHINSON—AN EXPLANATION.

St. Andrews: April 24, 1896.

Will you kindly print a few words from me regarding a letter which appears in the ACADEMY of April 18, to which my attention has just been called? For some weeks I have been absent from home, and have received no papers. That I should be ungrateful or forgetful of the services rendered to me by Mr. Thomas Hutchinson in revising the proof-sheets of the first two volumes of my Wordsworth is an impossibility, and the omission of his name seemed to me also an impossibility until I re-examined my preface. The omission is a mystery to myself, and I am profoundly sorry that the accident should have occurred. All that I can now do is to make acknowledgment of Mr. Hutchinson's aid in a note in a subsequent volume. He need not fear that the full extent of his services will be overlooked.

As many copies of the proofs of the preface passed between me and the printers, the oversight may have arisen in this way. I mentioned both Mr. Hutchinson's services and those of Prof. Hill, of the Bengal Education Department, in what I thought was the final proof returned by me; but an earlier one must have been "passed for press" and printed off. It grieves me to think that, by the merest accident in the world, no mention is made of these two gentlemen—Mr. Hill's services were chiefly in discovering Wordsworth's indebtedness to earlier poets, and Mr. Hutchinson's in tracing earlier textual readings. I have always spoken to my publishers—and to every Wordsworth student—of Mr. Hutchinson, in the same terms in which Prof. Dowden has spoken of him. I found him more accurate than Mr. Dykes Campbell, and most accurate of all, with the exception of Mr. Kinghorn. In all his communications with me hitherto he has been kind and courteous. In explanation of his complaint that he "had not been favoured with the sight of an emended proof," I may add that he told me that he was in a very indifferent state of health, and naturally I abstained from troubling him with further revision, either of the proofs of vols. i. and ii., or of subsequent ones, more especially as the same kind of work—viz., the revision of earlier readings—was being undertaken by the publishers in London.

It is a pity that Mr. Hutchinson calls what he criticises "a re-issue of Prof. Knight's Wordsworth," when the preface tells him that it is "not a reproduction" of my former edition. It is also regrettable that he should ridicule a note, which he saw in a rough proof, which was never published, which was not mine, but was suggested to me by one of the Wordsworth students whom he praises.

I specially regret that the proof of vols. i. and ii. was put into Mr. Hutchinson's hands in such a very rough and unfinished state, because of the additional work it gave him; but the same rough proof was sent to many other friends.

WILLIAM KNIGHT.

Dublin: April 20, 1896.

If, indeed, the non-acknowledgment of which I complained to the ACADEMY is, as Prof. Knight suggests above, to be explained by the accidental printing-off of a wrong proof, then doubtless he is to be commiserated, and so perhaps, in some degree, am I. What, however, persuaded me that the omission of my name from his preface was deliberate was the extraordinary manner in which, a year before, our intercommunications ceased. When, according to our compact, having corrected and returned the sheets of vols. i. and ii., I was awaiting the sheets of vol. iii. and of the preface, Prof. Knight suddenly, and silently, receded from the engagement in which he had entered with me. If, as he says, his action was prompted by a regard for my health (which at this time he had reason to know was re-established), why did he not inform me that he was about to make fresh arrangements for the correction of the sheets? A line on a postcard would have sufficed, and would have rendered any subsequent misunderstanding impossible. His neglect of this obvious duty was, I am constrained to say, a breach of courtesy, and to the misapprehensions arising from which alone my letter to the ACADEMY is to be traced.

I regret if I have erred in applying the word "re-issue" to Prof. Knight's volumes. What should I have called them?—a "rifacimento," perhaps. After all, what is this new work but a re-issue, or second edition, revised and enlarged, of the old? No doubt it is better than the first, as a second edition ought to be. But it also contains sundry errors which are not to be found in the first edition, and which certainly did not appear in the proof-sheets of this one, when they passed out of my hands.

THOMAS HUTCHINSON.

THE SIN-EATER IN WALES.

Cardiff April 27, 1896.

Mr. J. P. Owen, writing under the above heading in the ACADEMY of April 25, seems to have mistaken the true meaning and etymology of abeilon, a term used in the neighbourhood of Llandilo, in Carmarthenshire. The a, probably, as Mr. Owen suggests, represents the article; but the word is composed of y bylon or y mylon, literally "edges" or "margins," and then "perquisites" or "gifts." The bylon of which Miss Beall speaks were the customary perquisites given in the neighbourhood of Llandeifnant, and are still in vogue in some parts of Wales. The term is used in other parts of Carmarthenshire, and also in North Wales. It is the plural form of byl or myl, "side," "edge," or "margin," and still heard in the phrase hyd y fyl, "to the brim," or "brimful." It is a good word, and should have found place in every Welsh dictionary; and it is somewhat strange that Chancellor Silvan Evans has not included it in his great work. Both forms, bylon and mylon, are heard in the neighbourhood of Newcastle Emlyn, a locality with which the Chancellor is well acquainted.

W. KILIER EVANS.

PAMELA'S DAUGHTER.

Paris: April 25, 1896.

Mrs. Helen MacCorquodale, so unaccountably described in the Times as ninety-six years of age, yet as the daughter of Lord Edward Fitzgerald, who died ninety-eight years ago, must have been Pamela's daughter by her second husband, Pitcairn, the American consul at Hamburg.

* In sect. 105 Schwan tells us that the o of Rhodanu (= Rhodanum) is open and has remained open in Rosne. Now, in French, the o in Rhône is certainly generally pronounced as long as the o in Fr. rose, and is, indeed, more ferme; and so it interested me last summer to hear a Nice gentleman when speaking French, pronounce Rhône with the o short and open, much as in our on.

In the Dictionary of National Biography I was only able to state that that daughter in 1835 was married and living in New York. In 1878, however, calling on the late Mr. Henry Reeve at the Hôtel du Danube, Paris, I mentioned that Pamela died in that hotel, whereupon a friend staying there with him informed me that that daughter was then living in the vicinity of Thames Ditton, whither Pamela's remains had been removed in 1880. Mrs. Mac-Corquodale's death at Richmond confirms that information.

J. G. ALGER.

APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK.

- SUNDAY, May 3, 7 p.m. Ethical: "The Simplification of Life," by Mr. Herbert Rix.
 MONDAY, May 4, 4.30 p.m. Victoria Institute: "Evolution," by Dr. Kidd.
 5 p.m. Royal Institution: General Monthly Meeting.
 5 p.m. Hellenic: "Newly Discovered Paintings at Pompeii," by Mr. Telford Ely.
 8 p.m. Royal Institute of British Architects: Annual General Meeting.
 8 p.m. Society of Arts: Cantor Lecture, "Applied Electro-Chemistry," II., by Mr. J. Swinburne.
 TUESDAY, May 5, 3 p.m. Royal Institution: "Ripples in Air and on Water," I., by Mr. C. V. Boys.
 3 p.m. Anglo-Russian: "The Tretiaikov Gallery of Pictures at Moscow," by Mr. E. A. R. Hodgotta.
 8 p.m. Biblical Archaeology: "The First Chapter of Genesis and the Babylonian Cosmogonies," by the Rev. P. J. Ball.
 8 p.m. Civil Engineers: "American and English Methods of Manufacturing Steel Plates," by Mr. Jeremiah Head; "Four American Rolling-Mills," by Mr. Samuel T. Wellman.
 8 p.m. Society of Arts: "Australia's Prospects in British Markets," by Mr. James F. Dowling.
 8.30 p.m. Zoological: "Little-known Batrachians from the Caucasus," by Mr. G. A. Boulenger; "Contributions to the Anatomy of Picarian Birds, II., the Pterylosis of the Cephalopoda," by Mr. F. E. Beddard; "Contributions to the Study of Mammalian Dentition, III., the Teeth of certain Insectivora," by Mr. M. F. Woodward.
 WEDNESDAY, May 6, 4 p.m. Archaeological Institute: "Recent Discoveries of Mural Paintings at Willingham Church, Cambridgeshire, and elsewhere," II., by Mr. Charles E. Keyser; "Great Stones at Gozo, Malta, explored in 1893," by Dr. A. A. Caruana.
 4.30 p.m. Royal Society of Literature: "Gothic and Modern Culture," by Dr. K. Lentzner.
 8 p.m. Society of Arts: "High Explosives and Smokeless Powder," by Mr. Hudson Maxim.
 8 p.m. Elizabethan: "Some French Criticisms of the Elizabethan Drama," by Mr. W. Hutchison.
 THURSDAY, May 7, 8 p.m. Royal Institution: "The Art of Working Metals in Japan," I., by Mr. W. Gowland.
 8 p.m. Linnean: "The Tooth-Genesis of the Canidae," by Dr. H. Maretz Tims; "Lantern Slides Illustrative of the Habits of the Tiger Beetle (Oicnide a caspensis)," by Mr. F. Enoch; "Preparations of the Hermaphrodite Glands of Apus," by Mr. H. M. Bernard.
 8 p.m. Chemical: "Luteolin," II., by Dr. A. G. Perkin; "Morin," I., by Drs. Hermann Bablick and A. G. Perkin.
 8 p.m. Civil Engineers: James Forrest Lecture, "Physical Experiment in relation to Engineering," by Dr. A. B. W. Kennedy.
 8.30 p.m. Antiquaries.
 FRIDAY, May 8, 9 p.m. Royal Institution: "Electric Shadows and Luminescence," by Prof. Silvanus P. Thompson.
 SATURDAY, May 9, 3 p.m. Royal Institution: "Three Emotional Composers, I., Borlino," by Mr. F. Corrier.
 3.45 p.m. Botanic: General Fortnightly Meeting.

SCIENCE.

"THE SACRED BOOKS OF THE OLD TESTAMENT."—Part XX., The Books of Chronicles in Hebrew. Printed in Colours exhibiting the Composite Structure of the Book, with Notes by B. Kittel, English Translation of the Notes by B. W. Bacon. (Leipzig: J. O. Hinrichs; Baltimore: The Johns Hopkins Press; London: David Nutt.)

Nor long after the edition of the Psalter by Wellhausen comes this excellent edition of The Books of Chronicles by Kittel, whose interest in the problems of the composition of the narrative books of the Old Testament is well known. It is a solid piece of work, and is certainly one of the best edited portions of the new Hebrew Old Testament.

Four colours are used—namely, dark red, for certain parts of 1 Chron. i.-xi., which the Chronicler derived from older sources not extant in the Canon; light red, for sections derived from passages preserved in our present Old Testament (especially Genesis, Samuel, and Kings); dark blue, for certain subsequent additions to the work of the Chronicler (such as 1 Chron. iv. 21-23); and light blue, for still later additions (e.g., 1 Chron. ii. 18-24). The critical notes have been translated by Dr. Bacon—a task of great delicacy, which has, it would seem, been performed with accuracy. Many points of much interest are touched upon. The very first note, relative to the comparative value of the two pronunciations Kainan (Septuagint and Vulgate) and Kenan (Masoretic text), is a real contribution to study. The notes on Hazarmaveth, Asarel, Meribael, Issachar, Daniel son of David, also deserve reading. On the last-mentioned name, however, the student would have been grateful for a longer annotation, in which Klostermann would not have been neglected. Budde, in his edition of Samuel, affixes notes of interrogation to the strange form "Chileab." Why does Kittel substitute this name for "Daniel" without any attempt to explain it? The excellent note on the puzzling names of the Hemanites in 1 Chron. xxv. 4 would have gained in clearness by a little expansion. It is a sign of the times that Kittel is giving so much attention to Assyriology. Among other evidences of this I may mention his note on 2 Chron. i. 16, where he adopts Winckler's suggestion that מְקוֹר in 1 Kings x. 28 and 2 Chron. i. 16 contains the name of a country—namely, Kuē (i.e., Cilicia); cf. Ezek. xxvii. 14, where Syria receives its horses from Togarmah—i.e., from Western Armenia. But Winckler does not stand alone. Hommel and McCurdy also deserved honourable mention.

T. K. CHEYNE.

CORRESPONDENCE.

EPIGRAPHIC DISCOVERIES AT MATHURÂ.

Vienna: April 30, 1896.

A letter from Dr. Führer, accompanied by a batch of impressions of inscriptions, informs me that a grant of 300 rupees from the Government of the North-Western Provinces enabled him to resume his explorations at Mathurâ during February last. Dr. Führer spent this (for excavations) rather insignificant sum partly on "prospecting operations" in the large Katra Mound, which is said to conceal the ruins of Késava's ancient temple, destroyed by Aurangzebe, and partly on diggings in some unexplored portions of the Kankali Tilâ, which some years ago yielded the splendid collection of important Jaina inscriptions.

The Katra Mound furnished none of the hoped-for Brahmanical sculptures and inscriptions, but only, as in former times, fragments belonging to a Buddhist Stûpa of the Kushana period. But the results of Dr. Führer's work in the Kankali Tilâ were as valuable as those of 1889-93. Besides a number of smaller fragments of inscriptions, giving the names of various Jaina schools and teachers, he found a longer one, which, in spite of the omission of the reigning king's name, possesses a considerable interest, and perhaps indicates that the dates of the Kushana kings, Kanishka, Huviska and Vâsudeva or Vâsushka, must be interpreted otherwise than is usually done.

The curiously misspelt text of the mutilated document runs thus:

1. Namasvarvaidhant Ārahantand | Mahā-d-jasya rājatirijasya svarvaccharasate d[il] . . . . .
2. 200 90 9 (?) hemahitandse 2 divase 1 ārahāte Mahāvirasya prā'im[ā] . . . . .
3. ... sya Okhārikāye vītu Ujhatikāye ca Okhāye sadvikāhhaginiy[ā] . . . . .
4. ... ārahāya S'ivadinnāya ca eteh ārahātā-yatīne sthāpit[ā] . . . . .
5. ... devakulān ca |

With the obvious corrections namas-sarva for namasvarva, samivaccharasate for svavaccharasate, dhītu for vītu, arāhikā for arāhikā and etah for eteh, as well as with the highly probable restoration dū[ti]ya nava(?)—navatyadhike at the end of l. 1, the following translation may be given:

"Adoration to all Siddhas, to the Arhats! In the second century [estimated by ninety-nine (?) 299 (?) of the Mahārāja and Rājātrāja, in the second month of winter, on the first day—an image of the Arhat Mahāvira was set up in the Arhat-temple by the following [persons], by . . . and by Ujhatikā, daughter of . . . [and] of Okhārikā, by Okhā, the lay-sister . . . of . . . sika and S'ivadinnā . . . . . and a temple."

As the first two numeral signs are very distinct, and only the third is somewhat blurred and of unusual form, it is evident that the document was incised at all events after the year 290 (possibly in the year 299) of an unnamed era, and during the reign of an unnamed king who bore the titles mahārāja and rājātrāja. The last mentioned circumstance permits us to determine, at least, to which dynasty the king belonged. For though the two combined titles occur before the names of Azes, Azilises, Gondopheres, Pakores, Kadphises I. and II., Kanishka, Huviska, and Vâsudeva, only one of the last three kings can be here intended, because, as far as is known at present, none of the first six ruled over Mathurâ. And to this conclusion points also the type of the characters of the inscription. It fully agrees with that of the numerous votive inscriptions of the time of the Kushana rule over Mathurâ; and it preserves in the broad-backed sa with the slanting central stroke, and in the tripartite subscript ya, two archaic forms which during this period occur only occasionally for the later sa with the horizontal cross-bar and the bipartite ya. These characteristics, as well as the general appearance of the letters, preclude also the (otherwise possible) assumption that the inscription might belong to the time of a later Kushana king, who ruled after Vâsudeva and before the conquest of Mathurâ by the Guptas about 400 A.D.

Under these circumstances, the date of Dr. Führer's inscription, which differs from those found in the other inscriptions of the Kushanas of Mathurâ, gains a considerable importance. Hitherto we possessed only documents with the years 5-28 for Kanishka, 29-60 for Huviska, and 74 (misread 44)-98 for Vâsudeva; and these dates have been taken by most Sanskritists to be years of the S'aka era of 78 A.D., supposed to have been established by Kanishka, but by Sir A. Cunningham as years of the fifth century of the Seleucid era, or equivalent to [40]5-[4]98, i.e., 93-191 A.D. If we now have reason to believe that the new date Sam 299 fell in the reign of one of these three kings, that may be explained in two ways. Either it may be assumed that the Kushanas of Mathurâ used two eras—one established by Kanishka, and a second which began much earlier; or it may be conjectured that their dates with the figures 5-98 are abbreviated by the omission of the hundreds, and that, being in reality equivalent to 205-298, they have to be referred to the era which occurs so frequently in the lately discovered Kharosthi inscriptions from the Panjab, as well as in some older finds.

It seems very tempting to consider the Mathurā date of S'odāsa, Sani 72, the Taxila date of his contemporary Patika, Sani 78, the date Sani 102 of M. Senart's No. 35 (Notes d'Épigraphie Indienne, v.), the Takht-i-Bahi date of Gondopherres, Sani 103, the date, Sani 113, of Dr. Waddell's Kaldavra inscription (Vienna Or. Jour., vol. x., No. 1), the Panjtar date of a Gushana king (name lost), Sani 123, the date, Sani 200, of M. Senart's No. 34, the date, Sani 276 or 286 of the Hashtnagar image and Dr. Führer's new Mathurā date, Sani 299 (?), as links of one and the same chain, to which also the abbreviated dates of Kanishka and his successors, Sani [20]6-[2]98, belong. If all these dates are really connected in the manner suggested, the beginning of this Northern era must fall in the first half of the first century B.C. For the time of Gondopherres, who ruled in its 103rd year, is undoubtedly the first half of the first century A.D.

For the present, and until more dated inscriptions of this period with royal names are found, this suggestion, which coincides in the main with M. Senart's views expressed at the end of his article quoted above, is nothing more than a bare possibility. Perhaps further explorations in the Kankālī Tilā, which Dr. Führer intends to undertake, will prove its correctness.

G. BÜHLER.

SCIENCE NOTES.

Nature of Thursday next, May 7, will contain, as an addition to the "Science Worthies Series," a Life and an Appreciation of Sir Joseph Lister, the new president of the Royal Society. The latter is by Prof. Tillmanns, of Leipzig. A photogravure portrait of Sir Joseph Lister will accompany the articles as a supplement.

MR. JOHN MURRAY will publish this week a new edition of Sir Charles Lyell's Student's Elements of Geology, entirely revised throughout by Prof. J. W. Judd, who was formerly a pupil of Sir Charles, and is now dean of the Royal College of Science.

At the Royal Institution, on Tuesday next, Mr. C. V. Boys will begin a course of three lectures on "Ripples in Air and on Water." The evening discourse on Friday will be delivered by Prof. Silvanus P. Thompson, his subject being "Electric Shadows and Luminescence."

THE fourth James Forrest Lecture will be delivered on Thursday next at the Institution of Civil Engineers by Prof. A. B. W. Kennedy, who has taken for his subject "Physical Experiment in relation to Engineering."

A COURSE of ten lectures will be delivered in the gardens of the Zoological Society by Mr. F. E. Beddard, the prosector, on Saturdays at 4 p.m., beginning to-day.

THE spring meeting of the Iron and Steel Institute of Great Britain will be held on May 7 and 8, at the Institution of Civil Engineers, Westminster, under the presidency of Sir David Dale. Upon that occasion the Bessemer gold medal, which is awarded annually in recognition of meritorious services in advancing the science or practice of the metallurgy of iron and steel, will be presented to Dr. Hermann Wedding, of Berlin.

At the last meeting of the Geological Society, Prof. Albert Heim, of Zürich, was elected a foreign member; and Prof. S. L. Penfield, of Newhaven (Conn.), and Dr. J. Walther, of Jena, were elected foreign correspondents. It was also announced that a portrait in sepia of Prof. Bonney, executed by Prof. Trevor Haddon, had been presented to the society by thirty-four fellows.

PHILOLOGY NOTES.

THE fifth part of the Oxford Concordance to the Septuagint, by Hatch and Redpath, has just been published by the Clarendon Press, going as far as τρέπυλον. One more part, which is already in an advanced stage, will conclude the work; and it is hoped that this will appear in the course of the summer. The whole of this large and valuable undertaking will thus be completed within little more than four years from the appearance of the first part.

At the meeting of the Society of Biblical Archaeology, to be held on Monday next, at 37, Great Russell-street, the Rev. C. J. Ball will read a paper on "The First Chapter of Genesis and the Babylonian Cosmogonies."

WITH reference to the reported purchase by the Czar of an ancient MS. of the Gospels, belonging to the Greek community of Sarumsahly, near Caesarea, Prof. Armitage Robinson writes to the Times that, judging from the description, he has no doubt that it must be a missing portion of Codex N, of the sixth century, of which thirty-four leaves are at Patmos, six in the Vatican, four in the British Museum, and two at Vienna. He adds that the late Dr. Hort told him, eight or nine years ago, that he was confident the rest of Codex N would one day appear, probably in the neighbourhood of Ephesus.

REPORTS OF SOCIETIES.

ANGLO-RUSSIAN LITERARY SOCIETY.—(Tuesday, April 7.)

E. A. OZALETT, Esq., president, in the chair.—M. Owiankin, of Vladivostok, read a paper on "Siberia." After referring to the scanty and erroneous knowledge possessed by people in this country, he gave an historical sketch of the conquest of Siberia three centuries ago (1582) by the Cossack adventurer Ermark, who had been outlawed from Russia on account of the robberies he had committed on the Volga. Assisted by the great merchants Strogonoff, Ermark conquered a portion of Siberia, and presented it as a peace-offering to the Czar Ivan the Terrible, who thereby acquired this immense territory without war or cost. The lecturer then gave a geographical sketch of Siberia and a description of the colonists (among whom perhaps the most successful were Russian Disenters and the so-called "Old Believers") and of the various aborigines, some of whom, as, for instance, the Bourlats, were not dying out, as was unfortunately the case with natives in other parts of the world. He dwelt on the innate kindness of the Russian peasant in his relations with the semi-savages, whom he treated as brothers. The exile system was the cause of much evil, by filling Siberia with criminals, who robbed the population and contaminated them by their bad example, as they were free to roam about after their term of penal servitude had expired. At the present time the Russian Government was affording considerable assistance to respectable labourers who wished to work the virgin soil of Siberia. The productiveness of the country was proverbial; and mining was important, especially gold, of which nearly three millions sterling was obtained annually. There was also a great future for the iron and coal industries; but there was a lack of technical knowledge and appliances, which, combined with immense distances and bad communications, rendered traffic very difficult. As regards trade and commerce, goods could now be brought, not only in the primitive way from Russia, in carts and by the rivers, but also by the Kara Sea and the Yenisei, which had been navigated, thanks to the enterprise of Capt. Joseph Wiggins, but also and most especially by the Pacific Ocean to Vladivostok, at one-twentieth of the cost of the former land carriage. From that port, which had been almost monopolised by German merchants, goods could be distributed all over the Amur region. England should enter into closer commercial relations with Siberia by this sea route. The frugal Chinese had acquired great influence on the Amur as labourers and in the conduct of retail business, but probably their services will have to be dispensed with in the future. The press, learned societies, and the facilities for education were described in more or less favourable terms; and the thirst for education, which was a characteristic of the local population, was dwelt upon with complacency. It appears that some of the towns have more newspapers and general mental activity than in the European provinces of Russia. Mr. Owiankin commended several of the administrative and judicial improvements which appear to be in contemplation. But the great Siberian Railway was the all-absorbing subject. Its importance for Siberia and for Russia, both politically and commercially, and its advantages, in an international sense, for all nations, formed the main theme of his discourse. It would bring Europe and the Far East into touch; and if the terminus on the Pacific could be a harbour free of ice in all seasons the result would benefit the whole world and shorten the Siberian Railway by more than 500 miles. The sundry treaties, in virtue of which China had ceded territory to Russia, were also explained. The population was estimated at seven millions, all told, and the value of the manufactures at about £1,000,000 a year.—During the discussion which ensued Dr. Markoff, who had travelled in various parts of Asia, expressed regret that of late years English capitalists had not known how to take advantage of the commercial and industrial opportunities which Russia and Siberia offered to skill and enterprise, whereas during the last twenty years nearly twenty million sterling had been invested by Belgian and French capitalists in the coal and iron mines of Southern Russia, and in other establishments of a productive and lucrative character.—Mr. Oswald Cattley, who has visited the western portions of Siberia with the object of extending commercial relations, said that his experience did not point to profitable results. The absence of proper communications and other elementary drawbacks resulted in a very unequal distribution of grain and other produce which could not be sold in some localities, while in other places there was a lack of these articles even for local consumption.—Mr. Howard, the author of a book about the I-land of Saghalin, and perhaps the only Englishman who has visited some portions of that penal settlement, said it was in many respects a remarkable island, which would ere long come prominently before the public. As regards Siberia, he considered that it would be the means of solving most useful social and economical questions, thanks to the great railway which is now in course of construction. He predicted that the terminus (Vladivostok?) would have a greater future than San Francisco, being bound up with more world-like interests. It would be the link between the boundless seas and oriental populations on the one side, and a rich continent on the other, reaching into the very heart of Europe as far as Berlin and Paris.—The president wound up the discussion by stating the fact, which had not been mentioned, that serfdom had never existed in Siberia, though the advantages of municipal and communal government, &c., (Zemstvo), which had been granted to Russia after the emancipation of the serf in 1861, had not yet been conferred on Siberia. He doubted whether the railway could pay as a commercial enterprise, because grain and other low-priced produce of Siberia could not bear the high charge of railway freight. He commended the system of employing convicts in the construction of the line, but pointed out the danger in the future from Chinese labour and Japanese industry, which could penetrate through Russia into Europe, where they would lower still more the cost of production and the value of manufactures, complicating various social problems. The transfer of the prison administrations of Russia from the Ministry of the Interior to the Ministry of Justice showed that improvements were in contemplation. In conclusion, he mentioned several Russian names, which were connected with questions regarding Siberia and the Amur, beginning with Admiral Count Pontiatine, and ending with Admiral Tchihatcheff, the present Minister of Marine, who were personally known to many members of the society.

CLIFFTON SHAKESPEARE SOCIETY.—(Saturday, April 11.)

Mrs LOUISA MARY DAVIES in the chair.—Mr. J. W. Mills, in a paper on "Venus and Adonis," said that before we formulate a definite judgment concerning this poem, it is indispensable, in the interests of equity and truth, that we pause for a moment to take a cursory survey of the method of treatment adopted by artists of the period when their theme was such a one as that under discussion. Of all English poets Spenser is unsurpassed for loftiness of moral aims and spotless purity of life and conduct. The first two cantos of the "Faery Queen" suffice to show that he was a high-souled, pure-minded, Christian man, filled with loftiest aspirations after spiritual truth, and athirst for all manner of virtuous excellence. Canto X. of Book I. undoubtedly inspired Bunyan and George Herbert, two writers who have exalted the higher life of quite different classes of English folk. Yet in Canto XII. of Book II. Spenser, with a daring frankness of treatment, uses an Oriental voluptuousness of portraiture and a lavish exuberance of every conceivable form of sensuous beauty that can intoxicate the senses or bewilder the unstable heart of man. This is a perfect analogue to those bold touches and that warmth of gorgeous colouring that make us somewhat wince as we read the "Venus and Adonis." Now read Spenser's "Epithalamion," with its Rubens-like unveiling of the manifold corporeal perfections that adorn the bride's person, and finish with his hymns on "Love" and "Beauty." That unhappy mental condition, which, in every phrase of more than customary boldness, and in every frank and true presentment of nature, can at once detect a lesa majestas against sacred Virtue, savours rather of morbid pruriency than of purity of thinking. In their handling of these subjects both Shakespeare and Spenser are in most perfect harmony with the artistic instincts of the epoch, and Shakespeare's treatment of the Venus and Adonis legend is precisely similar to that of the Italian artists, and the poem in no way tended to lower the prevailing notions of morality, but is simply on the same plane with them, which is all that needs be said in his defence as an artist. If he errs, at least he errs in unimpeachable company; his friends are Tasso, Ariosto, Boccaccio, Spenser, Titian, Michael Angelo, Correggio: and, in a word, all the other intellectual giants of the seed of the Italian Renaissance. But it is by no means sufficient that the Areopagus of letters shall grant Shakespeare a grudging acquittal on the charge of immorality; it must be thankful and laudatory for the sound morality of his works. Coarseness, the fault of his age, is not always vice; nor plain speaking lewdness. The principles of ethics are indeed immutable; but morality, or the consequences deduced therefrom, will vary greatly with various nations, and with each evanescent generation of men. To place Shakespeare's essential soundness of morals in its true light, we may contrast him with certain writers of the nineteenth century. Goethe, the greatest literary intellect of the century and the idol of his nation, squanders all the resources of his great powers in adorning and recommending the wildest licentiousness. He seemed possessed by a perfect frenzy of wickedness. Proof of this is found in the Lehrjahre of Wilhelm Meister; Werther; the "Walpurgis Nacht" scene in Faust; the Wahlverwandtschaften, Stella, the Mitschuldigen, Egmont, Bajazet. Shakespeare's morality contrasts very finely also with the newest school of English fiction, represented by such works as The Woman Who Did, Life on an African Farm, The Heavenly Twins, The Second Mrs. Tanqueray. Equally to the advantage of honest Will is it to compare him with the modern French school of fiction, many of which, such as Nana, L'Assommoir, have not even the extenuation of artistic beauty. The more we compare our own Will with much of modern literature that stands high in the favour of the age, the more highly glow his honesty of purpose and his manly and essentially sound code of morals.—Miss Davies, in a paper entitled "With the Immortals," said the reading world has almost without exception surrendered itself so completely to the fascination of the human interest in Shakespeare's dramatic works, that the classic beauties of his Poems and the tender charm of his Sonnets have been comparatively overlooked. And yet it is not too much to say that if he had never written a play, the wealth of imagination, and the splendour of the language of his Poems, and the inimitable and varied perfections of his Sonnets, would still have placed him in the foremost rank of the voices of the world. In the interests of Art we cannot afford to leave Shakespeare's "Venus and Adonis," his "Lucrece," his "Lover's Complaint," and even his "Passionate Pilgrim"—to say no word of the Sonnets—with uncut leaves. In the "Venus and Adonis" an unattractive theme is made to serve as an elaborately-chased setting for some of the purest gems of poetic thought and expression that have ever seen the light of day. This little read poem is a storehouse of untarnished beauties, exquisite descriptions of nature and stirring pictures of country life. A series of glorious word-paintings will be found in the portrait of the favourite horse of Adonis, and in (to adopt William Sharp's headings in the "Canterbury Poets" edition) "The Warning of Adonis," "The Hunting of the Hare," "A Hunting Morn," "The Death of Adonis." Among its minuter beauties, there are many touches descriptive of well-known aspects of nature. In lines 931-6 we find a remarkable instance of Shakespeare's power of flinging together jagged and inharmonious syllables to deal with a hateful idea. There are many other passages which contain the essence of true poetry. The characterisation of the hero and heroine would also doubtless well repay examination. Human nature, however, has its limitations, and one of these seems to be an inability to project itself into sympathy with the heart-beats of unconventional demi-gods and goddesses. And the incomprehensible defies analysis.

ARIATIC.—(Tuesday, April 14.)

SIR W. W. HUNTER, vice-president, in the chair.—Mr. Beveridge read a paper on "Anquetil Du Perron." It dealt chiefly with his personal history, and was mainly an abstract of the Discours Préliminaire to the Zend Avesta. His voyage to India was described, as also his interview with Siraj-ud-Daula and Mir Madan (the hero of Plassey), and his wonderful journey of 1200 miles from Oolgoong to Pondicherry. The chief novelty in the paper was some extracts from the Proceedings of the Council of Bombay and Surat of September and October, 1759, which gave details about Du Perron's encounter with another Frenchman in the streets of Surat. It appeared from them that Du Perron's antagonist was M. Biguent.

METEOROLOGICAL.—(Wednesday, April 15.)

E. MAWLEY, Esq., president, in the chair.—Mr. W. Ellis read a paper on "The Mean Amount of Cloud on each Day of the Year at the Royal Observatory, Greenwich, on the Average of the Fifty Years 1841-90," in which he showed that a principal maximum occurs in winter and a principal minimum in autumn, with a secondary much less pronounced maximum in summer and a secondary minimum in spring. There is, however, considerable irregularity in the succession of daily values, the differences between which on consecutive days are in numerous cases relatively large. Cloudless days are most numerous in spring and autumn, and least so in winter and summer; days of little cloud are somewhat less numerous in winter as compared with other parts of the year, while days of medium cloud are much more numerous in summer than in winter. Days of much cloud are nearly equal in amount in all parts of the year; while overcast days are much more numerous and nearly equal in amount in the first and fourth quarters of the year, much less numerous in the second quarter, and again less numerous in the third quarter.—Mr. E. D. Fridlander gave an account of some observations of the amount of dust in the atmosphere made at various places during a voyage round the world in 1894-5. The experiments, which were made with a form of Altken's Pocket Dust Counter, showed that there are often considerable variations in the number of dust particles in a very short space of time. Not only did dust occur in the air of inhabited countries, over the water surfaces immediately adjoining them, and up to an altitude of 6000 or 7000 feet among the Alps, but it was also found in the open ocean, and that so far away from any land as to preclude the possibility of artificial pollution, and its existence has been directly demonstrated at a height of more than 13,000 feet.—Major H. E. Rawson gave an analysis of the Greenwich rainfall records from 1879 to 1890, with special reference to the declination of the sun and moon.

HISTORICAL.—(Thursday, April 23.)

SIR M. E. GRANT DUFF, president, in the chair.—Mr. J. Ragland Powel was elected a fellow.—A paper was read by Dr. F. Salomon, of Leipzig, on the "Foreign Policy of William Pitt during the First Ten Years of his Ministry."—A discussion followed, in which Mr. Oscar Browning and Lord Edmond Fitzmaurice took part.

FINE ART.

ERNEST GARDNER'S "HANDBOOK OF GREEK SCULPTURE."

"HANDBOOKS OF ARCHAEOLOGY AND ANTIQUITIES."—A Handbook of Greek Sculpture. By E. A. Gardner. Vol. I. (Macmillans.) The appearance of Mr. Ernest Gardner's Handbook of Greek Sculpture is very timely. The increasing facilities for travel in Greece, the growth of "processes" which reproduce with startling exactitude photographic images, and the creation in certain towns of collections of casts from the antique, have done something to rouse that popular interest in the subject without which no handbook could expect a sale, and no deeper work would have a chance of being widely read. There are many people now waiting to be told what they are to think. It is on the diffusion of the spirit of Greek art, too, that the best hopes for European art in the future must rest. To an intelligent understanding of that spirit we must look for a deliverance from the petty prettiness of our toys and the smart vulgarity of our galleries; and it is just such an understanding that Mr. Gardner's book is fit to bring about. Of works upon the subject, small in compass, yet scientific and well-illustrated, there has hitherto been no great choice. The section on sculpture in M. Collignon's clever little Archéologie Grecque is too small to carry the reader far; and it was published earlier than that wonderful series of discoveries on the Athenian Acropolis (1886 sq.), which, as Mr. Gardner says, has "made Athens the centre of the study of early Greek art," and "the Attic school of sculpture the most prominent in a history where it was before represented only by a few isolated examples." The Manual of Ancient Sculpture, by M. Paris, well translated as it is by Miss Harrison, is too short and simple to really lay the foundations of a scientific knowledge. Mr. Gardner has contrived to hit the right mean between bulk and sketchiness. He seems to have learned just the best part of the German method of exposition. He is logical and builds up upon system, but he is not cumbersome and his sentences all tell. If the second part or volume draws an equally firm and clear outline of the rest of the subject, he will have enriched English readers by a useful and much-needed work. Vol. i. contains the introduction and a history of Greek sculpture down to the time of Phidias, the introduction dealing with the sources of our knowledge, and with the materials and processes of the sculptor. Vol. ii. is to comprise the rest of the fifth century, the fourth century, Hellenistic sculpture, and Greco-Roman sculpture. As a theorist Mr. Gardner is, if not actually conservative, at least very cautious; and rightly so. Handbooks are not the place for theories yet greatly in doubt; and Prof. Furtwangler's combination of the Bologna head with the Dresden statue, though it gives us a whole of great beauty, must not be too hurriedly referred to the famous Lemnian Athena of Phidias. The publishers are to be congratulated on the excellent illustrations to the book. The drawing of the Discobolos (p. 237) is brought up to date by having the head turned in what is now known to be the right way. On p. 228, in the representation of Hercules and Atlas from the metopes of Olympia, the face of Hercules is made to bear a sort of "archaic smile," which we cannot find in a cast taken from the metope. We could have wished for an illustration of the "Niobe" of Mt. Sipylus, all the more because that given by MM. Perrot and Chipiez (History of Art in Sardina, &c.) is of no great use. (Indeed, the best known to us is the small sketch in the Illustrated London News, January 31, 1880). But we must not be greedy. The fare before us is abundant enough and excellent.

LETTER FROM EGYPT.

Cairo: April 18, 1896.

PROF. FLINDERS PETRIE, in his letter to the ACADEMY of April 11, notices that one of the temples discovered by him this winter must have been built by Queen Ta-Useret, the last sovereign of the XIXth Dynasty, though "the form of the name is new." That he is right in the identification is made clear by some scarabs published by Dorow & Klaproth from Palin's Collection (Collection d'Antiquités égyptiennes, Paris, 1829), Pl. xxvii. Nos. 1493, 1494, and 1497, which read Useret-sotep-n-Mât. So long as Ta-Useret reigned alone, like Hathepau, she adopted the style of a male sovereign, and her cartouche was accordingly assimilated to that of Ramses II.

One of the pyramids at Lisht may now be considered definitely to have been the tomb of Useratesen I. The discovery of the beautiful white limestone statues of that monarch made there last year by M. Gautier has been followed this winter by the discovery of the finest and most perfect Egyptian altar in existence. It is of black granite, of very large size, and exquisitely sculptured with dedications to the Ka of Useratesen I. One more addition has thus been made to our knowledge of the history of the pyramids.

At Hau (Diospolis Parva) blocks of stone have been found in the rubbish mounds near the river with the cartouches of Ptolemy X. and Hadrian. Ptolemy X. must, therefore, have restored the temple there.

Captain Lyons has just returned to Cairo, having concluded his excavations at Philae. His latest discovery has been that of the temple of Har-nez-istef, to the north of Hadrian's chapel. Its stones had been carried away to build the Coptic Church of St. Mary. This discovery completes the number of temples known to have once stood on the island.

I hear that the remains of a temple and stones bearing the name of Shishak I. have been found at Tel el-Hamrâwi, near the station of Râs el-Khalig, north of Mansûra.

The Coptic community has consented to allow its ancient churches, including those at Old Cairo, to be placed under the care of the Committee for the Protection of Mediaeval Art, and two Coptic members have accordingly been added to the committee.

A. H. SAYCE.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

In addition to the Royal Academy, the following exhibitions will open next week: a collection of English and Dutch pictures, at Messrs. P. & D. Colnaghi & Co.'s, Pall Mall East; water-colour drawings of Japan, by Miss M. R. Hill Burton, at the Clifford Galleries, Haymarket; and a collection of old embroideries and brocades—mainly Spanish, Italian, French, and Polish ecclesiastical work of the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries—at Messrs. Debenham & Freebody's, Wigmore-street. The catalogue of this last exhibition, which Messrs. Debenham & Freebody have had compiled by an expert, contains an introduction, giving an interesting account of the development and historical importance of the handicraft. It is, perhaps, not beneath our notice that it has been very handsomely printed.

MR. W. F. YEAMES, R.A., has been appointed curator of the Painted Hall of the Royal Hospital, Greenwich, in succession to the late W. W. May.

THE annual general meeting of the Royal Institute of British Architects will be held on Monday next, at 9, Conduit-street.

At the Royal Institution, on Thursday next, Mr. W. Gowland, formerly of the Imperial Japanese Mint, will begin a course of three lectures on "The Art of Working Metals in Japan."

At the meeting of the Society for promoting Hellenic Studies, to be held at 22, Albemarle-street on Monday next at 5 p.m., Mr. Talfourd Ely will read a paper on "Recently Discovered Paintings at Pompeii."

At the meeting of the Anglo-Russian Literary Society, to be held at the Imperial Institute on Tuesday next at 3 p.m., Mr. E. A. Brayley Hodggets will read a paper on "The Tretiakoff Gallery of Pictures and Moscow."

MESSRS. CASSELL & Co.'s fourteenth annual black and white exhibition will be held (by permission of the Court of the Cutlers' Company) at the Cutlers' Hall, Warwick-lane, E.C., from May 28 to June 12. Drawings by Sir J. D. Linton, Messrs. J. MacWhirter, F. Dicksee, W. L. Wyllie, H. M. and W. Paget, the late O. Burton Barber, and many other artists will be on view.

At the annual general meeting of the Hampstead Art Society Sir J. E. Millais was elected an honorary member in place of the late Lord Leighton, Mr. Brodie Hoare, M.P., was elected president, and Mr. Henry Woods was also made an honorary member. The summer exhibition will be held at the Conservatoire, Eton-avenue, Swiss Cottage. The receiving day is May 16, when a special meeting of the council will be held for the election of artist members.

MESSRS. CASSELL & Co. are about to issue a cheap edition (at less than one-fourth the original price) of Prof. Eber's Egypt: Descriptive, Historical, and Picturesque, with 800 illustrations. Part 1 will be published on May 27.

ON Tuesday next Messrs. Sotheby will offer for sale—together with a number of military medals, &c.—the King's colours formerly belonging to the 72nd Regiment, now the Seaforth Highlanders. This very week also comes the announcement that the officers of another regiment have purchased their old colours, which were recently put up to auction by a grandson of a former colonel. We believe that, about a century ago, it was the custom to burn the old flags when new ones were presented.

ON Monday next will be sold at Paris the collection of pictures belonging to the late M. Lefebvre, of Roubaix, which includes Millet's "La Triotouse," three important Corots, and examples of Greuze, Van Goyen, Fromentin, Delacroix, Meissonier, Diaz, and Jules Dupré.

THE STAGE.

STAGE NOTES.

THE two most important of recent productions at the theatre—though they are two that would not habitually be classed together—are Mr. Henry Arthur Jones's skilful "Rogue's Comedy" at the Garrick, with an important part for Mr. Willard, and telling little ones for other people; and the new musical piece which it has pleased Mr. George Edwardes to bring out at Daly's, "The Geisha," which deals with the adventures of certain English visitors to a free-and-easy Japanese tea-house. At the Shaftesbury, the days of Mr. Stuart Ogilvie's somewhat ambitious piece were very speedily numbered. The Criterion has a piece in rehearsal, but, at this present writing, it has not yet been produced. Of one or other of these things we may have a little more to say another day. And, meanwhile, it may suffice to remind our readers that the interesting experiment of "Romeo and Juliet," with the star-crossed lovers acted by two young ladies—Miss Esmé Beringer as Romeo, and Miss Vera Beringer as Juliet (so it seems, but, remembering Lord Fauntleroy, the parts, it seems to us, might have been reversed)—is to be made at a matinee held before many days are over. The Miss Beringers are both so clever and attractive that the experiment has a considerable chance of success.

One day last week, at the smaller Queen's Hall, we heard Miss Fay Davis give publicly certain of those recitations, which have "caught on" so at large private parties, and which, hereafter, she will repeat in public two or three times. The attendance, naturally, was "smart" and influential; and Miss Fay Davis was listened to with very close attention—which is more, so far as our own experience, than it is possible always to secure for even the most favourite artist in a private drawing-room. That Miss Fay Davis is comely to behold, is distinctly to her advantage, and to ours. But she is much more than comely. She has the interest of excellent all-round intelligence; and this intelligence, seconded by excellent physical means, permits her a range open to few people who recite. If her comedy is telling, her pathos is delicate: that is to say, she possesses not exactly inspiration perhaps, but genuine art. Her performances will, on the whole, deserve the vogue which they are certain to secure.

"Qui a bu, boira," says the French proverb—and we have been again to the music hall. This time it was chiefly for the purpose of hearing the latest and perhaps youngest, and certainly not least able and enjoyable, of givers of "imitations"—the gifted ladies who substitute a mental "quick-change" for a merely material one, and are at one moment Letty Lind and at another Lottie Collins. Miss Marie Dainton is the music-hall artist in this genre whom we have last seen. Not only are her imitations very skilful, she has distinct individual charm, a rich, full voice, and, apparently, excellent spirits. Certainly she is to be watched; and she may do something of her own before long, and, if she does, it is likely to have character in it. Meantime, Miss Marie Dainton is excellent as Letty Lind, and her imitation of the "spasm" of Lottie Collins—there is no other word for it—when Lottie Collins is possessed of the seven devils of her music-hall energy, is as vivid and forcible as it can possibly be. Miss Marie Dainton, we predict confidently, will be welcomed in many places which the ordinary "artist" of "the halls" can scarcely hope to reach.

MUSIC.

RECENT CONCERTS.

THE Bristol Royal Orpheus Glee Society gave a concert last Friday week at St. James's Hall. When the members last visited London they won golden opinions, and they have again fully maintained their reputation. There is no need to enter into detail: the programme included familiar glees and part-songs. Mr. George Risely, the conductor of the society, may well be proud of his men, while they may be proud of such a general. The ensemble is perfect, the attention to lights and shades excellent; the fortes vigorous, and the pianos most delicate. The evening was altogether most enjoyable. Miss Esther Palliser and Mr. Andrew Black, by their excellent singing, added to the success of the concert.

MR. MOTTL gave his first concert at Queen's Hall on Tuesday evening; and the chief feature of interest was, undoubtedly, the performance of Beethoven's Pianoforte Concerto in E flat, by Mr. Eugen d'Albert. Fifteen years have passed since the pianist, a youth in his teens, left England, after having given wonderful promise as both executant and composer. We have read of his successes in Germany as a pianist and of his chequered career as a composer; it was, indeed, only last year that we heard him at the Cologne Festival, and bore testimony to his great artistic gifts. The rendering of the Concerto on Tuesday was interesting: intellectual and emotional power and fine technique were displayed, and yet it was not ideal. An instrument not in perfect tune either with itself or with the orchestra proved somewhat distressing; while, as regards the performer, a certain inward excitement, of which the outward signs were occasional hardness of touch and note imperfection, interfered with the calm dignity of the music. Mr. d'Albert, however, commences a series of recitals on Friday, and then, we believe, he will create a far stronger impression. On Tuesday he played for an encore a transcription of an Organ Prelude and Fugue in D by Bach, and fully satisfied the audience that in the matter of technique he could vie with the best. Such transcriptions, judged from an art point of view, are altogether unsatisfactory; but, as an executive display, Mr. d'Albert's performance was little short of marvellous. Nothing that skill and energy could do was wanting; but the fingers even of a Liszt could not give organ tone-colour to the pianoforte.

The performance of the Pastoral Symphony was unequal. In the first movement Mr. Mottl was too demonstrative: sharp contrasts and a certain formality interfered with the poetry of the music. The slow movement, on the other hand, was beautifully played; the conductor seemed to be one with, rather than over, the orchestra. The "Tannhäuser" Overture, with the "Venusberg" music written for Paris, was given. The "Venusberg" music, at first so intense, and afterwards so subdued, creates in the concert-room a strange impression. One feels that there is meaning in the powerful sounds; but the stage, with its constantly moving figures—the key, in fact, to unravel that meaning—is missing. It is strange that conductors like Richter and Mottl should care to present this music in the concert-room—a presentation, at any rate, quite at variance with the teachings of Wagner. The "Vorspiel" to "Parsifal," and that to "Die Meistersinger," completed the scheme, which was scarcely arranged in the best of ways, and moreover, contained nothing new. The desire for novelty may degenerate into a craze; but Mr. Mottl is known to be a man of catholic and progressive tastes, and one almost expects him to introduce something new into his programmes.

MISS MURIEL ELLIOT, a pianist trained by Miss A. Clinton, gave an orchestral concert at St. James's Hall on Wednesday evening. The programme included no less than three Pianoforte Concertos. In Beethoven's No. 5 in C minor and Schumann's in A minor the young lady, though she played correctly and intelligently, did not catch the true spirit of the music: one missed the nobility and humour of the former, the romantic character of the latter. The third Concerto by Herr Stavenhagen, who ably presided at the conductor's desk, was, however, interpreted with marked feeling, while the virtuosic passages were executed in brilliant manner. The work itself, played in London last season at a Philharmonic Concert, is one of considerable merit. There are some curious reminiscences of Wagner; but the music shows individuality, and the scoring talent. Miss Elliot may be congratulated on having made a successful début.

J. S. SHEDLOCK.

MUSIC NOTES.

AT the Royal Institution, on Saturday next, Mr. F. Corder, curator of the Royal Academy of Music, will deliver the first of a course of lectures on "Three Emotional Composers—Berlioz, Wagner, Liszt," with musical illustrations.

A FORGOTTEN OXFORD MOVEMENT,
BY SIR W. W. HUNTER.

See the MAY NUMBER of

THE FORTNIGHTLY REVIEW,

which also contains

TWO ARTICLES ON SOUTH AFRICA.

THE THEORY OF THE LUDICIOUS, BY
W. S. LILLY.

THREE ARTICLES ON NATIONAL EDUCATION.

CZAR AND EMPEROR, BY CARL BLIND.
TORIES OR OPPORTUNISTS?

THE INTEGRATION OF THE EMPIRE.

THE WOMEN OF GEORGE MEREDITH.

THE EGYPTIAN ADVANCE, BY MAJOR
GRIFFITHS.

AND OTHER ARTICLES.

JOHN OLIVER HOBBS'S NEW NOVEL
is continued in

CHAPMAN'S MAGAZINE FOR MAY

which also contains

EIGHT COMPLETE STORIES BY

HENRY JAMES—W. L. ALDEN—
VIOLET HUNT—CLARA SAVILE CLARK—
F. C. PHILIPS—EDEN PHILLIPOTS—
J. A. BARRY—ROGER POCKOCK.* * * With the May issue "Chapman's Magazine" commences its second year.

W. E. GARRETT FISHER.

THE TRANSVAAL AND THE BOERS:

a Brief History. By W. E. GARRETT FISHER.
Crown 8vo, 6s. [Just ready.]

COUNT LUTZOW.

BOHEMIA: an Historical Sketch. By

Count LUTZOW, formerly Deputy for Bohemia in the Austrian Parliament. With Maps, crown 8vo, 9s. [Just ready.]

"MADGE," OF TRUTH.

COOKERY UP TO DATE. By Mrs.

HUMPHRY ("Madge," of Truth). Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.
[Just ready.]

LONDON: CHAPMAN &amp; HALL, LIMITED.

THE GEOGRAPHICAL JOURNAL.

CONTENTS.—MAY.—2s.

A JOURNEY ACROSS THIBET, FROM NORTH TO SOUTH, AND WEST TO LADAK. By Sir GEORGE R. LITTLEDALE.THE SOUTHERN ALPS OF NEW ZEALAND. By EDWARD A.
FISCHER.CRUISE OF THE "BALIENA" and the "ACTIVE" in the ANTARCTIC.—I. The "Baliena." By WILLIAM B. BRUCE.AN EXCURSION IN OMAN, IN SOUTH-EAST ARABIA. By Colonel S. B. MILES.DR. JOHN MURRAY on the MARINE FAUNA OF THE KER-GUELEN REGION.THE UPPER KUYUNI, BRITISH GUIANA. By Lieut. GODFREY
FAIRBANKS, R.E.THE USE OF BALLOONS in GEOGRAPHICAL WORK. By A. BERNARD.THE MONTHLY RECORD.
CORRESPONDENCE.—By W. M. DAVIS. Makran. By GEORGE N.
GUNSON.

OBITUARY.—The Rev. HORACE WALLER.

MEETINGS OF THE ROYAL GEOGRAPHICAL SOCIETY.
SESSION 1895-1896.GEOGRAPHICAL LITERATURE OF THE MONTH.
NEW MAPS.Numerous Maps and Illustrations, including Maps to illustrate Mr. Littledale's Journeys in Thibet, and a New Map of the Upper Kuyuni, British Guiana.

EDWARD STANFORD, 26 and 27, Cockspur Street, S.W.

THE WESTMINSTER REVIEW.—

Now ready, Number for MAY, 1896 (73rd Year), 2s. 6d.—CONTENTS:
I. THE TRIUMPH OF SUNDAY OPENING, by BRONARD
DEWEY.—2. SUNDAY OPENING: Appeal to Government, with Signatures, facsimile.—3. THE PRESENT SITUATION OF SUNDAY OPENING, by the Bishop of Winchester, Canon
BARNETT, Lord HONOURABLE, George JACOB HOLYOAKE, MARK H.
JUDOR, and Twelve other Articles.

FREDERICK WARNE &amp; Co., 15, Bedford Row, Strand.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY

Invite the attention of Artists and others to theirPERMANENT PROCESSES OF PHOTOGRAPHIC REPRODUCTION,combining great range of tone effect with accurate monochrome representation and artistic expression.THE AUTOTYPE SOLAR OR CARBON PROCESSfor the reproduction in permanent pigments of oil paintings, drawings, in water-colour, pencil, crayon,
Indian ink, &c.

AUTO-GRVURE.

The Autotype Company's Process of Photographic
Engraving on Copper, yielding results resembling mezzotint engravings.The Company has successfully reproduced several important works by this process, including Portraits
by Sir J. E. Millais, P.R.A., J. Pettie, R.A., W. W.
Oulless, R.A., F. Holl, R.A., The Hon. Jno. Collier, Sir
G. Reid, P.R.S.A.; also examples of Gainsborough,
Turner, Constable, Schmalz, Douglas, Draper, &c., &c.THE AUTOTYPE MECHANICAL PROCESS (Sawyer's Collotype)for Book Illustrations of the highest class. Adopted by the Trustees of the British Museum, many of the Learned Societies, and the leading Publishers.Examples of work may be seen, and terms and prices obtained atTHE AUTOTYPE FINE ART GALLERY,
74, NEW OXFORD STREET,
LONDON.MESSRS. J. C. DRUMMOND & CO.,
ART REPRODUCERS,

14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C.

Are the sole representatives in Great Britain of

HERR HANFSTAENGL of Munich.

the well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAPHY now patronised by the leading London Art Publishing Firms. A large Collection of Important Plates always on viewProcess Blocks for the purpose of Ordinary Book Illustrations.Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. supply the cheapest and best Processes in the market, which are specially adapted to meet the wants of Antiquarians, Archaeologists, and those engaged in the investigation and publication of Pictorial and Diocesan Records.J. C. DRUMMOND & CO. invite attention to their Improved Rapid Photo-Mechanical ProcessFor the Reproduction of Works of Art, Original MSS., Designs, Landscape Manufactures, Photographs, Views, Book Illustrations,
Artistic Advertisements, Catalogues, &c., &c., at a moderate cost.

Specimens and price list on Application.

Offices: 14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, LONDON

BREAKFAST—SUPPER.

E P P S'S
GRATEFUL—COMFORTING.
C O C O A.

BOILING WATER OR MILK.

People's Edition, price 6d., with Portrait. (Special terms for quantities.)JOSEPH MAZZINI: a Memoir by E. A. V., with Two Essays by MAZZINI: "THOUGHTS ON DEMOCRACY" and "THE DUTIES OF MAN.""In its new form it should have thousands of new readers."—Weekly Dispatch.

London: ALEXANDER &amp; SHEPHEARD, Farnival Street, E.C.

MACMILLAN & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

THREE NEW NOVELS.

THE SUCCESSFUL ROMANTIC STORY BY A NEW WRITER.

THE COURTSHIP of MORRICE BUCKLER: a Romance. By

A. K. W. MASON, Author of "A Romance of Wastdale." Crown 8vo, 6s.
PUNCH.—"Readers will, unless gratitude be extinct, thank me for my strong recommendation as to the excellent entertainment provided for them in 'The Courtship of Morrice Buckler.'"

NEW NOVEL BY F. MARION CRAWFORD.

ADAM JOHNSTONE'S SON. By F. Marion Crawford. Crown 8vo, 6s.

NEW NOVEL BY SARA JEANNETTE DUNCAN.

HIS HONOR and a LADY. By Sara Jeannette Duncan.

Illustrated by A. D. M'CORMICK. Crown 8vo, 6s.
PALL MALL GAZETTE.—"This is a fascinating story of Anglo-Indian life, accurate in detail and true to nature. The authoress has not only maintained the high standard of her 'Simple Adventures of a New-Sahib,' but surpassed it. This is praise, but truth."

ILLUSTRATED STANDARD NOVELS.—New Volume.

HANDY ANDY: a Tale of Irish Life. By Samuel Lover.

Illustrated by H. M. BROCK. With an Introduction by CHARLES WHIBLEY. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

FOREIGN STATESMEN SERIES.

Edited by Professor BURY.

RICHELIEU. By Richard Lodge, M.A., formerly Fellow and

Tutor of Brasenose College, Oxford, Professor of History in the University of Glasgow. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

Fourth Thousand.—8vo, 30s. net.

THE LIFE of CARDINAL MANNING, Archbishop of Westminster. By EDMUND SHERIDAN PURCELL. In 2 vols. With Portraits.

Extra crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

RIVERSIDE LETTERS: a Continuation of "Letters to Marco." By GEORGE D. LESLIE, R.A. With Illustrations by the Author.

EVERSLEY SERIES.—New Volumes.

THE POETICAL WORKS of WILLIAM WORDSWORTH.

Edited by WILLIAM KNIGHT. To be completed in 16 volumes. Vols. I., II., and III. Globe 8vo, 6s. each.
GLOBE.—"There appears to be no doubt that, when finished, this issue of the works of Wordsworth will, for fulness and accuracy, hold the field."

HISTORY of the ENGLISH PEOPLE. By J. R. Green. Vol. VI.

PURITAN ENGLAND, 1642-1660; THE REVOLUTION, 1660-1688. Globe 8vo, 6s. To be completed in 8 vols.

16mo, cloth, 1s. net; Persian, 1s. 6d. net each volume.

TENNYSON'S POEMS. The People's Edition. Vols. XIII. and XIV. IDYLLS of the KING. Parts II. and III.

Globe 8vo, 7s. 6d.

POEMS. By Cecil Frances Alexander (C. F. A.). Edited, with a Preface, by WILLIAM ALEXANDER, D.D. Oxon., LL.D. Dublin, D.C.L. Oxon., Archbishop of Armagh, and Lord Primate of All Ireland.

In 2 vols., demy 8vo, 21s. net.

A HISTORY of the WARFARE of SCIENCE with THEOLOGY in CHRISTENDOM. By ANDREW DICKSON WHITE, late President and Professor of History at Cornell University.

Royal 8vo, 1s. net.

A HISTORY of MANKIND. By Professor Friedrich Ratzel.

Translated from the Second German Edition by A. J. BUTLER, M.A. With a Preface by E. B. TYLOR, D.C.L. Part VIII. (to be completed in 30 Monthly Parts). Illustrated.

MACMILLAN'S MAGAZINE.—May, 1896.

Price 1s.—CONTENTS.

- |   |                               |
|---|-------------------------------|
| 1. THE SECRET of SAINT FLOREL. Chapters I.-III. | 6. THE LIVING of EAST WISPER. |
| 2. THE NEW MOSAICS at SAINT PAUL'S.             | 7. THE CENTENARY of OSSIAN.   |
| 3. NEWFOUNDLAND.                                | 8. THE SPANISH MAIN.          |
| 4. THE OLD PACKET SERVICE.                      | 9. THOMAS HUGHES.             |
| 5. MARY STUART at SAINT GERMAINS.               |                               |

THE CENTURY MAGAZINE.—Illustrated—Price 1s. 4d.

The following are the Leading Features of the MAY NUMBER:—

THE CROWNING of a CZAR. Journal of an Eye-witness of the Coronation of Alexander III. By MARY GRACE THORNTON. With 9 Illustrations from the Official Record and 2 Portraits.
 IMPRESSIONS of SOUTH AFRICA.—I. By JAMES BYRNE. With Map by J. Hart.
 IN BOHEMIA with DU MAURIER. Recollections of Artist Life in the Fifties. By FELIX MOSCHERLES. With 17 Sketches by George Du Maurier.
 GEORGE TRESSADY.—VII. By Mrs. HUMPHRY WARD.
 And Numerous Other Stories and Articles of General Interest.

THE ST. NICHOLAS MAGAZINE for MAY, Illustrated, price 1s.,

contains, beside many Stories and Articles, THE PRIZE CUP, by J. T. TROWBRIDGE (concluded)—THE SWORD-MAKER'S SON, by WILLIAM O. STODDARD (continued)—SINDBAD, SMITH & CO., by ALBERT STEARNS (continued)—HIS FATHER'S PRICE, by JOHN BENNETT—THE PORCUPINE, by JOHN BUNROUGHS—THE CHILDREN of CHINATOWN in SAN FRANCISCO, by THEODORE WOODS.

THE AMERICAN HISTORICAL REVIEW.

Vol. I., No. 3.—APRIL, 1896.—Price 3s. 6d. net.

THE BATTLE of BUNKER HILL. By CHARLES FRANCIS ADAMS.
 THE BOHUN WILLS. By MELVILLE M. BIGLOW.
 VIRGINIA and the QUEBEC BILL. By JUSTIN WINSON.
 THE CASE of JOSIAH PHILIPS. By WILLIAM P. TRENT.
 LIGHT on the UNDERGROUND RAILROAD. By WILBUR H. SIEBERT. (With Map.)
 THE FIRST SIX WEEKS of McCLELLAN'S PENINSULAR CAMPAIGN. By JAMES FORD RHODES.
 RECENT MEMOIRS of the FRENCH DIRECTORY. By H. MORSE STEPHENS.
 DOCUMENTS—REVIEWS of BOOKS—NOTES and NEWS.

MACMILLAN & CO., LIMITED, LONDON.

Mr. WM. HEINEMANN has pleasure in announcing that on Wednesday, May 6, he will publish

THE PAGET PAPERS,

DIPLOMATIC AND OTHER CORRESPONDENCE OF

The Rt. Hon. Sir ARTHUR PAGET, G.C.B., 1791-1807. With two Appendices, 1808 and 1821-1829,

ARRANGED AND EDITED BY HIS SON,

The Rt. Hon. Sir AUGUSTUS PAGET, G.C.B.,

Late H.M. Ambassador at Vienna,

WITH NOTES BY MRS. J. R. GREEN.

In Two Volumes, demy 8vo., with numerous Portraits, 32s. net.

These volumes deal with the earlier Napoleonic Wars, and throw a new light on almost every phase of that most vital period of European history. They are the Despatches of one of His Britannic Majesty's Envoy-Plenipotentiaries at different European Courts during that period, and are unique probably as the account of an hostile eye-witness of the Campaign, which has so persistently been described from the side of the victorious intruder. "The Paget Papers" explain much that has been unexplained so far, of the complicated policy of that time of shifting alliances, and especially the attitude of the lesser Courts. The policy of Prussia between Holland and Poland, the attitude of Bavaria, the temper of the Neapolitan Kingdom, were all brought under Sir Arthur Paget's notice in his successive embassies from 1792 to 1800. After the peace of Amiens he watched from the Court of Vienna the building up of the Third Coalition, and was with the Emperor during the campaign of Austerlitz; while his final mission carried him to the Dardanelles, where, curiously enough, the same political play was then being gone through as has been witnessed there quite recently. The volumes are Edited by Sir Arthur Paget's son, the Rt. Hon. Sir Augustus Paget, G.C.B., late Her Majesty's Ambassador at Vienna, and illustrated with numerous Portraits of the chief contemporary figures of the time.

Early application for this important work is necessary, as nearly the whole of the First Edition is already exhausted.

LONDON: WILLIAM HEINEMANN,
21, BEDFORD STREET, W.C.

EFFINGHAM WILSON'S LIST.

Just published, crown 8vo, price 6s. net.

HANDY GUIDE to PATENT LAW and PRACTICE.

By G. F. EMERY, LL.M.

"Well conceived and carefully executed."—Manchester Guardian.
 "Will be found useful for study and reference in the offices of patent agents and of solicitors with practice in that field of litigation."
Solicitor.

Price 10s. 6d. net.

DIAGRAM for CALCULATING the YIELD on REDEEMABLE STOCKS.

By A. A. BOOTH and M. A. GRAINGER.

By means of a small ruler and a table of lines the true yield on a stock or bond purchased above par can be obtained at once without calculation of any kind.

Demy 8vo, price 6s. net.

LAW RELATING to LITERARY COPYRIGHT and the AUTHORSHIP and PUBLICATION of BOOKS.

By DANIEL CHAMIER, of the Inner Temple.

"The work may be conscientiously recommended to any one requiring a cheap and trustworthy guide on the subject."—Athenaeum.
 "The book will be found extremely useful by authors."
Whitchell Review.

"Deserves a welcome from those who are concerned with the question dealt with."—Morning Post.

SECOND EDITION, REVISED AND ENLARGED.

Just published, demy 8vo, price 6s. net.

THE SCIENCE of MONEY.

By ALEX. DEL MAR.

"Mr. Del Mar will find no lack of supporters in the views he upholds... a storehouse of reference... recommended both to student and master."—Glasgow Herald.

"Mr. Del Mar has the faculty of dealing with a subject, generally regarded as intricate and unattractive, in a lucid and rightly interesting manner, and those who desire a knowledge of the scientific aspect of money cannot do better than acquire it from this able treatise."
Liverpool Courier.

Crown 8vo, price 2s. net.

A SKETCH of the CURRENCY QUESTION.

By CLIVE CUTHBERTSON, B.A.

EFFINGHAM WILSON, 11, Royal Exchange, E.C.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 1253.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, MAY 9, 1896.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

SOCIETY FOR PROMOTING CHRISTIAN KNOWLEDGE.

THE DAWN of CIVILIZATION (EGYPT and CHALDEA). New and Revised Edition. By

Professor MASPERO. Edited by the Rev. Professor SAYCE. Translated by M. L. MCCLURE. With Map and over 470 Illustrations, including 3 Coloured Plates. Demy 4to (approximately), cloth, bevelled boards, 2s.

Professor Maspero, by using the result of the most recent researches in Egypt and Mesopotamia, has brought this New Edition up to the latest date.

BEAUTIFUL BRITAIN: the Scenery and Splendours of the United Kingdom. Specially approved

by Her Majesty Queen Victoria. Consisting of 106 Photo Reproductions of the most noteworthy scenes in these Islands, with accompanying Text. This is an Edition de Luxe, and is beautifully got up. Large 4to, £1 1s.

THE CONVERSION of the HEPTARCHY. By the Right

Rev. G. F. BROWNE, B.D., Bishop of Stepney. Small post 8vo, with several Illustrations, cloth boards, 3s.

TRACES of GREEK PHILOSOPHY and ROMAN LAW

in the NEW TESTAMENT. By the Rev. EDWARD HICKS, D.D., D.C.L. Small post 8vo, cloth boards, 3s.

SERMONS on the PENTATEUCH. By the late Very Rev.

ROBERT PAYNE SMITH, Dean of Canterbury. With a Memoir of the Author by M. PAYNE SMITH. Small post 8vo, cloth boards, 3s. 6d.

CHURCH HISTORY in QUEEN VICTORIA'S REIGN.

By the Rev. MONTAGUE FOWLER, M.A., Chaplain to the Archbishop of Canterbury. Small post 8vo, cloth boards, 3s.

AUTHORSHIP of DEUTERONOMY, The. Second Edition, with brief Notice of Dr. Driver's Commentary. By Sir WILLIAM MUIR, K.C.S.I., LL.D., D.C.L., Ph.D. (Bonon). Small post 8vo, paper cover, 4d.; limp cloth, 6d.

THE CONTINUITY of the HOLY CATHOLIC CHURCH

in ENGLAND. By the Right Rev. G. F. BROWNE, B.D., Bishop of Stepney. Small post 8vo, paper cover, 4d.

ANCIENT HISTORY from the MONUMENTS.—The HIS-

TORY of BABYLONIA. By the late GEORGE SMITH. Edited and brought up to date by the Rev. Professor A. H. SAYCE. Fcap. 8vo, cloth boards, 2s.

THE DAWN of EUROPEAN LITERATURE.—The GREEK

EPIQ. By Professor G. C. WARR. With Map. Fcap. 8vo, cloth boards, 3s. LIBRARY EDITION, for School Prizes, &c. Crown 8vo, on Hand-made paper, top edges gilt, buckram boards, 5s.; calf, 7s. 6d.

CHIEF ANCIENT PHILOSOPHIES.—PLATONISM. By

the Rev. T. B. STRONG, M.A., Christ Church, Oxford. Fcap. 8vo, cloth boards, 3s.

CHIEF ANCIENT PHILOSOPHIES.—NEOPLATONISM.

By the Rev. C. BIGG, D.D., Christ Church, Oxford. Fcap. 8vo, cloth boards, 3s.

AUGUSTINE and his COMPANIONS. By the Right Rev.

G. F. BROWNE, B.D., D.C.L., Bishop of Stepney. Small post 8vo, cloth boards, 2s.

ENGLAND'S MISSION to INDIA. Some Impressions

from a Recent Visit. By the Right Rev. ALFRED BARRY, D.D., D.C.L. Small post 8vo, cloth boards, 3s.

PATRIARCHAL PALESTINE. By the Rev. A. H. Sayce,

Professor of Assyriology, Oxford. Crown 8vo, with Map, buckram boards, 4s.

[This book is the first to apply the Tel-el-Amarna Tablets, both published and unpublished, towards elucidating the condition of Syria at this period. It also contains a recent and important revision of the Egyptian Geographical Lists bearing on Palestine.]

THE "HIGHER CRITICISM" and the VERDICT of the MONUMENTS. By the Rev. Professor SAYCE, Queen's College, Oxford. Fifth Edition. Demy 8vo, buckram, bevelled boards, 7s. 6d.

"A really valuable and important work; perhaps the best which Professor Sayce has yet written."—Academy.

VERSES. By Christina G. Rossetti. Reprinted from

"Called to be Saints," "Time Flies," and "The Face of the Deep." Small post 8vo, printed in red and black on hand made paper, cloth boards, 3s. 6d.; limp roan, 5s.; levantine, 6s. 6d.; limp German calf, 7s.; limp morocco, 7s. 6d.

CALLED to be SAINTS. The Minor Festivals Devotionally Studied. By CHRISTINA G. ROSSETTI. Crown 8vo, Reprint on Hand-

made paper, top edge gilt, buckram boards, 5s.

THE FACE of the DEEP. A Devotional Commentary on the Apocalypse. By CHRISTINA G. ROSSETTI, Author of "Time Flies," &c. Demy 8vo, cloth boards, 7s. 6d.

A MEMOIR of CHRISTINA G. ROSSETTI. By Ellen A.

PROCTOR. With Portrait. 18mo, limp cloth, 6d.

ART PICTURES from the OLD TESTAMENT: Sunday

Readings for the Young. A Series of Ninety Illustrations from Original Drawings by Sir F. LEIGHTON, Bart., P.R.A.; Sir E. BURNE-JONES, Bart.; E. J. POYNTER, R.A.; G. F. WATTS, R.A.; E. ARMYTAGE, R.A.; F. MADOX BROWN; R. SOLOMON; HOLMAN HUNT, &c. With Letterpress Descriptions by ALEY FOX. Small 4to, cloth boards, 6s.

WORKS BY

THE LATE MRS. RUNDLE CHARLES

Author of "The Chronicles of the Schünberg-Cotta Family."

ECCE HOMO, ECCE REX. Pages from the Story of the Moral Conquests of Christianity. Small post 8vo, cloth boards, 3s. 6d.; buckram, 4s.

JOAN the MAID: Deliverer of England and France.

Demy 8vo, cloth boards, 3s. 6d.

ECCE ANCILLA DOMINI. Mary, the Mother of our Lord. Small post 8vo, printed in red and black, cloth boards, 2s.

ATTILA and HIS CONQUERORS. Crown 8vo, cloth boards, 3s. 6d.

SONGS, OLD and NEW. Demy 16mo, cloth boards, 3s.

THE BEATITUDES. Thoughts for All Saints' Day. Post

8vo, cloth boards, 1s. 6d.

"BY the MYSTERY of THY HOLY INCARNATION"

Post 8vo, cloth boards, 1s. 6d.

"BY THY CROSS and PASSION." Thoughts on the words spoken around and on the Cross. Post 8vo, cloth boards, 1s. 6d.

"BY THY GLORIOUS RESURRECTION and ASCEN-

SION." Easter Thoughts. Post 8vo, cloth boards, 1s. 6d.

"BY the COMING of the HOLY GHOST." Thoughts for Whitsuntide. Post 8vo, cloth boards, 1s. 6d.

THE TRUE VINE. Post 8vo, cloth boards, 1s. 6d.

THE GREAT PRAYER of CHRISTENDOM. Thoughts

on the Lord's Prayer. Post 8vo, cloth boards, 1s. 6d.

AN OLD STORY of BETHLEHEM. One Link in the great Pedigree. With Six Plates beautifully printed in colours. Fcap. 4to, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

THREE MARTYRS of the NINETEENTH CENTURY.

Studies from the Lives of Gordon, Livingstone, and Pattison. Crown 8vo, cloth boards, 3s. 6d.

MARTYRS and SAINTS of the FIRST TWELVE

CENTURIES. Studies from the Lives of the Black-Letter Saints of the English Calendar. Crown 8vo, cloth boards, 5s.

AGAINST the STREAM. The Story of an Heroic Age in England. With Eight Page Woodcuts. Crown 8vo, cloth boards, 4s.

CONQUERING and TO CONQUER. A Story of Rome in the Days of St. Jerome. Illustrated. Crown 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

EARLY CHRISTIAN MISSIONS of IRELAND, SCOT-

LAND, and ENGLAND. Crown 8vo, cloth boards, 4s.

LAPSED, NOT LOST. A Story of Roman Carthage.

Crown 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

WITHIN the VEIL. Studies in the Epistle to the Hebrews. Post 8vo, cloth boards, 1s. 6d.

THE BOOK of the UNVEILING. Studies in the Revelation of St. John the Divine. Post 8vo, cloth boards, 1s. 6d.

LADY AUGUSTA STANLEY. Reminiscences. 18mo,

limp cloth, 6d.

SKETCHES of the WOMEN of CHRISTENDOM. Crown

8vo, cloth boards, 3s. 6d.

THOUGHTS and CHARACTERS. Being Selections from the Writings of Mrs. Charles. Crown 8vo, cloth boards, 3s. 6d.

LONDON: NORTHUMBERLAND AVENUE, W.C.; 43, QUEEN VICTORIA STREET, E.C.
BRIGHTON: 123, NORTH STREET.

Digitized by Google

CHAPMAN &amp; HALL'S NEW BOOKS

W. E. GARRETT FISHER.
THE TRANSVAAL AND THE BOERS:
 A Brief History. By W. E. GARRETT FISHER.
 Crown 8vo, 6s. [Just ready.]

COUNT LUTZOW.
BOHEMIA: an Historical Sketch. By
 Count LUTZOW, formerly Deputy for Bohemia in the Austrian Parliament. With Maps. Demy 8vo, 9s. [Just ready.]

H. MARTYN KENNARD.
THE VEIL LIFTED: a New Light on the World's History. By H. MARTYN KENNARD.
 With Illustrations. Demy 8vo, 6s.

A FORGOTTEN OXFORD MOVEMENT.
 BY SIR W. W. HUNTER.

See the MAY NUMBER of
THE FORTNIGHTLY REVIEW
 which also contains

TWO ARTICLES ON SOUTH AFRICA.
 THE THEORY OF THE LUDICROUS, BY
 W. S. LILLY.
 THREE ARTICLES ON NATIONAL EDUCATION.
 CZAR AND EMPEROR, BY CARL BLIND.
 TORIES OR OPPORTUNISTS?
 THE INTEGRATION OF THE EMPIRE.
 THE WOMEN OF GEORGE MEREDITH.
 THE EGYPTIAN ADVANCE, BY MAJOR
 GRIFFITHS.
 AND OTHER ARTICLES.

JOHN OLIVER HOBBS'S NEW NOVEL
 is continued in

CHAPMAN'S MAGAZINE

For MAY,
 which also contains
EIGHT COMPLETE STORIES BY
 HENRY JAMES—W. L. ALDEN—
 VIOLET HUNT—CLARA SAVILE CLARK—
 F. C. PHILIPS—EDEN PHILLIPPS—
 J. A. BARRY—ROGER POCCOCK.
 * * * With the May issue "Chapman's Magazine" commences its second year.

LONDON: CHAPMAN & HALL, LIMITED.

EFFINGHAM WILSON'S LIST.

Just published, crown 8vo, price 6s. net.

HANDY GUIDE TO PATENT LAW and PRACTICE.

By G. F. EMERY, LL.M.
 "Well conceived and carefully executed."—Manchester Guardian.
 "Will be found useful for study and reference in the offices of patent agents and of solicitors with practice in that field of litigation."—Saturday Review.

Price 10s. 6d. net.

DIAGRAM for CALCULATING the YIELD on REDEEMABLE STOCKS.

By A. A. BOOTH and M. A. GRAINGER.
 By means of a small ruler and a table of lines the true yield on a stock or bond purchased above par can be obtained at once without calculation of any kind.

Demy 8vo, price 5s. net.

LAW RELATING to LITERARY COPY- RIGHT and the AUTHORSHIP and PUBLICATION of BOOKS.

By DANIEL CHAMIER, of the Inner Temple.
 "The work may be conscientiously recommended to any one requiring a cheap and trustworthy guide on the subject."—Athenaeum.
 "The book will be found extremely useful by authors."—Whitehall Review.
 "Deserves a welcome from those who are concerned with the question dealt with."—Morning Post.

SECOND EDITION, REVISED AND ENLARGED.

Just published, demy 8vo, price 6s. net.

THE SCIENCE of MONEY.

By ALEX. DEL MAR.
 "Mr. Del Mar will find no lack of supporters in the views he upholds
 .... a storehouse of references .... recommended both to student and master."—Glasgow Herald.
 "Mr. Del Mar has the faculty of dealing with a subject, generally regarded as intricate and unattractive, in a lucid and rightly interesting manner, and those who desire a knowledge of the scientific aspect of money cannot do better than acquire it from his able treatise."—Liverpool Courier.

Crown 8vo, price 2s. net.

A SKETCH of the CURRENCY QUESTION.

By CLIVE CUTHBERTSON, B.A.

EFFINGHAM WILSON, 11, Royal Exchange, E.C.

MR. T. FISHER UNWIN'S NEW BOOKS.

WITH INTRODUCTORY LETTER BY W. E. H. LECKY, M.P.
A LIFE SPENT FOR IRELAND.

Leaves from the Diary of W. J. O'NEIL DAUNT. With Portrait. Cloth, 21s.
 "A very amusing and absorbing book is this. Mr. Daunt's diary is full of good stories, mostly Irish. Mr. Daunt seems to have been in the habit of filling his diary with all the good things he heard in his peregrinations. The consequence is that it is full of entertainment for the reader."—Glasgow Herald.

SECOND EDITION IN PREPARATION.

THE COURTSHIPS of QUEEN

ELIZABETH: a History of the Various Negotiations for her Marriage. By MARTIN A. S. HUME, F.R.H.S. Portraits.
 Cloth, 12s.
 "A connected and consistent—though assuredly a most extraordinary—story. A fascinating picture."—Standard (leader).
 "Not content with having two strings to her bow, our great, glorious, and immortal Queen Elizabeth also had about two hundred beams to her string. Without a perusal of Mr. Hume's most researched and interesting volume no one, no student, even of French, can claim to have thoroughly grasped the character and aims of our good Queen Elizabeth."—Daily Chronicle.

THE COUNTRY of HORACE and

VIRGIL. By GASTON BOSSIER. Translated by D. HAV-
 LOCK FISHER. Maps. Cloth, 7s. 6d.
 "The English version of the book is all that could be desired, and the volume deserves a welcome as a valuable addition to the few extra-academic books in English likely to attract a general reader towards classical studies."—Saturday Review.

THE AFRICANDER: a Plain Tale of

Colonial Life. By E. CLAIRMONTE. Illustrated. Cloth, 6s.
 "Uncommonly good reading. There is plenty of rattle and nerve;
 and we are carried away by the fascination of the narrative."—Weekly Sun.

NEW NOVELS AT 6s. EACH.

In uniform cloth binding.

SECOND EDITION IN PREPARATION.

EFFIE HETHERINGTON. By Robert BUCHANAN.
 "The hero is almost as striking a figure as Heathfield in 'Wuthering Heights.'"—World.

CLARA HOPGOOD. By Mark RUTHERFORD.
 "Besides being a good writer, Mark Rutherford is 'rare,' he is curious; he has a much distinction, using that word in its plain first sense and in its a laudatory term, that there is no likening him to any of his contemporary brethren."—Pail Mail Gazette.

THE EBBING of the TIDE: South
 Sea Stories. By LOUIS BECKE.
 "The stories are a series of windows, through which we look into a new world, where every prospect pleases, and where the men and women, if often vile, are seldom or never uninteresting."—Saturday Review.

THE MAY NUMBER NOW READY.

COSMOPOLIS:

AN INTERNATIONAL
 MONTHLY REVIEW.

Price 2s. 6d.

Contents.

The Notary's Love Story	MAARTEN MAARTENS.
A Note on "Weir of Her- miston"	SIDNEY COLVIN.
Pierre Lafite	FREDERIC HARRISON.
The Safeguards of Peace Con- sidered	FREDERICK GREENWOOD.
Barthelemy St. Hilaire	Mrs. JANET ROSS.
Old Lombard and Venetian Villas (Suite et fin)	VENNON LEE.
Literary Chronicle	ANDREW LANG.
The Globe and the Island	HENRY NORMAN.

Voyageuses: I. Charite de Femme	PAUL BOURGET.
La Veritable Histoire de "Eile et Lui"	VICOMTE SPOELBERCH DE LOVENJOU.
Une Voix d'Alsace	"IGNOTISIMUS."
A Stamboul	EMILE GEBHARDT.
Chronique Littéraire	EMILE FAGUET.
Revue du Mois	F. DE PERAZZESI.

Fritschen (Drama in 1 Act) ... Die Selbständigkeit: eine Skizze aus dem inneren Leben des Deutschen Meeres	HERMANN SUDERHANN.
Das Bürgerliche Gesetzbuch in Deutschland	A. VON BOGUSLAWSKI.
Ausstellungen in Berlin	ALEXANDER MEYER.
Streifzüge durch Spanien	HERMAN HELFENICW.
Litterarische Chronik	SIGOPRIED SAMOSCH.
Politische Chronik	ANTON BETTELHEIM.
	"IGNOTUS."

LONDON:

T. FISHER UNWIN, PATERNOSTER SQUARE, E.C.

MACMILLAN &amp; CO.'S NEW BOOKS

Second Edition now ready.

THE COURTSHIP of MORRICE BUCKLER:

A Romance.

By A. F. W. MASON.
 Author of "A Romance of Wasdale."

PUNCH.—"Readers will, unless gratitude be extinct, thank me for my strong recommendation as to the excellent entertainment provided for them in 'The Courtship of Morrice Buckler.'"

NEW NOVEL BY F. MARION CRAWFORD.
ADAM JOHNSTONES SON. By
 F. MARION CRAWFORD. Crown 8vo, 6s.

DAILY NEWS.—"Mr. Crawford has written stories richer in incident and more powerful in intention, but we do not think that he has handled more deftly or shown a more delicate insight into tendencies that go towards making some of the more spiritual tragedies of life."

NEW NOVEL BY THEO. DOUGLAS.
A BRIDE-ELECT. By Theo. Douglas.
 Crown 8vo, 1s.

ILLUSTRATED STANDARD NOVELS.
 NEW VOLUME.

HANDY ANDY: a Tale of Irish Life.
 By SAMUEL LOVER. Illustrated by H. M. BROCK.
 With an Introduction by CHARLES WHIBLEY.
 Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

FOREIGN STATESMEN SERIES.

Edited by Professor BURY.

RICHELIEU. By Richard Lodge,
 M.A., formerly Fellow and Tutor of Brasenose College, Oxford, Professor of History in the University of Glasgow. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

MORNING POST.—"A piece of solid and useful work, the result of much study and of careful arrangement of materials."

Extra crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

RIVERSIDE LETTERS: a Continua- tion of "Letters to Marco." By GEORGE D.
 LESLIE, R.A. With Illustrations by the Author.

DAILY NEWS.—"All who have made the acquaintance of the 'Letters to Marco' will be prepared to welcome the continuation of these simple but delightful studies of rural sights and sounds, whereas the accomplished writer is wont to beguile his peaceful retirement by the Thames side."

EVERSLEY SERIES.—New Volumes.

The POETICAL WORKS of WILLIAM
 WORDSWORTH. Edited by WILLIAM KNIGHT.
 To be completed in 16 volumes. Vols. I., II., and III.
 Globe 8vo, 5s. each. Each Volume contains a Portrait and Vignette etched by H. Manasse.

GUARDIAN.—"This new edition will for a long time to come be for all serious students the definite edition of Wordsworth—the most complete, the best equipped with critical apparatus, and the most convenient for use and reference."

HISTORY of the ENGLISH PEOPLE.

By J. R. GREEN. Vol. VI., PURITAN ENGLAND,
 1642-1660; THE REVOLUTION, 1660-1683. Globe
 8vo, 5s. To be completed in 8 vols.

Globe 8vo, 7s. 6d.

POEMS. By Cecil Frances Alexander
 (C.F.A.). Edited, with a Preface, by WILLIAM
 ALEXANDER, D.D. Oxon., LL.D. Dublin, D.C.L., Oxon., Archbishop of Armagh, and Lord Primate of All Ireland.

Globe 8vo, 3s. 6d.

GOD'S GARDEN: Sunday Talks with
 Boys. By the Rev. W. J. FOXELL, M.A., B.Mus.
 (Lond.), Minor Canon of Canterbury Cathedral. With an Introduction by Dean FARRAR.

THE MODERN READER'S BIBLE.

NEW VOLUME.

ECCLIESIASTES and the WISDOM of
 SOLOMON. Edited, with an Introduction and Notes, by
 RICHARD G. MOULTON, M.A. (Camb.). 16mo, 2s. 6d.

In 2 vols., demy 8vo, 21s. net.

A HISTORY of the WARFARE of
 SCIENCE with THEOLOGY in CHRISTENDOM. By
 ANDREW DICKSON WHITE, late President and
 Professor of History at Cornell University.

REDUCED IN PRICE

FORTY YEARS in a MOORLAND

PARISH. Reminiscences and Researches in Danby-in-Cleveland. By Rev. J. C. ATKINSON, D.C.L., Canon of York. With Maps and Illustrations. Extra crown 8vo, Reduced from 6s. 6d. net to 5s. net.

MEMORIALS of OLD WHITBY; or,
 Historical Gleanings from Ancient Whitby Records.
 By Rev. J. C. ATKINSON, D.C.L., Canon of York.
 With Illustrations. Extra crown 8vo, Reduced from 6s.
 net to 3s. 6d. net.

MACMILLAN & CO., LIMITED, LONDON.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S LIST.

NEW WORKS.

MY MUSICAL RECOLLECTIONS.
By WILHELM KUHE.
In one vol., demy 8vo, with Portrait and Autographs, 14s.

RICHARD BRINSLEY SHERIDAN.
A BIOGRAPHY.

By W. FRASER RAE.
Including much information derived from New Sources.
With an Introduction by Sheridan's Great Grandson, the MARQUESS OF DUFFERIN and AVA, K.P., G.C.B.
In 2 vols., demy 8vo, with Portraits, and other Illustrations, 28s.

"The appearance of a new, complete, and carefully constructed memoir of the great statesman and dramatist, Sheridan, is a notable event in the literary history of the day. It may at once be said that this book takes its place as a standard one. It is rich in anecdote, in correspondence, in pictures of its subject during the whole course of his career, drawn from sources which have not hitherto been available to any biographical author."—The Irish Times.

WOMEN IN ENGLISH LIFE.
By GEORGINA HILL,
Author of "A History of English Dress," &c.
With Frontispieces. 2 vols., demy 8vo, 28s.

THE YOUNGER SONS' COOKERY BOOK.
By A YOUNGER SON'S DAUGHTER.
With Illustrations.
In one vol., large crown 8vo, 6s.

NEW NOVELS AT ALL THE LIBRARIES AND BOOKSELLERS.

LORD HEVER.
By PERCY HULBURD,
Author of "The Romance of Shere Mote," &c.
In 2 vols., crown 8vo, 12s.
"A novel of considerable strength and interest. The story is well put together, and the dialogue is always fresh and spirited."—Scotsman.

MISS DRUMMOND'S DILEMMA.
By R. RAMSAY.
In one vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

"A bright and telling story, which holds us completely in expectation, and then manages to spring a dramatic and striking dénouement on us by way of a finish."
Literary World.

HONOR ORMTHWAITE.
By the AUTHOR of "LADY JEAN'S VAGARIES."
In one vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

GIFTS AND WEIRDS.
By LILY PERKS,
Author of "A Late Springtime," &c.
In one vol., crown 8vo, 6s.
"A readable tale."—Globe.
"There is not a little skill in the presentment of character. Orkney scenery is well done, and the conversation is bright."—Manchester Guardian.
"An agreeable and pleasantly written story."—Scotsman.

THE MAN WHO DISAPPEARED.
By RIVINGTON PYKE.
In one vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington Street
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

A. & C. BLACK'S LIST

NOW READY.

STUDIES IN JUDAISM.

By S. SCHECHTER, M.A.,
Reader in Talmudic in the University of Cambridge.
Large crown 8vo, cloth, price 7s. 6d.

CHRISTIANITY and HISTORY.

By ADOLF HARNACK.
Translated, with the Author's sanction,
By THOMAS BAILEY SAUNDERS,
With an Introductory Note.
Crown 8vo, cloth, price 1s. 6d. net.

The EVOLUTION of BIRD-SONG

With Observations on the Influence of Heredity and Imitation.

By CHARLES A. WITHELL,
Author of "The Fauna of Gloucester."
Crown 8vo, cloth, price 6s.

THE GREAT DIDACTIC of JOHN AMOS COMENIUS.

Now for the First Time Englished.
With Introductions, Biographical and Historical,
By M. W. KEATINGE.
Large crown 8vo, cloth, price 7s. 6d.

ARTISTIC and SCIENTIFIC TAXIDERMY and MODELLING

By MONTAGU BROWNE, F.G.S., F.Z.S.,
Curator of the Leicester Corporation Museum and Art Gallery.
With 22 Full-page Illustrations and 11 Illustrations in Text.
Fcap. 4to, buckram, price 21s.

CLASSES AND MASSES; Or, Wealth, Wages, and Welfare in the United Kingdom.

By W. H. MALLOK.
Crown 8vo, cloth, illustrated, price 3s. 6d.

STRIKES AND SOCIAL PROBLEMS.

By J. SHIELD NICHOLSON, M.A., D.Sc.,
Professor of Political Economy in the University of Edinburgh.
Crown 8vo, cloth, price 3s. 6d.

FATHER ARCHANGEL OF SCOTLAND.

By G. and R. B. CUNNINGHAME-GRAHAM.
Crown 8vo, cloth, price 4s. 6d.

A WOMAN WITH A FUTURE.

By Mrs. ANDREW DEAN,
Author of "The Grasshoppers."
Crown 8vo, cloth, price 3s. 6d.; paper covers, price 2s. 6d.

OH, WHAT A PLAGUE is LOVE!

By KATHARINE TYNAN,
Author of "An Isle in the Water."
Crown 8vo, cloth, price 3s. 6d.

GOBELIN GRANGE.

By HAMILTON DRUMMOND.
Crown 8vo, cloth, price 6s.

A QUESTION OF DEGREE.

By CAROLINE FOTHERGILL,
Author of "The Comedy of Cecilia."
Crown 8vo, cloth, price 3s. 6d.

AN ODD SITUATION.

By STANLEY WATERLOO.
With an Introduction by Sir WALTER BESANT.
Crown 8vo, cloth, price 3s. 6d.; paper covers, price 2s. 6d.

LONDON: A. & C. BLACK, SOHO SQUARE.

DOWNEY & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

Julian Hawthorne's New Novel.
A FOOL of NATURE.
Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

The First Edition having been subscribed out of print, a Second Edition will be ready in a few days.

DAVID CHRISTIE MURRAY'S NEW NOVEL.
THE BISHOP'S AMAZEMENT.
Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. [Shortly.]

F. C. PHILIPS'S NEW STORIES.
AN UNDESERVING WOMAN. By F. C. PHILIPS, Author of "As in a Looking-Glass." Crown 8vo, 6s. [This day.]

Next week, in 1 vol., large imperial 16mo, with 22 Pages of Etchings by Phiz, from the Original Steel Plates, 7s. 6d.

THE FORTUNES of COLONEL TORLOUGH O'BRIEN. By J. SHERIDAN LE FANU.

A CHRONICLE of GOLDEN FRIARS, and other Stories. By J. SHERIDAN LE FANU. Illustrated by B. S. Le Fanu and F. J. O'Hea. Crown 8vo, 6s. [Shortly.]

COLLEGE GIRLS. By Abbe Carter GOODLOE. Illustrated by Charles Dana Gibson. Crown 8vo, 6s.

THREE MEN and a GOD. By Lieutenant-Colonel NEWNHAM-DAVIS. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. [Just ready.]

ULRICK the READY; or, the Chief-tain's Last Rally. A Romance. By STANDISH O'GRADY. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"A singularly interesting and powerful tale."—Scotsman.
"We know of no other modern book which gives such a graphic picture of Elizabethan Munster."—Athenaeum.
"A splendid piece of literary workmanship."—Irish Times.

THE EARTH MOTHER. By Morley ROBERTS. Illustrated by A. D. McCormick. Imperial 16mo, 3s. 6d.

"There is in 'The Earth Mother' the fascination of the weirdest of the tales by Edgar Allan Poe."—Morning.

A PHILANTHROPIST at LARGE. By G. W. APLETON, Author of "The Co-Respondent." "The book is a huge joke."—Glasgow Herald.

PINCHES of SALT. By F. M. Allen. 3s. 6d.

"There is hearty laughter in every page of 'Father Crotty's Hat'.....An exquisitely humorous story." Daily Telegraph.

TALES from the TERRACE. By an OLD PARLIAMENTARY HAND. 6s.
"The book is choke full of genuine humour." Freeman's Journal.

HISTORIC CHURCHES of PARIS. By WALTER LONERGAN. Illustrated by B. S. Le Fanu, and from Photographs. Crown 4to, printed on Fine-Art Paper, 21s. [Shortly.]

RECOLLECTIONS of FENIANISM. By JOHN O'LEARY. 2 vols. [In the press.]

A CUBAN EXPEDITION. By J. H. BLOOMFIELD. Post 8vo. [Shortly.]

The POEMS of SHERIDAN LE FANU. Edited, with an Introduction, by ALFRED PERCEVAL GRAVES. Fcap. 8vo, with a Portrait of Le Fanu, 3s. 6d. [Just ready.]

The MOST GORGEOUS LADY BLESSINGTON. By J. FITZGERALD MOLLOY. 2 vols. With an Autogravure Portrait of Lady Blessington, 21s. [Fourth Edition just ready.]

"Reads like the most fascinating fiction." Daily Chronicle.

"The volumes abound in amusing stories." Review of Reviews.
"One of the most entertaining and attractive books we have seen for many a day."—Sketch.

THE GREAT FAMINE in IRELAND, and a RETROSPECT of the FIFTY YEARS, 1845-1895. By W. P. O'BRIEN, C.B. Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. [Shortly.]

DOWNEY & CO., LTD, 12, YORK STREET, COVENT GARDEN, LONDON.

SATURDAY, MAY 9, 1896.

No. 1253, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

Introduction to Political Science. By Sir J. R. Seeley. (Macmillans.)

SIR JOHN SEELEY treated politics from a speculative and disinterested point of view, as a naturalist treats minerals, plants, and animals. In this respect, his posthumous treatise on the subject differs widely from books like Mill's Representative Government, or the more recent work of Prof. Henry Sidgwick, the object of which is to recommend some particular form of policy in preference to others. Not that Seeley had no preferences of his own, or that he did not take sides very warmly indeed on contemporary questions; but he held that the best way to solve all such questions was to study them first of all scientifically and disinterestedly: in connexion, that is, with principles that can only be learned by a comprehensive and exact survey of history.

When we hear of science we think of laws, and when we hear of laws we think of predictions. Especially does this apply to history, which has always been the favourite hunting-ground of prophets. The next best thing to the power of controlling events is the power of foretelling them. One can even imagine some saying, "Let who will make the laws of a country, so I may learn the natural laws of its evolution." For choice, perhaps, Mr. Arthur Balfour would take the latter alternative. But such an ambition would interfere with the disinterested study of history and of politics, even more than the practical bias. We know with what facility people learn to predict what they desire or what they dread: how quickly they find laws to support their predictions and facts to support their laws. To such readers Seeley's book will prove a disappointment. It deals only with the classification of governments. Within that limit, however, it will be found interesting, suggestive, and informing. If the thoughts are less original than the lecturer supposed them to be, they are put with an air of originality that has its charm, but also its irritation. Prof. Sidgwick, who edits the book, tells us that "truth was apt to come to Seeley in the garb of paradox . . . the new ideas . . . had a tendency to assume, quite spontaneously, a form strongly opposed to the popular drift of thought on the subject; and it required a subsequent deliberate effort to qualify and reduce this opposition" (p. x).

But it would seem as if this opposition was sometimes artificially produced by attributing to others opinions which they neither held nor were logically obliged to hold. For instance, in denouncing the sentimental enthusiasm for liberty—rather a work of supererogation, one would think, in the present day—Seeley quotes some lines from Shelley's "Masque of Anarchy," saying that

"in countries that are free,
Such starvation cannot be
As in England now we see."

The meaning of this, one would have thought, was too clear to be mistaken. The people would not voluntarily allow themselves to be starved; and therefore the fact of their starvation is a sign that they are not free, being indeed, as Shelley thought, a consequence of the wretched way in which they were misgoverned by an oppressive oligarchy with its wasteful ways, corn-laws, and so forth. But Seeley understands the poet to mean that a man who is starving is not free; and observes with triumphant but irrelevant sarcasm, "so liberty is discovered to be something to eat" (p. 106). Again, to take a much more serious instance, in sketching the rise and progress of the modern English parliamentary system, Seeley very justly calls attention to the great part played by the House of Commons during the reign of Charles II. in establishing a permanent control over the Executive; but he very needlessly presents his account of the matter as opposed to "the view made fashionable by Macaulay," which, according to him, "underrates the importance of the Restoration" (p. 253). Now one need only turn to Macaulay's masterly sketch of the circumstances preceding the fall of Clarendon, to see the injustice of this charge:

"The great English revolution of the seventeenth century," we are there told, "that is to say, the transfer of the supreme control of the executive administration from the Crown to the House of Commons was, through the whole long existence of this [the Cavalier] parliament, proceeding noiselessly, but rapidly and steadily,"— with a great deal more to the same effect.

It seems to have been less Seeley's object to draw sharp lines of demarcation between the different classes of governments than to smooth down the recognised differences, whether obtaining between co-existent forms of polity in separate states, or between successive forms in the same state. In this he follows the general method of evolution as now practised by all serious thinkers. But, as no one knew better than Seeley, even a good thing may be exaggerated; and he himself is not free from exaggeration in his adjustments of historical phenomena to a theoretical standard of symmetry and gradation. It may be true that all governments are more or less, and rather more than less, representative, aristocratic, and personal. Still, there are relatively such things as democracies; and the old view of Athens as a type of the class is substantially correct. Yet Seeley takes up without examination, because it suits his purpose, the modern view which regards the Demos as a slave-holding aristocracy, with about the same measure of culture and intelligence diffused through all its ranks. Such was certainly not the opinion of Aristophanes, who is very careful to present his sausage-seller as a distinctly uneducated man, reading and writing very badly. Neither was it the opinion of the Xenophontic Socrates when, in reference to the reluctance of Charmides to face the popular assembly, he asked him was it the fullers he was afraid of, or the leather-cutters, or the smiths, or the husbandmen, or the traders, or the hucksters. Plato tells us something about the schooling given to this Charmides. Intellectually, it was probably better than the best education now given at Eton; and the associations connected with our word "cad" would but feebly express the feelings of this "good and beautiful" youth towards the industrious persons enumerated by Socrates. Travelling, too—a means of education at that time immensely more important than at present—was open only to the rich. That "the poor Athenians" were "the class of which Socrates came" (p. 328) is true, as it would be true to say that English farmers are the class of which Newton came, but not more to the point. They would be better described as the class that put Socrates to death for trying to make young men wiser than their fathers. On the other hand, it is misleading to dwell on the election of magistrates by lot as a feature which distinguishes Athenian from modern democracy, without mentioning that the only really important magistrates of Athens, the Strategoi, were chosen for their personal qualifications.

In all countries, except those which, like India, are controlled by a foreign army, the government, according to Seeley, exists by the consent of the people, and cannot continue permanently to exist against its wish. A free constitution like our own does not mean one in which the power of the government is limited, but one which provides the machinery for electing, controlling, and changing the government without a violent revolution. This, in the lecturer's opinion, is the great function of our House of Commons, and that which alone gives interest to its debates. Of these he speaks with his usual epigrammatic exaggeration, as if they were the sole subject of English conversation. "Without Parliament," he says, "we should all be struck dumb" (p. 222). Why, for more than half the year there are no debates to talk about; and Carlyle, who never read the debates, was a most eloquent conversationalist. Equally strange is the reason assigned for our reading them. It is "simply to see whether the Government is likely to stay in or to go out" (p. 223). As if votes were changed by speeches! Evidently Sir John had formed his ideas of Parliament and the part it plays under a system which no longer exists, the system which came to an end with the General Election of 1868. Since then there have been exceedingly few parliamentary struggles the issue of which was not a certain and universally foreseen triumph for the party in power. Whatever interest we still keep up of a sporting kind has been transferred to the bye-elections. And, after all, I cannot help thinking that the fate of such a measure as Home Rule is more interesting to the general public than the fate, for example, of the Rosebery Ministry.

In the hands of Seeley and other historians, the scientific method of studying history seems sometimes to degenerate into optimistic fatalism. Every country has the government that it deserves; and what used to be called the crimes and follies of particular rulers were, relatively to their time, quite justifiable. In one of these lectures religious intolerance is picked out as the test question between a dogmatic and a scientific view of history. Those who condemn it without exception write themselves down as unscientific. Indeed, to judge by our author's language there are few, if any, exceptions to the rule that we should approve of it almost as long as it exists.

"I should like," he exclaims, "to meet the man who would venture to tell me plainly that it would have been safe to introduce toleration in the great European states earlier by a century or two than it was introduced: that, for instance, it might have been introduced into England under Elizabeth, or that Philip II. might have introduced it into Spain, or the House of Valois into France" (p. 138).

One would suppose from the Professor's way of expressing himself that the Valois dynasty reigned "a century or two" before the Edict of Nantes was signed. And how about the revocation of that Edict? Was it and were the subsequent dragonnades, as Froude thought, "necessary"? Philip II. might certainly have introduced toleration into the Netherlands with much greater safety to himself than resulted from his actual policy. As to Spain, he no doubt inherited Isabella's bad system; but was Isabella herself obliged by considerations of public order to introduce persecution into a country where Jews and Christians had lived peaceably together for so many centuries?

Although professedly standing aloof from party politics, Sir John Seeley has let fall more than one smart epigram which will certainly be taken up and used for party purposes:

"Like some king who can do no wrong, Liberty is disguised in a splendid robe of legal fiction, and if she appears to do harm it is considered decent to say that someone else was acting in her name. The formula runs: 'That is not liberty, that is license!' Oh! yes, it is liberty. But like everything else that is real, Liberty is only good in certain circumstances and in a certain degree" (p. 122).

I submit that license means a violation of personal rights which the violator would resent if it were practised on himself; and that is not liberty. In this connexion one cannot help recalling another epigram by the same writer, to the effect that the Unionist government in Ireland was substituting "coercion of the bad for coercion of the good."

Here is a brilliant reductio ad absurdum of the common assumption that, "in arguing for the admission of a class to the franchise, it is only necessary to show that so long as it is excluded its interests are certain to be disregarded." On this principle

"the class which would have the most undeniable right to the franchise, which ought to have the largest share in government, would be the criminal class. For how much more intimate, how much more practical and living, is their connexion with law and government than ours! Compared to them we are all mere theorists, mere amateurs in politics! To how many of us, after all, if we will confess the truth, it makes little difference what laws are in force! Personally, we never come in contact with these laws. But to the criminal class the question is evidently all important, in the strictest sense a matter of life and death" (p. 326).

What Seeley thought about the Socialistic drift of modern politics may be inferred from the sardonic humour of his commentary on Aristotle's definition of democracy, as "a system under which government does not aim at the welfare of the whole, but is warped to suit the interest of a part—namely, the common people."

"That the poor should be trampled on by the rich and little people by great we recognise as only too possible. But when Aristotle tells us that there is an opposite perversion by which the rich are sacrificed to the poor, and the few to the many, we are perhaps inclined to smile at such a conceit. It seems to us theoretical and pedantic; and we are not disposed to allow such a good work as democracy to retire altogether from active service by being appointed to the sinecure of representing a system which does not actually exist. The truth is, that little Greece had a richer political experience than great modern Europe. The whole popular side of politics was better known there than it is among us, who, after a thousand years of landed oligarchy, are but beginning to make the acquaintance of democracy. The next generation may perhaps learn to understand Aristotle's use of the word" (p. 322).

What is presented as a paradox to the youth of Cambridge was realised before the birth of their professor by the wealthy conservatism of these islands as the necessary outcome of modern democracy, denounced as an imminent danger by so staunch a Liberal as Macaulay in his great speech against the Charter, and predicted by the same statesmanlike historian as the nemesis of universal suffrage in the United States.

ALFRED W. BENN.

Sir Samuel Ferguson in the Ireland of his Day. By Lady Ferguson. (Blackwoods.)

THE account of this "happy life"—so the writer of it terms it—ought to rejoice the hearts of those who are weary of Irish jeremiads. On the other hand, those who know that the short and simple annals of the prosperous almost invariably incline to the dull, will not be surprised to find in this Life less of interest than would assuredly have marked it if the author had not been the favoured child of fortune that he was; also if he had not been—to give the matter homeliest phrasing—just an Irish gentleman. To realise to the full the disadvantage at which this circumstance puts a man from the biographical standpoint, it is only needful to read another life which appears contemporaneously with this of Sir James Ferguson, the life of the Irish peasant, William Carleton. A native of the country of these two writers, in a novel recently published by him, makes the storyteller say: "I have felt that there is a divinity that doth hedge a gentleman, keeping him free from every possibility of meeting with an adventure to relieve the sameness of his life." These words very fairly state the case as against gentlemanhood; when knighthood is super-added one's heart quails, and it is for having under these limitations produced a biography which, on the whole, is capital reading, that Lady Ferguson claims high admiration. In fact, this accomplished and wisely book by a lady of advanced age has a strange and sweet savour. It is not to be understood that the writer of it is without faults. She is garrulous. In sheer garrulity she tells how Dr. Haughton operated on a tiger, how Mr. Fitz-Simon's father was mulcted, and how Miss Bailly became Mrs. (afterwards Lady) Kane through a romantic incident, which, by the way, shall here be commended for its newness to the novelist in search of a plot. If you are chafed by this garrulity, you must be counselled to betake yourself with quickest speed to another star. She has a taste for antiquarian matters. There are weighty words hereon, and some of the weightiest are hers—this wholly unknown to herself, for she is absolutely without self-consciousness. How are we younger women herein shamed! She is bewilderingly optimistic, and still sees a brightness where most of us have lately heard only of dimness. For many years past Dublin has been spoken of in London as a dead city. Read her description of Ireland's capital given in chap. xii. of vol. i., and opening—"Society in Dublin, agreeable at all times, becomes brilliant during winter and early spring."

To pass now from the biographer to the subject of the biography. Ferguson is treated less as a man than as a scholar and poet. Many of his letters are given. Do you care to know how an Irish gentleman formed an apology for slackness in correspondence in 1832? Read this: "I have been reproaching myself for this last two months for not writing to you, and have gone on procrastinating till I am now past the power of apology, although still, I hope, within the security of pardon." Do you care to know how the writer of this polished "period" writes of an old gentlewoman (the extract is from the same letter): "He [Campbell] introduced me the other day to Lady Caroline Drummond, a great old dust." Have you any knowledge of the way in which Irishmen lavish that precious thing "copy" on their private friends and kinsfolk? If you have not, turn to a letter from Ferguson to his old mother contained in chap. vii. (vol. i.) of this work. There is here as remarkable writing on Gothic architecture as you will find outside Ruskin. Elsewhere, in his tale "The Wet Wooing," Ferguson relegates to a footnote a description of tickling trout which is a masterpiece of truth and humour. This circumstance, and one other—the fact that the tale is brought to a close with unpardonable abruptness in a paragraph of the tritest—can alone explain that a place among the minor classics of prose fiction has not been accorded to "The Wet Wooing," with its unsurpassed descriptions of rain, flood, and storm, its broad fun, delicate romance, and wonderful dialect.

Very versatile was Ferguson—too versatile. It is, perhaps, the fault of all of his country. One grows heart-heavy to find him, poet and romancist as he was, satisfied with putting on record in facile essay style that, according to Sir Walter Scott, the county of Cork alone abounds in more unwrought romance than all Scotland, that Ireland is the richest mine of historical and romantic material in Europe. The spectacle of a man who, while rising to high distinction at the bar, could write soul-stirring ballads and good historical tales, who was methodical keeper and arranger of public records, who was a painstaking inquirer in regard to Oghams, a grave scholar and a humorist of the first quality, is one so calculated to inspire misgiving, that it is odds if posterity do not say to him in words of George Eliot, "You are dilettantish and amateurish." Only in so far as Ferguson, through manifest lack of concentration, laid himself open to this charge, can one understand his being, to all intents and purposes, condemned unread. The bibliography at the end of this Life proves him to have written what would fill some thirty volumes. The subjects of these works are widely different. Careful selection would show that there is matter among them to fill one volume with high poetry, and one or two volumes with delightful prose. Had Ferguson come before the public with these few works, he would indubitably have commanded admiration from the whole English-reading public; he will still command it when his work is given to the public in that shape. As matters stand, he does not receive even passing mention in the school manuals of English literature. This is discourteous in cases in which the said manuals are drawn up by scholars of Oxford and Cambridge; it merits stronger condemnation when they are drawn up by scholars of Dublin and Belfast. In his remarkable little school-literature, the first edition of which was brought out in 1861, Collier of Trinity College, Dublin, having treated the great classics at some length and the lesser classics with due notice, gives in supplementary lists what, he submits, is "a tolerably accurate idea of those third-class writers, or, rather, first-class writers of the third degree, who adorn the present century." It is only right to say that the lists are drawn up with great care as regards Englishmen and Scotchmen. An unaccountable modesty has caused the Dublin professor to omit even passing mention of such Irish writers as Davis, Mangan, Ferguson. Before 1861 Ferguson had published his "Forging of the Anchor," his "Wet Wooing," his "Fairy Thorn," his "Hibernian Nights Entertainments," his "Father Tom and the Pope," his "Welshmen of Tirawley." A professor of Dublin could scarcely have been blamed with undue partiality had he included the writer of these works in his supplementary lists. The copy of Collier on my shelves is dated 1874. Prior to this date The Lays of the Western Gael had appeared, a work surely demanding notice in an English Literature in which Aytoun's Lays of the Scottish Cavaliers is warmly commended. Even more curious than the reticence in regard to Irishmen preserved by Dr. Collier, of Dublin, is that preserved by Dr. Craik, of Belfast, who in his English Literature not only omits all mention of Ferguson and the Irish poets contemporary with him, but makes this book unique among books of the kind by omitting from it the name of Sheridan. This sin of omission has a strong touch of the comical; but it is not to be laughed at only in one who made his home for twenty years in the country which could alone produce such writers of English as were the author of "The Rivals" and The Lays of the Western Gael.

The poet's wife has gleaned with loving industry all the praise bestowed by dead and living poets upon her husband's work. To touch here only on words of the living. According to one, Ferguson is virile, he has vision. The first statement is unassailable, but the second may be thrown over like a ninepin. There are, perhaps, in the English language, as written by nineteenth-century Englishmen, no two poems more virile than "The Forging of the Anchor" and "The Welshmen of Tirawley"; there are indubitably many with more of vision than "The Fairy Thorn" and "The Forester's Complaint." Another living poet praises in Ferguson's poems "the fine momentum," a phrase, this, which happily describes the poet's leading characteristic. It is a questionable pleasure to find oneself anticipated in one's opinions. On first reading Ferguson's poetry, several years ago, it struck me that it more than any poetry known to me resembled wine, and that he would describe it most aptly who would apply to it the words which are by connoisseurs applied to wines—tawny, rich, light, old, soft, dry, round, full, golden, generous. Among the commendations from living poets, I now find Lady Ferguson citing from one this eulogium: "They are like all I know of yours, like good, strong wine, full of glow and fragrance." Here, as it seems to me, the whole truth is stated.

In the foregoing nothing has been said of his biographer's opinion in regard to Ferguson's work as a poet. It would be remiss not to touch on this matter. With a few baleful exceptions, to which Lady Ferguson does not belong, biographers are not detractors. The poet's work is treated with loving appreciation by his wife, and now and again a noteworthy observation is made in regard to it. The elegy on Davis is given in full, its romantic associations for the lady writing of it are narrated, and the reader is asked to note "its peculiar and characteristically Irish rhythm." Lady Ferguson is less discriminating when she recommends another poem of her husband's, which she also gives in full, as containing a piece of analysis "quite in Browning's manner." No Irish poet has succeeded in imitating Browning's manner, though his mannerisms have been cleverly caught by a few Irish parodists.

Not the least interesting feature about a book of this kind is that in it we revive acquaintance with a host of persons. Its subject is not only Sir Samuel Ferguson, but the Ireland of his day. The volumes opened anywhere at random will hold an Irish reader. Here Dr. Reeves is introduced as pointing out that legend has it that an Irish king contemporary with Christ said of that act on Calvary what a Frankish king is reputed to have said 500 years later. The Irish king, characteristically, undertook to have done alone what King Clovis undertook to have done "with my Franks." Elsewhere the poet M'Carthy is introduced as contrasting the aims, methods and genius of Calderon with those of Shakspeare. His manner of doing this is highly interesting.

Two thick volumes dealing with Ireland of the nineteenth century naturally contain something of politics. Ferguson's wife asks us to see in Ferguson "a patriot politician, not a party-man." In a chapter under this heading, she gives us the speech in which in 1848 he joined those demanding repeal of the Union, on the ground that Ireland would have weathered the potato crisis more successfully if she had been legislated for by a native Parliament. "Gentlemen," says Ferguson, "that conviction has arisen in my mind of late, and I am not in the least ashamed to come among my fellow-citizens, and confess that I believe that in so long rejecting that conviction I have been in error." When, some forty years later, Mr. Gladstone's Home Rule Bill occupied the public mind, Sir Samuel Ferguson, we are told, was asked to state his views on the subject. He did so in two guardedly worded letters, which are given, and which, on the whole, convey the impression that he had resumed the attitude which he publicly quitted in 1848. Two poems—one of them now published for the first time—show his political bias in 1882. Both take the form of monologues; and in the one, the speaker of which is supposed to be Carey of Phoenix-park notoriety, we have the significant sarcasm—

"'Tis Parnell

And property—in proper hands—will win."

This sort of thing going through some hundred lines of very indifferent blank verse is not delectable reading. The poet is happier in his choice of metre in the singular poem called "The Widow's Cloak." Why the widow in question should have recommended herself to an Irishman for ebullient praise, is a question which some of us might find hard to answer; meanwhile, the poem remains what it was called by Allingham—who, in connexion with it, confessed to little liking of certain subjects for the muse—"a notable artistic feat."

Veritably patriotic are some utterances of Ferguson in connexion with the lack of "particular and local" histories of Ireland. They are given by Lady Ferguson in a long extract from his review of O'Donovan's "Annals of the Four Masters," which appeared in the Dublin University Magazine, March and May, 1848. At this time Ferguson could write, "There is a species of national self-knowledge as conducive to public respectability as individual self-knowledge is to personal self-respect," and could deplore "the fact that no history of Ireland is taught in our schools, an instance of self-abasement unexampled in the practice of any country in Europe." It is in such utterances that he shows the highest patriotism; and if he is at all to be forgiven for writing those dull poems called severally "At the Polo Ground" and "In Carey's Footsteps," it is on the score of having, in fine prose and finer poetry, throughout his life bravely agitated for the revival of Irish studies and for the recognition of Irish greatness. There is a noticeable figure in the niche which is first on the right-hand at the entrance of the English House of Lords. It is the effigy of an Irish prelate, one of the Barons whose names appear as witnesses to Magna Charta, and to Samuel Ferguson belongs the credit of its holding that niche. There are many niches in the House of Poets which are still vacant. Had I plantation of this isle, and were the King on't, I would put in a foremost of these niches the effigy of the Irish poet who wrote in the language of Shakespeare The Lays of the Western Guel.

ELSA D'ESTERRE-KEELING.

TWO SCOTTISH NOVELS.

Cleg Kelly. By S. R. Crockett. (Smith, Elder & Co.)

Robert Urquhart. By Gabriel Setoun. (Bliss, Sands & Foster.)

Cleg Kelly is by far the best work Mr. Crockett has yet produced—the book which shows most clearly that he has the supreme story-teller's gift of a vigorous, resourceful, and genuinely creative imagination. Not only so; but it is out of sight the ablest and richest story of gamin life that has appeared in our time—the story that recalls most readily Oliver Twist and The Hunchback of Notre Dame. And I say this, in spite of many marks of haste in the book, in spite of certain farcicalities which approach perilously near to vulgarity, and, above all, in spite of the melodramatic and fantastically unreal episode of General Theophilus Ruff. Mr. Crockett would be well advised to give up his habit of making certain of his characters laugh on the most serious occasions, and to abandon certain mild Rabelaisianisms of the too familiar "hinterlands" type. No doubt such Rabelaisianisms are correctly associated with "the Sooth Back" of Edinburgh, and those Galloway byres that are consecrated to a love that is not always tepidly respectable. But as Mr. Crockett could not reproduce all these in their appalling entirety on this side of the Channel, and hardly even on the other, he should have left them alone. But here fault finding ends. What is most notable in Cleg Kelly, what distinguishes it from almost all other novels that have recently been published, is the fact that its keynote is the joy in living, which redeems such a life as Gavroche's or Cleg's. Cleg probably inherits this in equal measure from his good Scotch mother (who under other and happier circumstances might have become such a wife and mother as Margaret Carlyle), and from his father, who, drunken, weasel-faced Irishman though he is—burglar in esse and murderer in posse—has yet all the full-blooded nomad's ecstasies. You see Cleg "evolving" by degrees and inevitably from the criminality of his home, from which, in the first place, he is in a sense happily repelled by seeing and revenging the murder of his mother, through the mild Bohemianism of the Knuckledusters' Club and his comic defiance of the Deity, into the respectability of a newboy's life, and, finally, into the middle-class respectability in which of necessity the wealthy heir of General Theophilus Ruff lives and moves. Yet Cleg never loses his fundamentally rebellious virility: he dominates the book from first to last, and, as Kit Kennedy learns to his cost, can fight even in the country with the skill and strength of the "Sooth Back." The Kavanagh family is quite as well drawn as that of the Kellys. Perhaps Sal, the mother, is a trifle too much of an "awfu" woman, too obviously intended as a mate worthy of Tim Kelly. But Vara and Boy Hugh, and Cleg's jealousy of Vara, are perfect in their different ways. The railway episodes have rather the look of being dragged in; and there is a little playing to the religious gallery in the death of Muckle Alick. Yet Mr. Crockett is to be commended for having done justice to a life of peril that often ends in tragedy, which has hitherto been celebrated too infrequently by the "Surfaceman," who, if he chose, could easily be the first among Scotch poets. The love-making, not only of Cleg, but of Cleaver's Boy, and of that sheepishly conventional specimen of the Edinburgh middle-class, Donald Iverach, is managed lightly and artistically. In this respect Mr. Crockett has made an enormous advance upon The Lilac Sunbonnet. Finally, Cleg Kelly is full of a humour, the simple fidelity of which to nature makes one forget its exuberance—makes one even forgive Mr. Crockett for the preposterous General Ruff with his coffin, his corpse, and his jars filled with sovereigns. Mr. Crockett can only improve on Cleg Kelly as Cleg improved upon himself.

With Robert Urquhart the author of "Barneraig" and "Sunshine and Haar" steps at once into the ranks of Scottish novelists and into an independent position. Although he may have been tempted to write, by the success of Mr. Barrie, he cannot be reckoned an imitator of The Little Minister, or even of A Window in Thrums. Still more independent is he of Mr. Crockett—of the Mr. Crockett who has written Cleg Kelly even more than of the Mr. Crockett who wrote The Raiders. He stands indeed midway between Annie Swan and Mr. Crockett, having set himself above all things to be a simple Scotch narrator of genuine Scotch possibilities. There is nothing either heroic or eccentric about his hero. Robert Urquhart is but a young teacher—somehow the word "dominie" does not appear to fit him—who falls in love with the pretty girl in the Scotch country village, in which he secures an uncongenial situation as instructor in "the Code," and whom he marries after he has made a footing of some sort in London journalism. The pettinesses associated with such a position are admirably brought out. There is, in particular, a sharp-tongued, mischief-making school-mistress (who ultimately and appropriately marries Urquhart's clumsy and vindictive rival) who is almost fit to enter the immortal company of Mrs. Mailsetter, Mrs. Heukbane, and Mrs. Shortcake. Of Urquhart's friends, his more or less literary and artistic chums who play at Bohemian club life in Edinburgh are greatly inferior to the acquaintances he makes in King Kelvie, more especially truth-loving, sin-hating Rob Buchan and loyal Wattie Spence. Gabriel Setoun ought really to have spared us some of the extravagances of Sandy Grant. Elsie Austin is, in spite of her birth, but an ordinary example of the sweet, fairly cultured country girl who is certain to get married happily; and her father, the Rev. Nial Gordon, is an impossibility. No divinity student in Scotland would venture to get licensed, much less become a popular Evangelical minister, who knew that at some moment the fact of his having seduced a girl could be brought home to him. The other characters, however, are all excellent. The inevitable pathos is not overdone. It is represented by Michael and Marg'ret Downie, who have a ne'er-do-well son. Marg'ret dies before she knows of that son's disgrace, and after her death the lad—to whom Gabriel Setoun is far kinder than is Mr. Barrie to the son from London—has the grace to repent and reform. Altogether, Robert Urquhart indicates in its author a power and resource that could not have been suspected from his previous work, good, careful, and thoroughly real though that was.

WILLIAM WALLACE.

"CHIPS FROM A GERMAN WORKSHOP." New Edition. Vol. IV., Essays on Mythology and Folk-lore. By F. Max Müller. (Longmans.)

In a powerfully written preface, the eminent searcher in the domain of language fixes his mythological standpoint with such eclectic liberality as to win the consent of all who do not go by a cast-iron rule. He says:

"Mythology is like an enormous avalanche of ancient thought that has carried down with it not only snow and ice, but rocks, trees, plants, and animals, nay, even many fragments of human handiwork. . . . Nothing is more natural, therefore, than that each explorer should have his attention attracted by one class of objects, made ready for his inspection, and closely connected with his own studies. . . . That there is hardly a mythology without solar myths, who would deny? That there is hardly anything else in mythology, who would affirm? . . . There is room for all of us in the immense goldfields of mythology, both ancient and modern, both savage and civilised, both solar and lunar. We have read of zoological and botanical mythology, and we might have equally useful works on astronomical, on religious, nay, even on philosophical mythology. To me every new contribution is welcome. . . . That there are historical ingredients also in mythology, who could deny after studying the legend of Buddha, the exploits of Herakles, or the Saga embodied in the Nibelungenlied?"

By way of illustration, the author shows, in the case of Cyrus, how largely a Nature myth is at the bottom of tales connected with his name. But he adds:

"Yet, for all that, Cyrus was a real man."

an historical character, whose flesh and bone no sublimating process will destroy. Here, then, we see that mythology does not always create its own heroes, but that it lays hold of real history and coils itself round it so closely that it is difficult, nay, almost impossible, to separate the ivy from the oak, or the lichen from the granite to which it clings. . . . Not only Cyrus and Charlemagne, but Frederick Barbarossa, and even Frederick the Great, have been drawn into the vortex of popular mythology."

Here we might mention that full research, begun some twenty-five years ago, has clearly proved that the tale about the Hohenstaufen ruler, who sits entranced in a hill until the time comes for bringing back the might of the German Empire, originally applied not to the Redbeard, but to his scarcely less famous grandson, Frederick II., well known for his philosophical freethought. In this connexion I would point out that Barthel Regenbogen, the Smith, a popular poet of the thirteenth century, already prophesies the return of Kaiser Frederick, "who will hang his shield on the withered tree." Now, one of the great feats of that restorer of German power, who is to oppose the Pope, is thus described by Regenbogen: "That high-born Prince will destroy the cloisters and give the nuns into marriage." Disestablished monkhood "will then have to grow wine and corn for us. When that shall come about, good years will be our lot." Such a prediction could not possibly be made about Frederick I., but very well about the second of that name, who anticipated some of the theories of modern science.

Prof. Max Müller's earliest contributions to Comparative Mythology were devoted to the special subject of Solar Myths. For this reason, as he complains, he has "been represented again and again, even by Mr. Gladstone, as a Solarist, as teaching that the whole of mythology is solar." Yet it can easily be seen, by those who wish to do him justice, that from the very beginning he had an open eye for the multifarious origins of myths which were subsequently regulated into a system. Even the essay on Welcker's Grischische Götterlehre (1857) is a proof. I confess that I once read that essay with all the deeper interest because, many years ago, when I was a student at Bonn, the renowned Professor was still active there whom Prof. Max Müller aptly characterises as "one of the few men remaining of the heroic age of German scholarship." Welcker was a patriot too. Like his brother, the co-editor of Rotteck's Staatslexikon, he at one time strove for his country's freedom and union, and had to suffer persecution therefor.

Now, for Welcker mythology was "not only a collection of fables, to be described, sifted, and arranged, but a problem to be solved"—even as the ancients already had tried to do since the days of Xenophanes (who came near Schiller's graphic saying: "In his Gods, man paints himself"), of Epicharmos, Empedokles, and not a few others. Another characteristic of Welcker was, that "he never looks on the Greek fables as a system. There were myths before there was a mythology; and it is in this, their original and unsystematic form alone, that we may hope to discover the genuine and primitive meaning of every myth. . . . When he treats of Apollo, he does not treat of him as one person, beginning with his birth, detailing his various exploits, accounting for his numerous epithets, and removing the contradictory character of many of his good or bad qualities. The birth of the god is one myth, his association with a twin-sister another, his quarrel with Hermes a third—each intelligible in itself, though perplexing when gathered up into one large Apollonic mythology."

Nearly forty years have passed since those researches of Welcker were published. To-day, there are, perhaps, some mythologists or folk-lorists who imagine that they were the first thus to go to the root of things. It would do them good to cool their assumption by diving into the works of explorers like Welcker. They might then find that there were strong men even before Agamemnon, supposing they themselves could be compared with that Greek hero of Thracian—that is, non-Hellenic—descent. Here it may be pointed out that not a little of what passes as "Greek Legends" is—though adopted by the Greeks—of Thracian origin: Ganymed, Kerberos, Tantalos, Atreus, Pelops, Niobe, and many other figures of partly mythic, partly prehistoric import, might be quoted as belonging originally to the Thracian circle of ideas.

Dealing with the grand conception of Yggdrasil, which symbolises the Universe, Prof. Max Müller acknowledges its "decidedly cosmogonic and philosophical character." No one could deny that who considers all the Eddic passages. As to the position of the three roots of the colossal World-Ash, of which the author speaks, the Older Edda has a slightly different statement from that of the Prose Edda, which contains a later exegesis of Norse cosmogony and theology. Most Scriptures show such contradictions. In the Younger Edda, there are several manifestly Christian interpolations: for instance, in Gylfaginning, where All-father creates heaven and earth—an assertion quite at variance with paragraphs 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 34, and 51 of the same tale.

As to a comparison of Yggdrasil with the mystic, sacred, and cosmogonic trees of Eastern races, Prof. Max Müller's contention is that the two trees of the Iranian Paradise—which have a counterpart in the Semitic Tree of Knowledge and Tree of Life—must not be compared to any single tree symbolising the Universe. Now, it is quite true that the greatest care has to be taken in tracing the connexion of mythic ideas, lest everything should become everything else. It must, however, be kept in mind that the process of differentiation in divine figures is the very essence of the development of mythology; and what is true of divine figures may apply also to trees. In Yggdrasil; or, the Teutonic Tree of Existence (1877), I have given the corresponding Latin, Greek, Iranian, Chaldaean, and Hindoo tree lore. It suffices to mention here that, as in the Hebrew and the Iranian account the two trees stand in a garden surrounded by other plantations, so the Norse World Tree has "nine worlds" issuing from its stem in the shape of branches.

The depth of thought contained in some Germanic myths may be seen also in the Norns. Their names, Urdhr, Verdhandi, Skuld, are usually explained as Past, Present, and Future. Verdhandi's name, however, has a profounder meaning. It is derived from verdha (German werden), and signifies the process of growing, or evolution. Perhaps it is generally forgotten that the Valkyrs, the Battle Virgins, whose figures pass into those of the Norns, are in Eddic lore said to be "southern," that is German, women. In the divine as well as in the heroic saga of the North, the German element is often clearly indicated. Thus, the Norse Hephaistos, Völundr, or Wayland the Smith, is in the Edda a son of the Rhineland, as also are Sigurd (Siegfried) and all the heroes connected with his story, whose life and tragic fate are localised on the Rhine in the Norse Scripture.

Referring to the much-talked-of views of Dr. Bugge and Dr. Bang, Prof. Max Müller, while thinking that "not only Greek and Roman, but also Jewish and Christian, ideas have penetrated the mythological lore of the North," adds: "But Prof. Bugge and his countryman, Dr. Bang, have gone too far." A still stronger expression would be nearer the mark. A number of Germanistic scholars—among whom only Müllenhoff, and Werner Hahn need be mentioned—have effectually traversed the exaggerations of the authors mentioned. Dr. Bang's Om Kristi Opstandelse Historiske Virkelighed certainly does not give evidence of that unbiassed frame of mind which is necessary for the proper treatment of bygone creeds.

In "Greek Legends," Prof. Max Müller lays due stress on the importance of Hellenic dialects for interpreting the names of local gods, heroes, and tales. It is too much the habit of otherwise thoughtful scholars to ignore the difference in accentuation in the dialects of the same people. In some German dialects a change of accentuation occurs even between the nominative and the other cases of the same noun, as thus—das Gräss, des Grässen. Yet, on the mere plea of a strictly fixed accentuation in Greek, which, dialectically, may be quite different, an obvious explanation of a word is sometimes needlessly rejected. Sensible philology, however, will turn from written speech—generally the result of irregular compromise—to the real wells of language, the dialects.

When John Stuart Blackie somewhat fiercely contended against Max Müller on a matter of Greek and Sanskrit etymology, the genial Scottish professor was likely to be worsted. Germans cherish Blackie's memory for his excellent translations of their Student and War Songs. But a wide range of philological knowledge, even in Greek, was scarcely his forte: not to speak of his curious attempts at Celtic derivation—for instance, in a word like the "skerries." That word is traceable through all the Germanic languages, and its occurrence round the coasts of this country marks the sea-path of the Norse Vikings. Blackie was rather astonished when, after his lecture in London, I pointed out to him these obvious facts.

In "Zulu Nursery Tales," a review of Dr. Callaway's work, Prof. Max Müller says:

"As in the German tales the character of Reynard the Fox is repeated in a humanised shape as Till Eulenspiegel; so among the Zulus one of the most favourite characters is the young rogue, the boy Uhlakanyana."

At first glance one might almost expect that Uhlakanyana was to be equated, even in name, with the Low German Uhlenspiegel, so that a Dutch origin for those South African drolleries might be inferred. But it is, of course, not so. No such trap for the unwary is laid in the article on Zulu Tales. It may be useful to state here that on one of Eulenspiegel's tombstones (for not less than two are attributed to him, in Germany and in Belgium) an owl (Eule) and a looking-glass (Spiegel) were represented as illustrative of his name. But recently it has been shown that the Low German word "Uhlenspiegel" had a very different meaning, unfit for printing. In consequence, however, of a "disease of language," or a misunderstanding of words, the trickishly merry and not always decent wag obtained in popular belief the symbols in question.

It was not possible, in a rapid review, to do more than bring out a few points with observations of my own. The very richness of the contents of this volume compelled such a procedure; but only a faint idea is thus given of the standard value of a work, from some of whose views one may differ, but which, both in learning and in style, has few equals, if any, in the corresponding literature of the world.

KARL BLIND.

NEW NOVELS.

Nell Haffenden. By Tighe Hopkins. In 2 vols. (Ward & Downey.)

Stories from the Diary of a Doctor. By L. T. Meade and Clifford Halifax, M.D. (Bliss, Sands & Foster.)

The Ten Commandments. By George R. Sims. (Chatto & Windus.)

A Husband's Ordeal. By Percy Russell. (Bellairs.)

A Mask and a Martyr. By E. Livingston Prescott. (Edward Arnold.)

The Heart of a Mystery. By T. W. Speight. (Jarrold.)

The Strange Transfiguration of Hannah Stubbs. By Florence Marryat. (Hutchinson.)

Muff. (Century Library.) By J. Tweeddale. (Fisher Unwin.)

MR. TIGHE HOPKINS'S Nell Haffenden—which he describes as "a strictly conventional story"—is fresh and vigorous. Most of the characters are creations of flesh and blood, and not mere wooden puppets. Nell herself is very good, though not, perhaps, equal to Frank Lyne, the East-end parson. It is not the first time that a clergyman of good family, working in the London slums, has been depicted in novels; but Lyne is so upright and down-right manly in everything, that we feel strangely drawn towards him. There is a contest between him and a bucolic lover, Martin Olymo, for the affections of Nell; but the parson is first favourite, and carries off the prize in the end, though not until his rival has put some ugly spokes in his wheel. But supposed mysteries are cleared up, and Nell is made happy, for she is not alarmed by her husband's Socialistic tendencies: indeed, she enters heartily into his work. The Anglo-American colony at the London boarding-house of Miss and Mr. Gripp is humorously described. Gripp himself is not unworthy of Dickens. There is a touch of pathos in the way he is kept under the thumb of his clever, lynx-eyed sister; and his delight at the prospect of a little rest when the boarding-house is given up is very genuine. The whole story is full of interest; there is not a dull page in it, and it worthily sustains its author's reputation.

The second series of Stories from the Diary of a Doctor contains some clever and some gruesome narratives. It is not the kind of book to read just before going to bed, though the authors manage to give a favourable finish to most of their exciting tales. "The Strange Case of Captain Gascoigne" treats of the cure of cancer by inoculation with the attenuated virus. If this could be proved to be an infallible remedy, it would be one of the greatest boons ever conferred upon suffering humanity; but we fear that the terrible disease must still be regarded as incurable when it has passed a certain stage. "On a Charge of Forgery" is a sketch possessing real human interest, and "Little Sir Noel" also is a very moving story. Indeed, this series altogether is, in our judgment, much superior to the first. There is more literary finish about the sketches, so that they can be read with the greater pleasure.

A strong series of stories illustrative of breaches of the Ten Commandments has been gathered together by Mr. George Sims. They are all popularly written, and extremely interesting. The first one especially is very effective; and there is a terrible irony in the sketch founded on the tenth commandment, where a company promoter, who is allowed to bring ruin into hundreds of homes without being called to account, sends a poor clerk of his to prison who had taken a bottle of brandy which he could not afford to buy, brandy having been ordered by the doctor for his dying wife. The last story is an excellent little deliverance on the subject of being contented with one's lot, instead of envying those in high and wealthy positions, and ignoring the fact that they may have a ghastly skeleton in the cupboard.

We cannot say much for A Husband's Ordeal. It professes to relate the confessions of Gerald Brownson, late of Coora-Coora, Queensland. Brownson was an English artist who left his native land under peculiar circumstances. Into his quiet little home there came as domestic servant a girl to whom he had formerly made love. This fact became known to his wife, who was of a terribly jealous disposition; and on a certain day, during the absence of the husband, there was a battle royal between the two women, which ended in the mistress strangling her maid. Brownson took upon himself the suspicion of this to save his wife; and as he had just been left a large fortune, he secured £3000 of it, and with this he and his wife fled from England. After a time the wife dies, and Brownson returns to this country. The conclusion is inconsequent and defective; for if he fled to avoid suspicion, he could not expect to return without encountering it, and nothing is said about this. But the whole story does not appear to us to be natural: it gives the impression of having been manufactured, and of not being properly welded together.

A Mask and a Martyr is the most powerful story on our list, though not the most pleasant. The name of the author is unknown to us, but he has the root of the matter in him as a novelist. Yet it would be well to choose more agreeable topics in the future. In the present work we have depicted the life of a man who makes the most unheard-of sacrifices in order to screen his wife from the judgment of the world. She is addicted to the vice of drinking, and the husband takes this and other things upon his shoulders to save his wife's name. It is very noble, very heroic, thus to become the scapegoat for another. After a life which can only be described as a hell upon earth, Coamo Harradyne bravely meets his death while fighting in the Soudan; and his final act of heroism, in saving a comrade at the expense of his own life, rehabilitates his memory in the eyes of those who had attributed many of his past actions to cowardice.

Mr. Speight's novel is a mixture of the styles of Wilkie Collins and Mrs. Henry Wood. It is not equal to the work of the former, but in some respects it is better than that of the author of East Lynne. There is the same building up of a mystery, followed by the same careful unravelment of it. The death of a banker in his own office with an accusing weapon by his side, and blood stains all over the desk of a clerk, offers a fine field for mystification. After one man has been tried for his life for the supposed crime and found not guilty; and after other theories, including suicide, have been started, we are finally treated to a solution of the puzzle. Altogether The Heart of a Mystery will keep the reader's attention well enchained.

The Strange Transfiguration of Hannah Stubbs only too sadly emphasises the deterioration of Florence Marryat as a novelist. We unfeignedly regret this, because we look back with considerable satisfaction on some of the early novels of the author. They were well constructed, and they were literature. The present story does not strike us as being either. The style is weak and careless, and the second sentence at the opening—"That was the legend that was engraved on the small brass plate that surmounted the bell that admitted visitors," &c.—reminds us of "The House that Jack Built." Hannah Stubbs is a domestic servant, who is taken in hand by a Signor Ricardo, because he has discovered that she possesses wonderful hypnotic power. She becomes infused with the spirit of a she-devil who had once been Ricardo's wife, and she plays the very devil with various people in the course of this bewildering narrative. After masquerading as an Italian Marchesa, she returns to her own self, and dies as the original Hannah Stubbs, a coarse and ignorant creature. If this volume is intended to commend spiritualism to unbelievers, we should say that it would rather confirm them in their scepticism.

There are some crisp studies of character in Moff; but he would be a bold Englishman who went through it conscientiously and declared that he enjoyed it. The style is Scot of the Scots, and there is no glossary. Mr. Tweeddale has talent; but, as holding a brief for the average reader, we must ask for fewer Scotticisms in his next venture.

G. BARNETT SMITH.

TWO BOOKS ABOUT SPAIN.

Don Emilio Castelar. By David Hannay. (Bliss, Sands & Foster.) This volume is one of an international series, entitled "Public Men of To-Day." The previous and the forthcoming volumes treat of real statesmen, and of men who are only in some sense politicians. But Mr. Hannay has to write of one who is in no true sense either a statesman or a politician: of one whom the accidents of the time placed for a few months in supreme power, whose distinction is a matchless oratory of a peculiar kind, glowing with a rhetoric which lights up everything alike, but who has also displayed a noble integrity in private and public life rare among men of his class in Spain. As a writer and a critic, Castelar has seldom any true insight into the questions, or grasp of the subjects, of which he treats; but he decks or hides all his deficiencies with a cloud of gorgeous and dazzling imagery. Thus Mr. Hannay, in writing the life of Emilio Castelar as a statesman, has had almost to make bricks without straw. The political career of Castelar in Spain is nearly like that of Lamartine in France in 1848: only Lamartine did not so directly contradict in action all his previous professions of political faith, as Castelar did in 1873. Yet both did inestimable service to their country at a given moment, and for this they both earned a gratitude which has been far more generously acknowledged in the case of Castelar than in that of Lamartine. The reader will hardly, then, be astonished to find that this Life of Castelar is rather a sketch of the political history of Spain since 1868 than a biography of the man. It partly covers the same ground as Les Origines de la Restauration des Bourbons en Espagne, by M. A. Houghton, Mr. Hannay's contemporary in Spain. Castelar's career as professor and journalist, and his literary work, are scarcely touched; but, on the other hand, we have sketches of most of the contemporary politicians. Mr. Hannay hits well one of the great faults of Spanish statesmen of the nineteenth century: their copying of French institutions, the borrowing of French ideas, and the unsuitable application of them. But in dealing with Federalism, or, as it is now called, Regionalism, he does not sufficiently see that it has its origin in the very physical constitution of the land, which makes the commercial, industrial, and agricultural interests of the different regions so opposed; added to this, is the difference of race and language in these different districts; and lastly in them alone is the municipal and local administration honest and efficient, while that of the central government is hopelessly inefficient and corrupt. The defect of Mr.

Hannay's book is that he has not sufficiently realised these conditions. Otherwise it is an able commentary on the recent political history of Spain; but it cannot be accepted as a complete biography of Castelar, whether in his public, private, professional, or literary capacity.

The Bible in Spain. By George Borrow. A New Edition, with Notes and a Glossary by Ulick Ralph Burke. In 2 vols. (John Murray.) Unhappily the title-page of these volumes is hardly complete. Mr. Ulick Burke had to start for South America before he had finished his revision of Borrow's work, and died shortly afterwards. The task has been completed by Mr. Herbert W. Greene, of Magdalen College, Oxford. It is to him that we owe the historical introduction in great part, and nearly all the Gypsy and Arabic lore which make the glossary so valuable. It is not often that either a record of missionary labour, or a book of tourist travel—and Borrow's Bible in Spain partakes of the character of both—is considered worthy of republication sixty years afterwards. But Borrow's Bible in Spain stands out from all its compeers; its only rival is Ford's Guide-Book in its early editions. It is well worth all the pains that the editors have bestowed upon it; and the labour of such a revision is by no means slight. Borrow frequently touches on some of the least known of the many curious "Cosas de España." Most of these are satisfactorily explained, in either the notes or the glossary. In one or two cases only have the editors failed to be aware of the latest solutions. An excellent account of the Batuecas (vol. i., p. 152) and their inhabitants, with map, has been given by D. Vicente Barrantes in Las Jurdas y Sus Leyendas (Madrid, 1893); and Dias Jimenez in the Boletín of the Real Academia de la Historia (vol. xx., p. 123, 1892) has clearly shown that the Maragatos (vol. i., p. 321) of Leon had their origin from an immigration of Mozarabes from Andalusia in the tenth century or a little before. On pp. 340, 341 both Borrow and his editors have confused Miguelistas, the partisans of Don Miguel of Portugal, with the Spanish Migueletes or Miqueletes, a far older body. They are sometimes mentioned as a Catalan militia; their name occurs in the archives of Simancas as early as the time of Philip II.; in both Carlist wars there was a corps of Miqueletes on the Liberal side. Strangest of all missionaries was George Borrow. He had a genius for language, a gift of style, and an ineradicable love for horse-dealing. Like Carlyle, he had a singular power of reading the inner man from his outward garb and bearing; like Carlyle, too, with all his literary gifts and attainments, Borrow was at heart the peasant adventurer—of the eastern counties—and was never really at ease in higher society. His theology never sits easily upon him. In his missionary work he has the oddest way of persuading himself that it is his duty to follow his wildest caprices, as when he makes journey to Cape Finisterre, which he longed to see, to leave there a single copy of the New Testament: and he gives thanks most piously for his neighbours' misfortunes:

"After travelling four days and nights we arrived at Madrid without having experienced the slightest accident, though it is but just to observe, and always with gratitude to the Almighty, that the next mail was stopped" (vol. ii., p. 217).

They who are fond of literary coincidences should compare Borrow's description of dawn on the Guadalquivir with that in Echegaray's drama El Hijo de Juan. This reproduction of The Bible in Spain, with its map, engravings, introduction, notes, and excellent glossary, should be welcome to all who wish to read a piquant account of the work of the Bible Society and of the state of Spain from 1835 to 1838.

NOTES AND NEWS.

MESSRS. WILLIAM BLACKWOOD & SONS will publish shortly a Memoir of Admiral Sir Geoffrey Phipps Hornby, G.C.B., by his daughter, Mrs. F. Egerton. The volume will form an interesting chapter in the history of the Navy, for during his long career the late Admiral had experience of nearly every position possible in the Service.

GENERAL O. WILKINSON and General J. Wilkinson have put together a volume of reminiscences and memoirs, to be entitled The Gemini Generals. A large first edition has been sold by private subscription for the benefit of the Gordon Boys' Home; and a new edition will be immediately issued to the booksellers and the libraries, of which the profits will be appropriated to the Royal School for Officers' Daughters and the Soldiers' Daughters' Home. Messrs. A. D. Innes & Co. are the publishers.

MESSRS. LONGMANS & Co. will publish immediately a School History of Rome, written by two Oxford tutors—Mr. W. W. How, of Merton, and Mr. H. D. Leigh, of Christ Church. It will be illustrated with maps and plans, as well as numerous engravings.

MESSRS. CHAPMAN & HALL will publish, during the present month, a new volume by Mr. John Ashton, entitled When William the Fourth was King, with numerous illustrations of the manners, fashions, and characters of the time.

MESSRS. ISBISTER & Co. will publish early next week Mr. Canton's new volume, entitled W. V.: Her Book; and Various Verses. W. V., it may be of interest to state, is the "Little Woman" of Mr. Canton's former volume, "The Invisible Playmate," now grown to be five years old. The poems treat of various themes, but one or two at least will be found to be about W. V.

MR. GEORGE ALLEN, of Ruskin House, has arranged for the publication of a series of volumes, under the editorship of Mr. Joseph Jacobs, giving impressions of England and English life by continental authors. The first, to be published immediately, will be The England of To-day, translated from the Portuguese of Oliveira Martins; and it will be followed by Across the Channel, from the French of Gabriel Mourey.

In the course of next week the Religious Tract Society will publish the Life of Robert Whitaker McAll, founder of the McAll Mission. The book is partly autobiographical, and has been edited by his wife. It gives many interesting details of his father (Dr. R. S. McAll), of his own boyhood, his student life at Lancashire College, and his early pastoral work at Sunderland, Leicester, and Hadleigh. It will contain two fine photogravure portraits and many other illustrations.

THE Kelmscott Press has just ready for issue Mr. William Morris's new romance, The Well at the World's End, printed in double columns, with entirely new borders and ornaments by the author, and four illustrations designed by Sir E. Burne-Jones. The edition is limited to 350 copies on paper and eight on vellum.

MR. H. S. NICHOLS has ready for issue, in an edition privately printed for subscribers only, an English translation of the Memoirs of Jacques Casanova, in twelve volumes. The translation has been made from one of the few existing copies of the French original, in its complete form, which was printed by Brockhaus in 1826, and immediately suppressed.

MESSRS. MACMILLAN & Co. will shortly add to their series of "Foreign School Classics" an edition of Minna von Barnhelm. The task of bringing out this play had been originally entrusted to James Sime; the work, interrupted by his death, has been executed by the Rev. Charles Merk. The bearings of Lessing's drama on the political and literary history of Germany during the age of Frederick will be considered in the introduction; and an analysis of the characters will show to what extent the poet has drawn upon his experiences, his friendship for Major von Kleist, his acquaintance with military society at Breslau, and his own inner life, in representing the principal persons of his play.

MESSRS. HUTCHINSON & Co. announce a novel by John Bickerdyke—well known as a writer on fishing—to be called Lady Val's Elopement.

MESSRS. F. V. WHITE & Co. will publish this month the following novels, each in one volume: The Case of Ailsa Gray, by Mr. G. Manville Fenn; Our Widow, by Miss Florence Warden; Two Lads and a Lass, by the same author; and The Courage of Pauline, by Mr. Morley Roberts.

MR. JOHN MACQUEEN will publish shortly a new novel by Lorin Kaye, entitled Her Ladyship's Income.

MESSRS. OLIPHANT, ANDERSON, & FERRIER have in the press A Mist from Yarrow, a Story of the Hills, by Mr. A. J. B. Paterson, with illustrations by Mr. G. M. Paterson. Early in May the same firm will issue, as the fourth volume of the "Famous Scots Series," John Knox, by Mr. A. Taylor Innes.

MR. ELLIOT STOCK announces for immediate publication a work for compiling family records, under the title First Steps in Pedigree. The same firm will also publish shortly a new story by Miss Blanch Garvock, entitled Raymond's Angel.

MESSRS. WILLIAM ANDREWS & Co. will publish at an early date The Quaker Poets of Great Britain and Ireland, by Mrs. Evelyn Noble Armitage, herself a poet and also a member of the Society of Friends.

THE REV. A. E. GARVIE is writing a book, entitled The Ethics of Temperance as Applied to the Drink Question, to be published by the Sunday School Union as a companion to Prof. Mackenzie's "Ethics of Gambling," of which a third edition is now in the press. The same firm will also publish, in a day or two, The Busy Man's Bible, and how to use it, by Mr. George W. Cable, also uniform with the "Ethics of Gambling."

ANOTHER book by Prof. Douglas Mackenzie will shortly be published by the Sunday School Union, entitled The Revelation of the Christ: Familiar Studies in the Life of Jesus.

A RE-ISSUE of Mr. Norris-Newman's With the Boers in the Transvaal and Orange Free State, 1880-81, with appendix including the Convention of 1884, will be issued by Messrs. Abbott, Jones & Co. in the course of a few days.

IN the Cymmrodorion section of the National Eisteddfod, to be held at Llandudno, Mr. W. E. Tirebuck will read a paper entitled "Welsh Thought and English Thinkers." Mr. Tirebuck's "Tales from the Welsh Hills," which appeared serially in several newspapers last year, are to be shortly published in volume form, illustrated by a Welsh artist. Mr. Heinemann has added Mr. Tirebuck's latest book, Miss Grace of All Souls, to his "Colonial Library."

AT the meeting of the London Ethical Society, to be held on Sunday at Essex Hall, Strand, Mr. Arthur Sidgwick will give a lecture on "Character-drawing in the Greek Drama."

THE annual report of the committee of the public libraries at Liverpool records the gift during the past year of the following books for the blind, in Braille type: Shakspeare's "Winter's Tale" and "Richard III." Byron's "Childe Harold," Carlyle's Hero Worship (in 6 vols.), Trench's Study of Words (in 4 vols.), The Cricket on the Hearth, Undine, The Water Babies, Amos Barton, and Silas Marner. The collection of books for the blind in the central lending library at Liverpool now numbers no less than 570 volumes.

UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS.

THE financial board at Cambridge have been compelled to address a third application to the Duke of Devonshire, as Chancellor of the university, that, in the statutory exercise of his discretion, he may reduce the amount payable by the colleges for university purposes. Similar requests were made in 1888 and 1891. A table is printed, showing that during the last fourteen years the total amount of corporate income distributed among the heads and fellows has diminished by nearly 35 per cent., and that the fall has been specially rapid during the last three years of this period. If the total amount of so-called "taxable income" does not show a corresponding reduction, this is mainly due to changes in the mode of keeping the accounts. In reply to the application, the Chancellor has directed that the amount to be contributed by the colleges shall be reduced for three years by three twenty-fifths of the minimum, which will thus yield a little more than £20,000 a year.

THE REV. R. L. OTTLEY, successor to Canon Gore as principal of Pusey House, has been elected Bampton Lecturer at Oxford for next year.

BISHOP OREIGHTON, having been commanded to attend the coronation of the Czar at Moscow, is compelled to postpone the delivery of his Romanes Lecture at Oxford to June 17, the Wednesday before Commemoration.

IN Congregation at Cambridge this week, Sir Gabriel Stokes, Prof. Forsyth, and Prof. J. J. Thomson were appointed to represent the university at the celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of Lord Kelvin's appointment to the chair of natural philosophy at Glasgow, which is to be held at Glasgow in June.

SIR M. MONIER-WILLIAMS, Boden professor of Sanskrit at Oxford, will deliver a public lecture next Monday, at the Indian Institute, on the following subject: "The Light thrown on the Religions of India and their Points of Contact with Christianity by the Discussions in the World's Parliament of Religions held at Chicago."

MR. E. B. POULTON, successor to the late Prof. Westwood in the Hope chair of zoology at Oxford, proposes to deliver two lectures this term on "The Hope Collections." It may be as well to state that the Hope collections are not confined to natural history, but include also a fine series of engraved portraits, now kept in the old Philosophy School.

MR. H. E. WOOLDRIDGE is continuing his course of lectures on "The Art of Painting," as Slade professor of fine art at Oxford. This term he proposes to give four lectures, during May, on "The Methods of the Old Masters."

MR. W. RIDGEWAY, Disney professor of archaeology at Cambridge, announces two lectures this term on "The Mycenaean Age."

AT a meeting of graduates in divinity, to be held in the Divinity School at Cambridge on Monday next, a paper will be read by the Rev. Dr. A. Jessopp on "Periodic Revivals of the Religious Sentiment."

THE council of the senate at Cambridge recommend that the universities of Bombay and Toronto be admitted to the privileges of affiliated institutions.

THE Rev. H. A. Redpath, editor of the Oxford Concordance to the Septuagint, has received a grant from the Hort Fund, to enable him to collate a portion of the Codex Zittaviensis of the Octateuch, in Saxony, for the large edition of the Septuagint, which is in course of preparation at Cambridge.

DR. H. FRANK HEATH—one of the most distinguished graduates in English from University College—has been elected assistant-registrar of London University, in the place of Mr. F. V. Dickins, the successor to Mr. Milman in the office of registrar.

TRANSLATION.

HESIOD—THEOGONY, 565 sqq.

THE Titan's son, outwitting Jove, stole fire from out the akies,
And in a hollow reed brought down to earth the far-seen prize.
The Thunderer's soul was stirred, and he devised in vengeful ire
A woful thing to set against man's goodly gain of fire.
He called to him heaven's armourer, the halt-of-foot, and bade
Him mould of clay a figure like a blooming, bashful maid.
It lived. Blue-eyed Athene then in raiment silvery white,
Gladd the fair figure, and a veil with broidery
bedight
Herself had wrought flung over it, and last a crown of gold
Set on its head: rare crown it was, a marvel to behold,
More marvellous than words can tell. The halting god of fire
Had fashioned it, and gladdened much the heart of Jove his sire.
A host of things he carved thereon, strange things of land and sea,
And figures like to speaking men, all carven
cunningly.
And now complete, the wondrous work the heavenly craftsman brought Full in the light of gods and men, fair work with evil freight,
Set-off to good. Exultingly in the rich gear arrayed,
Wherewith had largely dowered her the Thunder's blue-eyed maid,
She stood—this thing of beauty there, the admiring throng before—
Thus woman came—poor hapless man to tease for evermore.

G. A. H.

MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS.

THE Expositor for May is chiefly remarkable for Prof. Ramsay's paper, entitled "A Fixed Date in the Life of St. Paul." The fixed point is the date of Paul's partaking of the Passover in the course of his journey to Jerusalem, related in Acts xx. Prof. Ramsay argues that this must have been in 57 A.D., the only year which will suit the conditions of the narrative; and he meets objections to it. He also states his conclusions on other points of interest. In particular, the martyrdom of Paul took place, according to Chrysostom, in the sixty-eighth year of his age and the thirty-fifth of his Christian career. This agrees excellently well with the critic's theories. The date of the martyrdom may be placed about 67 A.D. Prof. Ramsay is not less confident than ever in the minute and exact accuracy of the narrative in the Acts, and shows a zeal and a copiousness of argument which few scholars are in a position, or perhaps have the ability, to show. Dr. Karl Clemen, through the Expositor, makes known his hypothesis as to "the oldest Christian sermon," which he takes to be the "homily" that lies between Heb. iii. 1-6 and iv. 14-16. Mr. Redpath, the energetic editor of the new Concordance to the Septuagint, puts forward a new proposal with reference to the Hebrew text of the Old Testament. He wishes for an unpointed edition of the Masoretic text, with notes showing the variations of that text from that indicated by the Versions where the reading or pointing of the two would be different. This proposal takes a rather narrow view of the conditions of textual criticism of the Hebrew text, and somewhat overlooks the unsatisfactory state of the Versions. Will not the edition of the Hebrew text now being prepared by Prof. Haupt and his contributors more completely meet the requirements of students for some time to come? At any rate, there is an underlying difference of opinion between Mr. Redpath and the not undistinguished Hebrew scholars who are assisting the Baltimore professor. Dr. Bruce continues his admirable popularisation, for religious purposes, of Gospel criticism. Prof. A. Roberts discusses the interpretation of Romans viii. 33, 34. A sermonette by Dr. Dale, and essays by Mr. Whiteford and Dr. Hugh Macmillan, interesting from their style, complete the number.

CORRESPONDENCE.

HORACE WALPOLE AND HIS EDITORS.

Dorset Wood, Bucks.

In Cunningham's edition of Walpole's Letters, Letter 536, vol. iii. (to George Montagu), dated December 23, 1757, is misplaced. In this letter Walpole writes: "You . . . well know how to feel for me, who have at last lost my dear friend, Mr. Mann." Galfridus Mann (brother of Sir Horace) died (vol. iii., Letter 491) "in the night between the 20th and 21st" (of December, 1756). It is more probable that Walpole would use the expression "have at last lost my dear friend" (Mann died after a lingering illness) immediately after his death, than in the following year. It appears, therefore, that this letter should be placed between Nos. 491 and 492 in vol. iii. Cunningham, oddly enough, prints the identical letter a second time in the Appendix (Additional Letters, vol. ix., p. 488), dates it rightly, and mentions it in a note as "now first published" (!)

In Letter 661 (vol. iii.) occurs a mistake which has escaped the editors. Walpole (according to Cunningham) writes: "I had consulted Mr. Lethinkai" (in connexion with his "History of Painting"). There is no doubt that "Lethinkai" here is an error of the copyist or printer for Lethinullier or Lethieullier. The latter was a well-known antiquary and naturalist, who died in 1760. He is again mentioned by Walpole in Letter 791 as "the late Mr. Smart Lethinullier," the name in this instance being correctly given. Neither Cunningham nor Croker (the editor of the letters to Zouch) has made any remark on this point, and Cunningham has even given the two names in the index as if they belonged to two different people.

In Letter 899 (vol. iv.) Walpole mentions "Sir Chas. Cottrell's collection" (of prints), and in the following letter (900) he refers to the sale of "Sir Clement Cottrell's prints." The editor (presumably Wright) in a note concludes that the same person is alluded to in both cases. It will be seen, however, from Letter 578 (vol. iii.) that Sir Clement Cottrell Dormer, Master of the Ceremonies, died in October, 1758, and was succeeded by Sir Chas. Cottrell Dormer (see Letter 673, vol. iii.). It is evident that Walpole's allusion is to the sale by Sir Chas. Cottrell Dormer of the collection of prints which he inherited from his predecessor, Sir Clement Cottrell Dormer. The editor's note here is, therefore, not only superfluous, but misleading.

Croker, in a note on Letter 905 (vol. iv.), says that the Duchess of Richmond was the "sister of Lady Aylesbury's first husband." This is a mistake. Lady Mary Bruce, who married in 1757 Charles, third Duke of Richmond, was the daughter, not the sister, of Charles Bruce, third Earl of Aylesbury, here alluded to as "Lady Aylesbury's first husband." The second husband of Lady Aylesbury (a title which she retained after her second marriage) was Walpole's friend and cousin, General Conway.

Croker, again, in a note on Letter 925 (vol. iv.), states that Mitchell was "Minister from the Court of Prussia to London." He has evidently confused two people of somewhat similar names. There was one Michel who is mentioned by Walpole in 1753 (Memoirs of George II., ed. 1822, vol. i., p. 259), as "Mons. Michell, secretary of the embassy from the King of Prussia," and again in 1756, as "Meehell, the Prussian Minister" (Memoirs, vol. ii., p. 2). Walpole also says, in a note to Letter 254, vol. ii., in which Michel is mentioned, that he was "Prussian Chargé d'Affaires." Carlyle (History of Frederick the Great, vol. vi., p. 296), refers to him as "a Secretary of Legation, Herr Michel." On the other hand, Mitchell (the person in question) was British Minister at Berlin from 1753 till 1771. He visited England in 1765, and returned in the following year to Berlin, where he retained his post till his death (1771).

HELEN TOYNBEE.

HOW FOLK-LORE IS SPREAD.

London: April 20, 1896.

That the introduction of the Connoisseur's superstitions into Pembrokeshire, as told in my former note under the above heading (ACADEMY, March 21), did not pass quite unobserved, may be gathered from the interesting quotation translated below. It is an extract of a letter on witchcraft in the parish of Nevern that appeared in Seren Cymru for August 7, 1858 (p. 236). That date is about midway between the time of Iorwerth's letters in Seren Gomer (1818) and Simon Llwyd's "Reminiscences of Uncle Hugh" in Cymru (1895-6).

" . . . It is asserted by some that, before the power of bewitching is gained, it is necessary to profess religion (myndd at grefydd), to partake of the elements in the Communion, to drink the wine and keep the bread; that, when the place of worship is quitted, something in the shape of a toad, outside, will take the bread; and that thenceforward the novice will be able to operate. . . . Some say that if a mare's shoe is nailed to the lintel of the door, no witch can ever enter the house, and that if one of them happens to go into a neighbour's house a broom placed across the threshold by a member of the family will prevent her leaving. Somebody has said that two straws laid crosswise on the threshold will serve the purpose quite as effectually. A neighbour's wife heard one of them mumbling something to herself, and believed that she was saying the Lord's Prayer backwards. . . . Somebody has also said that they can all be sent after Pharaoh and his chariot into the depths of the Red Sea, if recourse be had to an expert, but that the latter must be skilled in arithmetic, algebra, Hebrew, Greek, Latin, and all the original (gwreiddiol) tongues before he can compass this mighty feat. The belief in these things is rapidly gaining ground nowadays. It has already crossed the new bridge by Cilgwyn Mill, and has crept up from Oaru Ingh, past Morfa, along the seashore as far as Llech-y-drydded. It is also making its way eastwards, having by this time almost reached that famous old stone called 'Arthur's Quoits,' and, if its progress is not checked, it will soon arrive at the Seren office in Carmarthen, then on to the Dinogwior [Llanelli], thence to the Gwron [Aberdare], and Seren Gomer . . . so that ere long they will all be full of witches and their works."

The writer calls himself "The Fox." In these days, he would have been a valuable acquisition to the Folk-lore Society.

J. P. OWEN.

THE "PRENZIE" ANGELO.

Oxford: April 29, 1896.

It was not to provoke controversy that I wrote on April 6, pointing out the insufficiency of the evidence Prof. Skeat brought forward in his letter in the ACADEMY of April 4, for the existence of a word "preuzie" in English. Nor should I be writing again about it, were it not necessary to call attention to an error in Prof. Skeat's last letter. The Roxburgh word cited by him is not spelled "prowzie" in Jamieson, but the two forms of the word appear there as "prossie," "prowsie." I did not refer to these words in my last letter, because it seemed so very unlikely that they should have anything to do with a supposed "preuzie." For not only are the consonants different, voiced s in the one case and voiceless s in the other, but the vocalic elements are also unlike—o, ow in the one case (for the variation see Murray, Dialect of the Southern Counties of Scotland, p. 116), and eu in the other. And according to Ellis's word-lists a French eu from a Latin o ought to have developed into a u-sound, and not into an o-sound, in the dialect of Roxburgh (cf. Ellis's History of English Sounds, v., p. 720, No. 893). So that it is equally difficult to associate "prossie," "prowsie" with Old French "preus," even though we ignore the difference of meaning between the two words.

MARK LIDDELL.

THE SIN-EATER IN WALES.

Llanwrin, North Wales: May 4, 1896.

Permit me to correct an error into which Mr. W. Eilir Evans has fallen, in his letter in the ACADEMY of May 2, regarding the word hyl.

He there states that "it is somewhat strange that Chancellor Silvan-Evans has not included it [hyl] in his great work." The word is included in the dictionary referred to, and will be found, together with the phrase "llawn hyd y fyl," in its alphabetical order on p. 600.

HENRY SILVAN-EVANS.

[In justice to Mr. Silvan-Evans, we ought to say that the assertion he contradicts seems to have arisen from a misunderstanding. It was a former correspondent (Mr. J. P. Owen, in the ACADEMY of April 25) who affirmed that the (anglicised) Welsh word abeilon was not to be found in Silvan-Evans's Welsh Dictionary. Mr. W. Eilir Evans, while supplying the real Welsh form hyl, appear to have supposed that Mr. Owen's assertion extended likewise to that.—Ed. ACADEMY.]

"AUCASSIN AND NICOLETTE."

London: May 1, 1896.

Mr. Oelsner kindly asks for a fresh edition of my Aucassin. I wrote my version as a labour of love, and presume that only a limited edition could have found purchasers. An American gentleman writes that he is sending me his "Old World Series" of my translation. What Mr. Nutt may think it right to do in face of this competition will, no doubt, be done.

A. LANG.

APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK.

SUNDAY, May 10, 7 p.m. Ethical: "Character-Drawing in the Greek Drama," by Mr. Arthur Sidgwick.
 MONDAY, May 11, 8 p.m. Society of Arts: Cantor Lecture, "Applied Electro-Chemistry," III., by Mr. J. Swinburne.
 9 p.m. Aristotelian: "Voluntary Action," by Mr. G. F. Stout.
 8.30 p.m. Geographical: "Through the Central Sudan to Sokoto," by Mr. W. Wallace; "Hausaland," by the Rev. C. H. Robinson.
 TUESDAY, May 12, 3 p.m. Royal Institution: "Ripples in Air and on Water," II., by Mr. C. V. Boys.
 4 p.m. Asiatic: Anniversary Meeting; "The Discovery of a Pali Work in the Chinese Buddhist Collection," by Mr. J. Takakusu.
 8 p.m. Civil Engineers: Discussion, "American and English Methods of Manufacturing Steel Plates," and "Four American Rolling-Mills."
 8 p.m. Colonial Institute: "Picturesque New Zealand," by the Hon. W. P. Reeves.
 8 p.m. Society of Arts: "Wood-engraving as compared with other Reproductive Art, and its Future as a Fine Art," by Mr. W. Biscoombe Gardner.
 8.30 p.m. Anthropological: "Recent Observations on the Andamanese by Mr. M. V. Portman," and "Photographic Apparatus for Travellers," by Dr. J. G. Garson; "The Cranial Characteristics of the South Saxons, compared with those of some of the other Races of Great Britain," by Mr. R. J. Horton-Smith; "An Unpublished Batak Creation Legend," by Heer C. M. Pleyte.
 WEDNESDAY, May 13, 8 p.m. Society of Arts: "Tunnelling by Compressed Air," by Mr. E. W. Moir.
 THURSDAY, May 14, 3 p.m. Royal Institution: "The Art of Working Metals in Japan," II., by Mr. W. Gowland.
 4.30 p.m. Society of Arts: "Tea-Planting in Darjiling," by Mr. G. W. Christison.
 8 p.m. Electrical Engineers: "The Influence of the Shape of the Applied Potential Difference Wave on the Iron Losses in Transformers," by Messrs. Stanley Beeton, C. Perry Taylor, and J. M. Barr.
 8 p.m. Mathematical: "The Application of the Principal Function to the Solution of Delaunay's Canonical System of Equations," by Prof. E. W. Brown.
 FRIDAY, May 15, 8 p.m. Ex Libris Society: Annual General Meeting.
 8.30 p.m. Viking Club: "The Influence of the Northmen on the British Islands, as determined by Personal and Place Names," by the Rev. E. McClure.
 9 p.m. Royal Institution: "Cable Laying on the Amazon River," by Mr. A. Siemens.
 SATURDAY, May 16, 3 p.m. Royal Institution: "Three Emotional Composers, II., Wagner," by Mr. F. Courder.

SCIENCE.

THE ACCENTUATION OF THE RUSSIAN VERB.

De l'Accentuation du Verbe Russe. Par Paul Boyer, Professeur à l'École des Langues Orientales vivantes. (Paris: Imprimerie Nationale.)

In attacking the Russian verb and Russian accent at the same time, M. Boyer has given proof of learning and courage. The verb is par excellence the crux of the Slavonic languages, and the laws of its accentuation are of equal importance. Let us see, then, how our author proposes to discuss it.

In the first place he rejects the old arrangement into six classes, which forms the basis of its treatment in the great Vergleichende Grammatik of Miklosich. He takes the division of Prof. Leskien into four classes, and shows the laws of accentuation which govern each.

Now, the accent in every verb is either fixed or movable. Those verbs especially have a fixed accent which are denominatives—i.e., derived from nouns. The verb keeps the accent of the noun; and thus there will be a difference in the accent where the verb is a denominative and derived from a noun already compounded with a preposition, and where it takes the preposition itself. Thus, okhótitsa, "to sport," from okhótnik, "a sportsman," rabólat, "to work," from rabóta, "work," and also the verbs ending íchat, have the same accent as the nouns from which they are derived: as liberálníchat, "to play the liberal," kokétníchat, "to coquet." These seem to be generally used in a depreciatory sense.

In the -nu conjugation, which, it may be remembered, forms the second in the system of Miklosich, the accent is always on the syllable -nu, in both the infinitive and the indicative, when the verb is perfective, but goes to the first syllable, when the verb is imperfective and inchoative: as dvínut, "to move." These verbs drop the syllable -nu entirely in the past tense: as pogib, "he perished," pogas, "he expired."

On p. 38 M. Boyer gives us a list of verbs which have a double accentuation, the meaning being in some cases varied. The effect of polnoglasie upon verbs is shown, especially in the case of tri-syllabic infinitives, many of which would be dissyllabic in Old Slavonic. Thus, vorotit, with the accent on the binds-vocal "i," but in its old form vratit, "to turn back."

It is interesting to see the effect of the accent in determining the aspect, and notably in the case of verbs compounded with prepositions. When the verb is in the perfective aspect, it keeps the accentuation of the uncompounded verb; when the aspect is imperfective, the accent is on the binds-vocal. Imperfective verbs, however, compounded with vy the accent is always on the preposition.

The accentuation of the verbs ending in -ovat (pres. uyu) is very clearly analysed. Of this conjugation (which is the sixth in the scheme of Miklosich) M. Boyer very truly remarks that it is the one employed for the introduction of new verbs into Russian which are derived from nouns. It plays much the same part as the termination -ren in the German language: marschiren, &c. It contains some primaries—e.g., kovat, kuyut, "to work as a smith," but most of the verbs in it are secondaries. Of the primaries M. Boyer gives a list. Verbs exhibiting such forms as -ot in the infinitive—e.g., kolot, "to stab," borotsa, "to fight"—are rightly explained by him as owing their existence to polnoglasie. And, indeed, this fact is proved at once if we look at the other Slavonic languages. And here, by the way, we must remark that, although M. Boyer speaks at the beginning of his learned treatise of explaining the Russian verb by itself, he has allowed himself frequently (and, we may add, very naturally) to take many illustrations from the Serbian—a language where the shorter and older form prevails. This is the language of the Eastern branch best suited to his purpose, as Bulgarian, owing to neglect and foreign influences, has become so mutilated.

The verbs belonging to the class which has no binds-vocal in the present indicative singular are all accented on that vowel in the plural; thus dam, "I will give"; dadite, "you will give." The imperative follows the rule of the indicative in ordinary verbs, except in the instance of vnémlyu, imp. vnemli, "to pay attention." In the few verbs in Russian where the infinitive ends in ti (this being the common termination in Serbian and Chekh), it is accented on the last. Of course, these verbs are remnants of the Old Slavonic; and M. Boyer shows how, in their compounded shape, they take the normal forms: as pasti, but spast, "to save."

The verbs having the binds-vocal of the infinitive in "ie" accent it throughout. These verbs correspond to the second form of the third conjugation of Miklosich. Two only accent the root: vidiet, "to see," and obidiet, "to offend." The latter has throughout the accent of the noun from which it is derived, unless, as M. Boyer very pertinently adds, it be a compound of vidiet, and to be explained, we suppose, as if the b of the preposition ob- has pushed out the v of the word with which it is compounded. This frequently occurs in Slavonic; and on this principle the derivation might be explained as "to overlook," thus to treat with contempt and insult (cf. nenavidiet, "to hate").

But it is impossible, in a short review, to do justice to this learned essay, which is one of the dissertations written in honour of the centenary of the School of Oriental Languages at Paris. M. Boyer has thoroughly studied his difficult subject. We cannot, unfortunately, follow him step by step in the limited space at our disposal. He writes with a lucidity which is truly French, and has given us a complete platform, as the Americans would say, of the whole subject.

At the conclusion of his treatise he rightly dwells upon the interest and importance of the Russian accent, as illustrating the Old Aryan system.

W. R. MORFILL.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE RESTORED PRONUNCIATION OF GREEK.

Cardiff: April 19, 1896.

As Dr. Lloyd has now completed his criticism of our pamphlet, we owe it to your readers to reply; but the misconceptions into which he has fallen, mainly through disregarding its contents, bid fair to make the task of correction a long one. Prof. Arnold is kept from work this week by illness, and has asked me to reply for us both.

Dr. Lloyd repeats in every letter the curious statement that we "despise" or "scorn" the teacher's standpoint. Seeing that the pamphlet was written by two teachers, and carefully revised by at least a dozen others, the reader may guess how far this is probable; and he may judge how far it is borne out by the pamphlet itself from the following quotations, which Dr. Lloyd seems not to have read.

We were requested to "draw up a scheme of pronunciation which should be based on historical principles, and at the same time be a practical character" (Pref., p. iii.).

"Any attempt to frame a system . . . should avoid placing any really serious difficulty in the way of beginners in Latin or Greek. For it must always be the principle of the study of these languages that the learner shall, as soon as possible, begin to read for himself the works of the classical authors" (p. 3).

"After careful discussion we feel that the scheme proposed offers no difficulty that can be called serious even to the English-speaking student; while those who are familiar with spoken Welsh or French should find it far easier than the local English method. . . . Slight deviations from the best standard will be better left uncorrected, when the effort to correct them would produce either an error in the opposite direction or real danger of misunderstanding in the oral work of a class. Such difficulties . . . are especially numerous in the system which has been so far usual in England. How far we and our colleagues are right in thinking that the scheme here proposed is free from objections of a practical nature experience alone can decide" (p. 4).

What we do demur to, if not "despise," is the attitude adopted by Dr. Lloyd of measuring the difficulty of reform, not by the judgment of an experienced teacher, but of a schoolboy before he is taught; a boy who is to be allowed to believe himself incapable of distinguishing between the e-vowels of il mène and été. We do not share the low opinion which Dr. Lloyd appears to hold of the powers of the general body of English teachers.

Another sentence of the pamphlet which Dr. Lloyd is still unwilling to read, even when quoted in the ACADEMY, must be quoted again:

"The margin of doubt that remains, though from the scientific point of view it is considerable, is nevertheless, when seen from the standpoint of the practical teacher, confined within very narrow limits."

Now of all the numerous points in which Dr. Lloyd differs from us there is only one—that of the aspirates—in which the divergence between us exceeds these "narrow limits"; and in this case, as will be seen, we cannot admit that there is any "considerable doubt from the scientific point of view."

We observe that Dr. Lloyd tacitly admits the objection we urged in our former letter, from the teacher's point of view, to the Demosthenic pronunciation—namely, that p and u were then sounded alike; and there are other equally serious objections of a similar kind. Dr. Lloyd's own contention, were it true, that η also was then identical in sound with p and u, would furnish another not less weighty. It may be taken, then, that the questions he wishes us to discuss refer to the age of Pericles, and that the matter of η and ε in Aristotle's time is of academic interest only; but as Dr. Lloyd's view of it appears to me entirely contrary to the evidence, I will deal with it in conclusion.

On the question of the aspirates, our critic accuses us of misrepresenting Brugmann's view, and of neglecting a recent "authority," and then adduces one or two well-known comments* on a small part of the evidence for the view which we hold in common with Brugmann, Gustav Meyer, Meisterhans, and Blass: namely, that the aspirates contained an explosive and a genuine aspiration throughout the fifth and fourth centuries B.C.

With regard to the first-named scholar, if Dr. Lloyd had done himself the justice of consulting the book to which we refer in our preface, he would have found that his alarm was baseless. Dr. Lloyd quotes the Grundriss, which we did not cite. But Brugmann's more recent Griechische Grammatik (2<sup>o</sup> Aufl.), which we did cite, gives a fuller statement of his views on all that concerns Greek. On p. 52, after saying, as he does in the Grundriss, that we cannot state the exact time in the different dialects at which the Greek aspirates became spirants, he adds:†

"We must infer that the explosive element still remained wherever we find κ, τ, π written for χ, θ, φ, and conversely. . . . Also the transcription of the Greek aspirates by c, t, p at Rome and the representation of Latin p by φ (Ξαλφικιος and the like, see Meisterhans, Gr. p. 60) indicate that the explosive element was then still preserved."

Dr. Lloyd further "commends" to us a dissertation on the Greek aspirates which he thinks has "escaped our notice." We may be allowed to "commend" to him in return a review of the dissertation in question, which appeared in the Classical Review for February. In that article one of us has stated the reasons which prevent us from regarding the dissertation as an "authority." Seeing that it was sent for review six months before our pamphlet appeared, and that the notice of it was published nearly two months before Dr. Lloyd's letter, the omission was hardly on our side. These things are an amusing commentary on what Dr. Lloyd calls the "trenchant" tone of his share in this correspondence.

On the practical question, whether t+h, p+h, k+h, are teachable values, we are anxious to obtain opinions, and we are glad to know Dr. Lloyd's. On the main historical question I may be allowed to quote the concluding sentences of the review just mentioned; the last concerns the mediae also:

"I do not think that anyone who has really grasped the argument from the detachableness of the aspiration in vulgar Attic inscriptions of the fifth and fourth centuries B.C. (χιδών and κιδών for χιδών, εὐδρόκουντι for εὐδρόκουντι, κ.τ.λ.) can have any doubt that θ, φ, and χ each contained an explosive and a genuine aspiration in Attic at that date. The evidence of transcription into and from other languages, to which the writer hardly alludes, is equally decisive, and in the same direction (see, for instance, the well-known passages Oic. Orator, §160, and Quintilian I. iv. 14) and there is a mass of evidence of the same kind in the transcriptions of Greek words into early Latin and the other Italic dialects (e.g., Lat. purpura, apua, tus, Osc. Meslikio- melixlor. Santia- Savthia, and conversely in Greek letters, Φελεχα-, the Oscan word corresponding to Lat. Volcanus). Compare, too, the difficulty with which a representation was found for Oscan and Etruscan f in the Greek alphabets (both Chalcidian and Ionic) of the fifth and fourth centuries B.C., and in the Latin fh of the fifth (The Phaedrus).

"Since the essay was published fresh evidence of a most conclusive character from the transcription of a very large number of Demotic words into Greek letters in the two Gnostic papyri of London and Leyden has been lucidly set forth by Hess in the current number of Indog. Forschungen (vi., p. 223). The papyri are ascribed on palaeographical grounds to the second century A.D. φ is the invariable transcription of Demotic p+h, while Demotic f is represented by a special sign taken over from the Egyptian alphabet; χ is the invariable transcription of Demotic k+h and g+h (Demotic g is voiceless), never of the Demotic spirant h, which is represented by another borrowed Egyptian sign, while θ always transcribes t+h except before i and e, when it also represents u, showing that in this position θ had become a spirant at this date. Hess shows by similar evidence that γ was then in all positions an explosive, and δ an explosive except before i, where it had become a spirant."

This last evidence, coupled with the invariable representation of θ, γ, δ by the Lat. h, g, d, and the converse, may perhaps excuse us from any more detailed statement of our reasons for agreeing in the matter with Brugmann, Gustav Meyer, Dr. Lloyd, and Blass at the bottom of p. 108, and rejecting altogether, in the same company, the untenable explanation of the name μύση which Blass most inconsistently advances in the middle of the same page. That technical term may be explained, I think, simply by reference to the amount of noise or audible resistance involved in the formation respectively of φ (δασφ), θ (μέσθ), π (ψιδόν), as the word δασφ suggests; the voiced mediae involving the buzz or hum of the vibrated breath or "voice" in the mouth, which may be heard by the speaker himself, and occasionally by others, before the "explosion" takes place. This conjecture may be right or wrong; but, in any case, we agree with Dr. Lloyd in thinking that the evidence as to the sound of θ, γ, δ is quite clear. It is curious that he should demur to our neglecting Blass's impossible conjecture ("that θ=π+½h," as Dr. Lloyd writes it), and, all the more, since we have repeatedly indicated (e.g. Pamphlet, p. iv.) the far higher degree of authority which we attribute to Brugmann and Gustav Meyer.

With regard to p and u in the fourth century B.C., the following are the facts, which we take directly from Meisterhans (Gramm. d. Attischen Inschr., 2<sup>o</sup> Aufl., pp. 28 and 52). In that century p and u are constantly confused and clearly had the same sound; whereas η is only written once and ε twice for p or u, while p or u is written regularly 509 times, and is never wrongly inserted (as it is after 200 B.C., when η had become identical with ε and p). To any student of epigraphy this is absolutely convincing evidence that the three omissions of ε are merely accidental, and that the sound of η was clearly distinct from that of ε. Against this Dr. Lloyd has only a doubtful inference from a passage of Aristotle (Poetics, c. 21) which, he thinks, shows that Aristotle regarded α as the (not α) long sound corresponding to ε. All that Aristotle says is that πολλος is used φωρητύ μακρότερον "with a longer vowel" than the true (eikelou) stem vowel of πλεως. What reasonable critic could extract from this a statement that η corresponded in quality more closely to ε than did ε? Indeed, what evidence is there that such a question ever entered Aristotle's mind when he was choosing his example of epic lengthenings? I am glad that the passage should have been quoted, for what it may be worth, against itacism; but it is not hard to see why it has been left to Dr. Lloyd to urge it as evidence against the distinction between η and ε.

With regard to the fifth century, we still assert that it is a "commonplace" in all the authorities on Attic grammar that η was "open" and ε "close," though some hold, as we stated, that to the close ε was added a short i. The addition or omission of the i after a close ε is a small matter from the practical standpoint: so small that it would be difficult to distinguish classes of forms by means of it, as Dr. Lloyd wishes to do. But the distinction between close and open ε is, as we have pointed out, essential to enable the class to separate the second vowel of καλέ from that of καλέ; and I cannot understand how Dr. Lloyd can suggest to your readers that it is a help to the teaching of modern languages to disregard it. Into the academic question as between Brugmann and Blass I do not propose here to enter, further than to say that the apparent balance of evidence which the latter adduces has been far more simply explained by Brugmann (p. 34, note 2), and, in any case, is not enough, in my opinion, to outweigh the probability that the e-vowels and diphthongs underwent a parallel, not a converse, development in Attic to that (1) which they underwent in the neighbouring Boeotian and Corinthian dialects; and (2) which the o-vowels and diphthongs underwent in Attic itself. The "greater phonetic probability" which Dr. Lloyd accepts from Blass is merely apparent; a close monophthongal ε passes into i (as did Gr. ε ultimately) quite as readily, e.g.

* On the double aspirates I will only observe: (1) That the evidence of cognate languages by no means points to more than one aspirate as the original initial sound of χιδών, φθίω, &c.; (2) That the modern Greek change of φθ and χθ to ft and cht shows indeed that the second aspirate contained an explosive (θ=τ), but proves nothing different as to the sound of t ε first, since in Modern Greek an original ττ and κκ equally becomes ft and cht (see Hatzidakis Neugr. Gram. p. 161f.).

† "Verbleiben des explosiven Elementes ist überall da anzunehmen wo für χ θ φ, κ τ π geschrieben wurde und umgekehrt. . . . Auch weisen die Transkription der griech. Aspiraten durch c, t, p, bei den Römern und die Widrigkeit von lat. p durch Ξαλφικιος u. dgl., s. Meisterhans, Gr. S. 60) noch auf Verschlusslaut hin."

* The whole passage shows that the "bilabial" criticism of the Fundanus story is beside the mark. "Antiqui dicebant) fordeum faudoque, pro aspiratione similis littera utentes. Nam contra Graeci aspirare solent ut pro Fundanio Olcero testem, qui primam eius litteram dicere non possit, irridet." Quintilian is talking about h, not about any "bilabial f."

in Oscan and Romance, as does the diphthong ei.

With Dr. Lloyd's curious speculations on the question of accent, and with our recommendations as to the o-vowels, I will deal next week.

R. S. CONWAY.

SCIENCE NOTES.

THE following is the list of fifteen candidates who have been selected by the council of the Royal Society for election to the fellowship: Sir George S. Clarke, Dr. J. N. Collie, Dr. A. M. W. Downing, Dr. F. Elgar, Prof. A. Gray, Dr. G. J. Hinde, Prof. H. A. Miers, Dr. F. W. Mott, Dr. John Murray, Prof. Karl Pearson, the Rev. T. R. R. Stebbing, Prof. C. Stewart, Mr. W. E. Wilson, Mr. H. B. Woodward, Dr. W. P. Wynne.

MR. FREDERIC DU CANE GODMAN—well known for his studies on tropical insects, and for his munificent donations to the national collection—has been elected a trustee of the British Museum.

THE evening discourse at the Royal Institution next Friday will be on "Cable-laying in the Amazon River," by Mr. Alexander Siemens, with illustrations.

AT the meeting of the Anthropological Institute, to be held on Tuesday next, Mr. R. J. Horton-Smith will read a paper on "The Cranial Characteristics of the South Saxons, compared with those of some of the other Races of Great Britain"; and Mr. H. W. Seton-Karr will exhibit some stone implements discovered by him in Somaliland.

THE trustees of the estate of the late Earl of Moray have granted a donation of £1875 to the Ben Nevis Observatory.

THE annual meeting of the members of the Royal Institution of Great Britain was held last Monday, with Sir James Crichton-Browne, treasurer, in the chair. The report of the committee of visitors for the year 1895, testifying to the continued prosperity and efficient management of the Institution, was read and adopted. The real and funded property now amounts to above £100,000, entirely derived from the contributions and donations of the members and of others appreciating the value of the work of the Institution. Seventy-two new members were elected in 1895, and sixty-three lectures and nineteen evening discourses were delivered. The books and pamphlets presented in 1895 amounted to about 260 volumes, making, with 594 volumes (including periodicals bound) purchased by the managers, a total of 854 volumes added to the library in the year.

WE quote the following from the Times:

"The resolution of the Government of India on the annual report of the Geological Survey for the past official year mentions that, although survey work was continued in Rewah, the Central Provinces, and Baluchistan, the amount of work of this kind done was much less than usual, owing to officers being withdrawn for inquiries on economic subjects. The Rewah survey has led to some modification of the views hitherto held in regard to the Vindhyan system, the chief point established being the separation of the lower from the upper Vindhyan. On the north-western frontier, the survey extended to the range between the Luni plain and the Zhoob country to the Tochi valley, and to the country lying between Dera Ghazi Khan and Zurat. The publications of the Survey during the year include a fresh volume of the 'Palaeontologica Indica,' dealing with the fossils from the ceratite beds on the lower Trias of the Salt Range, and part of a volume on Himalayan fossils descriptive of the Cephalopoda of the Muschelkalk. This is the first instalment of the monographs now being prepared in Europe, for which a special grant has been made by the Government of India. Certain miocene fossils of Upper Burma were also treated in a publication of the Survey. As to the economic side of the work of the department, the oil-boring operations at Sukkar were continued without success; in Burma Dr. Noetling brought to a close his inquiries into the occurrence and nature of earth oil; and in various other districts mineralogical surveys have been made, and existing gold and coal mines in Mysore, the Central Provinces, and Hyderabad have been visited, while proposals for the regulation of the working of mines in India have been drawn up."

PHILOLOGY NOTES.

THE anniversary meeting of the Royal Asiatic Society will be held on Tuesday next, at 4 p.m., at 22, Albemarle-street, for the election of president and council, and the adoption of the annual report. The secretary, Prof. T. W. Rhys Davids, will also read a paper from Mr. J. Takakusu, of Japan, on "The Discovery of a Pali Work in the Chinese Buddhist Collection."

AT the last meeting for the present session of the Viking Club, to be held on Friday next, at the King's Weigh House Rooms, the Rev. E. McClure will read a paper on "The Influence of the Northmen on these Islands, as determined by existing Personal and Place Names."

PROF. MAX MÜLLER writes:

"The suggestion which I made some time ago that the Pāli text of the Tiṭṭhaka, as preserved on the marble slabs of the Kuthodaw, should be reproduced, seems to have been anticipated by the Burmans themselves. I learn from Mr. Ferrars that a reproduction of the engraved text of the Kuthodaw has been undertaken at Rangoon, and that it is already out of print. However, the printers have only got so far as about two-fifths of the Vinaya Pīṭaka, namely, the Parasika (Parāṅika), Paṭikā (Pāṭikā). They are now engaged on the Sāḍawa (Kūḷa-vagga), Mahāwa (Mahāvagga), and Paḍāwa (Parivāra-pāṭhā), but these are not expected to be in type for some years. Still the intention is to print the whole, as the Burmans have given up their prejudice against paper and print. Second-hand copies of the first volume can still be procured at Rangoon."

REPORTS OF SOCIETIES.

VIKING CLUB—(Friday, April 17.)

THE Rev. A. SANDISON, president, in the chair.—The annual general meeting of the club was held at the King's Weigh House.—Mr. A. W. Johnston presented a pair of "rivlins," or shoes made of undressed hide, formerly in general use in Orkney and Shetland, and still manufactured in Sanday, Orkney, and read some notes on the derivation of the word rivlin.—The president commented on differences between the "rivlins" under discussion and those which he remembered in use in Shetland in his youth.—Mr. F. T. Norris, hon. editor, then read a paper on "The Worship of Freya and other Teutonic Goddesses and Gods in Roman Britain." Alluding to the erroneous belief popularly held, that the first connexion of Teutonic peoples with Britain took place at the period of the Saxon Conquest, he pointed out that numerous Coloniae and Municipia were created by imperial rescripts, consisting largely of time-expired German soldiers. The Notitia Imperii of Theodosius, the six bronze rescripts discovered in England, and other records, prove that about two-thirds of the garrison, especially in the later years of the occupation, were of one or other of the Teutonic races, in which designation were included the Belgae, whose former frontier lines on the Continent were the Seine, the Rhine, and the Straits of Dover. The various Municipia, Coloniae, and Stations colonised or occupied by German troops were then passed in review, and an inquiry set on foot as to the extent of the influence on the social and, in particular, on the religious life of the population of Britain, which such a large constituent of Teutonic people must exert. The Deae Matres and Deae Matronae were distinctively German divinities, representing Freya and her maidens; and the very numerous temples, altars, and other dedications to them found in Britain, not to speak of those discovered on the Continent, showed the high favour in which they were held not only by civilians, but by soldiers, and attest the essentially peaceful and domestic tendency of the Teutonic genius. The lecturer then alluded to the catholicity of the theological views of the Romans, which led them to regard alien gods with similar attributes to their own as identical with them. Caesar's statement that the Gauls worshipped Mercury under the name of Teutates was cited in confirmation. Inverting this argument, it was contended that the half Romanised Germans, when worshipping Mars or Neptune, or other Roman gods, really worshipped, by a kind of transferred worship, their native gods. The case of the altar found in the north of England dedicated to "Neptuno Sarrabo Sino" was cited in support, the limiting adjective Sarrabo standing for the river Sarr, showing that the dedicant intended not the Roman Neptune, but Nike, the god of rivers of old German mythology. The "gods of the auxiliaries," as described by antiquaries, were then examined in detail. They were declared to be inventions, which had no existence save in the imagination of antiquaries. Mogont, Vettres, Cocidlo, Mapono, Belatucadro, and many others, with the various goddesses, were passed in review, and their names shown to be merely topographical expressions, and not personal titles at all. In the case of the dedications to single goddesses, it was suggested that Freya was most probably meant.—In the slides thrown on the screen the rudiments of a distinctive Teutonic art and architecture were pointed out: in particular, attention was called to two Batavian terra-cotta altars of peculiar basket shape construction, which were then for the first time published.—In answer to Mr. R. A. Macalister, the lecturer stated that the name Garmangabis had never been identified. The identifications the lecturer had put forward were the result of his own independent research, in several of which instances he was pleased to notice since that Mr. Roach Smith agreed with him. As to Garmangabis, it might stand for a topographical appellation like Germangan, "region of the Germans."—Mr. A. F. Major, hon. sec., congratulated the lecturer on his paper, which had shed light on a subject little known and imperfectly understood. But while it had been demonstrated that there was a very large Teutonic element in the garrison of Britain in Roman times, he had been disappointed to find that the identification of the deities they worshipped with the gods of the Northern mythology rested on very vague and slender grounds, and was by no means conclusive. Even Mr. Norris's identification of the Deae Matres or Matronae with Freya and her maidens, rested apparently on the occurrence, in one instance only, of the emblem of a boar on an altar to these deities, the boar being sacred to Freya. But, so far as he remembered, the conjunction of Freya with attendant maidens, or other goddesses, in northern mythology was not usual. Frigga, whose handmaids were often mentioned, was at least as likely to be the deity intended, while some elements seemed to point to the three Norns. At the same time, Mr. Norris had given strong grounds for his contention that these deities were Teutonic. He had also conclusively shown that the names of fancied deities were, in reality, place-names, used to indicate the gods whose names the worshipper withheld, or only mentioned under a Roman name. He hoped he would pursue the subject, and possibly obtain clearer evidence of identity.—Mr. G. M. Atkinson thought that the numerous dedications to the Deae Matres might point to a Latin, not to a Teutonic, idea. The sculpture shown on some of the altars was of a very primitive type. He had seen the so-called Roman Wall near Glasgow that ran from the Forth to the Clyde, but this was not really a wall, but an earthwork piled up, in which the separate layers of sods could still be traced. The ditch before and road behind were still distinctly visible. He should like to ask the lecturer if the name of Dover was not Celtic. It was so named from the little river Dour which still flowed through the valley, Dour meaning in Celtic "black." The thanks of the meeting were due to Mr. Norris for the pains he had taken in working up his subject. Were there not to be found on the course of the Roman Wall, as in other parts of Britain, bricks bearing the names of the legions?—The president said that he wished to express the great interest with which he personally had listened to the lecture. It was a subject that he had studied very little, but what he had heard from Mr. Norris had opened up a new and surprising field for thought. If the paper had a fault, it was that there was too much detail. He remembered a story of a little boy who, allowed to help himself to some plums out of a jar, grasped such a handful that he found he could not withdraw his hand without letting go a great part of his spoil. He himself felt somewhat in the same plight mentally; but at the same time detail was unavoidable in such a paper as this, and the lecturer must have found it hard to know what to omit. Mr. Major's criticisms had indicated the impression in his own mind also; and he was bound to say that he thought the identification of Freya weak, and that at present Mr. Norris had not even made out a case of strong presumption. Starting from Caesar's statement that the Germans worshipped Roman deities under German names, Mr. Norris assumed that the converse was also the case. But would the Germans be likely to bring themselves to worship their home deities under a foreign name? or, rather, when their thoughts turned to the gods of their fathers, would it not be under the names that had been familiar to them in their childhood's days?—Mr. Norris, in reply, said that he would first point out, in answer to Mr. Atkinson's questions, that no inscribed bricks were found near the Wall, because in those northern counties bricks were little used, stone being abundant; but the records of the regiments quartered in the country were innumerable. With regard to the Wall, he must point out that there were three Roman Walls, so-called: the one he had been describing, that of Hadrian, built of stone, having a second wall or earthen vallum running parallel as an advanced work; while the Antonine Wall, mentioned by Mr. Atkinson, was situated further north. With regard to Mr. Major's criticisms, he admitted that he had not yet fully developed his theory of Freya's identification, though in his own mind he was quite clear on the point. As to the general question whether Germanic races would worship their ancestral gods under Roman names, it must be borne in mind that the Germans in question were those who had accepted Roman pay and conformed to Roman customs, on which account they were ostracised and hated by the free Germans. But he had pointed out where, under the name of Neptune, it was clear that the god worshipped was Nike, the God of the River Sarr; and he thought we might fairly deduce from this a similar practice as prevailing in other cases. Besides, we know that the Romans did not worship the Deae Matres; and the fact of the gods being constantly identified only by a locality must be traced to the German custom of never mentioning the names of their gods, which Tacitus gives as an instance of their reverence.

FINE ART.

THE ROYAL ACADEMY.

1.

ALL sorts of contrary influences would appear to have been at work both within and without the precincts of the Royal Academy, if we may draw inferences from the exhibition as it stands, and from well-authenticated reports as to what has been excluded from its galleries. Those painters of the newer schools who belong now to the Academy—Mr. J. S. Sargent, Mr. Swan, Mr. Clausen, Mr. Stanhope-Forbes, Mr. Arthur Hacker, Mr. Solomon, and others—occupy, of course, in the exhibition the prominent places to which they are, as of right, entitled. The nude, treated from various points of view and with varying success, flourishes at Burlington House as it has hardly flourished on any previous occasion. Another innovation, with which we are by no means disposed to quarrel, is the hanging on the line of Mr. Orchardson's sumptuous full-length "David Stewart, Esq., of Banbury," in a place of honour in Gallery No. III., which it fills with becoming dignity. Is this an abrogation of the famous rule excluding full-lengths from the line, which caused the secession of Gainsborough; or only an exceptional favour accorded to a distinguished member of the Academy and, if we mistake not, of the year's hanging committee? Or does the rule, perchance, only apply to life-size full-length figures standing erect? We have a vague recollection that the same privilege was accorded to M. Carolus-Duran for his full-length portrait of the Comtesse Greffulhe, but cannot be sure as to this. With these hopeful signs of the times we note, however, others of a disquieting nature, from which a quite contrary spirit may be inferred; and these coincide awkwardly with the vanishing from the scene of the late Lord Leighton, who, whatever estimate may ultimately be formed of his polished and over-fastidious art, will be remembered as the generous patron of young artists, ever determined that fair play should be shown even to those with whose artistic tendencies he had the least sympathy. We would not for a moment imply that Sir J. E. Millais, in this or any other duty of his high office, lags behind his distinguished predecessor; but, unfortunately, the state of his health must impair his authority, and prevent him, during his year of office, from taking an active part in the proceedings of the Royal Academy. The committee are alone responsible for the acceptance or rejection of the pictures of the year, as for their arrangement when they have passed the preliminary ordeal. Still there is authority of another kind, such as without open pressure may be exercised by the titular head of the Academy, when he is—as he should without question be—a man of the world, of a personality not less imposing than gracious, as well as a distinguished artist.

It is an open secret that the committee has this year rejected the picture of Mr. Henry S. Tuke, one of the most distinguished artists of the younger generation, and one whom the Academy has up to the present time greatly delighted to honour. It is hardly conceivable, judging by his publicly exhibited works, that this canvas should have fallen below the modest standard of merit exacted by the Academy; and what that standard is, we can gather without going beyond the line itself. Moreover, the action of the committee appears doubly foolish, when we consider that, before many years have elapsed, Mr. Tuke must inevitably take his place among the Associates. If report is not in this case rumour with the lying tongue, Mr. Charles Furse, one of the most stimulating and original painters of our school, has on this occasion met with no better fate. Yet, putting aside Mr. J. S. Sargent, there is no portrait-painter of the day from whom we have more to hope. Is it to be believed that the painter of the "Robert Bridges" and the "Lord Roberts of Candahar" is not worthy to mate with certain Academicians—we leave the reader to pick out their names for himself—of whose works on the walls we must in charity say, "Non ragioniam di lor, ma guarda e passa?"

Again, all who are at all familiar with French art and French exhibitions are well aware that Mr. Alexander Harrison is one of the best known and most highly appreciated members of the Franco-American group—one of those most in earnest in their search after novelty in truth. Should the Academy frankly declare, "We want our wall-space for our own British-born artists, and cannot promise to hang any foreign outsiders except as a matter of favour," we could readily understand such an attitude, though we might not deem it a very admirable one. To accept Mr. Harrison's pictures, and to hang one of them as "The Great Mirror" (No. 295) is hung, is absolutely inexcusable. We note, further, that out of the chief exponents of the so-called Glasgow school Mr. Lavery alone is represented—and that by a portrait-group interesting in its audacious no-composition rather than pictorially attractive. Mr. James Guthrie, whose place in the front rank of modern portrait-painters is well recognised in the art-centres of Paris and Munich, reserves himself, apparently, for the Salon of the Champs de Mars in the former city, and the "Secessionisten" in the latter, since he contributes nothing to the Academy.

Though nothing Mr. J. S. Sargent sends to Burlington House quite equals in brilliancy and significance the full-length "Countess Clara of Aldringen" at the New Gallery, the group of portraits by which he is here represented constitutes the chief attraction of the year's exhibition. Apart from his technical qualities—his unsurpassed breadth and certainty of touch, his colour now strong in its reticence, now impatient of conventional restraint—he has a manner of stating his case which compels attention. He may not always carry conviction, he may even excite in the beholder a rebellious spirit, but he will not be eluded: there is no remaining indifferent to his work. His greatest popular success this year will be the remarkable three-quarter length, "The Right Hon. Joseph Chamberlain, M.P.," which about exhausts the possibilities of a subject, not so interesting to the painter who seeks to bring to the surface the subtle complexities of a human individuality, as to him who should be in love with authority of mien, with swiftness and vitality. Notable points are especially the superb modelling of the mouth, the intensity of the questioning gaze, the Velasquez-like conciseness with which the hair is rendered, the eagerness expressed in an attitude of seeming quietude. The "Sir George Lewis" is very much less successful—indeed, a bad Sargent, though not exactly a bad picture. The vivacity of the touch, as well as that of the conception, has been toned down, the colour deadened, with the result that the canvas has at first sight rather the aspect of a picture of the Austro-Hungarian school than of one from the hand of the brilliant artist who has signed it. In the charming arrangement in silver-white and black and grey, "Mrs. Ian Hamilton," we have an example proving that Mr. Sargent can on occasion command the grateful quality of repose, as well as that of momentariness and extreme vivacity. The general design, so cunning in its seeming artlessness, admirably expresses a certain indolent distinction in the sitter. Incomparably dexterous, and yet not obtrusive in its bravura, is the painting of the silken gauze draperies with which the white satin dress is trimmed. The sheen of this satin is in the skirt somewhat excessive, since it tends to deprive the head of its right value. A little disconcerting at first, but of a most persuasive charm when we get better acquainted with it, is the "Portrait of a Lady." Here upon a richly toned background of brownish black, or blackish brown, formed by a Japanese screen, we see a young and comely lady, in white satin set off with splendid pearls, standing erect with something of self-assertiveness (or shall we rather say self-reliance?) in her attitude. Hanging loosely over her shoulder is a short cloak of the most brilliant geranium-coloured satin lined with pale pink, making a colour-note only remotely connected with, yet well set off by, the rest of the harmony. Its effect is something like that of a ringing trumpet tone in an orchestral passage of muted strings. The critic may protest on principle, yet he will end by being subdued.

To turn from this brilliant series of canvases to the productions of another popular portrait-painter, Mr. Luke Fildes, is to experience a certain shock. His likenesses of ladies, "The Shepherdess: Portrait of Mrs.

Stuart M. Samuel," and "Mrs. Frank Bibby," are insipid, if careful, productions, uninteresting in execution, and without character or pictorial charm. The painter of the capital "Mrs. Luke Fildes" although he must always lack spontaneity, can and must do better than this. His presentation portrait, "Frederick Treves, Esq., F.R.C.S.," is an honest, powerful piece of work, hard in outline and modelling, but much more convincing than the perfunctory presentations of ladies just now dealt with.

Prof. Hubert Herkomer is also exceedingly unequal this year; but, at any rate, he has the power to impress—very disagreeably at times—but yet forcibly. Allowing for his mannerisms of execution, and for that unsatisfactory modelling which at first sight looks big and bold, yet is rarely, if ever, solid and satisfying, the three-quarter length "Dr. J. S. Williams" is a powerful and sympathetic rendering of a fine subject. The painter is here subtler, and more en rapport with his sitter than he generally has time to be. In "The Right Hon. Sir Francis Jeune" we have another vigorous performance, more striking at first sight, if much more superficial and obvious, than the last-named work. The rendering of the black-and-gold robe is here very dexterous. But how can a painter, who, with one or two of his female portraits, has achieved high celebrity, bring forward anything so empty, so inadequate in its pretence to richness of colour and breadth of handling, as "The Hon. Mrs. Gervase Beckett"? To say of his huge ambitious landscape with figures, "Back to Life: a District Nurse taking a Child out for the First Walk after a Long Illness," that it represents what is least true and least admirable in art may appear excessive, but is, in our view, but an unconventionally frank statement of obvious truth. The figure-drawing suggests in its mannerisms Frederick Walker and Pinwell, but without the sympathetic observation of the one, or the redeeming passion of the other. The convalescent child looks more like one of the fashionable voyantes of the day, than the simple village maid newly risen from her bed of sickness and taking in the world again: the whole informing sentiment is that of melodrama conscious of a public, not that of nature. And, again, the landscape, though well conceived, is not worked out with the sincerity or the loving truth in local passages which charm us in his prototypes, the painters just named.

We do not remember to have seen from the brush of Mr. Briton Riviere a finer or more pathetic work than the portrait "J. F. H. Read, Esq., and his Dogs." With him, too, we must make allowances, and suffer as we may the drawbacks of an unpleasant mannerism of colour—in this case the abuse of a pale diffused light equalising and weakening everything, yet without sparkle or brilliancy. Nevertheless, in this presentment of grand old age, solitary yet a little consoled by that love which surpasses in unquestioning sincerity the love of man, the artist gives us, without stepping outside the modesty of nature, something more than a mere portrait. It is not alone that the dogs are superbly drawn and characterised, with no undue substitution of human for canine pathos, but that by an undefinable yet all-powerful link, no less than by the lines of his well-harmonised composition, he connects them with the noble-looking old man their master.

It is an open secret that the state of health of the actual President of the Academy, Sir J. E. Millais, has given, both before and since his election, grave cause for anxiety to his friends and the public. Such being the case, it would be unfair, as well as ungracious, to subject his contributions to the year's display to a searching criticism. The best of his portraits is unquestionably the "Sir Richard Quain, M.D."—a work worthy in conception, if not, as it at present stands, in execution, to rank with the master's most celebrated portraits of men. In the "St. John the Baptist," oddly named here "A Forerunner," we find, with a different technique, much of the touching naïveté of the early Pre-Raphaelite time. It groups with those pictures of last year, "Speak! Speak!" and "St. Stephen," in which this curious return to the ideals of youth was so strongly to be traced. The Precursor, depicted here in early manhood, has something of radiant freshness, of buoyant, self-reliant strength which it is not easy to reconcile with one's preconceived notion of the saint as prematurely worn by the consuming fires of his sacred passion.

With the bust-portrait, "Alfred Gilbert, R.A.," Mr. Watts adds yet another to the great series in which he has portrayed—for himself first, for the nation afterwards—the notabilities of his own time. This is a capital presentment to the well-known sculptor, designed with that noble simplicity of style which so rarely deserts the veteran artist, and with a less evident seeking to evolve the ideal from the real than we have been accustomed to in works of the same class from the same hand. In the Græco-Venetian idyll, "The Infancy of Jupiter," it would be easy to pick out those technical shortcomings which, in Mr. Watts's later work, are only too obvious. Let us rather admire, with due deduction for these, that kinship with the best art of the Renaissance and of Greece, which arises in this case far less from any conscious imitation than from natural sympathy and parity of aim.

The unfinished "Clytie" of the late Lord Leighton is marked by a breadth of design, by a genuine passion, for which it would not be easy to find a parallel in any of his later works. True, there are one or two passages in the design which, though they may prove to be correct, are disquieting to the eye. Moreover, the enveloping draperies might have been made more truly to express the form of the hapless Clytie, who kneels in passionate pleading as she fronts the sun-god, veiled in his lurid clouds of gold and black, and receives back angry scorn for despairing entreaty. It is not alone the relative spontaneity of the execution, which has fortunately escaped from being fined down to an overpolished perfection; it is the genuine spontaneity and the concentrated force of the conception that win us.

CLAUDE PHILLIPS.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

MR. B. T. BATSFORD will issue towards the end of this month the first volume of an important work on Modern Opera Houses and Theatres, by Messrs. Edwin O. Sachs and Ernest A. E. Woodrow, which has been long in preparation. It is intended to be a continuation of the atlas on theatres of an earlier period, which was published at Paris in 1842. The object of the authors is to reproduce on a large scale, and with working plans, chosen examples of the play-houses that have recently been erected in all countries of Europe, together with a treatise on the planning and construction of theatres, and supplements on stage machinery and protection from fire. The first volume—dealing with Austria, Germany, Great Britain, the Netherlands, Russia, and Scandinavia—will consist of one hundred photo-lithographic plates and as many drawings in the text, together with 75 pages of letterpress. It is hoped that a second volume, including France, Italy, Spain, and Switzerland, will be ready by the autumn.

A COPIOUSLY illustrated article dealing with the Studies of Sir Edward Burne-Jones will form one of the chief features of the mid-May number of the Studio. The supplement accompanying this part will be an original etching by Mr. E. W. Charlton.

DRAWINGS by the Princess of Wales and the Princess Louise will appear in the next number of Black and White.

THERE is now on view, at the new rooms of the Alpine Club, in Savile-row, an exhibition of Alpine photographs, which will remain open until June 1. Another exhibition not mentioned in the ACADEMY of last week is a series of pictures of the North Sea, by Mr. Otto Sinding, at the Hanover Gallery of Messrs. Hollender and Cremelli, in New Bond-street.

THE fifth annual general meeting of the Ex Libris Society is to be held on Friday next, at the Westminster Palace Hotel. As usual, there will be a loan exhibition of book-plates of all ages and countries, as well as of books, engravings, and MSS. relating to book-plates, heraldry, and genealogy.

AT a meeting of the Society of Arts on Tuesday next, Mr. W. Biscombe Gardner will read a paper on "Wood-engraving Compared with other Reproductive Art, and its Future as a Fine Art."

DURING the whole of next week Messrs. Sotheby will be engaged in selling the second portion of the English series of the Montagu collection of coins, from the reign of Ethelred II. to that of Edward VI. It is stated that a third portion (from Mary to Anne) will be put up for sale in November; and we suppose that there are yet more to follow. It seems unnecessary again to expatiate upon the extraordinary rarity and fineness of this collection, or upon the loving minuteness with which it has been catalogued. As an example of both features, we will quote one or two of the notes. Of a gold angel of Richard III., but with the name of Edward V., we read:

"Mr. Montagu has published (Num. Chron.) a full description of this remarkable coin. It is the connecting link between the coinage of Richard and his nephew. It is clear that on the reverse the letter x on the left of the mast has been substituted for an z.

Again, of a half George noble of Henry VIII:

"From the Shepherd collection (lot 211). This very interesting and unique coin was brought from Paris many years ago by Mr. Curt, the dealer, who sold it to the Rev. E. T. Shepherd for £70; at the latter's sale it was purchased by Mr. Montagu for £255. It is evident from the style of lettering, of the inscriptions, which are in Roman characters, that this coin belongs to a later date than the George nobles. The letter x on the reverse is therefore probably the initial of Katherine Howard or Katherine Parr, and not of Katherine of Aragon as on the nobles. This would partly account for the great rarity of the coin, which may be a pattern."

WE have received, and, as usual, found useful for reference in plodding round the Academy, and in subsequent conversations at home, those Academy Notes of Mr. Blackburn (Chatto & Windus), which are so eminently practical—not a picture-book (though sufficiently illustrated for all useful purposes)—but essentially a document and a guide. Among the illustrations we continue to prefer those which are not little photographic reproductions or distortions of the completed pictures, but, rather, those—still, we think, the more numerous—which, being based upon the artist's own sketches "in life," recall the main features of the composition in a way that is absolutely satisfactory, so far as it professes to go.

THE STAGE.

STAGE NOTES.

AGAIN—though we ought, perhaps, to seem to say it with some air of apology—the theatrical event of the week has taken place at a music-hall. We admit that it is the exception—we do not pretend it is the rule. The scene was the Empire in Leicester-square, the time Monday night, and the occasion the return of Yvette Guilbert, engaged, they say, at a salary which would make a tragedian sick with envy. But Yvette is a great artist. Looking well, physically and mentally, just about as éveillé as it is possible for anyone to be, Yvette Guilbert, attired in watered grass-green silk, with one bright-red rose at the breast, sang to us on Monday five songs, which showed much of the range of her repertory, and as two of them were in English—including the immensely popular "I want you, my honey"—it is probable that the whole audience profited, as it has scarcely profited before, by the exhibition of her charm and art. "Les Ingénues," which was the first thing she did, showed the perfection of what the French call her "débit." Every letter in every word had its value. "Grand'mère" was done with the agreeable mixture of dignity and sprightliness which comes to some in their old age. For a young woman, it was a remarkable assumption of the characteristics of an epoch of life some forty years beyond her own. Going to see Yvette, we remained to witness the extraordinary ballet of "Faust." The "Faust" music, or much of it, is given excellently; the spectacle, not so much by reason of individual dances as by reason of the gorgeous, ingenious, and eminently tasteful dressing of perhaps a couple of hundred people—certainly of more than one hundred—is indeed a great one, such as a regular theatre, even the best organised in this respect, would find it very difficult to beat.

MUSIC.

RECENT CONCERTS.

MR. EUGEN D'ALBERT gave his first recital at St. James's Hall yesterday week. His programme, including Beethoven's "Appassionata" Sonata, Schumann's "Fantasia" (Op. 17), two Chopin pieces, and Liszt's "Don Juan," enabled his audience to form a pretty fair estimate of his powers. Of his wonderful mastery of all technical difficulties there can scarcely be two opinions. As he frankly exhibits his skill in pieces which, judged from a purely musical point of view, are worthless, we will deal first with this virtuosity, and then pass on to matters of higher importance.

To listen to the "Don Juan" Fantasia was, indeed, terribly tedious; and yet we know of no other piece of Liszt's that offers such a varied exhibition of the most formidable difficulties. It is the test-piece of all pianists who aspire after the fame of a first-class virtuoso; even Rubinstein, who could invent show pieces on his own account, played the "Don Juan" Fantasia. Mr. d'Albert's performance of it was powerful—nay, phenomenal. As an executant he ranks among the greatest, either of the past or present; and from what we have read we should imagine that he might be compared with Carl Tausig, not only for his technical skill, but for other and less engaging qualities. Let us speak boldly, for we have to deal with a man of no ordinary gifts. Tausig associated his name with that of Bach, but to the detriment of the composer: Mr. d'Albert is pursuing a similar course. The former tried to "highly develop" the classical masters; the latter, if we may judge from the version of Schubert's Impromptu in G which he played, seems inclined to follow in the footsteps of his predecessor.

Why does not Mr. d'Albert use his great talent for the highest purposes of art? Why does he not set a worthy example to others less gifted? By his extraordinary playing of a Bach transcription he carried away, for the moment, his audience, even those who strongly disapprove; smaller pianists who will imitate him as they imitated Tausig; and others will do still greater dishonour to Bach, and render themselves ridiculous.

Mr. d'Albert's interpretation of the "Appassionata" Sonata was highly interesting. At times it may have been spasmodic, as in the Coda of the Allegro, at others, somewhat cold; on the whole, however, the reading displayed breadth, dignity, and due comprehension of the intellectual qualities of the music. In the Schumann "Fantasia," a work in which virtuosity plays a noble part, the pianist again revealed qualities which only belong to a great artist. In both the Beethoven and Schumann, there was, however, something lacking. Mr. d'Albert did not seem to have got at the very heart of the music. Was it nervousness, excitement, which affected him, and prevented him from doing full justice to himself and the composers? We are cautious; for we know from experience that first impressions, at any rate of a great pianist, are not always to be trusted. Nervousness, excitement; surely only some explanation of this kind will account for the cold reading he gave of a Chopin Nocturne. The pianist was well received, and marks of approbation were frequent and hearty. M. d'Albert might, however, have intimated to his audience—and this he could easily have done—that he did not wish applause between the movements of the "Appassionata": such an interruption does great harm to the tone-poem.

A new Suite de Ballet, "In Fairyland," by Mr. F. H. Cowen, was produced on Wednesday at the fourth Philharmonic Concert, under the composer's direction. The various sections of the Suite deal with Nymphs, Giants, Flower Fairies, Gnomes, and Witches. The music shows fancy and great technical skill. In pieces of this kind—short in form and programmatic in character—Mr. Cowen has already given proofs of ability, and in this latest work he more than maintains his reputation. In the characteristic "Dance of Gnomes" and the "Dance of Witches" he has been, and very naturally, influenced by Berlioz and Grieg; but there is no direct imitation. The "Witches' March," the last number of the Suite, was repeated. Of the quiet movements, the graceful "Moonbeam Fairies" deserves special mention. The programme included Schumann's fine Symphony in E flat, but the performance; like that of the Beethoven Symphony at the previous concert, was not up to the mark. Surely the late successful French invasion has not frightened our players and their able conductor! Mr. E. d'Albert performed Liszt's Concerto in E flat, with extraordinary bravura, winning frantic applause, and gave an encore which proved that, even with his Herculean powers, the task had been a heavy one. Of the pianist we have said enough for the present. It was strange that he should have played Beethoven's E flat Concerto at the Mottl Concert, and Liszt at the Philharmonic: the reverse order would have been more logical, certainly more satisfactory.

J. S. SHEDLOCK.

JARROLD &amp; SONS' NEW NOVELS

NOW READY AT ALL LIBRARIES.

THE POWER of the DOG. An

Entirely New Novel. By ROWLAND GREY, Author of "In Sunny Switzerland," "By Virtue of his Office," "Linden-Blumen," "Chris." Crown 8vo, art linen, gilt top, 6s.

"The subject which the author has undertaken to handle is a delicate one, but it is treated with a refinement of feeling and a tenderness of sympathy which leave no doubt as to the wholesomeness of the purpose for which the story has been written. Much as the attention is absorbed by the central characters, there are others in the volume whose gifts and graces are pictured with equal reality, cleverness, and vigour."
"A novel of very considerable power. The story is worked out in a clear and agreeable way, very skillfully retaining the reader's interest throughout."—Aberdeen Daily Free Press.

THE HEART of a MYSTERY. By

T. W. SPRIGHT, Author of "The Mysteries of Heron Dyke," "Quittance in Full," "Wife or No Wife." Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d. [Second Edition.]

"The Heart of a Mystery" is a cleverly written and well constructed story. There is a capital underplot with a strong love interest, for the attractive detail of which we must refer our readers to Mr. Spright's singular and fascinating romance."—Daily Telegraph.

HARUM SCARUM. By Esmé Stuart,

Author of "A Brave Fight," "Cast Ashore," "Miss Fenwick." Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

"Miss Esmé Stuart draws a vivacious and lifelike character sketch of a wilful, untamed Australian girl. An extremely amusing story, teeming with natural and spontaneous fun, that never for a moment degenerates into frivolous buffoonery."—Daily Telegraph.

LINDSAY'S GIRL. By Mrs. Herbert

MARTIN, Author of "Britomart," "Her Début," "Bonnie Leslie," "A Country Mouse," "Cast Adrift," &c. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

"This will prove an attractive story to many readers. The authoress possesses an easy flowing style and writes brightly and in an interesting manner."—Glasgow Herald.

NOW READY, FIRST VOLUME IN

THE "IMPRESSIONIST" SERIES,

BY A NEW AUTHOR, entitled

DUST IN THE BALANCE.

By GEORGE KNIGHT.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

With Title-page and cover design by Laurence Housman.

London: JARROLD & SONS, 10 and 11, Warwick Lane, E.C.; and of all Booksellers.

This day is published, crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

POETRY: an Analysis dealing with its Nature, Power, and Art. By W. H. STANLEY, B.A.

London: AUBREY JONES & Co. (LTD.), 4, Adam Street, Strand, W.C.

THE AUTHOR'S HAIRLESS PAPER.

PAD.

(The LEADENHALL PRESS, Ltd., 50, Leadenhall Street, London, E.C.)

Contains hairless paper, over which the pen slips with perfect freedom. Sixpence each. 2s. per dozen, ruled or plain.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK,

Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane, London.

TWO-AND-A-HALF PER CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS repayable on demand.

TWO PER CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, on the minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.

STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.

For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposit and allows interest monthly on each completed £1.

BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE

FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH.

BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND

FOR FIVE GUINEAS PER MONTH.

The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post free FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

365

SHAVES

FOR 6D.

A Stick of

VINOLIA SHAVING SOAP is said to last a year.

WM. &amp; GEO. LAW.

COFFEE—SUGAR—TEA.

104, NEW OXFORD STREET, W.C.

CLARENDON PRESS LIST.

Vol. I., EASTERN LITURGIES. Just published, demy 8vo, cloth, 21s.

LITURGIES, EASTERN and WESTERN: being the Texts Original or Translated of the Principal Liturgies of the Church. Edited, with Introductions and Appendices, by F. E. BRIGHTMAN, M.A., Pusey Librarian. On the Basis of the former Work by C. E. HAMMOND, M.A., sometime Fellow and Tutor of Exeter College.

Just published, Vols. III. and IV. Second Edition. Demy 8vo, cloth, with Maps and Illustrations, 36s.

ITALY and her INVADERS. By Thomas Hodgkin, D.C.L., Litt.D.

Also, recently published, Vols. I. and II., Second Edition, 42s.; Vols. V. and VI., 36s.

"Mr. Hodgkin has faced a great task with increasing zeal and devotion, and his work bids fair to fill a real want in our historical literature."—Athenaeum.

"A great work which increases in merit as it goes on."—Guardian.

Just published, Vol. IV., demy 8vo, cloth, 12s. 6d.

STUDIA BIBLICA ET ECCLESIASTICA. Essays chiefly in Biblical and Patristic Criticism. By MEMBERS of the UNIVERSITY of OXFORD.

Already published, Vol. I., 10s. 6d.; Vol. II., 12s. 6d.; Vol. III., 16s.

NOTICES ON VOL. III.

"The volume shows what vigorous roots the study of textual criticism has struck in our Universities, and is highly creditable to the Oxford Press."—Saturday Review.

"Valuable to students, and much of it will be found interesting to the general reader."—Westminster Review.

Just published, Part V., 4to, 21s.

A CONCORDANCE to the SEPTUAGINT, and the other Greek Versions of the Old Testament (including the Apocryphal Books). By the late EDWIN HATCH, M.A., and HENRY A. REDPATH, M.A., assisted by other Scholars.

Parts I.-IV. already published, 21s. each.

"This is, and will remain, the Concordance to the Septuagint, and not to the Septuagint only, but to all the Greek versions of the Old Testament and the Apocrypha."—Expository Times.

THE OXFORD ENGLISH DICTIONARY.

NEW SECTION OF VOL. IV. 4to, paper covers, 2s. 6d.

A NEW ENGLISH DICTIONARY ON HISTORICAL PRINCIPLES.

Founded mainly on the Materials Collected by the Philological Society.

FIELD.—FISH. Edited by Henry Bradley, M.A.

"Contains twice as many words as those contained in the corresponding portions of other recent dictionaries, and the number of words illustrated by quotations is four to five times greater."—Times.

A Section of Vol. III., DIFFLUENT—DISBURDEN, will be published on July 1, 1896.

Just published, crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

AN HISTORICAL GRAMMAR of the FRENCH LANGUAGE. From the French of Auguste BRACHET, Lauréat de l'Institut de France. Rewritten and Enlarged by PAGET TOYNBEE, M.A., Balliol College, Oxford, Editor of "Specimens of Old French."

"We have in this work two volumes in one, a revised Brachet and, what we have never had before, an efficient English treatise on French Phonetics. The importance of the latter can hardly be over-rated."—Guardian.

Just published, paper boards, small 4to, 8s. 6d. net cash, with 1 Plate.

AN ALEXANDRIAN EROTIC FRAGMENT, and other Greek Papyri, chiefly Ptolemaic. Edited by BERNARD P. GRENFELL, M.A., sometime Craven Fellow in the University of Oxford, Fellow of Queen's College, Editor of "The Revenue Laws of Ptolemy Philadelphus."

"A result of the excellent work carried on during the last two years in Egypt by Mr. Grenfell and Professor Mahaffy. The highest praise is deserved for the care bestowed on the text, the explanatory notes, and the classified indexes at the end of the volume."—Times.

Just published, Second Edition, Revised, demy 8vo, cloth, 14s.

THE LAW and CUSTOM of the CONSTITUTION. Part II., The Crown. By Sir William R. ANSON, Bart., D.C.L., of the Inner Temple, Barrister-at-Law, Warden of All Souls' College, Oxford.

"A valuable and comprehensive treatise."—Times.

"Every student of law and history, and every citizen who desires to know how we are governed, should procure a copy of this work."—Manchester Guardian.

"The book fulfils a want which no one had supplied, and there can be no doubt that it merits all the success it will obtain."—Scotsman.

Part I.—PARLIAMENT. Second Edition, 8vo, 12s. 6d.

SACRED BOOKS OF THE EAST.

Vol. XXXVIII. Demy 8vo, cloth, 12s. 6d. Edited by MAX MÜLLER.

VEDĀNTA-SŪTRAS. With the Commentary by Sankarācārya. Translated by George Thibaut. Part II., containing a Full Index by Dr. M. WINTERNITZ to Parts I. and II.

A Complete List of the Series will be sent post free on application.

FULL CATALOGUE OF THE CLARENDON PRESS PUBLICATIONS WILL BE SENT POST FREE ON APPLICATION.

LONDON: HENRY FROWDE, CLARENDON PRESS WAREHOUSE, AMEN CORNER, E.C.

Printed by ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD, Lonsdale Printing Works, Chancery Lane; Published by the Proprietor, HENRY VILLERS, 27, Chancery Lane, W.C.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 1254.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, MAY 16, 1896.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

MR. T. FISHER UNWIN'S NEW BOOKS.

LITTLE NOVELS.

MR. FISHER UNWIN is publishing under this title a series of Original Short Stories at the price of 6d. in Paper covers, and 1s. in Cloth.

Two of these are now ready, and a dozen more are in preparation. Great care has been exercised in the selection of the Manuscripts, which are of the class that made the Pseudonym and Autonym Libraries famous, and brought before the public such Authors as Miss HAWKER ("Mademoiselle IRE"), JOHN OLIVER HORRER, POTAPENKO, VESTA SIMMONDS, WALTER RAYMOND, ILSE FRAPAN, ALICE SPINNER, LOUIS BECKE, W. C. SCULLY, and others. The "LITTLE NOVELS" contain 20,000 to 30,000 words each, and are printed in black type. The size is a little larger than the Pseudonyms. The FIRST SEVEN VOLUMES ARE AS FOLLOWS:—

THE WORLD IS ROUND. By Louise Mack. [Now ready.] | NO PLACE for REPENTANCE. By Ellen F. PINSENT. [Now ready.]

THE FOLLOWING WILL BE ISSUED SHORTLY:—

The Problem of Prejudice, Margaret Gray, A Painter's Honeymoon, The Bond of Blood, and Passports.
If you cannot get them at your Bookseller's or Newsagent's, send a postcard to T. FISHER UNWIN, Paternoster Square, London.

INTRODUCTORY LETTER
by W. E. H. LECKY, M.P.

A LIFE SPENT for IRELAND: Leaves from the Diary of W. J. O'Neill DAUNT. With Portrait. Cloth, 21s.
"An extremely entertaining farrago of reminiscence, anecdote, and character-painting."—Daily Mail Gazette.

SECOND EDITION.

THE COURTSHIPS of QUEEN ELIZABETH. A History of the Various Negotiations for her Marriage. By MARTIN A. S. HUME, F.R.H.S. Portraits. Cloth, 12s.
"A connected and consistent—though assuredly a most extraordinary—story.....A fascinating picture."—Standard (leader).
"Not content with having two strings to her bow, our 'great, glorious, and immortal Queen Bess' also had about two hundred beaux to her string. Without a perusal of Mr. Hume's most researchful and interesting volume, no one, no student even of Fronde, can claim to have thoroughly grasped the character and aim of our good Queen Bess."—Daily Chronicle.

A LITERARY COMPANION for TOURISTS.

THE COUNTRY of HORACE and VIRGIL. By Gaston Bossier, Translated by D. HAVELOCK FISHER. Maps. Cloth, 7s. 6d.
"The English version of the book is all that could be desired, and the volume deserves a welcome as a valuable addition to the few extra-academic books in English likely to attract a general reader towards classical studies."—Scotsman.

A SOUTH AFRICAN TALE.

THE AFRICANDER: a Plain Tale of Colonial Life. By E. Clairmonte. Illustrated. Cloth, 6s.
"Uncommonly good reading.....There is plenty of rattle and verve; and we are carried away by the fascination of the narrative."—Weekly Sun.

NEW VOLUME of the MERMAID SERIES.

THE SELECT PLAYS OF SIR JOHN VANBRUGH.

Edited, with Introduction and Notes, by Professor A. E. H. SWAEN.
Frontispiece. Cloth, 3s. 6d.

THE REAL PARIS.

PARIS DAYS and EVENINGS. By Stuart Henry. Illustrated by L. S. Brumidi. Cloth, 7s. 6d.

A PILGRIMAGE to CANTERBURY.

NEW WHEELS in OLD RUTS: an Account of a Pilgrimage to Canterbury via the Ancient Pilgrims' Way. By HENRY PARR. With 60 Pen-and-Ink Sketches by F. W. R. Adams. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.
"It is bright and amusing, and we venture to predict that it will find what it merits—and that is, no lack of readers. The illustrations are clever and comical."—Speaker.

By the late
Prof. DARMESTETER.

ENGLISH STUDIES. By Prof. James Darmesteter. Translated by MARY DARMESTETER (A. MARY F. ROBINSON). Portrait of the Author. Cloth, 7s. 6d.

NEW NOVELS
at 6/-
Each.

- SECOND EDITION.
1. EFFIE HETHERINGTON. By Robert Buchanan. [Second Edition in preparation.
"The hero is almost as striking a figure as Heathercliff in 'Wuthering Heights.'"—World.
  2. CLARA HOPGOOD. By Mark Rutherford.
"Besides being a good writer, Mark Rutherford is 'rare,' he is curious; he has so much distinction, using that word in its plain first sense and not as a laudatory term, that there is no likening him to any of his contemporary brethren."—Daily Mail Gazette.
  3. THE EBBING of the TIDE: South Sea Stories. By Louis Becke.
"The stories are a series of windows, through which we look into a new world, where every prospect pleases, and where the men and women, if often vile, are seldom or never uninteresting."—Saturday Review.
  4. PADDY'S WOMAN, and Other Stories. By Humphrey James. Cloth, 6s.

NEW NOVEL
at 3/6

THE STATEMENT of STELLA MABERLEY. By Herself.
"A strong story of psychological interest.....It would be unfair to give the details of the plot, but they are undoubtedly handled with great skill."—Speaker.

NEW VOLUME of the NEW IRISH LIBRARY.

A SHORT LIFE of THOMAS DAVIS. By Sir Charles Gavan Duffy.
Paper, 1s.; cloth, 2s.

CATALOGUES POST FREE ON APPLICATION.

LONDON: T. FISHER UNWIN, PATERNOSTER SQUARE, E.C.

Digitized by Google

STAMPS.—British East Africa, obsolete,
very rare; Canada, 8 cents, Leeward Islands, Newfoundland, Philippines, Portia, Tonic, Sudan, Somalis, Mozambique, Bar,
Angoka, Boman, Barbedos, 64 genuine varieties, 1d. Price lists free.
—Smith, Arthur Road, Kingston, Surrey.

By GEORGE I. BAKER
Professor of Technical Chemistry at the Federal Polytechnic School
Tyne Alkali Works

Offices: 14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, LONDON

GURNEY & JACKSON (Successors to Mr. VAN VOORST), 1, PATERNOSTER ROW.

ELLIOT STOCK'S NEW PUBLICATIONS.

In crown 8vo, cloth, price 5s.

Rainy Days in a Library.

By Sir HERBERT MAXWELL, Bart., M.P.

Contents.

PREFACE.
ADAM PETER'S RULES.
BALDASSARE'S PERFECT COURTIER.
THE OLDEST SPORTING JOURNAL.
FIRMILIAN.
BULWER'S ARTIFICIAL CHANGELING.
HAYWARD'S ART OF DINING.
JONSTON'S WONDERS.
ST. JOHN'S HIGHLAND SPORT.
TALLEMANT DES REAUX.
ACTS OF THE SCOTTISH PARLIAMENT.
CAPTAIN TOPHAM'S LETTERS.
PITCAIRN'S CRIMINAL TRIALS.
BLAUZ'S ATLAS.

"The papers therein are brief, and show a genuine fondness not only for things literary, but for life out of doors."—Globe.

"Written in a pleasant style and will repay leisurely perusal, opening up as they do various byways of interest."—Daily Free Press.

In fcap 8vo, cloth, price 5s.

The Higher Teaching of Shakespeare.

By LOUIS H. VICTORY.

In crown 8vo, cloth, price 5s.

Industrial Day-Dreams: Studies in Industrial Ethics and Economics.

By SAMUEL E. KEEBLE.

"An honest attempt to throw light upon a subject which repels as many because of the difficulties with which it hristles."—Sheffield and Rotherham Independent.

In paper cover, price 9d.

Dress and Health:

An Appeal to Antiquity and Common Sense.

By CHARLES MOORE JESSOP, M.R.C.P. Lond.,
Physician to St. Pancras and Northern Dispensary;
Dep. Surgeon-General, late H.M.'s Forces;
Author of "Past and Future," &c.

NEW NOVEL.

In crown 8vo, tastefully bound in cloth, 6s.

Gladys Woodley; or, the Bride of Amiel.

By EGLANTINE.

"Every page is stamped by literary genius and an unusual command of beautiful language, terse expression, and rare descriptive power."—Birmingham Daily Gazette.

NEW VOLUMES OF VERSE.

In crown 8vo, cloth, price 5s.

Lays of the Heather.

By A. C. MACDONELL.

In crown 8vo, handsomely bound, price 4s. 6d.

Meetings and Partings. With other Verses and Translations.

By E. C. RICKETTS (CORNELIA WALLACE), Author of "Flowers: A Fantasy," and "Mountain Monarchs."

"The book throughout is gracefully written, and with a noticeable skill in versification."—Scotsman.

ELLIOT STOCK, 62, Paternoster Row, London.

CHATTO & WINDUS'S NEW BOOKS.

ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON'S LAST NOVEL.
WEIR OF HERMISTON. By Robert
LOUIS STEVENSON. With an Epilogue by SIDNEY
COLVIN. Crown 8vo, buckram, gilt top, 6s. [May 20.]

THE MASTER CRAFTSMAN. By SIR WALTER BESANT. Author of "All Sorts and Conditions of Men." 2 vols, crown 8vo, 10s. net; and at every Library.

"What we ask of Sir Walter Besant are pleasant and inspiring hours of wholesome entertainment. These he never fails to provide.
He has provided them once again in 'The Master Craftsman,' and we are grateful accordingly."—Daily Chronicle.

THE RIDDLE RING. By Justin MCARTHY, M.P. Author of "Dear Lady Disdain," &c. 3 vols, crown 8vo, 15s. net; and at every Library.

THE HARDING SCANDAL. By FRANK BARRETT. Author of "The Sin of Olga Zassoulch." 2 vols, crown 8vo, 10s. net; and at every Library.

"In 'The Harding Scandal' Mr. Frank Barrett presents a striking study of a consummate and fashionable scoundrel as may be well imagined. Mr. Barrett develops the plot with characteristic skill and dexterity, and the General is an able and striking study."—Scotsman.

PERSONAL RECOLLECTIONS OF
JOAN OF ARC. By the Sieur LOUIS DE CONTE (her Page and Secretary). Freely translated out of the Ancient French into Modern English, from the original unpublished Manuscripts in the National Archives of France, by JEAN FRANÇOIS ALDEN. Edited by MARK
TWIN. With 12 Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, gilt top, 6s.

ROME. By Emile Zola. Translated by ERNEST A. VIZETELLY. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 3s. 6d.

"The book is as big as 'La Débâcle' ('The Downfall'), which dealt with the war of 1870. Forty persons are introduced, Pope Leo XIII. being the most important figure in the work. For the past eight months the novelist has been reading the most reliable books on Rome and on Christian Socialism. When in the City of the Pope, he took voluminous notes, interrogated all sorts and conditions of people, from prelates and princes to poor peasants of the Campagna."—Daily Telegraph.

ACADEMY NOTES, 1896. By Henry
BLACKBURN. Twenty-second year. Price One Shilling.
Illustrated.

ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUE OF the PARIS SALON, 1896, with 400 Illustrations, 3s.

MOORLAND IDYLLS. By Grant
ALLEN, author of "The Evolutionist at Large." Crown 8vo, cloth decorated, 6s.

"Moerland Idylls" is one of those descriptive, suggestive, talkative, easily instructive, delightful books which first make the reader wish to 'go there,' and then make him feel ashamed of his own lack of observation and indifference to the wonderful and beautiful things that surround him wherever he may be. It is as difficult as it is inviting to select from the contents of this charming volume."—World.

KLOOF YARNS. Stories of the South AFRICAN BUSH. By ERNEST GLANVILLE, Author of "The Golden Rock," &c. Crown 8vo, picture cover, 1s.; cloth, 1s. 6d.

AN EASY-GOING FELLOW. By
C. J. WILLS, Author of "The Pitt-Town Coronet." Crown
8vo, cloth extra, 6s. [May 21.]

THE SHADOW OF HILTON FERN-BROOK: A Romance of Moorland. By ATHA WEST-BURY. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 3s. 6d. [May 20.]

THE CRUCIFORM MARK: The Strange Story of Richard Tregenna, M.B. By RICCARDO STEPHENS. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 6s.
"A very daring book, in which medical science, psychology, and real life are all laid under contribution for the purpose of impressing the reader with a sense of the weird and terrible. There is much that is original in the story, and there are some things about it which rouse a suspicion that it is not the work of a novice, but that of a practised writer who, for reasons of his own, has on this occasion chosen to assume a pseudonym."—Speaker.

RIDDLES READ. By Dick Donovan,
Author of "A Detective's Triumphs." Post 8vo, picture boards, 2s.; cloth, 2s. 6d.

BLACK SPIRITS and WHITE: A Book of Ghost Stories. By RALPH ADAMS CRAM.
Fcap. 8vo, cloth, 1s. 6d.

"People who enjoy what is familiarly termed 'the creeping of the flesh,' and who consider it a pleasurable sensation when each particular hair stands on end, should make a point of reading 'Black Spirits and White.' The stories are no less refreshingly original than fascinatingly gruesome."—Daily Telegraph.

A LIVING LIE. ["Mensonges."] By
PAUL BOURGET. Translated by JOHN DE VILLIERS.
Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 3s. 6d.

"The book itself is an education; the very greatest novel of analysis and character France has produced since Balzac."—Vanity Fair.

A CROWN OF STRAW. By Allan
UPWARD, Author of "The Prince of Balkistan." Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 6s.

A novel of singular originality and fascination. . . . It is rich with picturesque incidents, and moves with something of the sweep of a Greek tragedy. Mr. Upward is a keen student of character."—Weekly Sun.

London: CHATTO & WINDUS, 214, Piccadilly, W.

MACMILLAN & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

Second Edition now ready.

THE COURTSHIP of MORRICE BUCKLER: A Romance.

By A. E. W. MASON.

Author of "A Romance of Wastdale."

Crown 8vo, 6s.

ATHENÆUM.—"Mr. Mason's manner is alert and engaging, and his matter fresh and stirring. No one who takes up his novel is likely to lay it down unfinished."

NEW NOVEL BY THEO. DOUGLAS.

A BRIDE-ELECT. By Theo. Douglas.

Crown 8vo, sewed, 1s.

GUARDIAN.—"It is a very clever story."

NEW NOVEL BY F. MARION CRAWFORD.

ADAM JOHNSTONE'S SON. By

F. MARION CRAWFORD. Crown 8vo, 6s.

SPEAKER.—"A book to be enjoyed by everybody."

FOREIGN STATESMEN SERIES.

Edited by Professor BURY.

RICHELIEU. By Richard Lodge,

M.A. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

TIMES.—"Professor Lodge reveals throughout his narrative a sound historical judgment. . . . The career of a great political genius is here sketched with accuracy and ability."

EVERSLEY SERIES.—New Volumes.

THE POETICAL WORKS OF WILLIAM

WORDSWORTH. Edited by WILLIAM KNIGHT.

To be completed in 16 volumes. Vols. I., II., and III.
Globe 8vo, 5s. each. Each Volume contains a Portrait
and Vignette etched by H. Manasse.

TIMES.—"It may safely be said that to students these volumes will be indispensable."

Fcap. 8vo, 5s.

THE PILGRIM, and other Poems.

By SOPHIE JEWETT (ELLEN BURROUGHS).

Demy 8vo, 14s. net.

MEMOIRS OF FREDERICK A. P.

BARNARD, D.D., LL.D., J.H.D., D.C.L., Tenth
President of Columbia College, in the City of New York.
By JOHN FULTON. With Portraits.

Crown 8vo, 5s. net.

AN ETHICAL MOVEMENT. A

Volume of Lectures. By W. L. SHELDON, Lecturer of the Ethical Society of St. Louis.

Extra crown 8vo, 6s. net.

THE BIBLE for HOME READING.

Edited, with Comments and Reflections, for the Use of Jewish Parents and Children, by C. G. MONTEFIORE.
First Part. To the Second Visit of Nehemiah to Jerusalem.

In 2 vols., demy 8vo, 21s. net.

A HISTORY OF the WARFARE OF

SCIENCE with THEOLOGY in CHRISTENDOM. By
ANDREW DICKSON WHITE, late President and
Professor of History at Cornell University.

Globe 8vo, 7s. 6d.

POEMS. By Cecil Frances Alexander

(C.F.A.). Edited, with a Preface, by WILLIAM
ALEXANDER, D.D. Oxon., LL.D. Dublin, D.C.L.
Oxon., Archbishop of Armagh, and Lord Primate of All Ireland.

Globe 8vo, 3s. 6d.

GOD'S GARDEN: Sunday Talks with

Boys. By the Rev. W. J. FOXE, M.A., B.Mus.
(Lond.), Minor Canon of Canterbury Cathedral. With an Introduction by Dean FARRAR.

THE MODERN READER'S BIBLE.

A Series of Works from the Sacred Scriptures presented in Modern Literary Form.

ECCLESIASTES and the WISDOM OF

SOLOMON. Edited, with an Introduction and Notes, by
RICHARD G. MOULTON, M.A. (Camb.). 16mo, 2s. 6d.

Second Edition, crown 8vo, 10s. 6d.

THE NEW TESTAMENT in the ORIGINAL GREEK. The Text Revised by BROOKE

FOSS WESTCOTT, D.D., and FENTON JOHN
ANTHONY HORT, D.D. Vol. II., Introduction, Appendix.

MACMILLAN & CO., LIMITED, LONDON.

Standard Historical Works

FOR

THE LIBRARY.

THE HISTORY of ROME. By

Professor THEODOR MOMMSEN. Translated (with the Author's sanction, and Additions) by Dr. P. W. DICKSON. In 5 vols., crown 8vo, 37s. 6d.

THE HISTORY of ANTIQUITY.

From the German of the late Professor MAX DUNCKER. By EVELYN ABBOTT, M.A., LL.D., of Balliol College, Oxford. 6 vols., demy 8vo. Each volume can be obtained separately, 21s.

THE HISTORY of GREECE. From

the Earliest Time down to 337 A.C. From the German of Dr. ERNST CURTIUS, Rector of the University of Berlin. By A. W. WARD, M.A. In 5 vols., demy 8vo. Each volume separately, 18s.

[Vols. I. and III. reprinting.]

THE QUEENS of ENGLAND of the HOUSE of HANOVER. By Dr. DORAN, F.S.A., Author of "Table Traits and Something on Them," &c. Fourth and Enlarged Edition. 2 vols., 8vo, 25s.

THE HISTORY of the THIRTY

YEARS' WAR. By ANTON GINDELY. Translated by Professor ANDREW TEN BROOK. 2 vols., large crown 8vo, with Maps and Illustrations, 24s.

THE HISTORY of the POST OFFICE.

From its Establishment down to 1836. By HERBERT JOYCE, C.B., of the Post Office. Demy 8vo, 16s.

THE NAVAL HISTORY of GREAT

BRITAIN. From the Declaration of War by France, in 1793, to the Accession of George IV. By WILLIAM JAMES. In 6 vols., crown 8vo, 42s.

THE HISTORY of the FRENCH

REVOLUTION. By ADOLPHE THIERS. Translated by FREDERICK SHOBREL. With 50 Engravings. 5 vols., demy 8vo, 45s.

THE COURT and REIGN of FRANÇOIS

the FIRST. By JULIA PARDOE. 3 vols., demy 8vo, with numerous Portraits on Steel, and a brief Memoir of the Author, 42s.

THE LIFE of MARIE de MEDICIS.

By JULIA PARDOE. 3 vols., demy 8vo, with Portraits and Facsimiles, 42s.

LOUIS the FOURTEENTH and the COURT of FRANCE in the SEVENTEENTH CENTURY. By JULIA PARDOE. 3 vols., demy 8vo, with numerous Portraits on Steel, 42s.

A HISTORY of ENGLISH DRESS.

By GEORGINA HILL. 2 vols., demy 8vo, with 14 Illustrations on Steel, 30s.

THE HISTORY of MUSIC. A New

Edition. By J. F. ROWBOTHAM. Crown 8vo, 6s.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington Street
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

CLARENDON PRESS LIST.

Vols. III. and IV., Second Edition, demy 8vo, cloth, with Maps and Illustrations, 36s.

ITALY and her INVADERS.

By THOMAS HODGKIN, D.C.L., Litt.D.

Also, recently published, Vols. I. and II., Second Edition, 42s.; Vols. V. and VI., 36s.

"Mr. Hodgkin has faced a great task with increasing zeal and devotion, and his work bids fair to fill a real want in our historical literature."—Athenæum.

Vol. I.—EASTERN LITURGIES.

Just published, demy 8vo, cloth, 21s.

LITURGIES, EASTERN and

WESTERN: being the Texts, Original or Translated, of the Principal Liturgies of the Church. Edited, with Introductions and Appendices, by F. E. BRIGHTMAN, M.A., Pusey Librarian. On the Basis of the former Work by C. E. HAMMOND, M.A., sometime Fellow and Tutor of Exeter College.

Paper boards, small 4to, 8s. 6d. net cash, with One Plate.

AN ALEXANDRIAN EROTIC

FRAGMENT, and other Greek Papyri, chiefly Ptolemaic. Edited by BERNARD P. GRENFELL, M.A., sometime Craven Fellow in the University of Oxford, Fellow of Queen's College, Editor of "The Revenue Laws of Ptolemy Philadelphus."

"A result of the excellent work carried on during the last two years in Egypt by Mr. Grenfell and Professor Mahaffy. The highest praise is deserved for the care bestowed on the text, the explanatory notes, and the classified indexes at the end of the volume."—Times.

Vol. IV.—Demy 8vo, cloth, 12s. 6d.

STUDIA BIBLICA et ECCLE-

SIASTICA. Essays chiefly in Biblical and Patristic Criticism. By MEMBERS of the UNIVERSITY of OXFORD.

Already published, Vol. I., 10s. 6d.; Vol. II., 12s. 6d.; Vol. III., 16s.

NOTICE ON VOL. III.

"The volume shows what vigorous roots the study of textual criticism has struck in our Universities, and is highly creditable to the Oxford Press."—Saturday Review.

Parts I.—V., 4to, 21s. each.

A CONCORDANCE to the SEP-

TUAGINT, and the other Greek Versions of the Old Testament (including the Apocryphal Books). By the late EDWIN HATCH, M.A., and HENRY A. REDPATH, M.A., assisted by other Scholars.

"This is, and will remain, the Concordance to the Septuagint, and not to the Septuagint only, but to all the Greek versions of the Old Testament and the Apocrypha."—Expository Times.

Second Edition, Revised, demy 8vo, cloth, 14s.

THE LAW and CUSTOM of the CONSTITUTION. Part II., THE CROWN. By Sir WILLIAM R. ANSON, Bart., D.C.L., of the Inner Temple, Barrister-at-Law, Warden of All Souls' College, Oxford.

"A valuable and comprehensive treatise."—Times.

Part I.—PARLIAMENT. Second Edition. 8vo, 12s. 6d.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

AN HISTORICAL GRAMMAR

of the FRENCH LANGUAGE. From the French of AUGUSTE BRACHET, Lauréat de l'Institut de France. Rewritten and Enlarged by PAGET TOYNBEE, M.A., Balliol College, Oxford, Editor of "Specimens of Old French."

"We have in this work two volumes in one, a revised Brachet and what we have never had before, an efficient English treatise on French Phonetics. The importance of the latter can hardly be over-rated."—Guardian.

"A most important work—it will be of great service."—PROF. SKELTON.

Catalogues post free on application.

LONDON: HENRY FROWDE, CLARENDON PRESS
WAREHOUSE, AMEN CORNER, E.C.

Kegan Paul, Trench, Trübner &amp; Co., Ltd.

NOW READY.

J.-K. HUYSMANS' GREAT WORK.

EN ROUTE.

By J.-K. HUYSMANS.

Translated from the French, with a Prefatory Note by C. KEGAN PAUL.

Crown 8vo, 6s.

"'En Route' is the story of a modern man of letters, flung upon the full tide of Parisian materialism and sensuality, finding himself, when over forty, irresistibly attracted to Catholicism.... It is a book of which the appeal is for a far wider circle of readers than is comprised in the Roman communion alone. Its supreme merit lies in the rare force and simplicity with which it brings home to the mind the inevitableness of the great realities of religion and the absolute common sense of the mystic's life detached from the world by constant realisation of the omnipresence of God."—Guardian.

HISTORY of the GERMAN

PEOPLE at the CLOSE of the MIDDLE AGES. By JOHANNES JANSEN. Translated from the German by M. A. MITCHELL and A. M. CHRISTIE. In 2 vols., demy 8vo, 25s.

THE DIALOGUE of the

SERAPHIC VIRGIN, CATHERINE of SIENA. Translated from the Original Italian, together with an Introduction on the Study of Mysticism, by ALGAR THOROLD. Demy 8vo, 16s.

JOHNSON'S LIVES of the POETS. A New Edition, in 6 vols., the Original Text Restored, with about 30 Portraits. With Notes and Introduction by ARTHUR WAUGH. Vols. I. and II. Fcap. 8vo, 6s. each.

A SHROPSHIRE LAD: Poems.

By A. E. HOUSMAN. Fcap. 8vo, 2s. 6d.

"Strikes a decidedly original note."—Times.

KILLBOYLAN BANK; or,

Every Man His Own Banker. By E. M. LYNCH. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. [Village Library.]

KNOWLEDGE, DUTY, and

FAITH. Suggestions for the Study of Principles Taught by Typical Thinkers, Ancient and Modern. By the Right Hon. Sir THOMAS DYKE ACLAND, Bart. Post 8vo, 3s. 6d.

THE CO-EDUCATION of the SEXES. By MABEL HAWTREY. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d. net.

GREENLAND ICE FIELDS and

LIFE in the NORTH ATLANTIC. With a New Discussion of the Causes of an Ice Age. By G. FREDERICK WRIGHT and WARREN UPHAM. With Map and Numerous Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

THE PATERNOSTER LIBRARY.

By the late WALTER BAGEHOT.

NEW and CHEAPER EDITIONS, crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. each.

LOMBARD STREET. With

Notes by E. JOHNSTONE. Ninth Thousand.

The ENGLISH CONSTITUTION

Twelfth Thousand.

PHYSICS and POLITICS.

Eighth Thousand.

ESSAYS on PARLIAMENTARY

REFORM.

PATERNOSTER HOUSE, CHANCERY CROSS ROAD, LONDON.

SATURDAY, MAY 16, 1896.

No. 1254, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

Studies in Ancient History. Second Series. Comprising an Enquiry into the Origin of Exogamy. By the late John Ferguson McLennan, edited by his Widow and Arthur Platt. (Macmillans.)

A PATHETIC interest attaches to this collection of posthumous papers. Fifteen years have passed since their author's death, and the pens of loving hands have been busy since then in endeavouring to give form and continuity to the uncompleted material which he left behind. Mr. McLennan had contemplated the production of a great book on the development of early society, the main lines of which are indicated in his Primitive Marriage; but death frustrated that design. Taking up the work thus arrested, his brother, Mr. Donald McLennan, put some of the material into shape, bringing out in 1885 a volume entitled The Patriarchal Theory. As is implied, it is concerned with a discussion on Sir Henry Maine's theory that the family is based on the patria potestas, as against the theory of the matriarchate, or descent through females, which, following Millar and Bachofen, Mr. McLennan skilfully defends. In thus seeking to refute the theory of agnation, the ground was intended to be cleared for a full presentment of the case in support of Mr. McLennan's more distinctive position on the twin subjects of exogamy and totemism. But while Mr. Donald McLennan was thus engaged he also was carried off, and the task passed into the hands of Prof. Robertson Smith, only to have like arrest by his untimely death. Then Mrs. McLennan and Mr. Arthur Platt took up the labour of arranging the mass of related, but amorphous, matter which fills the present volume. Fortunately, a list of chapter-headings gave clue to the intended sequence of contents; and the addition of connecting passages, suggesting, on the warrant of rough notes, what would have been amplified, enabled the industrious editors to present the heterogeneous mass in some sort of order. While the book was in the press Mrs. McLennan died, and it was left to Mr. Platt to pass the final proofs.

It is therefore obvious that, while the best is done that can be done, we have only indicative and fragmentary materials, which will be of service to those who would pursue McLennan's quest, but upon which the reviewer cannot pass judgment. And, moreover, the delivery of judgment is the less possible because, had the distinguished author been spared, a study of the works of Frazer, Latourneau, Westermarck, and other writers, which have appeared in recent years, might have modified his theories. For the somewhat rigid lines of debate which marked the earlier phases of the controversy between McLennan and Maine have been partially effaced. The weak side of both disputants was apparent in their failure to prove, from the two sources of evidence—barbaric traditions and extant customs, whether real or symbolical—a predominance, amounting wellnigh to universality, of the practice of ranking descent either by the male or by the female line. Dr. Tylor's valuable paper,* based on statistical data, went far to prove the priority of female kinship. But the exceptions have to be reckoned with. Among these is the case of certain Australian aborigines, who recognise the male line of descent, yet are more degraded than other tribes of "black fellows" who reckon descent through the women. More cogent are the arguments adduced by Westermarck in his History of Human Marriage against the theory of promiscuity, on which Mr. McLennan logically based his explanation of the matriarchate. There are, however, signs of a modified position in the present work; for, in contrast to the limitations of Maine, who seemed unable to pass the historical boundaries, McLennan was anthropologist as well as jurist. In a letter to Darwin, which appears in the fifth chapter, he says:

"A word as to what I understand by promiscuity. You will see I have guarded myself somewhat against alleging its general prevalence. The import of my reasoning is that more or less of it, and of indifference, must appear in the hordes or their sections or some of them. I have nowhere defined it, but use it as a general term to denote the general conduct as to sexual matters of men without wives."

In a definition of general terms which precedes this letter McLennan restricts the use of the word "marriage"

"to a legal relation of husband and wife as the same may be defined by the local law or customs. Where there is no law on the subject—no custom of the country establishing any requirements as to the constitution of the relation of man and wife, its endurance, and the rights and obligations it confers and infers—there is neither marrying nor giving in marriage. . . . The noble Roman jurisprudence, which did more than all the religions put together to improve and beautify human life, has given us the idea of marriage as the union of one man and woman in a consortship for the whole of life—an 'inseparable consuetude' of life between husband and spouse, with interests the same in all things civil and religious. That idea, despite all woman's rights movements to the contrary, is that destined to prevail in the world."

But as McLennan does not date the institution of marriage from Eden, or its confirmation from Cana of Galilee, such observations hardly advance the main question of the origin of defined lines of descent of the offspring. A larger latitude must be given to the term "marriage" when the subject of the beginning of definite conjugal relations, however temporary, demands settlement, because one effect of Wester-marck's arguments is to carry the discussion stages further back than that from which McLennan starts, although he accepts the anthropological standpoint. The matriarchal theory is based on promiscuity. The irregular sexual relations made paternity doubtful, but the foolishness of mothers is wise enough to know her own child, no matter what her uncertainty may be as to the father. Now Westermarck denies that promiscuity ever existed. His examples of paternal care in certain teleostean fishes which carry the ova in their pharynxes, or build and guard the family nest, and of the conjugal fidelity of certain birds, have a value for the evolutionist, who will permit no hard and fast lines anywhere. But these may be passed by for examples nearer home in the fugitive loves of man's nearest congeners, which consort together at least till after the birth of the offspring. We may postulate that what the man-like apes do the ape-like man did also; and, were evidence as to the relations of the sexes in our pithecooid ancestry producible, we should probably find justification for assuming that marriage, however ultimately specialised, is a transmitted tendency from the higher mammals. In the prolongation of the period of infancy among these, with its consequent dependence of offspring on parents, there is—as Herbert Spencer, Fiske, and others have shown—the key to the strengthening of conjugal relations, especially of the paternal instinct, which at the outset is weaker than the maternal. If this continuity of germinal family unity can be proved, and to this added the powerful argument drawn from the jealousy of the male among savage hordes, the theory of promiscuity receives a severe shaking. And yet, on the other hand, there is the great body of evidence adduced by McLennan as to the widespread custom of reckoning descent through the female, a custom which must rest at any rate on a laxity of relations approaching to promiscuity. What combination of secondary causes would bring these about it is impossible to say: the one thing certain is, that in the settlement of the problem we have not yet passed the empirical stage. Man's ancestry had its hermaphroditic stage; so, perhaps, tendencies to promiscuity, accentuated by the functional activity "all the year round" which followed the human pairing season postulated, not without evidence, by Westermarck, may be remotely atavistic.

Not to prolong remarks which can lead to no definite result, it suffices to add that, miscellaneous as are the contents of a book produced under such adverse conditions as those noted, they have a certain unity, rendering them of high value to the student of this large question, of the foundation of the family as the unit of human society. The discrimination of the lamented author in his assessment of material is evidenced in his criticism on the "method of inquiry into early history," and the "mode of handling evidence." Both chapters under these headings are suggestive enough to cause lament for their brevity. The warning note in the use of old narratives is sufficiently sounded here:

"The original authority must be weighed, by considering what opportunities he possessed for correct observation, how far he had capacity and willingness to make good use of his opportunities, and to what extent, if at all, he was disposed to mix up with his statements of fact any element of speculation or opinion of his own. . . . As regards those countries which have become known to us only within the last four hundred years, and which, taken together, constitute more than three-fourths of the whole inhabited world, we find the earliest accounts exceedingly uninformed, because, on the one hand, the observers knew not what to look for; and, on the other, they were only too anxious to excuse their own rapacity or cruelty, by depicting the tribes they conquered as mere brute beasts whom it were charity to sweep off the face of the earth. . . . and yet the student will sometimes be able to spell out from these very narratives themselves that the people so described were intensely religious, and that they dwelt under the constant pressure of a rigid body of customary law, and what we would call a highly developed system of constitutional government."

* On a Method of Investigating the Development of Institutions, applied to Laws of Marriage and Descent. (Harrison. 1889.)

A mistaken parsimony—for it cannot, where so much labour has been expended, be indolence—deprives the book of an index.

EDWARD CLODD.

Biographical and Critical Studies. By James Thomson ("B. V."). (Reeves & Turner; Bertram Dobell.)

THIS group of studies forms the first instalment of a collective edition in which it is proposed to incorporate all that is of abiding value in the late James Thomson's prose remains. Mr. Bertram Dobell, who edits the book, and whose name figures as joint publisher upon its title-page, warns us (in the preface) that it is put forth as an experiment, and that upon the reception now given to it by the public depends the issue whether the publication of the subsequent volumes shall be proceeded with. Should the sale of the Biographical Studies reach a satisfactory rate, we are, it seems, to have three supplementary volumes of original work, besides another containing the poet's translations from Novalis and Leopardi; but should the coyness of the bookbuyers prove invincible, the scheme, we are given to understand, will be abandoned at the present stage as impracticable.

Thus the conditions of its publication invest this volume with a special interest, and should serve effectually to commend it to the favour both of readers and of collectors. Not that the book can be said to need any such extraneous reinforcement of its claims, its own intrinsic merits forming, in our opinion, a sufficiently powerful—as they undoubtedly form the fittest possible—recommendation of it. Here, however, it is necessary to distinguish; for the truth is that, although the general merits of this specimen volume are unquestionable, yet its contents cannot but be acknowledged to exhibit very unequal degrees of excellence. Of its thirteen studies six—namely, "Rabelais," "Saint-Amant," "Wilson of the Noctes," "The Ettrick Shepherd," "Ben Jonson," and "Symonds' Life of Shelley"—are reprinted from the periodical entitled Cope's Tobacco Plant; and of this portion of the book it must be said that it is on the whole distinctly inferior to the rest, while the three last-named articles may be singled out as of a lower grade—that is, of slighter substance and less careful workmanship—than any others in the volume. Unfortunately, the essay on Ben Jonson extends over one hundred and sixty pages, or precisely one-third of the entire book; and of this enormous space no less than one half (eighty pages) is occupied by a review of the various allusions to the use of tobacco occurring in the works of that poet. "Possibly," observes the editor, "this portion of the essay might have been omitted without much loss"; we will venture farther, and say at once that the whole article—biography and nicotiana alike—might have been suppressed with much advantage. It is throughout diffuse and ill-digested, and is, indeed, little more than a chain of quotations from Hotten's reprint of William Gifford's famous edition (re-edited by Col. F. Cunningham) of Jonson's plays and poems. Here at least, we boldly avouch, is a manifest instance where two-thirds had been greater than the whole.

Of the non-nicotian portion of the volume—the critical studies of Blake and of Shelley, of Robert Browning and of that almost unknown philosopher, Dr. John James Garth Wilkinson—it is impossible to speak otherwise than in terms of cordial praise. Thomson, it is clear, had a strong bent towards the study of mysticism: his mind seems to have had a native leaning thitherwards (though his serious philosophic attitude was by no means that of a mystic, as the word is commonly understood); and his criticism of the two great mystical poets, William Blake and Percy Bysshe Shelley, reveals the keen, penetrative insight, and the faculty of delicately discriminative appreciation, which come only of admiring and reverential sympathy. In these studies he walks with us, as it were, through the secret and intimate recesses of their verse, pointing out with fond familiarity the lurking treasures of sense, the coy and unobtrusive beauties of expression, which are hidden away therein to reward the loving student's diligent research. Space is lacking for adequate illustration of this rare critical gift; but a brief sentence or two from the studies may here be given. Of the poems in blank verse—"To Spring," "To Summer," and "To the Evening Star"—published in Blake's Poetical Sketches, Thomson writes:

"These pieces are not perfect in art, but they are perfect in the spirit of their art; they have certain laxities and redundancies of rhythm, and are here and there awkward in diction; but such youthful sweet errors rather grace than spoil 'that large utterance of the early gods.' They have the grandeur of lofty simplicity, not of laboured pomp—a grandeur like that which invests our imaginations of the patriarchs. By a well beneath a palm tree stands one who wears but a linen turban and a simple flowing robe, and who but watches browsing sheep and camels drinking; yet no modern monarch, however gorgeously arrayed and brilliantly surrounded, can compare with him in majesty."

Elsewhere, speaking of the simplicity and melodiousness of Shelley's poetry, he observes:

"The very childlike lisp which we remarked in Blake is often observable in the voice of Shelley, consummate singer as he was. The lisp is, however, not always that of a child; it is on several occasions that of a missionary seeking to translate old thoughts from his rich and exact native tongue into the dialect, poor and barbarous, of his hearers. . . . In musicalness, in free and, as it were, living melody, the poems of Shelley are unsurpassed, and on the whole, I think, unequalled by any others in our literature. Compared with that of most others, his language is as a river to a canal—a river ever flowing 'at its own sweet will,' and whose music is the unpurposed result of its flowing. So subtly sweet and rich are the tones, so wonderfully are developed the perfect cadences, that the meaning of the words of the singing is lost and dissolved in the overwhelming rapture of the impression. I have often fancied, while reading them, that his words were really transparent, or that they throbbed with living lustres. Meaning is therein firm and distinct, but 'scarce visible through extreme loveliness'; so that the mind is often dazzled from perception of the surpassing grandeur and power of his creations. I doubt not that Apollo was mightier than Hercules, though his divine strength was veiled in the splendour of his symmetry and beauty more divine."

Conspicuous among many notable obiter dicta is that in the study of Blake, wherein Thomson defines and expounds the true nature of mysticism, and traces the lines of relation in regard of this pre-eminently poetical attribute, between William Blake the Second (for so he calls the child-man revealed in the Songs of Innocence, as contrasted with the "early ripe" singer of the Poetical Sketches) and the principal subsequent poets. Mysticism, he says, is, in its ultimate analysis, simplicity:

"It sees, and is continually rapturous with seeing, everywhere correspondence, kindred, identity, not only in the things and creatures of earth, but in all things and creatures and beings of hell and earth and heaven, up to the Father (or interiorly to the one soul) of all. It thus ignores or pays little heed to the countless complexities and distinctions of our modern civilisation and science . . . for in the large type of planets and nations, in the minute letters of dewdrops and worms, the same eternal laws are written. . . . And the whole universe being the volume of the Scriptures of the living word of God, this above all is to be heeded, that man should not dwell contented in the lovely language and illustrations, but should live beyond these in the sphere of the realities which they signify. Mysticism is passionately and profoundly religious, contemplating and treating every subject religiously, in all its excursions and discursions issuing from the soul to return to the soul, alone, from the alone, to the alone. . . . Its supreme tendency is to remain or to become again childlike, its supreme aspiration is not virtue, but innocence or guilelessness; so that we may say with truth of those whom it possesses, that the longer they live the younger they grow, as if 'passing out to God by the gate of birth, not death.'"

He proceeds to institute a comparison, in respect of this mystical simplicity, between Blake and his poetical successors, in the course of which he gives us a series of brief, but vivid, characterisations of Wordsworth, Scott, Coleridge, Byron, and the rest, including Emerson, Browning, and others of our own day. From these we select the note on Tennyson, which we commend as a useful alternative to certain cases of critical distemperature:

"Tennyson has no more of this simplicity than had Byron, but he is fully aware of its value, and woos it like a lover, in vain, as Byron wooed it in the latter parts of 'Childe Harold' and in 'Manfred.' . . . Scarcely any other artist in verse of the same rank has ever lived on such scanty revenues of thought (both pure, and applied or mixed) as Tennyson. While it cannot be pretended that he is a great sculptor, he is certainly an exquisite carver of luxuries in ivory; but we must be content to admire the caskets, for there are no jewels inside. His meditation at the best is that of a good leading article; he is a pensioner on the thought of his age. . . . Nothing gives one a keener insight into the want of robustness in the educated English intellect of the age than the fact that nine-tenths of our best known literary men look upon him as a profound philosopher. When wax-flowers are oracular oaks, Dodona may be discovered in the Isle of Wight, but hardly till then. . . . A great school of the poets is dying out: it will die decently, elegantly, in the full odour of respectability, with our Laureate."

In his lengthy and elaborate essay on Garth Wilkinson ("A Strange Book") Thomson, it must be admitted, fairly fails to achieve his main object, if that object is to open the eyes of the public to the importance of the poems published by the philosopher in 1857 under the name of Improvisations from the Spirit. Dr. Wilkinson's verses, from which our author quotes copious extracts, for the most part impress us chiefly by their vague obscurity, and by the unchastened redundancy and headlong precipitancy of the style; though the stanzas beginning:

"Brownness of autumn is around thee, brother," as well as the little piece, entitled "Saturday Night," that runs:

"Week's curtain, folded round
Time with a solemn sound,
Life sleeps within thy folds,
The past like dreams it holds," &c., must be allowed to possess a tender simplicity and beauty. But Thomson's entire essay nevertheless deserves and will repay the most attentive study; for in it the writer discourses at large upon the primary questions of poetic criticism, and "unfolds [in the words of his editor] with a fair degree of completeness the views of a true poet upon the methods and aims of his art." The admirable "Notes on the Genius of Robert Browning," too, which are here reprinted from the Transactions of the Browning Society (January, 1882), call, did space permit, for more than a mere passing notice. In them Thomson appears at his best, vigorously repelling, or else ably extenuating, the charges of obscurity, harshness, and affectation commonly advanced against Browning, while cordially praising the enormous variety and extent of his knowledge, the restless activity and almost unique rapidity of his intellect, the noble manliness of his passion, his vitality and fervent optimistic faith. These notes and the paper on The Ring and the Book, with the essays on Blake, Shelley, and Wilkinson, and, on a lower grade, those on Rabelais, Saint-Amant, and Prof. Wilson, together make up a body of original literary criticism of such rare quality as is, even in these days of the omnipresent critic, but seldom to be met with. So much sterling work should not surely appeal to the bookbuyer in vain, even though the author were otherwise obscure and unknown; how much the rather should it inflame his desire and set his purse-strings flying open when he knows it for the progeny of the potent brain to which we owe Insomnia and The City of Dreadful Night.

T. HUTCHINSON.

"A HISTORY OF AURICULAR CONFESSION AND INDULGENCES IN THE LATIN CHURCH."
By Henry Charles Lea, LL.D. Vol. I.,
Confession and Absolution. (Sonnenschein.)

DR. LEA has done so much good work in other directions, especially in the religious history of Spain, and the present work is one of such great labour, bearing on every page the marks of wide research and of extraordinary industry, that it is with great reluctance, and from a sense of duty only, that the reviewer points out the shortcomings of the present volume. A full criticism could be written only by one who has access to the largest public libraries; no private individual can be supposed to possess all the ponderous and rare tomes of scholastic and medieval theology which are constantly cited, and references to which fill the long array of notes. The present writer has access to a few only of such works. He can form his judgment of the whole only by making a careful collation of the citations from some of the authors which he has at hand, and by using these as a sample from which to judge of the rest of the work. Mere memory of former reading will be discarded, and only texts actually before the writer will be made use of.

The opening sentence, with its accompanying note, is one of the most unfortunate in the whole volume. It runs thus:

"When Christ described His mission—'They that are whole need not a physician, but they that are sick . . . for I am not come to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance'—He assumed as a postulate that in the dealings of God with man repentance suffices to procure pardon for sin."

The note says:

"Matt. ix. 12, 13. It is perhaps worthy of note that the Vulgate and the Douay Version omit the words 'to repentance.' The original has eis metánoian, and even so orthodox a scholar as Benito Arias Montano adds to the Vulgate 'ad poenitentiam.' A still higher authority is Pope John XIX., who, in 1032, quotes the text in the same way" (Johan PP. XIX., Epist. 17).

Dr. Lea, we may observe, usually quotes from some English translation of the Vulgate. I have only the Latin text at hand, which certainly omits "ad poenitentiam." But what is meant by "the original has eis metánoian"? Tischendorf omits the words, the Revised English version omits them, and, on turning to the first critical edition at hand, I find, "Omit  $\alpha$  C. D.  $\Delta$  Al. La. Ti. Tr. WH." What does "the original," a term repeated later, mean? What becomes of the deduction, "He assumed as a postulate that in the dealings of God with man repentance suffices to procure pardon for sin"? Surely it may be argued that the mention of a physician implies the use of remedies, that of a sick man the taking of medicine of some kind?

We do not know how Dr. Lea has collected the immense mass of materials which he has made use of for this work. If they are wholly the fruit of personal research, we can hardly acquit him of the charge of not having sufficiently weighed them; if he has used assistants to any great extent, then we must conclude that some of these have been incompetent or careless. On p. 21 we read:

"As late as the commencement of the seventh century, the only form of penance which Isidore of Seville seems to know of is that of sackcloth and ashes, which is public penance."

Turning to the reference (De Eccles. Off. lib. ii., cap. xvii.), we find that Isidore states three acts of penance, the first of which is "Hi vero qui poenitentiam agunt, proinde capillos et barbam nutriunt, ut demonstrent abundantiam criminum, quibus caput peccatoris gravatur"; and, in the note p. 28, where the shaving or growing of the hair in penance is discussed, this passage of Isidore is not cited.

A worse error occurs on p. 179:

"St. Jerome refers to it [i.e., to private confession] several times, and a canon of the first Council of Toledo in 398 shows that in Spain it was becoming a recognised function of the priest, at least for virgins under vows."

This Canon 6 (referred to again on p. 382) has nothing to do with confession at all: it is a warning against familiarity of a consecrated maiden ("puella Dei") with men, among whom "cum confessoribus" is enumerated, the "confessor quilibet" here meaning a singer or chanter (cf. Ducange, s.v. Confessores, Cantores et Psalmistae, where this canon, and two passages from St. Jerome, are given, among others, as warrants for the meaning). On p. 260 it is difficult to say whether "the lament of the Prodigal Son, 'Fodere non valeo, mendicare erubescio, ergo sacerdos ero,'" is a slip of Dr. Lea, or of the author he is quoting.

In addition to faults of this kind, we find ourselves frequently differing widely from Dr. Lea in his translations and inferences: e.g., in the story of the robber and St. John (p. 77) "offering his own soul as an expiatory sacrifice to satisfy the justice of God," seems to us quite an exaggeration. "I will give my life for thine" is all that is said; and, whether the story be literally true of St. John or not, it should surely be read in the light of the last verse of his Gospel. So, too, we take the story of Serapion in almost an opposite sense from that which Dr. Lea affixes to it. Again, the statement (p. 27, note), "By the early Fathers the word sacerdos was commonly used as synonymous with episcopus," is far too broad. Granting that in the New Testament πρεσβύτερος and ἐπίσκοπος are synonymous terms, that does not guarantee that the Latin words are so also. Allowing for all the encroachments of the Papacy on Church patronage, it is surely an overstatement to say (p. 245), "the Holy See, in the fourteenth century, grasped almost the whole disposable patronage of the Church throughout Europe, and openly offered it for sale." We could quote many more instances of excess of this kind.

Still, making allowance for all errors and exaggerations, this work, if used with due caution, may be a very useful one. The long chronological series of citations from authors seldom met with brings out with clearness the historical development of the doctrines treated of. The student can mark in its pages the successive steps, the great features, of such development. He can see the difficulties with which the Schoolmen had to contend, how both they and the Casuists are ever confronted with obstacles which they cannot fairly surmount, cases demanding solution which will not fall under any of their definitions. After all their labours the dilemma remains the same. God pardons all the truly penitent, even where no Church can interfere. No Church can or dare pardon the impenitent; and not all the labours of the Schoolmen, not all the refinements of the Casuists, can ever enable man to say infallibly who is really penitent or not, to distinguish between the false and the true hearted, between him who still loves his sin and him who loathes it, between the impenitent and the pardoned. The contents of this volume are the history of the vain yet ever renewed attempts made in medieval times, and in the Latin Church down to the present day, to regulate and determine the exercise of this "Power of the Keys."

This part i. treats of Confession and Absolution, the next part will, we presume, treat of Indulgences. We trust that Dr. Lea or his assistants will be more careful in attending to the changing meaning of terms now technical, and be more cautious in affixing a preconceived sense to the passages which they cite: otherwise the value and utility of the whole work will be sadly marred, and the fruit of their enormous labour will be almost lost.

WENTWORTH WEBSTER.

Frances Mary Buss and Her Work for Education. By Annie E. Ridley. (Longmans.)

THE movement for the higher education of women is not a sex-fight. The woman's cause is man's. Nothing more impresses the reader of this book than the fact that throughout her life Miss Buss constantly drew into sympathy the most varied classes of men and women to help her in the task of advancing education. For though girls and women were the immediate objects of Miss Buss's influence, it is not too much to say that, whatever interest and sympathy was taken by men in her work, was more than repaid by her zeal for educational progress as a whole. No one, for instance, worked harder and more consistently than Miss Buss for the training of teachers. She supported the movement in the most substantial way, so far as women were concerned, by giving the preference in her school to trained teachers, or by requiring those even who had won high university positions to be trained or to study the theory of education, before she would take them on her staff. In addition, she lost no opportunity of urging on head masters the desirability of making a similar requirement in boys' schools. When training comes to be required of teachers in boys' secondary schools, one of the first to be recognised as bringing this about, at any rate indirectly, will be Miss Buss.

Miss Buss was herself one of the readiest to acknowledge that many of the points in which girls' schools are at an advantage over boys' schools are due to the fact that high schools for girls started without the impedimenta of traditions and definite curricula. No gain could be greater to educationists at the present time than the example of such a one as Miss Buss in her open-mindedness to hints, and to suggestions of the experience of others in any matter of education or of school organisation. This showed itself in her keen interest in the Gilchrist travelling scholarships, as inducing English teachers to see for themselves the working of foreign systems, and to learn by observation how we might improve on things at home. Here, again, English travelling scholarships in education have come from the movement for the higher education of women. Schoolmasters will eventually see the use and the importance of them. Meantime, it is the energy and insight of such as Miss Buss, in their work for women's education, that have stimulated and procured the devotion of money to this purpose.

I have instanced two movements—the training of teachers in secondary schools, and the observation of foreign systems of teaching—to show that Miss Buss's interest in education was not simply sectional, local, nor even restricted to England. Though, of course, most intimately concerned with her own school, she was not merely a schoolmistress, but also an educationist.

The school which Miss Buss founded was the North London Collegiate School. It might be called the girls' Rugby, and in some ways Miss Buss is the Dr. Arnold among schoolmistresses. In both there was that genius of character, that personality, which carried all before it.

It is such instances as these of Dr. Arnold and Miss Buss which supply so much apparent ground for scepticism as to the possibility of the training of teachers. Given the right sort of personality, and you have a powerful teacher; without it no teacher is a living power. Mrs. Bryant in speaking of Miss Buss says: "So far as others make our education for us, the mind of the educator is more important by far than his method. And this is the more true the greater the teacher."

And yet, as I have said, Miss Buss herself was one of the most strenuous of advocates for the training of secondary teachers. She was a living embodiment of the Carlylian idea of genius, as an infinite capacity for taking pains. She had by nature that sense for the proportion of things, ranking them at once as great or small, while recognising that details are necessary each in its place, and with the strength of mind given to them to make each effective. But these powers which she had naturally she believed could be developed in others; and if the idea of the training of teachers had never been mooted, Miss Buss's influence in training her own staff might of itself have sufficed to start the idea.

Next to her power of recognising the proportion of things and her effectiveness in detail, was—and this seems to have impressed every one of those who pay tribute to Miss Buss's memory in this book—her wonderful gift of sympathetic imagination. She entered at once into close personal knowledge and sympathy with those she came to know. She was remarkably free from that critical consideration which so often lends itself to prejudices. As one who knew her well said: "Miss Buss always takes people for granted." She believed deeply in the possibilities of her pupils, and she saw clearly the way she would have them to go. She had an all-round interest in them. So that school meant to her girls not merely preparation for life, but life itself—life exactly suited to the stage of development they had reached.

Miss Buss was exceptional in that she had the qualities of an excellent organiser, without becoming mechanical in her treatment of any individual in the organised whole, whether member of her staff or pupil in the school. She had a remarkable, a royal, power of recognition of her pupils and friends, unusually numerous as they were. It was, moreover, an individualisation which went further than names and faces. It extended to circumstances and associations so slight that even a close friend might have overlooked or forgotten. Yet this memory for personal detail, especially of anything that portrayed character, gave a charm and power which made the gentler quality of womanly sympathy with the individual more prominent even than the authority of head mistressship. Nothing is more noticeable in this biography than Miss Buss's sympathy with the personal joys and happiness of her pupils, which was fully as pronounced as her sympathy with those in distress and sorrow. Away from her work she was désengagée. She could not, like Lord Burleigh, lay aside her robes of office and say: "Lie there, lord chancellor." But this was only because she lived before the opportunity for women to obtain to academic robes. This leads one to remark that Miss Buss's position, educationally, is perhaps best described as summing up in herself the very best features of the transition age from the old education, with its feminine conventionalities of the "ladies' seminary," to the new education in accordance with professional aims. When the history of education of this age comes to be written, she will have the rare distinction of being a prophet of the new era, and also of having entered in her own lifetime into the promised land. Her clearness of insight was well typified by her clearness of enunciation. Not a word seemed studied, and yet not a word seemed out of place, or was slurred in the utterance.

This is not a book to criticise as an addition to literature. It is rather a "life written by a friend for friends." Yet these are so numerous that one may say that for them there will be a vast store of gratitude felt to Miss Ridley even for the slightest of the details given, though many of these will seem to the cold, impartial reader trivial and unnecessary—probably disproportioned. To those who knew Miss Buss, however, much of the biography will be a revelation; for it reveals a many-sidedness of nature which was concealed by her absorption in, and devotion to, the duty of the minute.

I have only attempted to speak of some of the general aspects of Miss Buss's work. It will be seen, from such characteristics as I have mentioned, that a great interest attaches to the events and circumstances of her life. For these the reader must be referred to Miss Ridley's book. It is the story of a pure, unselfish, magnanimous life. The Journal of Education said in its obituary notice of Miss Buss: "As an organiser she was unrivalled. Yet it was not on the practical side that Miss Buss was at her greatest. It was—as it is with all great people—in her aims. Mrs. Bryant (in a noteworthy chapter contributed to this volume) remarks upon "Miss Buss's insistence, always very emphatic, on the idea that school and the teacher have to do in some way or other with the whole of life. . . . Character, as the prime aim of education, soon became the key-note of the North London practice." Then surely Miss Buss has joined herself with the educational future. But to her friends, over and above her powerful organising power, even beyond her high educational aims, her predominant characteristic appeared to be that she was the "most womanly of women." Viewed any way, and all ways, one of the greatest women of her generation has passed away in Frances Mary Buss.

FOSTER WATSON.

Froissart. By Mary Darmesteter. Translated from the French by E. Frances Poynter. (Fisher Unwin.)

To say that there has lately been a "boom" in Froissart would be not only to make use of an expression altogether wanting in classic elegance, but also to exaggerate. There can seldom be a "boom" in a writer who flourished five hundred years ago. In default of a "boom," however, there has been at least a revival of interest. Within the last few months have appeared Mme. Darmesteter's Froissart, in the excellent series of the "Grands Ecrivains de la France"; an abridged edition of the Chronicles in Lord Berners' translation, most efficiently edited by Mr. G. O. Macaulay; a selection from the Chronicles in Sohnes' translation, edited by myself; and now comes Mme. Darmesteter's book in an English dress—a dress, it may be observed, much better made and fitting than the great majority of vestures in which French works have to appear before the English public.

It was an excellent thought that prompted the editor of the "Grands Ecrivains de la France" to entrust the volume on Froissart to Mme. Darmesteter. Dryasdust rather despises Froissart, who is anything but dry; and even historians like Green, who are by no means "sawdustish," to use Carlyle's expression, scarcely rate the great chronicler at his full value, speaking of "the inaccuracy of his details" and his shortcomings "as an historical authority." For Froissart's faults are just those which the modern historian, who is quite strictly the historian, and prides himself on his precision, can least pardon. The chronology of the Chronicles is often more than questionable; the facts not facts at all; and the writer, with all his genuine desire to get to the reality of things, sometimes suffers himself to be imposed upon. But Mme. Darmesteter is not an historian only. She is a poet as well; and, with a poet's insight, looking beyond the errors of detail inherent to Froissart's modes of collecting information, she sees with what essential truth he portrays the men and women of the time, and reflects much of its spirit, and how tame and lifeless without his help would be our outlook on the fourteenth century.

"His greatest fault," she says, "and the fault is one that stamps him a poet, is, that in contemplating the drama of life he did not perceive the truth and the truth only, but that his Chronicles reflect the world as it is seen at twenty—more living, more beautiful, more ugly, more varied—half a reality and half a dream."

Historian and poet, for such was Froissart, who should deal with him better than one who is also an historian and poet?

To reconstruct the story of Froissart's life is by no means easy. Now and again, though all too seldom, in chronicling the history of the time, he furnishes an autobiographical passage—mentions that he was present while such and such a scene was being enacted; tells where he was and what he was doing; and his poems, if we may at all accept them as records of sober fact, seem at least to throw light on his career. Buchon, in his edition of the Chronicles, has been at the pains to arrange in chronological sequence all such autobiographical passages, whether of prose or verse; and very interesting they are when so placed in juxtaposition. But there are many lacunae—whole years of life of which we know nothing, others with regard to which our information is altogether dim and uncertain. Thus, Count Kervyn de Littenhove, who to a very great erudition unites a certain talent for hypothesis, holds that Froissart visited England as a youth, somewhere about 1355, before he came, in 1361, to Queen Philippa's Court, bearing the MS. of a history, possibly in rhyme, possibly in prose—for Froissart's own references thereto are of doubtful interpretation—which has given rise to many conjectures. Was there such an earlier visit? If we are to take Le trettis de l'espinolette amoureuse, not only for what it unquestionably is, a most graceful if too prolix poem, but also for a substantially true story—as personally I take it to be—than the earlier visit, though not, perhaps, actually proven, seems at least a probability. Mme. Darmesteter, however, ignores it, leaving blank the years which M. Kervyn de Littenhove fills not only with the sojourn of the love-lorn swain at the English Court, but with travellings to the Papal Court at Avignon, and to Narbonne and Paris.

But with such facts as are indisputably facts, Mme. Darmesteter deals skilfully; and, indeed, considering how long Froissart has been before the world, it is interesting to note how much additional light the last forty years have thrown upon his work. Within that period has been discovered, and published, the earlier Chronicle of the sumptuous ecclesiastic, Jehan le Bel—"that reverend, wise, and discreet man," as Froissart calls him—on which Froissart's own Chronicle, in its first form, was admittedly founded. Also, there has been discovered at Rome a most important MS. of part of the first book of the Chronicles, differing in important respects from all the other MSS., and showing, without doubt, what was Froissart's final judgment on the events of his time. This version, too, has been published, very inaccurately according to the most erudite Siméon Luce, who was himself collating it with the other MSS. for the admirable edition of the Chronicles published by the Société de l'Histoire de France—a publication cut short, so far, by Luce's death. And now Mme. Darmesteter herself is able to announce another "find"—that of the long lost metrical romance of Meliador which Froissart read night by night, almost till dawn, at the Court of Gaston Phoebus, Count of Foix—when, as the poet says complacently, "none durst speak any word because the Count would that I should be well understood." This poem, great in length at any rate, has recently been discovered by M. Longnon, who has communicated it to Mme. Darmesteter. Perhaps, as she herself says, "in some dusty corner of the Record Office, or among the imperfectly catalogued archives of some old English country house," we may even yet happen upon that early book, prose or verse, which the young Froissart, on coming to England, presented to the good Queen Philippa, of Hainault.

FRANK T. MARZIALS.

NEW NOVELS.

- Loveday*. By A. E. Wickham. (Cassells.)
Papier Mâché. By Charles Allen. (Heinemann.)
My Love Noel. By Hume Nisbet. (White.)
He went out with the Tide. By Guy Eden. (Macqueen.)
Ulrick the Ready. By Standish O'Grady. (Downey.)
Gobelin Grange. By Hamilton Drummond (A. & C. Black.)
A Painter's Romance, &c. By Eleanor Holmes. (Hurst & Blackett.)
A Sunday Salmon, and Another. By Frederick Gordon. (Digby, Long & Co.)

Of all the stories of adventure which, within the past two years at all events, have been produced quite as much for the benefit of adults as of boys, and over which the spirit of Robert Louis Stevenson still broods, Loveday is, in more respects than one, the cleverest. Mr. Wickham's plot is ingenuity itself; and there could hardly be a more delightful scoundrel than Sir James Macdonald, who is a marvellous compound of Robert Macaire and Bulwer Lytton's too soon-forgotten Augustus Tomlinson. For a cardsharp of the worst type, the cool courage with which he plays the part of shipwrecked traveller that is forced upon him, his easy mastery, by means of a superiority that is physical quite as much as intellectual, over the rough spirits he finds himself among, and his insouciance when discovery and death confront him—are marvellously fascinating. Nor is he absolutely heartless. It is rather too bad of him, perhaps, to drag poor, silly Mrs. Penrose into a permanent association with his fortunes by marriage; but his determination in the end to prevent Loveday, who has been unsoiled and unspoiled by his villainies, from being taken to the bottom with him, is highly commendable—all the more so, indeed, because it is disguised as rather brutal selfishness. Sir James Macdonald, alias Moreland, is the best drawn character in the book; but there are three others that are but slightly inferior—the foolish Mrs. Penrose; her loyal, though intellectually slow, son, Mr. Hugh; and Loveday, who is an admirable study in caprice and sincerity, and who has in her the stuff of which a Bathsheba Everdene is made.

Papier Mâché is a very clever book, written by a very clever man, who seems, however, to be laughing a little too much at his readers, his story, and himself, and who, above all things, is bent a trifle too much on turning smart phrases. After all, it is but the story of a marvellous violin which gets injured, patched up, stolen, recovered, and stolen again, and which, of course, brings about a fantastic love marriage. Yet there is in the earlier part of the book a fight for the possession of this violin—otherwise the "Druish Strad"—between its owner and a burglar. The necessity for describing the fight would have justified one page of effective writing; but instead of one page we have four or five, full of such sentences as:

"This way and that my resolve was jerked and swung, the great torso within my arms swelling and straining until it seemed the fetters must burst; still before me, calm in the firelight, shone the object to which I clung; not to be gainsayed, determination melted in these arms."

There is so much of this sort of writing in the book that one is apt to be unjust to the really strong characters in it—Paul Druish, the half-mad giant who has the "Druish Strad" on the brain, and his daughter Eunice. Of course Paul Druish, the artist, and Eunice, the daughter of the violin stealer, come together after a discussion which ends in—

"there was an argument that crowned self-sacrifice with roses; and one morning, in the height of summer, when London was empty, a venerable archdeacon, late of Lockthorpe, performed the quietest of quiet services, a whisper of a wedding in a cave of a church."

This is Meredith or the devil—and a little of it goes a very long way.

Mr. Hume Nisbet cannot be congratulated on the change of scene he has attempted in My Love Noel. He is quite at home in Australian life, with its stirring incidents of the "bail up" sort. But he is altogether out of his place when he tries his hand at an English village picture. Nor does he mend matters by introducing such purple patches as—

"Up into the dusky darkness of the night rolled the thick brown wrinkles of smoke, changing to pulsating eddies of crimson as they swept over the roofs of the burning house and blanked out the stars, while within the black walls the guttering flames gnawed, sputtered, and devoured all that could be made serviceable; whitely glaring between the cracks and window holes, belching up thousands of scarlet sparks, flushing over the upturned faces of the crowd, and tossing fantastic shadows upon the ground behind."

No doubt the struggles of the hard-up artist, Ralf Grimshaw, and the pieties and pettinesses of the country life which forms a setting to My Love Noel, are sketched with sufficient care; but in the long run they become very tiresome.

There is much natural pathos in He went out with the Tide, although there is also, perhaps, a trifle too much of the eternal "cherchez la femme." The supposed narrator of the tragedy is Tom Gascoigne, a retired military man of the type of Colonel Newcome. He has for his Olive Roy Bingham, the stalwart son of an old comrade, whose adventures—chiefly of the amatory sort and in society, where there are the usual "shimmering rows of bare shoulders," &c.—he tells at great length. To the extent of nine-tenths the story is the competition for Helen Rochester—the beautiful, impulsive, spirited, but somewhat selfish daughter of a hard-up Peer—between Roy and a repulsive old sinner, Sir Henry Banbury. To earn the necessary money, Roy goes for a while to Australia, where, indeed, he makes a large fortune in a surprisingly short space of time. How, indeed, having made it, he should be circumvented, and his prize taken from him by Banbury, does not appear clearly, as he manages, when in Australia, to fall in with, and almost to kill with kindness, his rival's scoundrelly agent Varney. After Helen's death he goes to the dogs and almost to the devil, but pulls up and marries Vera Buzzard, a Circæan but quite harmless widow, who had fallen in love with him while her first husband was alive, and whom he had rudely and unjustly accused of being implicated in the conspiracy to deprive him of Helen. Roy and Vera seem likely to have a quietly happy life, when they "go out with the tide"—or, in other words, are drowned—and poor Tom Gascoigne is left desolate. The story is more than fairly well written, but the author should eschew digressions.

There is an abundance of honest, if occasionally tedious, work in Mr. Standish O'Grady's romance, "the historic setting" of which, as he tells us in a sentence distinguished by that resonance which is his besetting weakness,

"includes the landing of the Spanish army at Kinsale; the intrepid ride of Lord Mountjoy, unattended, through Munster, to meet the invaders; the rising-out of the Queen's Irish to his call; the heroic defence of Kinsale by Don Juan de Aquila; the march across Ireland—north and south—of the insurgent lords of Ulster to his assistance; and the ruinous overthrow which, contrary to all expectation, they sustained at the hands of the Royalists—a defeat which proved the death-blow at the same time of Spanish ambition and of the feudal constitution of society in Ireland."

There is in Ulrick the Ready a trifle too much of fine writing like this; and Mr. O'Grady, in his conscientious desire to be true to his period, pauses too often to make explanations, and in consequence the narrative interest of the book is prone to flag. Yet Ulrick is a gallant young gentleman, and makes the acquaintance of many stalwart gallowglasses and intriguing politicians, and has endless adventures in love and war, and marries happily. Altogether, Mr. O'Grady has produced a careful picture of a stirring period in Irish life.

Mr. Drummond has made a very unfortunate attempt, in Goblin Grange, to combine tragedy with farce, as rendered by an impossible Scotchman called David, who talks a very aggravated variety of "kailyard" Scotch. If Mr. Drummond had been content to publish his book as a collection of essentially ghastly—as well as ghostly—stories, he would have done well enough. There is nothing specially eerie or Sheridan Le Fanuian about any of the legends that are yarned in the preposterous house which He buys and it haunts. Some of them, such as that which tells of the devilishness of Dmitri Isauban, the death of Paul Blatoff, and the unavailing sacrifice of Paul Blatoff's wife's virtue, seem, in point of idea, at all events, as old as Colonel Kirke. Still, there are one or two good horrors in this book, such as "Glengarragh"—the story of an Irish murder, which, though the tragedy itself is commonplace enough, is well told. Mr. Drummond might do worse than cultivate the art of writing short stories. But let him write seriously.

"A Painter's Romance" is the first, and, on the whole, most ambitious, though not perhaps the best or most artistic, of a collection of excellent minor stories that are not all, however, in the minor key. There is nothing extraordinary in it, or in any of the characters, except the gruff Claude Merriman, who might have found himself at home in J. J.'s studio, though hardly in Little Billee's. But they are all natural and good, without being obtrusively so. The story of the girl-artist's love affair and of the illness of her father is well told. The revival in middle life of a youthful romance is an old idea, but it is very skilfully and not too pathetically reproduced in "An Old Picture."

There is an abundance of high spirits in the two short Highland stories which Mr. Frederick Gordon has published, but not much else. Certainly he is not an artist in the description of female beauty, as all he has to say of very Celtic Ishabel, who is the heroine of the more artistic of his sketches, is—"Her complexion is no rose and white, but of that uniform shell-pink which, in the mellow glow reflected from the old Castle Rock, looks so ripe and full of the wine of life that a rough kiss would set the blood free." Ishabel's sham marriage is also an impossibility. It may be allowed, however, that the light comedy of both stories—Ishabel's acting as a barmaid in a Highland hotel, and the tricks played upon travellers by the Miss Mary of the other—is more than passable in its way. Mr. Gordon has produced a readable though not a distinguished book. But he should eschew verse. Of his "ballad," the less said the better.

WILLIAM WALLACE.

CURRENT LITERATURE.

Excursions in Libraria. By G. H. Powell. (Lawrence & Bullen.) The average writer of essays must, of necessity, be a proud man. There is no subject he is not able to tackle with a pompous serenity that positively amazes and overawes the timid person whose duty it is to review the volume in a weekly paper. The opinions of great critics on the poems of Byron, Shelley, Dante, are served up again without a word of acknowledgment; the platitudes in praise of solitude, the country, the town, death, and what not, are repeated again and again as though they were new and difficult truths which the ignorant must learn and understand. Of this class of writers there are so many that a book like Mr. Powell's is at first sight unwelcome. One hazards a guess at the contents, and wonders if it is necessary to read it in order to write a few paragraphs in praise, or the reverse, of the author's style and knowledge. But Mr. Powell's book is, luckily, original alike in matter and manner, perhaps too erudite for the careless reader but very pleasant for the more serious minded. The author is evidently a scholar, and has a fund of curious and entertaining knowledge, so that whether he is writing of "The Wit of History" or telling us of "The Pirates' Paradise" he is an agreeable companion. His English is sometimes a little involved—he is enamoured of parenthesis and delights to mark his pages with brackets—but he manages to hold the attention of those who treat him with respect. In fact, nothing better, in its way, has been done of late than his essay on "The Pirates' Paradise," probably the best thing in the book. There is a certain mellow and respectable humour in his commentary on Mr. Leslie's "veracious romance," A New and Exact Account of Jamaica; and the stories of Bartholomew and Morgan are told with just the right mixture of dignified horror and tentative satisfaction that the doings of "Pyrates" should arouse in the breast of the comfortable scholar. Scarcely less good is "A Medley of Memoirs," full of witty stories of all ages culled from such opposite books as the Anecdota of Procopius and the "casual notes of the vivacious and cosmopolitan Howell." Some day Mr. Powell ought to give us another volume, and the sooner the better. The publishers have done their share generously; for in printing, binding, and illustrations it would be hard to suggest an improvement.

Rainy Days in a Library. By Sir Herbert Maxwell, Bart., M.P. (Elliot Stock.) These slender but graceful essays follow the style, though with a very wide interval, of Mr. Leslie Stephen's Hours in a Library. Sir H. Maxwell places his readers in some such charming library as Newstead or Cardiff Castle on a thoroughly wet day, takes down almost at random some book from the shelves, and discourses on its characteristics. Thus, Adam Petrie's Rules of Good Deportment, now of exceeding rarity, or Baldassare's Perfect Courtier, jostle Pitcairn's Criminal Trials, or Hayward's Art of Dining. The writer's sympathetic nature bestows a certain unity on the motley collection. He extracts a few paragraphs, casts light on them from modern times and customs, compares them with the past and the present, shows where the present day exceeds the past in kindness and good sense, and then passes gently on to another topic. If every here and there his essays are slightly somniferous, it may be put down to the old-world air of the library. They are so pleasant that the reader will recur again and again to them and regret that they are only thirteen in number. Oddly enough, the poorest of them is exactly the one in which, from a priori notions, the reader might have thought that the author would have taken the greatest interest, that on St. John's Highland Sport. The beginning of it is carelessly re-stated at the end. Not a single new fact is related, though St. John only died in 1856. Sir Herbert does not even seem to be aware that grave doubt has been cast on the existence of the Muckle Hart of Benmore. Captain Topham's Scotch Letters are interesting, but Franck's Northern Memoirs should not be forgotten if the author publishes a second series.

A Happy Boy. By Bjornstjerne Bjornson. Translated from the Norwegian by Mrs. W. Archer. (Heinemann.) We are glad to see that the translation of Bjornson's novels, under the editorship of Mr. Gosse, so successfully inaugurated by the late Robert Lowe, is to be resumed. Mrs. Archer evinces the same graceful simplicity, powers of direct narrative, and command of pure English which made the reading of Synnövé Solbakken and Arne in this edition so pleasurable and satisfying. A Happy Boy is well known in this country and needs no recommendation to-day. Bjornson is here at his best as the teller of peasant romance idylls, prose poems of young love—inarticulate, but sturdy and able for conquest:

"Ha, girl," says Eyvind, "they'll be happy at seeing us happy! Two lovers who hold out against the world do people a positive service, for they give them a poem which their children learn by heart to shame the unbelieving parents."

That is the motto of A Happy Boy, and its cheerful optimism becomes the winning personality of the hero and his fair lady-love. The book gains charm, too, from its skilful presentation of peasant reserve and innate shyness. The correspondence of Eyvind during his sojourn at the agricultural college is at once extremely amusing and strangely pathetic. His letters awaken within us a profound astonishment that people so incapable of expressing themselves can ever achieve their ambitions. And yet the boy has an eloquence of his own, that to Marit at least proved irresistible:

"To the Highly Honoured Marit-Knut's Daughter, —I have just received your letter, but you seem to want me to be just as wise as I was before. I dare not write anything of what I want to write about, for I do not know you. But perhaps you don't know me either. You must not believe that I am any longer the soft cheese out of which you pressed water when I sat and watched you dance. I have lain upon many a shelf to dry since that time. Nor yet am I like those long-haired dogs that for the slightest thing let their ears droop, and slip away from people, as I used to do. I take my chance now. Your letter was playful enough, but it was playful just where it ought not to have been, for you understand me well, and you could guess that I did not ask for fun, but because of late I can think of nothing but what I asked about. I waited in deep anxiety, and then came nothing but trifling and laughter. Good-bye, Marit Nordstuer, I shall not look too much at you, as I did at that dance. I hope you may both eat and sleep well, and finish your new web of cloth, and especially that you may shovel away the snow that lies before the church door."

NOTES AND NEWS.

THE Duke of Argyll, the sole survivor of Lord Palmerston's Cabinet which, forty years ago, drew up and contracted the Treaty of Paris, the basis of England's subsequent dealings with Turkey, has, in a small volume soon to be issued by Mr. John Murray, supplied the want of a brief narrative of the chain of events which have led to the position now held by England with regard to the Eastern Question.

MESSRS. HARRISON & SONS have in preparation a new and comprehensive history of the Royal Bodyguard of the Yeomen of the Guard, based on Preston's work, and covering a period of more than four hundred years. It will be entitled The Oldest Guard.

MESSRS. TRUSLOVE & HANSON are about to publish a new work by Mr. H. Ling Roth, author of "The Aborigines of Tasmania," entitled The Natives of Sarawak and British North Borneo. The book will be fully illustrated, and will contain a preface by Mr. Andrew Lang. The author has received considerable assistance from Sir Charles Brooke, Raja of Sarawak, and from the Rani, Lady Brooke.

MESSRS. HUTCHINSON & Co. have in the press, for immediate publication, a new book by Mrs. Macquoid and Mr. Gilbert S. Macquoid. It is entitled In the Eifel, and is descriptive of a holiday ramble in a region known as the Vorder or Volcanic Eifel. The Eifel begins more than twenty miles south of Cologne, and extends as far as Treves, touches both the Rhine and the Moselle, and abounds in volcanic hills, the extinct craters of which have filled with water and now become picturesque lakes. The work is illustrated by Mr. Thomas R. Macquoid, and will have three maps.

MESSRS. SAMPSON, LOW, MARSTON & Co. have in the press for publication early next month In the Northman's Land: Travel, Sport, and Folk-lore in the Hardanger Fjord and Fjeld, by Major A. F. Mookler-Ferryman, of the Oxfordshire Light Infantry, with map and numerous illustrations.

MESSRS. HENRY & Co. will issue in a few days Federation and Empire, by Mr. Thomas A. Spalding. The work is an attempt to prove that the concession of a restricted form of local self-government to England, Scotland, and Ireland is the true solution of the political problem, which has hitherto been considered in relation to Ireland alone. The subject is treated as a national and not as a party question.

MESSRS. CHATTO & WINDUS will publish at the end of this week a new novel, in three volumes, by Mr. Justin McCarthy, called The Riddle Ring.

MESSRS. MACMILLAN & Co. will publish immediately a new edition of Cowden Clarke's Riches of Chaucer, with the impurities expunged, the spelling modernised, and the obsolete terms explained.

MESSRS. RICHARD BENTLEY & SON have in preparation a new and revised edition of the Memoir of the Rev. John Russell, by the author of "Dartmoor Days."

MESSRS. HENRY & Co. will shortly publish Nietzsche's curious work, Thus Spake Zarathustra, which the author quaintly describes as "a book for all and none." The English version is by Dr. A. Tille, the general editor of the translation of Nietzsche's Collected Works.

A NEW edition of the sixth volume of Miles's Poets and Poetry of the Century will be issued by Messrs. Hutchinson & Co. in a few days. This volume represents the poets born in the fourth decade of the century, and includes large selections from the poetry of William Morris, Alfred Austin, A. C. Swinburne, Austin Dobson, the Hon. Roden Noel, and Lord de Tabley, with critical articles by H. Buxton Forman, J. Addington Symonds, Walter Whyte, Richard Le Gallienne, T. Herbert Warren, Cosmo Monkhouse, J. Ashcroft Noble, and other writers. Opportunity has been taken to revise the selections. New work by Mr. Theodore Watts Dunton, and later work by Lord de Tabley, will replace the earlier selections of the former editions; and there will be variations in other directions. The text throughout has been compared with originals, and in some cases revised by the poets themselves.

IN the "Mermaid Series" of the best plays of the old dramatists, Mr. Fisher Unwin is about to include a selection from the works of Sir John Vanbrugh. The plays chosen are "The Relapse," "The Provok'd Wife," "The Confederacy," and "A Journey to London."

A NEW volume of Nature Sketches, by Mr. Percy Standing, is announced by Mr. Elliot Stock, under the title On this High Wold. The studies are arranged in the order of the seasons, and relate to a well-known district in the North Country.

MESSRS. HUTCHINSON & Co. announce two novels by deceased authors: Heavy Odds, by Marcus Clarke, which originally appeared, a long while ago, in Australia, under the title of "Long Odds"; and Israel Mort, Overman, by John Saunders, author of "Abel Drake's Wife."

MESSRS. ARCHIBALD CONSTABLE & Co. announce a tale of adventure by Mr. Charles Montague, to be entitled The Vigil, with fourteen full-page illustrations by Mr. A. D. McCormick.

THE delegates of the Clarendon Press are about to issue what may be called Prof. Buchheim's "jubilee edition" of Lessing's Minna von Barnhelm. Ever since the book was first published, nearly twenty-five years ago, the editor has noted down, in using it practically, all the desirable improvements and additions, in accordance with the progress which the study of German has made in this country during the last quarter of a century, and conformably to the present state of the Lessing literature in Germany. Thanks to this proceeding, Lessing's delightful play will now be issued in a thoroughly revised and considerably enlarged edition.

PROF. SALMOND'S important work, The Christian Doctrine of Immortality, which was published at the end of last year, has been out of print for some weeks. Messrs. T. & T. Clark, of Edinburgh, announce a second edition, to appear during this month.

MESSRS. BLISS, SANDS & FOSTER have moved to 12, Burslem-street, Strand, Sir George Newnes's old offices. The name of the firm will in future be Bliss, Sands & Co.

MR. THOMAS CARVER, of Hereford, is removing The Old Book Store from 6, High-street, to larger and more central premises at 8, High-town, where all correspondence should be addressed.

THE Chicago firm of Stone & Kimball, which occupied somewhat the same position in America that Elkin Matthews & John Lane used to do in this country, has just undergone a similar change. Mr. Kimball, who was the business manager, has bought up the stock and removed to New York, where he will retain the old style. But Mr. Herbert S. Stone will continue in business under his own name at Chicago, and will also continue to publish that interesting bi-monthly magazine, the Chap-Book, which is now in the third year of its age. The number for May 1 was to contain the first story of the supernatural that Mr. Henry James has written, called "The Way it Came." It seems worthy of note that the first book announced by the new firm of H. S. Stone & Co. is from the pen of an English author, being a second series of Prose Fancies, by Mr. Richard Le Gallienne.

AT a special meeting of the Royal Geographical Society, to be held at Burlington Gardens on Monday next, at 8.45 p.m., Prince Henry of Orleans will read a paper on his recent journey from Talifu to Assam, in which he claims to have discovered the true source of the Irawaddi.

AT the meeting of the Elizabethan Society to be held at Toynbee Hall, on Wednesday next, Mr. J. E. Baker, the hon. secretary, will read a paper on "The Plays of Thomas Otway."

AT a meeting of the Society of Public Librarians held at the Stratford Public Library on Wednesday, Mr. John Frowde read a paper, entitled "New Inventors and Old Indicators," which resulted in considerable discussion. Mr. Cotgreave afterwards exhibited and explained the working of his new Simplex Indicator, and also described the method of shelf arrangement, cataloguing, &c., in use at the West Ham libraries. The next meeting will be held at Lewisham.

MR. PYM YEATMAN has received a letter from Mr. W. E. Gladstone with reference to the recently published work, The Gentle Shakespeare:

"I sincerely rejoice in all labours directed to the elucidation of history. I should be particularly glad to hear of a full and careful life of such a man as Campion; but I regret to say I find it most difficult to obtain original works giving the Roman or Recusant side of sixteenth century history in England."

THE FORTHCOMING MAGAZINES.

JUDGE O'CONNOR MORRIS will contribute to the July number of the Fortnightly Review an article on "The Irish Land Bill of Lord Salisbury's Government."

THE first instalment of a new serial story by Mr. Max Pemberton will appear in the June part of Cassell's Magazine. It will be entitled "A Puritan's Wife," and purports to be "The story of Hugh Peters, the son of Jonathan Peters, of Warboys, in the county of Huntingdon, and the nephew of that Hugh Peters who was chaplain to the Lord-General Cromwell." The story will be illustrated by Mr. Sidney Paget.

MR. FERGUS HUME'S new novel, "Tracked by a Tattoo," will begin in the number of Cassell's Saturday Journal published on May 20.

UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS.

THE delegates of the common university fund at Oxford have appointed Mr. Edward Jenks, of King's College, Cambridge, to be reader in English Law for a term of five years. Mr. Jenks is at present professor of law at University College, Liverpool. He was for some time dean of the faculty of law in Melbourne University, and has written a volume on The Australian Colonies, for the "Cambridge Historical Series."

THE council of the Senate at Cambridge have reported in favour of admitting St. Edmund's College, Old Hall, Ware, to the privileges of affiliation. St. Edmund's College claims to be the oldest seat of liberal education belonging to the Roman Catholic body in England, as successor in 1793 to the former English College of Douai. Hitherto its curriculum has been regulated mainly with a view to the examinations for the London degree in Arts; but it is now proposed to bring all the work into harmony with the Cambridge course.

THE Smith's Prizes at Cambridge have been adjudged as follows: the first prize to Mr. W. S. Adie, of Trinity, for his essay on "Discontinuous Fluid Motion in Two Dimensions"; the second prize is divided between Mr. A. Y. G. Campbell, of Trinity, for his essay on "The Differential Equations of Theoretical Dynamics," and Mr. F. W. Lawrence, of Trinity, for his essay on "Methods of Factorisation."

PROF. J. J. THOMSON has been appointed to represent Cambridge at the Sesquicentennial celebration of the founding of the College of New Jersey, and the inauguration of Princeton University, which is to be held in October.

THE Rev. Dr. E. Moore, principal of St. Edmund Hall, has been re-appointed, by the curators of the Taylor Institution, lecturer on Dante at Oxford for a further term of two years.

PROF. H. A. MIERS, the first occupant of the reconstituted chair of mineralogy at Oxford, in succession to Prof. Story-Maskelyne, will deliver his inaugural lecture on Wednesday next. Prof. Miers is the only resident member of the two universities whose name appears among the selected candidates for the Royal Society.

MR. W. R. MORFILL, reader in Slavonic, at Oxford, was to deliver a public lecture on Friday of this week, on "The Influence of English Literature in Russia."

AT a meeting of the Ashmolean Society, to be held in the University Museum at Oxford on Monday next, Mr. F. G. Scott Elliott will give a lecture on "The Race Elements of South Africa."

THE Cambridge Review has instituted a sort of plebiscite among resident members of the university below the degree of M.A., on the subject of degrees for women. The voting is decisive. Out of 2830 postcards sent out, 2138 were returned duly filled up. Of these 1692 were against the proposal, and only 437 in favour of it; while four were neutral.

AT the general meeting of the Convocation of London University, held on Tuesday, the following resolution, recommended by the annual committee, was unanimously adopted:

"That some means should be devised for a more thorough preliminary investigation, than has hitherto been usual, of the mathematical questions proposed to be set in the university examinations."

It was also announced that the following had been elected to vacant fellowships: Dr. T. B. Napier, Prof. C. Hubert H. Parry, Prof. W. F. R. Weldon, and Mr. Arthur Milman.

THE council of University College, Bristol, have issued an appeal for a capital sum of £10000, in order to clear the institution from debt, and also for an addition of £700 to the annual sustentation fund, which is urgently required to secure the Government grant. In response to this appeal, more than £5000 has already been promised; and the Technical Education Committee of the Bristol Corporation have recommended a conditional grant of £2000.

MANY readers of the ACADEMY will be interested to know that a committee has been formed to promote a memorial at Copenhagen of the late Prof. George Stephens, whose life was devoted to northern archaeology. The chairman is Sir Edmund Monson, now British ambassador at Vienna; and the secretary and treasurer is the Rev. C. A. Moore, now chaplain of the English church at Dresden. Among the English members of the committee are: the Bishop of Stepney, Sir John Evans, Prof. Earle, Prof. Skeat, and Dr. Isaac Taylor. The memorial that has been determined upon is a small endowment fund, bearing the name of George Stephens, for the benefit of St. Alban's Church, in the founding of which he took an active part, and in which he was an habitual worshipper. It should be added that the colleagues of the late professor in the University of Copenhagen, while gladly lending their names to the committee, have decided to carry out a special memorial of their own. Subscriptions may be sent to the Dredner Bank, 65, Old Broad-street, E.C.

ON the occasion of the Hungarian Millennium, the Emperor-King Francis Joseph has authorised the Budapest University to confer the following honorary degrees: Henry Sidgwick, of Cambridge, Doctor of Political Economy; Prof. John Shaw Billings, of Philadelphia, and Sir Joseph Lister, Doctor of Medicine; Mr. Bryce, Mr. Herbert Spencer, Lord Kelvin, and Prof. Max Müller, Doctor of Philosophy.

OBITUARY.

GEORGE VISYENOS.

THE death of George Visyenos—although from the melancholy cloud that overshadowed the last four years of his life, a circumstance to be welcomed rather than regretted—leaves a gap in Athenian letters.

The early career of Visyenos might have been called fortunate, if one did not call to mind that no man is to be accounted happy till his death. Of humble origin, he attracted, when he was a boy and an acolyte, the attention of a dignitary of the Church, and was educated at his expense, and finally sent to the university by a rich patron. This patron eventually encouraged him in his worship of the Muse, and was at the cost of publishing a volume of poems called Ἀρχαῖες Ἀδραι, which the poet came to England to get printed, and which was issued from the firm of Messrs. Triibner & Co. in 1884 in no mean presentment. Large octavo, fine type, hand-made paper, wide margins, binding of vellum, uncut, with gilt tops, did everything that could be desired for the exterior of Ἀρχαῖες Ἀδραι. The inside, which must after all be the most important part of any book, will be chiefly remembered for its graceful embodiment in easily flowing metres of well-known archaic myths; and also of some of more recent date beloved of the people. The whole was written, too, in the language of the people, which, notwithstanding the endeavours of the schools, still holds its own among modern Hellenic poets, and is a fitting vehicle for the pretty legends that George Visyenos gathered together, many of them being from his native Thrace. All his themes, whether derived from ancient or modern mythology, are charmingly rendered. The archaic ones deal with the loves of Earth and Spring, with sun myths and the forces of Nature generally. The modern poems have the same underlying meaning, with the old προσωποποιήσεις worked into metamorphoses of animals and plants. Thirteen of the poems in this volume had such a fascination for the writer of this notice that their translation was attempted in a collection of modern Greek verse. A more recent use was made of one, which undertakes to show "how bats came into existence" as the basis of a story for children.

George Visyenos afterwards became a professor in the university of Athens, and wrote no more poetry, or only at long intervals. He was ever a courteous and friendly correspondent; and his letters only ceased when he became afflicted with that mental aberration, through which he was virtually dead four years before his merciful removal by an attack of paralysis.

ELIZABETH MAYHEW EDMONDS.

ORIGINAL VERSE.

ΑΘΗΝΑΙΣ.

[Ode recited in the Stadium at Athens on the concluding day of the Olympic Games, April 15, 1896.]

(Στρ. δ.)
Ἀνδρῶν τηλεπαπῶν ἐσμὲν αἰετομαί βαρβαρῶν, αὐτὸς συμπεδέχων κρατεροῦ πόνου, οὐ βάρβαρον στρατεύμα· ἀκαματόποδες γὰρ ὄρμα μάχαι
ἦλθον, ἦλθον, ἰέ,

(Ἀντ. δ.)
ματρός τ' ἐσσυμένοι καλλιχόρων τεχνῶν ἰμέρῳ, κάλους ματρός, ἰοστεφάνου πόλιος,
καὶ κλέους, Ἀθανῶν.
Ἰτ', ἀδελφοί, θυμῷ ὀρώσατ' ἐγ-κωμίων ἄστων,

(Ἐπ. δ.)
ἔστω δ' ἔμμι θεὸς γλυκὺ λαΐμα πλέουσι ναυσίποτος αὐδᾶς,
πληχθέντες γὰρ ἔρωτ' ἐρατεινότητας παρθένου
νῦν διαστείβομεν θάλασσαν.

(Στρ. β.)
μᾶτερ, δόξαν ἔχεις ξεινοσύνας ἀεὶ πανδόκου, καὶ σοὶ μαυτυρεῖ μένος ἰβὼν Ὀρεστοῦ θεοῦ φυγόντος,
λύτρον γ' ἄβλαβούς ἔδωκας βλάβας.
ἔμμε δ' ὃ κλεοννά,

(Ἀντ. β.)
εὐφρων δεξαμένα γ' ἀγαλαίαι νικαφόροις ἔβλων τῶν πλάσων μεθέποντας ἐκᾶς σὴν χάριν κλέος τε.
ἄποθεν γὰρ ἐπερχόμεσθ' ἀθρόοι,
τοὺς γὰρ Ἀγγαλίαν

(Ἐπ. β.)
ἔσσειεν φιλέτιμος ἔρως ἐφορᾶν χέ-ραν, δ' ἀμφὶ καλᾶς
αὐτοὶ μαρτάμενοι ποτ' ἐλευθερίας, ἐν δὲ Μουσῶν τέκνον, τὸν βίον προῆκαν.

(Στρ. γ.)
τοὺς δ' ἔβλων μοι ἄνακτας πόρεν ὀλβία Γαλλία, τοὺς δ' ἀθρόα βαθὺ λήϊον Οὐγγαρίας
Τευτόνων τ' ἔχοντας, στράτον οὐδ' Ἀμέριστος αἰ' ἐξέπεμψεν δρόμοις ἀφαιρῶν.

(Ἀντ. γ.)
Πηλὸς δὲ λέγεται καὶ Θέτιος γάμοισιν θεῶν ἠρώων τε χρόνον μέγα δάμα γερῶραι, σοὶ δ' ἔρ', ὃ πάρολβε,
πατρίδος πόρα νῦν Πατήρ, τῆς ἐμῆς
προσφιλῆς θυμῶς,

(Ἐπ. γ.)
Μοσκῶν τε γάμος πόρα, χήτερος αἶαν πατρίαν Ἀλεξάνδρος τῆς σῆς πεδάμειβει. ἀγῶλλος δ', ὃ φιλτάτα, καὶ δέκνυ δαρῶν αὐδᾶς.

G. S. ROBERTSON.

MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS.

THE new number of the Savoy is printed admirably by the Chiswick Press, and is perhaps the cheapest thing that has been done at half-a-crown. Indeed, Mr. C. H. Shannon's lithograph of "The Dive" would itself—and it is but one of many illustrations—be cheap at the money: it is an exquisite thing. Then there is Mr. Beardsley, for those who like him very much, and for those who, without liking him wildly, recognise in him a decorative artist of original and fertile talent. And there is

Mr. Pennell, too, and Mr. Sickert, with a "Venice," and Mr. Steiner, whose name we ought to know, we suppose, since he contributes what is a quite charming "Portrait of my Wife in August, 1895." The literary contents are neither less varied nor less noticeable. A tale of smart people, by "a new writer," is written with unflinching directness. By Lombroso there is a matter-of-fact record of an hysterical saint of his acquaintance. By Mr. Gosse and Mr. Arthur Symonds charming contributions that deal with Paul Verlaine and his visit to London and to Oxford; by Mr. Wedmore, more about his little "Nancy," who has been in deep waters, but has begun "the journey homeward—to herself"; and by Miss Leila Macdonald a dramatic poem, tenderly, visionary, and full of music, called "The Love of the Poor." Nor do the pieces we have now noted exhaust the list of the contents of the Savoy. Whatever may be said against one or other of the contributions, this new quarterly miscellany, as a whole, has great character. The Savoy has "caught on."

CORRESPONDENCE.

DISCOVERY OF A FRAGMENT OF ECCLESIASTICUS IN THE ORIGINAL HEBREW.

Cambridge: May 13, 1896.

All students of the Bible and of the Apocrypha will be interested to learn that, among some fragments of Hebrew MSS. which my sister Mrs. Gibson and I have just acquired in Palestine a leaf of the Book of Ecclesiasticus has been discovered to-day by Mr. S. Schechter, lecturer in Talmudic to the university of Cambridge.

The Talmud contains many quotations from the Book of Ecclesiasticus, which are not always accurate, and Jewish writers of the ninth century have also preserved some passages for us. But now, for the first time, we have a leaf, albeit a mutilated one, of the original.

The leaf is paper, and measures  $7\frac{1}{2}$  ins. by  $7\frac{1}{2}$  ins. The writing is in two columns, hanging from the line.

Mr. Schechter is now studying it, and he hopes soon to publish its text.

AGNES S. LEWIS.

ON LORD CRAWFORD'S IRISH MEDICAL MS.

London: April 20, 1896.

One of the Celtic κειμήλια in the British Museum (Additional 15,403) is a fifteenth century vellum MS., treating of materia medica—mineral, vegetable, and animal—and comprising 167 articles. This MS., was briefly noticed by Dr. Norman Moore in his essay on the History of Medicine in Ireland (St. Bartholomew Hospital Reports, xi. 164), and by M. Henri Gaidoz (Revue Celtique, vii. 165): the headings of the chapters have been printed and commented on by the present writer in the same review (ix. 224-240); and the chapters on gold; on small-age, shepherd's purse, caraway, and savory; on the haro, the bone of stag's heart and Spanish flies, are edited, with translations, by Mr. S. H. O'Grady in his catalogue of the Irish codices in the British Museum, pp. 224-231.

Unfortunately, the Museum MS. is imperfect both at the beginning and at the end. It also omits some of the articles whose Latin names begin respectively with c, d, f, o, p, and r. All who are interested in Irish and Low-Latin lexicography, in folk-lore, and in the history of medicine, will therefore be glad to hear that the missing chapters have been found in another vellum of about the same date, belonging to the Earl of Crawford, preserved in the Haigh Hall library, and hitherto, I believe, unknown to Celtic scholars. The headings of these chapters are, for the most part, glossed in Irish, and headings and glosses are as follows:

FO. 1<sup>a</sup>. ARON BARBA, IARUS, PES UITULI .i. TRI HANMA[NNA] IN GRAGAIR, "three names of the cuckoo-spit."

1<sup>b</sup>. Acacia, sucus p[r]unellarum [immaturarum] .i. sugh * na n-airneadh n-ana-baidh, "the juice of the unripe aloes." Absinsium, centonica, ponticum .i. tri hanmanna in uormoint, "the three names of the wormwood."

2<sup>b</sup>. Abrotanum, cambolorata† .i. da ainm in tugharrmoint, "the two names of the southernwood."

3<sup>a</sup>. Acalife [ἀκαλήφη], urtica .i. da ainm na neanutoigi, "the two names of the nettle."

3<sup>b</sup>. A[da]rasca, eliborus albus .i. da ainm an tathaba[il] gil, "the two names of the white hellebore."

4<sup>a</sup>. Albagia, portulaca, pes pu[l]li .i. tri hanmanna na hadhainne, "the three names of the coltsfoot."

Accedula, oxilapacium [δύλαπασιον], rumex‡ .i. tri hanmanna in tsamaidh, "the three names of the sorrel."

4<sup>b</sup>. Acetum, oxiren, oxire[re]um .i. tri hanmanna an fneagra, "the three names of the vinegar."

5<sup>a</sup>. Accridentancia, pastinaca .i. anmanna in mecon righ, "the names of the parsnip."

5<sup>b</sup>. Afodillus, centum [capita], capitulum agriate .i. anmanna an cremha, "the names of the wild garlic."

6<sup>a</sup>. Agaricus, fungus .i. da ainm na hagarige, "the two names of the agaric."

6<sup>b</sup>. Agramonía, argimonia .i. da ainm an margroidhgin [leg. murdraigin], "the two names of the agrimony."

Agnus castus .i. an meatort [leg. meatort] allaid, "the tutsan."

7<sup>a</sup>. Alacon, politricum, capilli Veneris .i. tri hanmanna an dub coasidh [leg. dubchoasigh], "the three names of the maidenhair."

Alapin, cepa marina, sgilla .i. tri hanmanna an uinnemain Spaine, "the three names of the onion of Spain."

7<sup>b</sup>. Alapsa, galla, pomum quercus .i. anmanna in ubaill fasas ar duilib na darach, "the names of the apple that grows on the leaves of the oak."

8<sup>a</sup>. Albedarug, columbina, basilicon¶ .i. tri hanmanna an columbin, "the three names of the columbine."

Alaxandrum, Macedonica, petroselinum [MS. petrasidinum] .i. tri hanma[nna] an elesoutra [leg. elestronta?], "the three names of the parsley."

8<sup>b</sup>. Albeaton [ἀρβεστος?], calx uiua .i. da ainm an áil uir, "the two names of the quicklime."

Alt[h]ea, malua, bismalua .i. tri hanmanna an leamaigh maighe, "the three names of the mallow."

9<sup>a</sup>. Aloe, epaticum, si[co]trinum .i. anmanna na haloé, "the names of the aloe."

Alphur flos fraxini [MS. fraxine] .i. blath no ros na fuinusinne, "the flower or seed of the ash-tree."

9<sup>b</sup>. Allu[as]al, cepa .i. da ainm in uinnemhain garrga, "the two names of the garden onion."

Allumen, stiptina [leg. stypteria], sucarium .i. tri hanmanna na hailime, "the three names of the alum."

10<sup>a</sup>. Ambra sperma ceti .i. coimpert an mil moir, "the sperm of the whale."

Ambrosia, eupatorium, lili[st]agus [ἐλαλισ-φακος] .i. tri hanmanna na hemer[e] sleibe.

Anabulla titimalli [τρίβυλλος] .i. gearr-an eighmhi.

10<sup>b</sup>. Amedum [uel] amillum [ἀμυλον] .i. leighes doniter do sugh na cruthneacht, "a medicament made of the juice of wheat," "medulla frumenti sine mola facti" (Alphita, p. 8).

Anocula alba sgabiosa.

11<sup>a</sup>. Allium .i. an gairleog, "the garlic."

11<sup>b</sup>. Acanthum semen urticae* .i. ros [u]a neanntogi, "the seed of the nettle."

Anetum .i. luibh, "a plant."

Antera flos rosae† .i. blath na roisi.

12<sup>a</sup>. Anisum cuminum dulce‡ .i. in ainia.

Apium domesticum§ .i. an meaisi garrga, "the garden amallage."

The Museum MS. begins in the middle of this article.

17<sup>a</sup>. Cinaglosa [κυνόγλωσσον] .i. in finagoth, "the hound's tongue."

Cinis omnes [leg. omnis] .i. gach uile luith, "every ash."

17<sup>b</sup>. Cito ualens .i. an síduall, "the wild valerian," Chaucer's cetewale, setewale, O.Fr. citoual, which Godefroy confounds with citouar = zedoaria.

Coconid[ium] .i. síl in lauriola, "the seed of the spurge-laurel."

Codion [κόδιον] .i. an popín geal, "the white poppy."

18<sup>a</sup>. Cornu serui [leg. cerui] .i. congnia in fadhga, "the horn of the deer."

Cauda porcina .i. in gurmalle, "the gromwell" (W. gromit).

18<sup>b</sup>. Caulis ortentis [leg. hortensis] .i. as praisach garrda, "the garden cabbage."

Celedonia.

19<sup>a</sup>. Centa[u]rea .i. an dedga.

19<sup>b</sup>. Cearefolium [leg. Caesefolium] .i. in comann gail, "the chervil."

Cerusa .i. blath in luaidhghí [leg. luaidhi], "flos plumbi."

20<sup>a</sup>. Cotilidon .i. an cornan caisill, "the wall pennywort."

Citrage** .i. in t-orafunt, "the horehound."

Cinamomum .i. an cainel, "the cinnamon."

20<sup>b</sup>. Cibapirum [κυβειρον] .i. an riibh, "the brimstone."

Colafonium [κολοφωνία] .i. an píoc gre-gach, "pix graeca."

21<sup>a</sup>. Colacindita [κολοκυνθίς] .i. leighes, "a medicine."

21<sup>b</sup>. Consolida maior†† .i. lus na onamh mbristi, lit. "the plant of the broken bones," the common comfrey.

Consolida media .i. an t-easbog beaain, "the ox-eye daisy."

22<sup>a</sup>. Consolida minor .i. ainm in nóiuín, "the name of the daisy."

Comum [leg. Conium, κόνιον] .i. ros na minde mire, "the seed of the hemlock."

22<sup>b</sup>. Corallus rubium .i. an cural derg 7 cloch hí, "the red coral, and it is a stone."

Corona regia .i. an eac[h]seamur, "the horse-clover" ?

Coriand[er]um .i. luibh fasas annsa domun mor 7 gortar in t-ainmsa da síl, "a plant that grows on the Continent, and its seed is called by this name."

* MS. semen urticae.

† MS. ros.

‡ MS. crinum dulce.

§ MS. domis dicum.

|| MS. luithh.

¶ MS. coghna in fadhgha.

** MS. Citraga.

†† MS. consolida mageor.

Centinodium ["knotgrass"] .i. an glui-neach bec.

23<sup>b</sup>. Crocus .i. an croch.

24<sup>a</sup>. Cubibis .i. spiarad, "a spice."

Catapusia [καταψύσια] .i. gran Oilealla.

Cucurbita .i. luibh, "an herb."

Cuscute .i. clamhan an lin, "the mange of the flax."

24<sup>b</sup>. Dactilus [δάκτυλος] .i. toradh craind he, "the fruit of a tree."

Daucus asininus .i. an mílbocan, "the parsnip."

34<sup>a</sup>. Here, on the lower margin, are two charms: one in Latin against bad dreams; the other in Irish against worms.

35<sup>a</sup>. Fex .i. na deascadh, "the lees."

37<sup>b</sup>. Here there is a lacuna—the articles from Ipoquisedidos (ἵποκυσίδος) to Marrubium (both inclusive) being absent.

40<sup>a</sup>. Origanum .i. arraitai, "pennyroyal" ?

40<sup>b</sup>. Orobus [ὀροβος] .i. in pís capail, "the nag's pea."

43<sup>b</sup>. Pelet[er]um [πέλετρον?] .i. piletra (= W. pelydr).

44<sup>a</sup>. Pionia [παιονία] .i. píone.

47<sup>b</sup>. Rubus .i. in ferrdris. This chapter is followed by two without Latin titles, one headed Raidleog "darnel," the other on holly (cuileann).

49<sup>a</sup>. Sdrusium [leg. stronium] .i. in praisach.

Sulfur .i. in raib.

49<sup>b</sup>. Solcicium [leg. Solsequium] .i. ainm don ruddus, "a name for the marigold" (ruidlus, borrowed from W. rhuddos).

Spodium .i. cnaim na heilefinti, "(burnt) ivory," lit. "the bone of the elephant."

Stiticos [leg. Sticados, στοιχάδς] .i. in sian slebe ("the foxglove").

50<sup>a</sup>. Satirion .i. tulcan.

Sandale.

Sdafis [a]gris [σάφης ἀγρία] .i. síl luibhe e, "seed of a plant."

50<sup>b</sup>. Scolapendria.

Stipeocadus .i. na luibe ana fuil bríy stipeolha, "the plants in which is a styptic virtue."

Sparagus .i. mudhomhuan.

Storax .i. guim croinn, "gum of a tree."

51<sup>a</sup>. Sompnus .i. an codladh, "the sleep."

Sittis .i. an n-itte, "the thirst."

Salvia .i. in saital, "the sage."

51<sup>b</sup>. Sauina .i. in liathan locha.

Tartarum .i. deascadh an fina he, "the lees of the wine."

52<sup>a</sup>. Terra sigillata .i. an talam selaighteach.

Turbit [Turbith, Alphita, p. 183, col. 2].

Triticum .i. an cruithneacht.

52<sup>b</sup>. Tanacetum agreste .i. na brisceain.

Tapsia .i. an ferban, "the crowfoot."

53<sup>a</sup>. Telarauea .i. in lin bis eigin daman allaid, "the net that a spider has" ("aranei tela").

Terpentina .i. guim croinn, "the gum of a tree."

Tamariscus .i. croiceann croinn fasas annsan Innia, "the skin of a tree that grows in India."

Tamurindi .i. toradh croinn, "fruit of a tree."

Turio uitis .i. maethain na fineamnach 7 maethain gach croinn ele 7 gach luibhe, oir fettar in t-ainm do rad riu uile, "the sprouts of the vine and the sprouts of every other tree and of every plant, for the name can be said of them all."

53<sup>b</sup>. Uernix .i. guim croinn hí, "gum of a tree."

Ueruena.

54<sup>a</sup>. Viola .i. in tsáil cuach.

54<sup>b</sup>. Uirga pastoris .i. lus na meadan min.

Uitrum .i. an gloine.

Una .i. caera aipiti na fineamna, "the ripe berries of the vine."

* MS. tri sugh.

† Over the o an i is written. Read camphorata ?

‡ MS. nathataba.

§ MS. rumel.

|| MS. Alapincepam arina.

¶ MS. colubrium nabasilicon.

- 55<sup>a</sup>. Unum .i. an fin.
 55<sup>b</sup>. Uenenum .i. a neim. Followed by a long list (in Irish) of antidotes—blood of adders and hares, various plants, milk of asses and mares, deer's testicles, &c.
 56<sup>a</sup>. Uenter .i. an bru.
 Uermis. Followed by a list of things, such as amber, that kill worms (na péste).
 Uisus .i. an radharo. Followed by a list of things, such as aloes, that clear the sight.
 Uomitius .i. an sgeathrach. Followed by a list of emetics.
 56<sup>b</sup>. Uritius .i. na nêthe aga fuil brîg loisneach, "the things which have a burning power," such as peletia, staffs agria, black pepper, mustard, garlic, &c.
 Xyucra, "sugar."
 57<sup>a</sup>. Yrapigra [ερα πικρά] Galieni .i. com-suidigud<sup>a</sup> nasal d'ordaigh Galien, "a noble compound which Galen prescribed."
 Zincoiber .i. an sinnser, "the ginger."

Here the treatise ends. The authorities cited in the chapters now discovered are Ipcrait (Hippocrates) and Galen, Aristotal (Aristoteles), Socrates, Discoirdes (Dioscorides), Metrodorus (Μητροδωρος), Constantinus Africanus, Platarius, Gillibertinus, Isag (Isaac Judaeus of Egypt), Gearard (Gerard of Cremona), Mastoer (Macer Floridus), the Arab physicians Hali, Rases, Avicenna, Averroes, and the Nestorian "Ebe mesue" (Yuhannâ ibn Mâsawaihi), commonly called Johannes Damascenus. But the treatise is no mere compilation. This is proved by the bits of folklore found in it, such as these: hang shepherd's purse about the necks of sheep and the wolf will not see them; marigold keeps off poisonous animals; aerial demons cannot hurt the possessor of red coral; birthwort powdered and shaken on the fire drives demons out of a house; the powder of gladiolus is good against enchantments (piacoga); sprinkle with holy water the powdered husk of the pepper-plant before using it to cure eye-ailments; and when you drink a certain potion out of a dead man's skull, you should previously pray for his soul.

The verso of fo. 57 is occupied by a notice of "Aurea alexandrea," which is good against headaches, by a paragraph on "Antimeron," and by the beginning of a tract on the medical virtues of the eagle's gall and the juice of the hawk's stomach. There is then a lacuna in the MS.

Ff. 58<sup>a</sup>-60<sup>a</sup> treat of miscellaneous medical matters: simple medicine (58<sup>a</sup>), the curative virtues of athair losa and lus Ailella (59<sup>a</sup>), together with those of deer and goats (59<sup>b</sup>).

F. 60<sup>b</sup> contains (inter alia) a pedigree, probably written in Scotland, of Gilla esbutus (sic) mac Semuâ, mac Alasdair, mac Eoin Cathanig, mac Eoin, mac Domhnaill Ballaich, mac Eîr Moir, up to Tuathal Techtmar—thirty-four generations. The Alastar (Carrach), John Cathánach, John (Mór, King of the Isles), and Donnall Ballaich here mentioned were famous men in their day, and three of them were hung on the one gallows, in 1499, by James IV. of Scotland (see the Annals of Ulster, the Annals of Loch Cé ad ann., and O'Donovan's note p. Four Masters, 1590 A.D.).

The principal contents of the rest of the MS. (ff. 61<sup>a</sup>-124<sup>b</sup>) are a glossary, chiefly of plant-names explained in Irish, which fills ff. 117-118<sup>a</sup>, col. 1, and short treatises (all in fifteenth-century Irish), on eye-ailments (69, 73-75<sup>b</sup>), fistula (70<sup>b</sup>), dysentery (71<sup>a</sup>), headache (72<sup>a</sup>); diseases of the ears (76<sup>a</sup>, 76<sup>b</sup>, 77<sup>a</sup>), nose (77<sup>b</sup>), mouth (78<sup>b</sup>), and teeth (78<sup>b</sup>); worms (76<sup>b</sup>), boils (80<sup>a</sup>-90<sup>a</sup>), lethargy (91<sup>a</sup>), hernia (92<sup>b</sup>), paralysis (94<sup>a</sup>), dropey (97<sup>a</sup>-108<sup>a</sup>, 112<sup>a</sup>), and small-pox (108<sup>a</sup>). Urinary ailments are noticed in ff. 121<sup>a</sup>-122<sup>b</sup>; and the verso of the last leaf, which should come before fo. 61, is occupied with the commencement of an Irish table of contents of the treatise on materia medica.

WHITLEY STOKES.

THE ETYMOLOGY OF "CHUM."

Cambridge: May 11, 1896.

The etymology of "chum" is unknown. Nevertheless, I wish to point out that an etymology for it was given 130 years ago, which is so curious that it may be true.

In the well-known Bremen Wörterbuch, vol. ii. p. 895 (printed in 1767), we have this entry:

"Kumpen, abgekürzt Kump, ein Gesell, Kamerad, Genosse, Colleague, socius, consors. Eng., chum."

If there is a real connexion between these words, it remains to be seen how it could have come about. We know that it was a students' word, first in vogue in universities. It must have been picked up in some German university, and brought home to England. The next thing requisite was to write it down.

We learn from the New English Dictionary that it was first written down about 1684. There was at that date a great belief in Greek spelling, which rendered the use of ch for the English sound of k by no means uncommon. Of course, this happened principally in Greek words such as "chaos," "chorus," "chirurgion," "cholera," and the rest. But there were cases in which ch was used for words of doubtful or not obvious origin, such as "Cham," meaning the Great Khan; "Chagan," with the same sense; "champhire," for camphor; "charact," a by-form of carat; not to mention the Italian chiaroscuro, found in 1686. That this use of ch was considered elegant and classical appears from the fact that in the fifteenth century the river Cam was Latinised as Chamus by writers of Latin verse. Still stranger is "chim-oham," as a variant of "kim-kam." But it is most to the point to observe that when Chapman wished to introduce the German word Kurfürst, he (or his printers) actually adopted the form "churfürst," in which the ch stood for the sound of k; possibly in order to indicate the back k (before u) as distinct from the palatal k in "keen." In like manner, an Englishman who wished to write down the German Kump (short for Kumpfen) might easily be tempted to give it a learned look, befitting a student, by spelling it "chum," which would be the German familiar form, adapted by cutting off the final letter. Such, for all we know, may have been intended by the spelling "chum" in Creech's Theocritus (1684).

Supposing this to be once done, any one who first came across the word by seeing it spelt would naturally imagine ch to represent the k in "chamber," just as one is naturally tempted to read aloud about the Grand Cham of Tartary (with the same ch). The word, once mispronounced, could never recover itself; and, in fact, it was not long before an impossible tradition grew up that it meant "chamber-fellow," and was derived thence by the very summary process of cutting off three syllables, and altering the vowel!

If the above story can be made good, or can be accepted as probable (as I think it is), we have no further difficulty. We should then say that "chum" was due to an attempt to naturalise the Low-German student-term Kump, a familiar form of Kumpfen. As for Kumpfen, Weigand and Schade correctly inform us that it was borrowed, somewhat early, from the Old French compainz, as Godefroy spells it. We are more familiar with the extended form compagnon, which we spell "companion." As to the sense, nothing can be more satisfactory. If we want to translate the English "chum" into German, we have only to use Kumpfen, and we have it exactly. Flügel's German Dictionary has:

"Kumpfen (old and colloquial), companion, mate, colleague, fellow; ein lustiger Kumpfen (jocularly), a jolly dog."

Indeed, the New English Dictionary, s.v. "Compane," tells us that the French compain is "now a schoolboy word, meaning chum."

WALTER W. SKEAT.

THE SIN-EATER IN WALES.

London: May 11, 1896.

The dissyllabic compound ymyl is the ordinary Welsh word for "brim," "edge," &c. In Carmarthenshire that word is pronounced imil, the vowel in both syllables having the same value as in the English word "limit." The Irish and Gaelic cognates are imall and iomall. In Cardiganshire and North Wales the vowel has a different sound, which the u of the English word "humble" will represent well enough. I cannot at present see my way to concede that Miss Beale's abeilon has anything to do with ymyl and its plural form ymylon, or with the very dubious variants y bylon and y mylon given by Mr. Eilir Evans. I cannot find myl as an independent word in the dictionaries; and this is what they say about its brother byl.

Owen Pughe's Dictionary<sup>2</sup>, 1832:

"Byl, sm. pl. t. au (yl), a brim or edge. Yn llawn hyd y byl, being full to the brim, full [urial]. This word is only used in North Wales in its compound forms, ymyl, cyfyl, and the like."

Silvan Evans's English-Welsh Dictionary (1858) has, under "brimless," "a heart brimful of tears," calon llawn o ddagrau hyd y byl. The same distinguished lexicographer's Welsh-English Dictionary has (p. 600):

"Byl (ÿ), sm. f., a brim or edge; a rim. Llawn hyd y fyl, full to the brim, brimful. S[-outh] W[-ales]."

But Mr. Eilir Evans says that y bylon and y mylon not only mean "edges" or "margins," but also "perquisites" or "gifts." In regard to that statement I have collected the following evidence. Under "perquisite," I find in Silvan Evans's English-Welsh Dictionary, adfael, damweinfael, dygwyyddfael, rhoddfael, mael dygwyydd, rhwy fael neu elw a gaffer heb law cyflog ["some vail or profit that is got in addition to wages"], anrheg. Under "vails" the same work gives gweinidfael, gweinidrodd, damweinfael, rhoddfael, yttysfael, mael dygwyydd, rhodd i weinidogion ["gift to ministers"]. Salesbury has mael, "avale"; T. Richards (1753) has mael, "gain, profit, lucre, advantage"; T. Lewis (1805) has "mael, s., a place of traffic, a mart or market. There are districts so called in the marches of Wales, which were neutral ground, where trade was carried on." It is clear, from the above quotations, that the question is not confined to ymylon and y meilon, but that y maelon must also be taken into account. Both mael and mael will explain the diphthongal middle syllable of abeilon, but ymyl will not.

Whether or no the Welsh mael is connected with either English "mail" (in "black-mail") or English "vails" is an interesting problem, but (mindful of the heading of this note) I must not attempt to discuss it at present.

* MS. Comaung.

MR. GLADSTONE AND WELLHAUSEN.

Florence: May 4, 1896.

I should be very sorry to say that the reputation of Mr. Gladstone suffered a disgraceful loss from his evident unwillingness or inability to answer the charges of extreme inaccuracy brought against him in my review of his Impregnable Rock. But I hold that they were quite as damaging as any charges that Dr. Baxter has brought against Wellhausen; and I fail to see why the consequences of their being left unanswered should be less serious.

Looking at the question from a more general point of view, it seems to me that Mr. Gladstone's dictum involves a principle that no hard-worked scholar could possibly admit—the principle that no attack on him, however futile and disingenuous it may seem to him and to his friends, should be left unanswered, under penalty of forfeiting his reputation. Certainly Mr. Gladstone himself does not seem to have acted on that principle, either as a statesman or as a scholar, but rather on the opposite principle of leaving adverse criticism to answer itself.

ALFRED W. BENN.

MR. LANG'S TRANSLATION OF "AUCASSIN AND NICOLETE."

London: May 11, 1896.

Mr. Lang's perfect version of perhaps the most perfect masterpiece of medieval literature has not been reprinted by me, for the simple reason that subscribers were assured that it would not be reprinted.

It is a question, however, whether a simple text, lacking the artistic and typographical graces of the original edition, and intended solely to propagandise the love of medieval literature among the masses, could be regarded by the privileged 600 purchasers as an infringement of the bargain with them. If no objection is expressed, I am willing, as Mr. Lang assents, to try the experiment of an Aucassin for the million. If my anticipation, that the million will continue profoundly indifferent to good literature, and refuse to invest a shilling in a masterpiece rather than waste it on ephemeral twaddle, should prove false, no one will be more delighted than

MR. LANG'S PUBLISHER.

"THE BIBLE IN SPAIN."

Magdalen College, Oxford: May 9, 1896.

Will you allow me to say that your reviewer, in his complimentary notice of The Bible in Spain, has credited me with a larger share of the work than I can claim. The historical introduction was written by Mr. Burke, and I have only added a single reference. I should also like to state that I have been indebted for the Arabic information in the Glossary to my friends Prof. Margoliouth, fellow of New College, and the Rev. G. A. Cooke, fellow of Magdalen.

HERBERT W. GREENE.

APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK.

SUNDAY, May 17, 7 p.m. Ethical: "The Ethics of Liberal Politics," by Mr. J. H. Muirhead.
MONDAY, May 18, 4.30 p.m. Victoria Institute: "Climate in Egypt," by Grant Bay.
8 p.m. Society of Arts: Cantor Lecture, "Applied Electro-Chemistry," IV., by Mr. J. Swinburne.
8 p.m. Royal Institute of British Architects.
8.45 p.m. Geographical: "Journey from Talifu to Assam," by Prince Henry of Orleans.
TUESDAY, May 19, 3 p.m. Royal Institution: "Ripples in Air and on Water," II., by Mr. C. V. Boys.
4.30 p.m. Colonial Institute: "Our Colonial Food Supplies," by Mr. Arthur Clenden.
5 p.m. Statistical: "Agricultural Credit Banks," by Mr. Robert A. Yerburgh.
8 p.m. Civil Engineers: "The Magnetic Testing of Iron and Steel," by Prof. J. A. Ewing.
"Magnetic Data of Iron and Steel," by Mr. Horace F. Parrish.

8 p.m. Society of Arts: "Bronze Casting in Europe," by Mr. George Simonds.

8.30 p.m. Zoological: "An Interesting Variation in the Pattern of the Teeth of a Specimen of the Common Field-Vole," by Mr. G. E. H. Barrett-Hamilton; "Contributions to the Anatomy of Picarian Birds, III., the Anatomy of the Alcedinæ," by Mr. F. E. Beddard.

WEDNESDAY, May 20, 7.30 p.m. Meteorological: "The Exposure of Anemometers," by Mr. R. H. Curtis.

8 p.m. Society of Arts: "Orthochromatic Photography," by Capt. W. de W. Abney.

8 p.m. Elizabethan: "The Plays of Thomas Otway," by Mr. J. E. Baker.

8 p.m. Microscopical.

THURSDAY, May 21, 3 p.m. Royal Institution: "The Art of Working Metals in Japan," III., by Mr. W. Gowland.

8 p.m. Chemical: "The Diphenylbenzenes, I., Metadiphenylbenzene," by Messrs. F. D. Chattaway and R. C. T. Evans; "Derivatives of Camphoric Acid," by Dr. F. S. Kipping; "Some Substances exhibiting Rotatory Power in both the Liquid and Crystalline States," by Mr. W. J. Pope.

8.30 p.m. Antiquaries.

FRIDAY, May 22, 4 p.m. Botanic: "Insectivorous Plants," by Prof. Henslow.

5 p.m. Physical: "Dielectrics," by Mr. R. Appleby; "The Field of an Elliptical Current," by Mr. J. Viriamu Jones; "An Instrument for Measuring Frequency," by Mr. A. Campbell.

8 p.m. Philological: Anniversary Meeting; "The Use of the Particle eo, in Preterital Senses, in Old Irish," by Prof. Strachan.

9 p.m. Royal Institution: "Hysteresis," by Prof. J. A. Ewing.

SATURDAY, May 23, 3 p.m. Royal Institution: "Three Emotional Composers, III., Liszt," by Mr. F. Corder.

SCIENCE.

TWO BOOKS ON GENESIS.

The Book of Genesis. Edited, with Introduction, Critical Analysis, and Notes, by G. Woosung Wade. (Hodder Brothers.)

Notes on the Text of the Book of Genesis. By G. J. Spurrell. Second Edition. (Oxford: Clarendon Press.)

THE author of the first of these books is one of the professors in St. David's College, Lampeter, where the late Rowland Williams was vice-principal. Of Dr. Williams's connexion with that once famous volume, Essays and Reviews, and of the heated controversy which ensued on its publication in 1860, it is unnecessary to speak. Dr. Williams's biography, written by his wife, bears on the title as a motto the words, "If men hereafter may say what they know more freely, I shall therein have the price of my tears." Of the wish thus expressed Dr. Williams, if he could revisit earth, would probably regard Prof. Wade's book as a partial fulfilment, though possibly he might not assent to all its conclusions. Certainly with very much freedom, and with no probability of sinister consequences, opinions are enunciated which thirty-six years ago could scarcely have been put forth by a clergyman without some measure of anxiety.

In his Introduction Prof. Wade has a chapter on "The Myths" of Genesis. He observes, with special reference to the first eleven chapters of the book:

"Into a discussion of such legends it would be unnecessary to enter, if it were not, on the one hand, for the resemblance which in some cases exists between them and the results of modern scientific inquiry, and, on the other hand, for the influence they have had in moulding theological theories."

Of this "influence," with regard to the Creation and Fall of Man, there can be no doubt. As to the scientific evidence of the origin of man, our author admits the probability "that the several races, in spite of the many differences between them, have been developed from one stock," though "there is nothing to show that they have all descended from a single pair." There can be no question that such a view requires "the theological teaching of St. Paul" and "his doctrine of the Atonement in some respects to be modified."

Prof. Wade gives a translation of Genesis based on the Authorised Version, but arranged in parallel columns, evidently with the view of rendering the results of the so-called "higher criticism" accessible to English readers. The translation is followed by notes, many of which are commendable for terseness and conciseness. After consulting many authorities, Prof. Wade has endeavoured to form an independent judgment, and this claim may be admitted. Neither Prof. Wade, however, nor Mr. Spurrell would seem to have studied Ecclesiastes very closely. On Gen. xlix. 24 Prof. Wade has the note:—

"From thence: i.e. from God, explained by what follows; cf. the use of there of the next world in Eccl. iii. 17."

Now, the reader does not require to be a Hebraist to perceive that it is certainly not in "the next world" that there is "a time for every purpose and for every work." Mr. Spurrell says that the expression used "probably means 'from heaven'—cf. Eccl. iii. 17 (?)." But there is no need for the added note of interrogation. It is perfectly clear that the passage in Ecclesiastes means nothing of the kind.

In Gen. vi. 3, where A.V. renders "My spirit shall not always strive with man," Prof. Wade adopts the rendering, "rule in man." Mr. Spurrell looks with some favour on this rendering, though not without hesitation; but he rejects the rendering of A.V., with the remark that it gives "a meaning which in Nip'al depends on the reciprocal signification of the conjugation, and so cannot be assigned to Qal." Now in Eccl. vi. 10 the verb in question (din) in Kal, not Niphal, is used with the meaning "strive" or "contend": "Neither may he contend with him that is mightier than he" (A.V.). And it is particularly interesting to note that the author of Ecclesiastes probably had Gen. vi. 3 especially in view. In the same verse he speaks of the name long ago given to man—"Adam."

Mr. Spurrell's work, as a commentary on the Hebrew text of Genesis, must be regarded as more ambitious than that of Prof. Wade. It contains notes which have evidently been compiled with much labour, and in which the student may find information, not, perhaps, easily accessible elsewhere. But, as "mainly intended for students beginning the Hebrew language," it is doubtful whether the book is altogether what it should be. The beginner is not unlikely to be bewildered by long geographical or other notes, which are without a difference of type or other indication to distinguish matter which he may at first advantageously pass over. Moreover, the beginner would certainly be misguided who, in some places, should follow Mr. Spurrell's directions: for example, by rendering in Gen. ix. 14, "when I cloud my clouds"; or in xi. 3, "and let us burn them into bricks"; or by adopting Mr. Spurrell's view that the article in ha-oreb ("the raven") of Gen. viii. 7 "is generic." This is impossible, even if all the ravens outside the ark had perished—assuming, indeed, that the narrative of the Flood is to be treated as self-consistent. In 1 Sam. xvii. 34 and 1 Kings xx. 36 (cited by Mr. Spurrell) the article is not generic, but distinguishes the lion or the bear as an important or formidable animal. Here Eccl. ix. 4 is instructive, "Even a living dog, he is better than the dead lion." It is pretty clear that the narrative of the Flood was not related in Genesis for the first time, and the raven may well have been a recognised dramatis persona. This, however, is not the only possible explanation of the article. The beginner, too, who has been studying the construction of the numerals as given in the Grammars is likely to be mystified by Mr. Spurrell's remark on Gen. vii. 4, that "certain nouns are used after the numerals in the singular." Then—to omit various other matters which we had noted—some more explicit information should have been given to the student with regard to the construction of a passive verb followed by an accusative, or a seeming accusative, with eth (Gen. iv. 18 al.). It is not enough to say that the same construction may be found in other passages, and to cite authorities which may not be easily accessible.

Both Mr. Spurrell and Prof. Wade touch in their Introductions on the modern view of the documentary structure of the Pentateuch (or Hexateuch). Considerations of space forbid the discussion of this matter here. There is, however, one question alluded to by Prof. Wade on which a word may be said. The portion Gen. ii. 4-iii. 24 is, as is well known, characterised by the use of Jehovah Elohim (the Lord God); but in the conversation between Eve and the serpent the Divine name used is simply Elohim. Prof. Wade justly doubts whether this indicates a distinct document. It was apparently the late Prof. Palfrey, of Harvard, who first suggested that the intention was to represent that God was not yet known as Jehovah, though this name is used in the narrative generally. This would be consistent with the use of the name Jehovah by Eve after the Fall (Gen. iv. 1). But a difficulty presents itself on account of the statement in Gen. iv. 25, about the commencement of the worship of Jehovah. "Mais en cela," says Reuss, "l'auteur se contredit lui-même." The only apparent escape from this dilemma is to translate Gen. iv. 1 in the most natural and grammatical manner, and to give, "I have gotten a man, even Jehovah,"* a course adopted by various authorities ancient and modern, and at the same time to suppose that the writer intended to represent "Jehovah" as becoming a Divine name only in the days of Enos. It has scarcely been observed that the rendering of R.V., following many modern authorities, "I have gotten a man with [the help of] the LORD," becomes entirely unsuitable, apart from grammatical reasons, through the strongly anthropomorphic representations of the Deity in Genesis. He walks in the garden as a man; as a man, together with two angels in human form, he appears as a traveller to Abraham. Gen. vi. 2 is now commonly regarded (e.g., by both Messrs. Wade and Spurrell) as relating to the union of angels with women; but the writer in Genesis certainly did not intend to bring down Jehovah to the level which the classics assign to Zeus.* It may be inferred that the accounts in Genesis are fragmentary; and to this inference there is no objection.

THOMAS TYLER.

CORRESPONDENCE.

"THE RESTORED PRONUNCIATION OF GREEK."

II.

Cardiff: May 2, 1896.

On the question of accent we differ from Dr. Lloyd toto caelo. He thinks it is desirable to teach schoolboys to give a stress value to the Greek signs of accent, in the hope that they will "automatically" give them also something of a musical character. We hold that it is shown by experience that the one certain "automatic" effect of such teaching is to destroy the learner's knowledge of quantity altogether. This I have repeatedly observed is the case of American pupils (at Cambridge) and German classmates (at Leipzig). To make clear, however, even to those who have had no practical opportunities for judging the matter, that our experience is not solitary, I have asked Prof. Jebb, with whom I discussed the question before the pamphlet was written, to allow me to publish his opinion. He writes as follows (April 29):

"I fully agree with you that it is undesirable to begin by teaching students of Greek the stress accent. The ancient Greek accent which our written signs are supposed to represent was, I believe, a pitch accent. Whether an attempt should be made to reproduce (conjecturally) this ancient pitch accent is a point on which I express no opinion, though we should generally agree, I suppose, that any such attempt would be difficult, or could scarcely be very satisfactory. But to teach the stress accent, in the hope that the learner may work back from it to the pitch accent, seems to me a great mistake. The only recommendation which can reasonably be claimed for it is that it facilitates the requirement of the modern Greek pronunciation. On the other hand, it is quite certain that most learners would have their notions of quantity hopelessly confused by it. If an ancient metrical composition is read with the modern stress accent, the metre is violated in all the innumerable places where the stress accent conflicts with quantity. And I hold it to be far more important that a student of Greek should be able to comprehend or enjoy the ancient metrical compositions, as such, than that he should be assisted in acquiring the modern Greek pronunciation. If he has learned quantity from the beginning, he will always remember it; and if, afterwards, he desires to acquire the modern pronunciation, he will have the written signs to guide him as to the stress accent. But if both ear and eye have from the first been habituated to the stress, it will be an enormous strain on the memory to learn quantity afterwards, since there will be no guide to the eye, while to the ear, trained on the stress accent, the distinction of quantity will seem artificial."

To this I may add that, when our pamphlet appeared, a distinguished Greek scholar (who was for some years fifth form master at one English public school and is now head master's assistant at another) wrote to me, expressing regret that we had not spoken more favourably of the attempt to teach a musical value for the accents in actual pronunciation, since, he said, he had tried the experiment with success in his own form. Prof. Arnold and myself have a perfectly open mind on this matter.

* Gen. iv. 25, which speaks of the intervention of Deity in relation to the birth of Seth, is open to no similar interpretation; and the same thing may be said of other passages relating to the birth of children.

It would be simply waste of time to discuss Dr. Lloyd's super-ingenuous attempt to fasten a preposterous positive meaning upon the purely negative suggestion which we make in the pamphlet. We recommend students to neglect the musical Greek word-accent. Dr. Lloyd objects that they will therefore give wrong musical accents to the various syllables of a word. Of course they will—and until they have a sufficiently musical ear to learn the right ones there is no help for them. But it is clearly beside the mark to select arbitrarily, as Dr. Lloyd does, one (perhaps the most absurd) out of an infinite number of conceivable ways in which they may go wrong, and then suggest that we recommended that particular method, or any method at all. Nor can I admit his contention that it is either impossible or undesirable to distinguish different parts of a sentence or paragraph by differences of tone, even though no attempt is made to distinguish in the same way the syllables of any single word.

With regard to the o-vowels Dr. Lloyd offers three criticisms: (1) that the sound of Latin o and English oo is a fourth, not a fifth, century value for ou; (2) that the sounds of au in Eng. "caught" and French o in "monologue," for Greek ω and ο respectively, are difficult to teach; (3) that the English examples we give of these two sounds are unsatisfactory. Something should also be said (4) as to the zd value for ζ, which Dr. Lloyd has somewhere included in his "tutorial" excommunications. I will deal with these points briefly, beginning with the last mentioned.

Dr. Lloyd does not demur to zd as having been the actual fifth century value of ζ. The onus probandi, therefore, of its difficulty, as a reason against its adoption, lies with him. In its favour, from the teacher's standpoint, may be reckoned: (1) that the value of ζ in prosody is at once explained and impressed on the schoolboy's memory; (2) that zd is a very common childish mispronunciation of both English j and French j, both initially and medially, and therefore presumably at least possible to a schoolboy; (3) that the combination of sounds is extremely common in English, and that it is only the accident of our system of spelling that gives it a strange look (e.g., it is sounded, though not written, in a crowd of past participles, like "closed," "raised," "teased," &c.); and (4) that when the student comes to questions of etymology, it is a real saving of trouble for him to be familiar with the true sound of the letter (δζ = Lat. sido for **sido*, ζ = Goth. asts, &c.). But we shall be only too glad to hear the expectations of actual teachers, and still more their experience, in the matter.

With regard to the English examples of particular sounds, we still more heartily welcome criticism, and can only regret that Dr. Lloyd should fail us just where his help would be of especial value: we should be grateful if he had suggested an unexceptionable English equivalent for the French (and Greek) δ. To us the o in "cannot" and "consist" (which Dr. Lloyd describes vaguely as "an 'open o' spoiled and obscured'") appears to be commonly pronounced close; but its pronunciation certainly varies, and, if no English phonetician can suggest a less disputable example, it would perhaps be better to treat the Greek ο in our table as we have done ε—that is, to give an example of an ordinary English o between brackets, as a rough equivalent only, leaving the French monologue to do duty as a more exact representative. Again, Dr. Lloyd calls us Cockneys because we pronounce the vowel* of "ore," "oar" as au in "caught"; we might call him a North-countryman for not doing so; but if no word in which the English letter o represents the open vowel of "broad," "caught" can be suggested, we might fall back on one of these words; though here, again, a North-countryman who calls them something like "brüd" and "cūht" may quarrel with us. We shall welcome further discussion of these points of English phonetics.

* Delitzsch adduces, as parallel examples, Gen. vi. 10; xxvi. 34; Isa. vii. 17; Ezek. iv. 1. He, however, rejects, on other than grammatical grounds, the rendering given above.

As to the teachableness of these sounds, we can see no objection to the open sound (London au in "caught") for Gr. o; among other advantages it makes the Attic contractions of a + e, o + e and o + e distinctly more intelligible to distinguish o from Eng. o. As to the close value of Gr. o, it seemed to us a point which a teacher might well keep in view in fixing his own pronunciation, and his best pupils will imitate him; how far he can insist upon it with his class as a whole is just such a point as we had in view in leaving the discretion, which our pamphlet expressly does, to the individual teacher of deferring any particular changes which he finds difficult, after fair trial—the sentence was quoted in my last letter.

Finally, what was the sound of ou at Athens in the fifth century? In 356 B.C.,† so far as appears from our present evidence, the Boeotians, who were borrowing the Ionic alphabet from Athens, began to write ou to represent the sound of their own u—i.e., Latin u, Eng. oo. They would not have done this before the u-sound was well established among the people from whom they took the symbol, so that we may put this pronunciation at Athens at least as early as (say) 370 B.C. The use of o to denote a lengthened omicron (and often the product of the original "genuine diphthong" ou) unfortunately proves nothing as to whether the sound it represented was a close o or an open u; the ou spelling begins even before the fifth century B.C. (C.I.A., vol. i., 360, 362), and the traditional o-spelling appears occasionally even as late as 300 (Meisterhans, 2nd ed., p. 6, note 21), long after we have direct evidence in the Boeotian spelling just quoted that the u-value was established.‡ Brugmann (p. 34), Gustav Meyer (p. 139), and Meisterhans (p. 21) all assume that the sound in which the long omicron and the original diphthong coalesced was u, and nothing else from the time of their coalescence—that is, at the beginning of the fifth century B.C. In our pamphlet we only refer u to the age of Pericles; and in default of direct evidence there is no other pronunciation to recommend. The possible error thus admitted is small, whether in chronology (fifty or sixty years) or phonetics; for an open u comes in sound very near to a close o. Far more serious disadvantages (as we have before pointed out), would attend the adoption of a fourth-century pronunciation in toto.

All Dr. Lloyd's criticisms have now been considered. We have welcomed his suggestions on

* We do not, however, wish to pronounce ours as aws; the Cockney abandonment of r, which Dr. Lloyd confuses with the vowel-sound, is an entirely different matter.

† Meister, Griech. Diall. i., p. 231. Whether any fresh evidence has appeared since our pamphlet was published I cannot ascertain until the Long Vacation gives me access to the Cambridge libraries.

‡ Blass's account (pp. 32, 33), both of o and ou overlooks completely the fact that a traditional spelling will hold its ground in competition with a phonetic spelling long after an actual change of sound has taken place. Dr. Lloyd appears to follow him in supposing that a variation in spelling necessarily implies a contemporaneous variation in sound, a most unscientific assumption, which carries its own refutation (cf. Brugmann, Gr. Gram., 2nd ed., p. 11).

the practical side; and on the theoretical I think we have shown, first, that, except in the matter of the aspirates, Dr. Lloyd's own differences from us are slight; and, secondly, in this, and in every case in which he differs from a view which we have advocated, not only that the most recent authorities are in almost complete agreement with one another and with us, but that the decisive weight of evidence rests on the same side.

R. S. CONWAY.

THE "PARNASSUS" CATULLUS.

Trinity College, Dublin: May 9, 1896.

I am sorry I have misrepresented a conjecture of Prof. Ellis on Catullus, 64, 109. He did not repeat (as I have represented) Voss's impossible quaecumvis obvia frangens, but suggests quaecumque obvia frangens, which is very much superior, and is, I think, highly probable.

I take the opportunity of making two or three slight corrections which I thought I had made on the last proof I saw. In stating that Catullus was the first Latin author who had used the pentameter at all largely, I intended to add, "except, perhaps, the rude satirist Lucilius"; 68, 141, atque should be one word, and the line should end with a comma, not a semicolon; and in Index grabatum should, of course, be grabatus. I also intended, but forgot, to suggest plotus Umber for parcus or porcus Umber, 39. 11 (cf. Festus: "Ploti appellati sunt Umbri quia sunt planis pedibus").

A. PALMER.

P.S.—My note on 4, 2 contains a double oversight, which is obvious.

A. P.

SCIENCE NOTES.

THE council of the British Association have resolved to nominate Sir John Evans for the presidency at the meeting to be held next year at Toronto. The secretary, Mr. George Griffiths, sailed for Canada last week to make arrangements for the meeting.

THE evening discourse at the Royal Institution next Friday will be delivered by Prof. J. A. Ewing, of Cambridge, on "Hysteresis"—a term of art, we presume, of engineering, but not to be found in Ogilvy's Imperial Dictionary.

ON Friday of this week, at 4 p.m. the Rev. Prof. George Henslow was to begin a course of three lectures in the Gardens of the Royal Botanic Society, Regent's Park, on "The Movements of Plants," "Insectivorous Plants," and "Plants of the Bible." The lectures will be illustrated with lantern slides, and are free to visitors in the Gardens.

A SPECIAL general meeting of the Geological Society will be held on Wednesday next, in order to submit to the decision of the fellows certain resolutions of the council regarding a proposed transference of a portion of the society's collections to the Trustees of the British Museum.

AT the meeting of the Royal Meteorological Society, to be held at Great George-street on Wednesday next, Mr. Richard H. Courtis will read a paper on "The Exposure of Anemometers"; and there will also be an exhibition of sixty photographs of clouds, sent by Mr. H. O. Russell, of the Sydney Observatory.

A PEOPLE'S edition is about to be issued of Cassell's Illustrated Natural History, in weekly numbers, uniform with the popular edition of Cassell's History of England. This work, which was originally prepared under the editorship of the late Prof. Martin Duncan, is a complete Natural History by leading authorities, describing beasts, birds, fishes, reptiles, and insects, and furnished with about 2000 illustrations. The present edition will be issued at less than one-third the price at which the work has hitherto been obtainable.

THE Whitsuntide meeting of the Geologists' Association will be to the neighbourhood of Chippenham, Calne, Kellaways, and Corham, under the direction of the Rev. H. H. Winwood and Mr. H. B. Woodward.

PHILOLOGY NOTES.

THE anniversary meeting of the Philological Society will be held on Friday next, at 8 p.m., at University College, Gower-street, when Prof. Strachan, of Liverpool, will read a paper on "The Use of the Participle ro, in the Preterital Senses, in Old Irish."

THE publishing house of Mr. A. W. Sijthoff, of Leyden, has been induced to undertake the enterprise of photographic reproductions of important Greek and Latin MSS., which Dr. W. N. Du Rieu, the university librarian of the same place, has for some time been urging upon the attention of the learned world. It is proposed to begin with a series of twelve reproductions, to be followed by a second series, if sufficient support is obtained. The general editor is Dr. Du Rieu; but each part will have a special introduction by a recognised authority, giving a critical and historical account of the MS. A beginning will be made with the fifth century MS. of the Old Testament in Greek, known as the Sarravianus-Colbertinus, of which 260 pages are at Leyden, 44 at Paris, and 2 at St. Petersburg, with an introduction by M. H. Omont, of the Bibliothèque Nationale. The mode of reproduction is phototype, and the specimen pages we have seen leave nothing to be desired. The price appears rather high—£8, bound in medieval style. Among the other MSS. proposed for the first series, we notice the ninth century one of Plato in the Bodleian, called the Codex Clarkianus. The proposed list, however, will have to undergo revision; for the authorities of the Laurentian Library at Florence are unwilling to permit another facsimile to be made of their Aeschylus, and themselves propose to reproduce their Virgil and Tacitus, under the care of Dr. Guido Biagi. The price, we may add, of the reproduction of the Laurentian Aeschylus, already noticed in the ACADEMY by Prof. Lewis Campbell, is only £4.

THE next fasciculus of the new edition of the Corpus Poetarum Latinorum (Ball) will contain the poets from Manilius to Valerius Flaccus—namely, Manilius, Phaedrus, Persius, Lucan, and Valerius Flaccus, together with the "Aetna." The chief editor will be very grateful if scholars who have made recent contributions to the textual criticism of these authors will acquaint him with the particulars in order that nothing may be overlooked. Communications may be addressed, and pamphlets forwarded, to Dr. J. P. Postgate, Trinity College, Cambridge.

MESSRS. MACMILLAN & Co. have just added to their elegant "Parnassus Library of Greek and Latin Texts" Catullus, edited by Prof. Arthur Palmer, of Trinity College, Dublin. The characteristic of this series is that the text shall be printed with a short introduction, but no notes. But in this case Prof. Palmer has added a copious index, and also an apparatus criticus, in which the consensus of the two earliest MSS. with the majority of the later ones is expressed by the not unfamiliar collocation GOM. We observe that the two next volumes of the "Parnassus Library" are to be Sophocles, by Prof. R. Y. Tyrrell; and Aeschylus, by Prof. Lewis Campbell.

REPORTS OF SOCIETIES.

ZOOLOGICAL.—(Tuesday, April 21.)

SIR W. H. FOWLER, president, in the chair.—The secretary read a report on the additions that had been made to the society's menagerie during the month of March, and called special attention to a fine young female Gorilla (Anthropopithecus gorilla), from French Congo, obtained by purchase; a young male Markhor (Capra megaceros), from the vicinity of Peshawar, British India, presented by Col. Paterson; a pair of a rather scarce species of Duiker Antelope (Cephalophus coronatus), from West Africa, purchased; and a Silver-backed Fox (Canis chama), from Cape Colony, presented by Mr. C. W. Southey.—Mr. Slater exhibited and made remarks on some specimens from Nyasaland, lately sent home by Sir H. H. Johnston. Among these was a fine head of the Sable Antelope (Hippotragus niger) from the Zomba plains, and an example of the Brindled Gnu (Connochaetes gorgon), or of a nearly allied form, believed to be the finest specimen of this Antelope sent home from British East Africa.—Mr. Slater also exhibited, by permission of Mr. Justice Hopley, of Kimberley, a pair of horns of the so-called Antelope triangularis, said to be obtained somewhere on the Zambesi. These horns were now generally supposed to be abnormal horns of the cow Eland.—Mr. W. E. de Winton gave an account of a small collection of Mammals from Ecuador, lately sent to the British Museum by Mr. L. Söderström, H.B.M. Consul at Quito. It contained examples of only three species, but two of these appeared to be new to science. One of them was a new Deer, proposed to be called Pudu mephistophilis, and the other a Rodent of the genus Icthyomys, which was named I. soderstromi.—Mr. F. E. Beddard read a paper on "The Anatomy of a Grebe (Echmophorus major)," and added some remarks upon the classification of the Charadriiform birds, to which he considered the Auks to be more nearly related than the Grebes.—A communication was read from Messrs. F. D. Godman and O. Salvin on the Butterflies of St. Vincent, Grenada, and the adjoining islands, based on the collections made by Mr. Herbert R. Smith.

(Anniversary Meeting, Wednesday, April 29.)

